

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

3 2044 103 142 204

Bd July 1939

HARVARD LAW SCHOOL LIBRARY

Received Nov 9 1896

1875

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE

OF ALL

CASES REPORTED IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK 31,

NOT OFFICIALLY REPORTED WHEN THIS BOOK WENT TO PRESS.

(To be "tipped in" in front of regular table, used as a book mark or as data for marking each case. Like tables will be furnished for subsequent volumes as fast as possible.)

Adams & W. Co. v. Devette (8 S. D. 119	497	Easton v. Huott (95 Iowa, 473)	- 177
Anderson v. Miller (96 Tenn. 35)	- 604	Edwards v. Lesuer (132 Mo. 410)	- 815
Anniston Loan & T. Co. v. Stickney (108		Eichengreen v. Louisville & N. R. Co.
Ala. 146)	- 234	(96 Tenn. 229)	- 702
Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Swann (81 Md.		Evans v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co.
400)	- 313	(— Ind. —) No Off. Rep.	- 673
Barrett v. Mt. Greenwood Cemetery As-		Fairchild v. Hedges (14 Wash. 117)	- 851
so. (159 Ill. 385)	- 109	Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Bankers' & M.
Beavan v. Went (155 Ill. 592)	- 85	Teleg. Co. (148 N. Y. 315)	- 403
Beverly v. Barnitz (55 Kan. 466)	- 74	Gage v. Fisher (5 N. D. 297)	- 557
Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. (159 Ill. 350)	- 269	Gillfillan v. Schmidt (64 Minn. 29)	- 547
Board of Children's Guardians v. Shut-		Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Graham
ter (139 Ind. 268)	- 740	(96 Iowa, 592)	- 133
Bolton Mines Co. v. Stokes (82 Md. 50)	- 789	Haigh v. Bell (41 W. Va. 19)	- 131
Braithwaite v. Jordan (5 N. D. 196)	- 233	Hayes v. Douglas County (92 Wis. 429)	- 213
Brown v. Foster (88 Me. 49)	- 116	Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital (66
Buckley v. Gray (110 Cal. 339)	- 862	Conn. 98)	- 224
Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana Union		Heidel v. Benedict (61 Minn. 170)	- 422
R. Co. (16 Mont. 504)	- 298	Heintz v. Burkhard (29 Or. 55)	- 508
Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co.		Holdom v. Ancient Order of U. W. (159
(63 Minn. 384)	- 553	Ill. 619)	- 67
Carrollton v. Bazzette (159 Ill. 284)	- 522	Hoyt v. J. T. Lovett Co. 39 U. S. App. 1,
Case v. Smith (107 Mich. 416)	- 282	17 C. C. A. 652 (71 Fed. Rep.
Cawood v. Wolfley (56 Kan. 281)	- 538	173)	- 44
Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Stark-		Huber v. La Crosse City R. Co. (92 Wis.
weather (97 Iowa, 159)	- 183	636)	- 583
Cicero & P. Street R. Co. v. Meixner		Hunter v. Hunter (111 Cal. 261)	- 411
(160 Ill. 320)	- 331	Illinois Steel Co. v. O'Donnell (156 Ill.
Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Metropol-		624)	- 265
itan Nat. Bank (54 Ohio St. 60)	- 653	Indianapolis v. Wann (144 Ind. 175)	- 743
Citizens' Gaslight Co. v. Wakefield (161		Jackson Bank v. Durfey (72 Miss. 971)	- 470
Mass. 432)	- 457	Jarvis v. Manhattan Beach Co. (148 N.
City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery (61		Y. 652)	- 776
Ark. 381)	- 570	Jeffrey v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. (108
City Electric Street R. Co. v. First Nat.		Mich. 221)	- 170
Exch. Bank (62 Ark. 33)	- 535	Keeler Ex parte, (45 S. C. 537)	- 678
Clarendon Land Invest. & A. Co. v. Mc-		Knox v. Eden Musee American Co. (148
Clelland Bros. (89 Tex. 483)	- 669	N. Y. 441)	- 779
Clutton v. Clutton (108 Mich. 267)	- 160	Koen v. Bartlett (41 W. Va. 559)	- 128
Com. v. Junkin (170 Pa. 194)	- 124	Lacy, Ex parte (93 Va. 159)	- 822
Com. v. Myers (92 Pa. 809)	- 379	Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Salzman
Consolidated Gas Co. v. Crocker (82		(52 Ohio St. 558)	- 261
Md. 113)	- 785	Latta v. Brown (96 Tenn. 343)	- 840
Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co. (57 Fed.		Lewis v. Terry (111 Cal. 39)	- 220
Rep. 434, and 64 Fed. Rep. 280)	- 282	Leyson v. Davis (17 Mont. 220)	- 429
Danforth v. Danforth (88 Me. 120)	- 608	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson (108
Denny v. State, Basler (144 Ind. 503)	- 726	Ala. 62)	- 372
Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson		Lucy v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (64 Minn.
(21 Colo. 371)	- 563	7)	- 551
Detroit v. Detroit Water Comrs. (108		Lynch v. Rosenthal (144 Ind. 86)	- 835
Mich. 494)	- 463	McCook County v. Kammos (7 S. D.
De Wolf v. Middleton (18 R. I. 814)	- 146	558)	- 461
Dowling v. Lancashire Ins. Co. (92 Wis.		McCutcheon v. Merz Capsule Co. 37 U.
63)	- 112	S. App. 586, 19 C. C. A. 108 (71
Doyle v. Whalen (87 Me. 414)	- 118	Fed. Rep. 787)	- 415
Duke v. Taylor (37 Fla. 64)	- 484	McBean v. Fresno (112 Cal. 159)	- 794

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE OF CASES.

McKay v. Southern Bell Teleph. & T. Co. (111 Ala. 337) -	589	Scott v. Standard Oil Co. (106 Ala. 475) 374
McManus v. Weston (164 Mass. 263) 174		Snyder Mfg. Co. v. Snyder (54 Ohio St. 86) -	657
Mahler v. Brumder (92 Wis. 477) -	695	Southern Bell Teleph. & T. Co. v. Allen (109 Ala. 224) -	193
Martin v. Elliott (106 Mich. 130) -	169	Southern Bell Teleph. & T. Co. v. Francis (109 Ala. 224) -	193
Menneiley v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. (148 N. Y. 596) -	686	Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Norman (98 Ky. 294) -	41
Metropolitan Sav. Bank v. Murphy (82 Md. 314) -	454	State v. Conlon (65 Conn. 478) -	55
Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Jackson (89 Tex. 107) -	276	State v. Duket (90 Wis. 272) -	515
Michener v. Springfield Engine & T. Co. (142 Ind. 130) -	59	State v. Gardner (54 Ohio St. 24) -	660
Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co. (160 Ill. 85) -	529	State v. Gaymon (44 S. C. 333) -	489
Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. (45 S. C. 146) -	577	State v. Gleim (17 Mont. 17) -	294
Nelson v. Davidson (160 Ill. 254) -	325	State v. Old (95 Tenn. 723) -	837
Nelson v. The Willamette, 44 U. S. App. 26, 18 C. C. A. 366 (70 Fed. Rep. 874) -	715	State, Board of Transp., v. Sioux City, O. & W. R. Co. (46 Neb. 682) -	47
Newberry v. Carpenter (107 Mich. 567) 163		State, Laclede Gaslight Co., v. Murphy (130 Mo. 10) -	798
Normal School Dist. Board of Edu. v. Blodgett (155 Ill. 441) -	70	State, Lamar, v. Johnson (35 Fla. 2) -	357
Norwegian Plow Co. v. Bollman (47 Neb. 186) -	747	State, Overton County, v. Copeland (96 Tenn. 296) -	844
Nowack v. Berger (133 Mo. 24) -	810	State, Taylor, v. Lord (28 Or. 489) -	473
O'Reilly v. New York Elev. R. Co. (148 N. Y. 347) -	407	State, Thomas Cruse Sav. Bank v. Gilliam (18 Mont. 94) -	721
Owens v. Van Winkle Gin & M. Co. (96 Ga. 408) -	767	State, West, v. Des Moines (96 Iowa, 521) -	186
Park v. Champlin (96 Iowa, 55) -	141	Stevens v. Carter (27 Or. 553) -	342
Parker v. Bethel Hotel Co. (96 Tenn. 252) -	706	Svensden v. State Bank (64 Minn. 40) 552
Payton v. McQuown (97 Ky. 757) -	33	Tanner v. Merrill (108 Mich. 58) -	171
Pennsylvania Co. v. McCann (54 Ohio St. 10) -	651	Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith, 30 U. S. App. 176, 14 C. C. A. 509 (67 Fed. Rep. 524) -	321
People v. Adelphi Club (149 N. Y. 5) 510		Texas M. R. Co. v. Wright (88 Tex. 346) -	200
People v. Bendit (111 Cal. 274) -	831	Third Nat. Bank, Re (148 N. Y. 315) 403
People v. Havnor (149 N. Y. 195) -	689	Thornhill v. O'Rear (108 Ala. 299) -	792
People, McClelland, v. Roberts (148 N. Y. 360) -	399	Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car-Wheel Co. (95 Tenn. 634) -	593
Pickering v. Moore (67 N. H. 533) -	698	Violett v. Alexandria (92 Va. 561) -	382
Queen City Mfg. Co. v. Blalack (— Mass. —) No Off. Rep. -	222	Waco Water & L. Co. v. Waco (86 Tex. 661) -	392
Rector v. McCarthy (61 Ark. 420) -	121	Wallace v. Driver (61 Ark. 429) -	317
Rice v. Wood (61 Ark. 442) -	609	Walser v. Board of Edu. of School Dist. No. 1 (160 Ill. 272) -	329
Richberger v. American Exp. Co. (73 Miss. 161) -	390	Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Nelson (82 Md. 293) -	572
Rogers v. State (60 Ark. 76) -	465	White v. Farmers' Highline Canal & R. Co. (22 Colo. 191) -	828
Rogers & B. Hardware Co. v. Cleveland Bldg. Co. (132 Mo. 442) -	335	Willamette, The (44 U. S. App. 26, 18 C. C. A. 366, 70 Fed. Rep. 874) -	715
Roth v. Union Depot Co. (13 Wash. 525) 855		Young v. College of Physicians & Surgeons (81 Md. 358) -	540
Schuyler v. Curtis (147 N. Y. 434) -	280

106
june 8

THE LAWYERS REPORTS ANNOTATED

BOOK XXXI

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE, WITH FULL ANNOTATION.
BURDETT A. RICH, EDITOR, AND HENRY P. FARNHAM, ASST.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY.

1896.

15
17
L38
P

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-six, by

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,

In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

Dec Nov. 9, 1896.

TABLE OF CASES REPORTED

IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK XXXI.

A.		Brown v. Foster (Me.) - - - - -	116
		Latta v. (Tenn.) - - - - -	840
Adams & W. Co. v. Deyette (S. D.) -	497	Brumder, Mahler v. (Wis.) - - - -	695
Adelphi Club, People v. (N. Y.) - -	510	Buckley v. Gray (Cal.) - - - - -	863
Alexandria, Violet v. (Va.) - - - -	382	Burkhard, Heintz v. (Or.) - - - - -	508
Allen, Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg.		Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana U. R.
Co. v. (Ala.) - - - - -	193	Co. (Mont.) - - - - -	298
American Exp. Co., Richberger v. (Miss.)	390	C.
Ancient Order of U. W., Holdom v. (Ill.)	67	Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co.
Anderson v. Miller (Tenn.) - - - -	604	(Minn.) - - - - -	553
Anniston Loan & T. Co. v. Stickney (Ala.)	234	Carpenter, Newberry v. (Mich.) - -	163
B.		Carrollton v. Bazzette (Ill.) - - -	522
Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Swann (Md.)	313	Carter, Stevens v. (Or.) - - - - -	342
Bank, First Nat. Exch., City Electric		Case v. Smith (Mich.) - - - - -	282
Street R. Co. v. (Ark.) - - - - -	535	Caywood v. Wolfley (Kan.) - - - -	538
Jackson, v. Durfey (Miss.) - - - -	470	Champlin, Park v. (Iowa) - - - - -	141
Metropolitan Nat., Cincinnati, H.		Charleston Light & P. Co., Mitchell v.
& D. R. Co. v. (Ohio) - - - - -	653	(S. C.) - - - - -	577
Metropolitan Sav., v. Murphy (Md.)	454	Chicago G. W. R. Co., Lucy v. (Minn.)	551
State, of Duluth, Svendsen v.		Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., Cameron v.
(Minn.) - - - - -	552	(Minn.) - - - - -	553
Third Nat., Re (N. Y.) - - - - -	403	v. Starkweather (Iowa) - - - - -	183
Thomas Cruse Sav., State, ex rel.,		Children's Guardians v. Shutter (Ind.)	740
v. Gilliam (Mont.) - - - - -	721	Cicero & P. Street R. Co. v. Meixner (Ill.)	331
Bankers' & M. Teleg. Co., Farmers'		Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan
Loan & T. Co. v. (N. Y.) - - - -	403	Nat. Bank (Ohio) - - - - -	653
Barnitz, Beverly v. (Kan.) - - - - -	74	Citizens' Gaslight Co. v. Wakefield (Mass.)	457
Barrett v. Mt. Greenwood Cemetery Asso.		City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery
(Ill.) - - - - -	109	(Ark.) - - - - -	570
Bartlett, Koen v. (W. Va.) - - - - -	128	v. First Nat. Exch. Bank (Ark.)	535
Basler, State, ex rel., Denney v. (Ind.)	726	Clarendon Land, I. & A. Co. v. McClel-
Bazzette, Carrollton v. (Ill.) - - -	522	land Bros. (Tex.) - - - - -	669
Bell, Haigh v. (W. Va.) - - - - -	181	Cleveland Bldg. Co., Rogers & B. Hard-
Bendit, People v. (Cal.) - - - - -	331	ware Co. v. (Mo.) - - - - -	335
Benedict, Heidel v. (Minn.) - - - -	422	Clutton v. Clutton (Mich.) - - - -	160
Berger, Nowack v. (Mo.) - - - - -	810	College of Physicians & S., Young v.
Bethel Hotel Co., Parker v. (Tenn.) -	706	(Md.) - - - - -	540
Bevan v. Went (Ill.) - - - - -	85	Com. v. Junkin (Pa.) - - - - -	124
Beverly v. Barnitz (Kan.) - - - - -	74	v. Myers (Va.) - - - - -	379
Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. (Ill.) - - -	269	Conery, City Electric Street R. Co. v.
Blalack, Queen City Mfg. Co. v. (Miss.)	222	(Ark.) - - - - -	570
Blodgett, Board of Education v. (Ill.) -	70	Conlon, State v. (Conn.) - - - - -	55
Board of Education v. Blodgett (Ill.) -	70	Consolidated Gas Co. v. Crocker (Md.)	785
Walser v. (Ill.) - - - - -	329	Consumers' Gas Trust Co., Evans v.
Board of Transportation, State, ex rel., v.		(Ind.) - - - - -	673
Sioux City, O. & W. R. Co.		Copeland, State, Overton County, v.
(Neb.) - - - - -	47	(Tenn.) - - - - -	844
Board of Water Comrs., Detroit v. (Mich.)	463	Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co. (C. C. D.
Bollman, Norwegian Plow Co. v. (Neb.)	747	Mass.) - - - - -	283
Bolton Mines Co. v. Stokes (Md.) - -	789	Crocker, Consolidated Gas Co. v. (Md.)	785
Braithwaite v. Jordan (N. D.) - - -	238	Curtis, Schuyler v. (N. Y.) - - - -	286
31 L. R. A.		1

D.		H.
Danforth v. Danforth (Me.)	608	Haigh v. Bell (W. Va.)	131
Davidson, Nelson v. (Ill.)	325	Havnor, People v. (N. Y.)	689
Davis, Leyson v. (Mont.)	429	Hayes v. Douglas County (Wis.)	213
Denney v. State, Basler (Ind.)	726	Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital (Conn.)	224
Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson (Colo.)	566	Hedges, Fairchild v. (Wash.)	851
Des Moines, State, West, v. (Iowa)	186	Heidel v. Benedict (Minn.)	422
Detroit v. Detroit Water Comrs. (Mich.)	463	Heintz v. Burkhard (Or.)	508
Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., Jeffrey v. (Mich.)	170	Holdom v. Ancient Order of U. W. (Ill.)	67
Detroit Water Comrs., Detroit v. (Mich.)	463	Hoyt v. J. T. Lovett Co. (C. C. App. 3d C.)	44
DeWolf v. Middleton (R. I.)	146	Huber v. La Crosse City R. Co. (Wis.)	583
Deyette, Adams & W. Co. v. (S. D.)	497	Hunter v. Hunter (Cal.)	411
Douglas County, Hayes v. (Wis.)	213	Huott, Easton v. (Iowa)	177
Dowling v. Lancashire Ins. Co. (Wis.)	112	I.
Doyle v. Whalen (Me.)	118	Illinois Steel Co., Blair v. (Ill.)	269
Driver, Wallace v. (Ark.)	317	v. O'Donnell (Ill.)	265
Duke v. Taylor (Fla.)	484	Indianapolis v. Wann (Ind.)	743
Duket, State v. (Wis.)	515	Insurance Co., Lancashire, Dowling v. (Wis.)	112
Durfey, Jackson Bank v. (Miss.)	470	J.
E.		Jackson, Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. (Tex.)	276
Easton v. Huott (Iowa)	177	Jackson Bank v. Durfey (Miss.)	470
Eden Musee Americain Co., Knox v. (N. Y.)	779	Jarvis v. Manhattan Beach Co. (N. Y.)	776
Edwards v. Lesueur (Mo.)	815	Jeffrey v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. (Mich.)	170
Eichengreen v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Tenn.)	702	Johnson, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Ala.)	372
Elliott, Martin v. (Mich.)	169	State, Lamar, v. (Fla.)	357
Employers' L. Assur. Corp., Menneiley v. (N. Y.)	686	Jordan, Braithwaite v. (N. D.)	238
Evans v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. (Ind.)	673	J. T. Lovett Co.; Hoyt v. (C. C. App. 3d C.)	44
E. W. Walker Co., Corliss v. (C. C. D. Mass.)	283	Junkin, Com. v. (Pa.)	124
Ex parte Keeler (S. C.)	678	K.
Lacy (Va.)	822	Kammoss, McCook County v. (S. D.)	467
F.		Keeler, Ex parte (S. C.)	678
Fairchild v. Hedges (Wash.)	851	Knox v. Eden Musee Americain Co. (N. Y.)	779
Farmers' Highline Canal & R. Co., White v. (Colo.)	828	Knoxville Carwheel Co., Tradesman Pub. Co. v. (Tenn.)	593
Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Bankers' & M. Teleg. Co. (N. Y.)	403	Koen v. Bartlett (W. Va.)	128
First Nat. Exch. Bank, City Electric Street R. Co. v. (Ark.)	535	L.
Fisher, Gage v. (N. D.)	557	Laclede Gaslight Co., State, ex rel., v. Murphy (Mo.)	798
Foster, Brown v. (Me.)	116	La Crosse City R. Co., Huber v. (Wis.)	583
Francis, Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. (Ala.)	193	Lacy, Ex parte (Va.)	822
Fresno, McBean v. (Cal.)	794	Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Salzman (Ohio)	261
G.		Lamar, State, ex rel., v. Johnson (Fla.)	357
Gage v. Fisher (N. D.)	557	Lancashire Ins. Co., Dowling v. (Wis.)	112
Gardner, State v. (Ohio)	660	Latta v. Brown (Tenn.)	840
Gaymon, State v. (S. C.)	489	Lesueur, Edwards v. (Mo.)	815
Gilfillan v. Schmidt (Minn.)	547	Lewis v. Terry (Cal.)	220
Gilliam, State, Thomas Cruse Sav. Bank, v. (Mont.)	721	Leyson v. Davis (Mont.)	429
Gleim, State v. (Mont.)	294	Lord, State, Taylor, v. (Or.)	473
Graham, Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. (Iowa)	133	Louisville & N. R. Co., Eichengreen v. (Tenn.)	702
Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Graham (Iowa)	133	v. Johnson (Ala.)	372
Gray, Buckley v. (Cal.)	862	Lucy v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (Minn.)	551
31 L. R. A.		Lynch v. Rosenthal (Ind.)	835

M.

McBean v. Fresno (Cal.)	794
McCann, Pennsylvania Co. v. (Ohio)	651
McCarthy, Rector v. (Ark.)	121
McClelland Bros., Clarendon Land, I. & A. Co. v. (Tex.)	669
People, ex rel. , v. Roberts (N. Y.)	399
McCook County v. Kammos (S. D.)	461
McCutcheon v. Merz Capsule Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.)	415
McKay v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (Ala.)	589
McManus v. Weston (Mass.)	174
McQuown, Payton v. (Ky.)	83
Mahler v. Brumder (Wis.)	695
Manhattan Beach Co., Jarvis v. (N. Y.)	776
Martin v. Elliott (Mich.)	169
Meixner, Cicero & P. Street R. Co. v. (Ill.)	331
Menneiley v. Employers' L. Assur. Corp. (N. Y.)	686
Merrill, Tanner v. (Mich.)	171
Merz Capsule Co., McCutcheon v. (C. C. App. 6th C.)	415
Metropolitan Nat. Bank, Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. (Ohio)	653
Metropolitan Sav. Bank v. Murphy (Md.)	454
Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Jackson (Tex.)	276
Michener v. Springfield Engine & T. Co. (Ind.)	59
Middleton, DeWolf v. (R. I.)	146
Miller, Anderson v. (Tenn.)	604
Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co. (Ill.)	529
Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. (S. C.)	577
Montana U. R. Co., Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. (Mont.)	298
Moore, Pickering v. (N. H.)	693
Mt. Greenwood Cemetery Asso., Barrett v. (Ill.)	109
Murphy, Metropolitan Sav. Bank v. (Md.)	454
State, Laclede Gaslight Co., v. (Mo.)	798
Myers, Com. v. (Va.)	379

N.

Nelson v. Davidson (Ill.)	325
v. The Willamette (C. C. App. 9th C.)	715
State, ex rel. , Western U. Teleg. Co., v. (Md.)	572
Newberry v. Carpenter (Mich.)	163
New York Elev. R. Co., O'Reilly v. (N. Y.)	407
Normal School Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. Blodgett (Ill.)	70
Norman, Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. (Ky.)	41
Norwegian Plow Co. v. Bollman (Neb.)	747
Nowack v. Berger (Mo.)	810

O.

O'Donnell, Illinois Steel Co. v. (Ill.)	265
Old, State v. (Tenn.)	837
C'Rear, Thornhill v. (Ala.)	792
O'Reilly v. New York Elev. R. Co. (N. Y.)	407

Overton County, State, ex rel. , v. Cope-land (Tenn.)	884
Owens v. Van Winkle Gin & M. Co. (Ga.)	767

P.

Park v. Champlin (Iowa)	141
Parker v. Bethel Hotel Co. (Tenn.)	706
Payton v. McQuown (Ky.)	33
Pennsylvania Co. v. McCann (Ohio)	651
People v. Adelphi Club (N. Y.)	510
v. Bendit (Cal.)	831
v. Havnor (N. Y.)	689
People, ex rel. McClelland, v. Roberts (N. Y.)	399
Pickering v. Moore (N. H.)	698

Q.

Queen City Mfg. Co. v. Blalack (Miss.)	222
--	-----

R.

Railroad Co., Baltimore & P., v. Swann (Md.)	313
Cincinnati, H. & D., v. Metroplitan Nat. Bank (Ohio)	653
Detroit, L. & N., Jeffrey v. (Mich.)	170
Lake Shore & M. S., v. Salzman (Ohio)	261
Louisville & N., Eichengreen v. (Tenn.)	702
Louisville & N., v. Johnson (Ala.)	372
Mexican Nat., v. Jackson (Tex.)	276
New York Elev., O'Reilly v. (N. Y.)	407
Sioux City, O. & W., State, Board of Transportation, v. (Neb.)	47
Railway Co., Butte, A. & P., v. Montana U. R. Co. (Mont.)	298
Chicago G. W., Lucy v. (Minn.)	551
Chicago, M. & St. P., Cameron v. (Minn.)	553
Chicago, M. & St. P., v. Stark-weather (Iowa)	183
Cicero & P. Street, v. Meixner (Ill.)	331
City Electric Street, v. Conery (Ark.)	570
City Electric Street, v. First Nat. Exch. Bank (Ark.)	535
La Crosse City, Huber v. (Wis.)	583
Montana, U., Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. (Mont.)	298
Texas & P., v. Smith (C. C. App. 5th C.)	321
Texas M., v. Wright (Tex.)	200
Rector v. McCarthy (Ark.)	121
R. Third Nat. Bank (N. Y.)	403
Rice v. Wood (Ark.)	609
Richberger v. American Exp. Co. (Miss.)	390
Roberts, People, McClelland, v. (N. Y.)	399
Rogers v. State (Ark.)	465
Rogers & B. Hardware Co. v. Cleveland Bldg. Co. (Mo.)	335
Rosenthal, Lynch v. (Ind.)	835
Roth v. Union Depot Co. (Wash.)	855

S.

Salzman, Lake Shore & M. S. & R. Co. v. (Ohio)	261
Schmidt, Gilfillan v. (Minn.)	547

Schuyler v. Curtis (N. Y.)	296	Terry, Lewis v. (Cal.)	220
Scott v. Standard Oil Co. (Ala.)	374	Texas & P. R. Co. v. Smith (C. C. App. 5th C.)	321
Shutter, Children's Guardians v. (Ind.)	740	Texas M. R. Co. v. Wright (Tex.)	200
Simpson, Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. (Colo.)	566	The Willamette (C. C. App. 9th C.)	715
Sioux City, O. & W. R. Co., State, Board of Transportation, v. (Neb.)	47	Nelson v. (C. C. App. 9th C.)	715
Smith, Case v. (Mich.)	282	Third Nat. Bank, Re (N. Y.)	408
Texas & P. R. Co. v. (C. C. App. 5th C.)	821	Thomas Cruse Sav. Bank, State, ex rel. , v. Gilliam (Mont.)	721
Snyder, Snyder Mfg. Co. v. (Ohio)	657	Thornhill v. O'Rear (Ala.)	792
Snyder Mfg. Co. v. Snyder (Ohio)	657	Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car-wheel Co. (Tenn.)	593
Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Allen (Ala.)	193
v. Francis (Ala.)	193	U.
McKay v. (Ala.)	589	Union Depot Co., Roth v. (Wash.)	855
Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Norman (Ky.)	41
Springfield Engine & T. Co., Michener v. (Ind.)	59	V.
Standard Oil Co., Scott v. (Ala.)	374	Van Winkle Gin & M. Co., Owens v. (Ga.)	767
Starkweather, Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. (Iowa)	183	Violet v. Alexandria (Va.)	382
State v. Conlon (Conn.)	55
v. Duket (Wis.)	515	W.
v. Gardner, (Ohio)	660	Waco, Waco Water & L. Co. v. (Tex.)	392
v. Gaymon (S. C.)	489	Waco Water & L. Co. v. Waco (Tex.)	392
v. Gleim (Mont.)	294	Wakefield, Citizens' Gaslight Co. v. (Mass.)	457
v. Old (Tenn.)	887	Wallace v. Driver (Ark.)	317
Rogers v. (Ark.)	465	Walser v. Board of Education (Ill.)	329
State, ex rel. Basler, Denney v. (Ind.)	726	Wann, Indianapolis v. (Ind.)	743
Board of Transportation, v. Sioux City, O. & W. R. Co. (Neb.)	47	Waterbury Hospital, Hearn v. (Conn.)	224
Laclede Gaslight Co., v. Murphy (Mo.)	798	Went, Bevan v. (Ill.)	85
Lamar, v. Johnson (Fla.)	357	West, State, ex rel. , v. Des Moines (Iowa)	186
Nelson, Western U. Teleg. Co. v. (Md.)	572	Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, Nelson, (Md.)	572
Overton County, v. Copeland (Tenn.)	844	Weston, McManus v. (Mass.)	174
Taylor, v. Lord (Or.)	478	Whalen, Doyle v. (Me.)	118
Thomas Cruse Sav. Bank, v. Gilliam (Mont.)	721	White v. Farmers' Highline Canal & R. Co. (Colo.)	828
West, v. Des Moines (Iowa)	186	Whitebreast Coal Co., Minnesota Lumber Co. v. (Ill.)	529
State Bank, Svendsen v. (Minn.)	552	Willamette, The (C. C. App. 9th C.)	715
Stevens v. Carter (Or.)	342	Nelson v. (C. C. App. 9th C.)	715
Stickney, Anniston Loan & T. Co. v. (Ala.)	284	Wolfley, Cawood v. (Kan.)	538
Stokes, Bolton Mines Co. v. (Md.)	739	Wood, Rice v. (Ark.)	609
Svendsen v. State Bank (Minn.)	552	Wright, Texas M. R. Co. v. (Tex.)	200
Swann, Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. (Md.)	313
		Y.
T.		Young v. College of Physicians & S. (Md.)	540
Tanner v. Merrill (Mich.)	171
Taylor, Duke v. (Fla.)	484
State, ex rel. , v. Lord (Or.)	478
81 L. R. A.

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A.

Abbott v. Gilchrist, 38 Me. 280	510
Aberdeen Female Academy v. Aberdeen, 18 Smedes & M. 645	78
Abernethy v. Hutchinson, 8 L. J. Ch. 209	286
Ackroyd v. Smith, 10 C. B. 164	698
Adams v. Thompson, 18 Neb. 541	255
Etna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 314	655
Ah Lee, Re, 5 Fed. Rep. 599	664
Albany County Supers. v. Dorr, 25 Wend. 440	854
Alberger v. National Bank of Commerce, 123 Mo. 318	505
Alexander v. Walter, 8 Gill, 239, 50 Am. Dec. 688	792
Allen v. Center Valley Co. 21 Conn. 180, 54 Am. Dec. 333	471
v. Hannum, 15 Kan. 625	842
v. Hopper, 24 N. J. L. 514	256
v. Pioneer Press Co. 40 Minn. 117, 3 L. R. A. 532	555
Allerton v. Lang, 10 Bosw. 362	450
Alligator, The, 1 Gall. 145, Fed. Cas. No. 248	244
Allis v. Jones, 45 Fed. Rep. 148	505
Allison v. Coal Creek & N. R. Coal Co. 87 Tenn. 62	601
Almy v. California, 65 U. S. 24 How. 169, 16 L. ed. 644	826
American Asylum v. Phoenix Bank, 4 Conn. 172, 10 Am. Dec. 112	225
American Bridge Co. v. Murphy, 13 Kan. 35	572
American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Oregon Pottery Co. 55 Fed. Rep. 255	536
American Exp. Co. v. Patterson, 73 Ind. 430	591
American Ins. Co. v. 355 Bales of Cotton, 25 U. S. 1 Pet. 511, 7 L. ed. 242	253
American Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 248	680
American S. B. Co. v. Chace, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 322, 21 L. ed. 369	247, 248, 719
Ames v. Union F. R. Co. 64 Fed. Rep. 165, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 835	53
Amis v. Witt, 33 Beav. 619	446
Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Garner, 55 Barb. 151	140
v. Spear, 2 Sandf. 599	139
v. Trainer, 101 U. S. 55, 25 L. ed. 994	377, 378
Anchor Mill Co. v. Walsh, 30 Mo. App. 107	792
Anderson v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. (Minn.) 25 L. R. A. 610	116
v. Nicholas, 28 N. Y. 600	763
v. Schubert, 158 Ill. 75	528
v. Shockey, 82 Mo. 250	513
v. State, 63 Ga. 675	296
Andrews, Ex parte, 15 Cal. 685	662
Andrews v. Etna L. Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 596	461
v. Swartz, 155 U. S. 272, 39 L. ed. 425	679
Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Anne Arundel County Comrs. 108 U. S. 4, 23 L. ed. 360	185
Anniston & C. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, G. & A. R. Co. 82 Ala. 297	310
Anonymous Case, 1 Sal. 405, *3	497
Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 789, 27 L. ed. 468, 76 Armstrong v. Park, 9 Humph. 195	723, 944
Arnold v. Frost, Fed. Cas. No. 558	249
v. Hagerman, 45 N. J. Eq. 189	471, 472
v. State, 9 Tex. App. 435	296
Asberry v. Roanoke (Va.) 22 S. E. 361	389
Ashurst's Appeal, 60 Pa. 314	506
Astrom v. Hammond, 3 McLean, 107	403
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 867, 28 L. ed. 291	53, 54
v. Weber, 33 Kan. 543, 52 Am. Rep. 543	264
Atkinson v. Dunlap, 50 Me. 111	73
v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 60 Wis. 141, 50 Am. Rep. 352	597
Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Read, 60 N. J. L. 663	787
Atlas, The, 93 U. S. 302, 23 L. ed. 836	717
31 L. R. A.

Atty. Gen. v. Bank of Niagara, Hopk. Ch. 354	711
v. Blossom, 1 Wis. 278	478
v. Brown, 1 Swanst. 265	477
v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 513, 478, 479
v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 325, 27 Am. Rep. 55	655
v. Delaware & B. R. Co. 27 N. J. Eq. 631	477
v. Dublin, 1 Bligh, N. R. 312	477
v. East India Co. 11 Sim. 380	482
v. Eastlake, 11 Hare, 218	477
v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 425	478
v. Heelis, 2 Sim. & Stu. 77	477
v. Nichol, 16 Ves. Jr. 339	698
v. Pearson, 8 Meriv. 409	144
v. Price, 17 Ves. Jr. 871	120
v. Vivian, 1 Russ. Ch. 236	461
Atwater v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 152 Ill. 905	273
Augusta Sav. Bank v. Stelling, 31 S. C. 399	683
Ayerst v. Jenkins, L. R. 16 Eq. 285	421
Ayres v. Gartner, 90 Mich. 390	161

B.

Bache v. Nashville Horticultural Soc. 10 Lea, 439	711
Bacon v. Mississippi Ins. Co. 31 Miss. 116	536
v. United States Mut. Acc. Asso. 123 N. Y. 304, 9 L. R. A. 617	688
Badeau v. Mead, 14 Barb. 328	698
Bailey v. Day, 26 Me. 88	172
Baily v. Com. (Pa.) 10 Ad. 764	854
Baker v. Johnson County, 33 Iowa, 151	140
v. Merriam, 97 Ind. 559	65
v. Normal, 81 Ill. 108	195
Baldro v. Toimic, 1 Or. 176	72
Baldwin v. Canfield, 26 Minn. 43	711, 712
v. Oskaloosa Gaslight Co. 57 Iowa, 51	140
Ball v. Gilbert, 12 Met. 438	793
v. Wyeth, 99 Mass. 538	73
Baltic, The, Fed. Cas. No. 826	244
Baltimore v. Warren Mfg. Co. 59 Md. 96	111
Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Schwindling, 101 Pa. 258, 47 Am. Rep. 706	858
v. State, 62 Md. 479	858
v. State, Hauer, 60 Md. 462	316
v. Worthington, 21 Md. 233	316
Bangor v. Rising Virtue Lodge No. 10, F. & A. M. 73 Me. 438, 40 Am. Rep. 309	120
Bangor Electric Light & P. Co. v. Robinson, 52 Fed. Rep. 520	783
Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274	486
Commerce v. Goos, 39 Neb. 437, 23 L. R. A. 180	553
Ireland v. Evans's Charities, 5 H. L. Cas. 389	785
Montreal v. J. E. Potts Salt & L. Co. 90 Mich. 545	505
Banks v. Gibson, 34 Beav. 568	659
Barbier v. Connolly, 118 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 823	894
Barclay v. Talman, 4 Edw. Ch. 123	711
Barden v. Montana Club, 10 Mont. 330, 11 L. R. A. 543	513
Barre R. Co. v. Montpelier & W. R. R. Co. 61 Vt. 1, 41 R. A. 785	311
Barry v. Koyles, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 314, 7 L. ed. 158	719
v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 280, 44 Am. Rep. 377	860
Barstow v. Savage Min. Co. 64 Cal. 388, 49 Am. Rep. 705	783
Bartelott v. International Bank, 119 Ill. 259	332
Bartlett v. Bangor, 67 Me. 460	698
v. Spicer, 75 N. Y. 523	244, 247
Barton v. Brown ("The Corsair"), 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 727	719, 720
v. Pepin County Agri. Soc. 83 Wis. 19	587

Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 27 L. ed. 500.	445, 451	Braceville v. Doherty, 30 Ill. App. 645.	525
Bates v. Kempton, 7 Gray.	582	Bradbury v. Dickens, 27 Beav. 53.	659
Batstone's Estate, 12, 133 Pa.	307	Bradford v. Shine, 13 Fla. 393, 7 Am. Rep. 239.	73
Baugh Case, 149 U. S. 391, 37 L. ed. 779.	325	Bradley v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 21 Conn.	188
Baxendale v. Bennett, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 530.	754		259
Baylor v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 9 W. Va. 270.	151	Bradwell v. Weeks, 1 Johns. Ch. 325.	258
Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162.	266	Braithwaite v. Aikin, 1 N. D. 475, 2 N. D. 57, 3	242
Beall v. Pearra, 12 Md. 566.	570	N. D. 395.	242
Bean v. Hyde Park, 143 Mass. 245.	176	v. Power, 1 N. D. 455.	508
Beaston v. Farmers' Bank, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 139.	9 L. ed. 1031	Branch v. Port Royal & W. C. R. Co. 35 S. C.	582
Beckman v. Saratoga & S. R. Co. 3 Paige. 45, 22	Am. Dec. 679		711
Beers v. Houghton, 84 U. S. 9 Wheat. 329, 9 L.	ed. 145	Brandon Iron Co. v. Gleason, 24 Vt. 228.	235
Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232	33 L. ed. 892	Brandreth v. Lance, 8 Paige. 24, 34 Am. Dec. 368.	285
Bemis v. Springfield, 122 Mass. 110.		Brannum v. O'Connor, 77 Iowa. 682.	280
Bennet v. Porter, 60 U. S. 9 How. 235, 13 L. ed.	119	Brantford City, The, 32 Fed. Rep. 324.	254, 258
Bennett v. Mulry, 6 Misc. 304.		Brass & I. Works Co. v. Payne, 50 Ohio St. 115,	659
Benson v. Baltimore Traction Co. 77 Md. 535.	857	19 L. R. A. 82.	527
Bentlock v. Franklin & G. City Co. 38 Tex. 458	73	Braun v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 186.	528
Benton v. Boston City Hospital, 140 Mass. 13, 54	Am. Rep. 438	Brennan v. Merchants' & Mfrs. Nat. Bank, 62	655
Benyon v. Nettlefold, 3 Macn. & G. 102.	230, 421		297
Berry v. Hartzell, 81 Mo. 132.	813	Bressler v. People, 117 Ill. 422.	51
Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep.	323	v. Wayne County, 25 Neb. 498.	258
Bevans v. United States, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 56, 20	L. ed. 531	Brewster v. Cowen, 55 Conn. 152.	656
Beverly v. Barnitz, 55 Kan. 466, 31 L. R. A. 74	845	Brice v. King, 1 Head. 152.	173
Biddle v. Bayard, 13 Pa. 150.	723	Brick v. Plymouth County, 63 Iowa. 462.	185
Bigelow v. Bemis, 2 Allen. 496.	72	Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 36 Conn.	185
v. Hartford Bridge Co. 14 Conn. 578, 36	Am. Dec. 502	255, 4 Am. Rep. 63.	65
Bills v. Belknap, 38 Iowa. 583.	195	Bridge v. Blake, 108 Ind. 335.	848
Bird v. St. Marks Church, 62 Iowa. 573.	144	v. Perry, 14 Vt. 262.	587
Bishop v. Moorman, 99 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 731	87	Bright v. Barnett & R. Co. 88 Wis. 307, 21 L. R.	711
Hishop's Fund v. Eagle Bank, 7 Conn. 478.	225	A. 524.	711
Bixby v. Adams County, 49 Iowa. 507.	139	Brinkerhoff v. Brown, 7 Johns. Ch. 217.	711
Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co. 22 N. J. Eq.	416	Broadwell v. Merritt, 87 Mo. 95.	72
v. Oliver, 1 Ala. 450, 35 Am. Dec. 381.	794	Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 811, 11 L. ed.	143
v. Zacharie, 44 U. S. 3 How. 513, 11 L. ed.	704	75, 80, 81, 723, 725.	553
Blackburn v. Morton, 18 Ark. 392.	469	Brooke v. Tradersmen's Nat. Bank, 69 Hun, 202.	529
Black Rabbitt Assn. v. Munday, 21 Abb. N. C.	99	Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 578.	172
Bladen v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 464.	746	v. White, 2 Met. 283, 37 Am. Dec. 95.	701
Blaine v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 9 W. Va. 252.	131	Brown v. Crump, 1 Marsh. 567.	844
Blair v. Hinrichsen, 151 Ill. 41, 25 L. R. A. 143	476, 479	v. Hunt, 12 Heisk. 405.	663
v. Illinois Steel Co. 31 L. R. A. 269, 159 Ill.	350.	v. O'Connell, 38 Conn. 432, 4 Am. Rep. 80	72
Blanchard v. Ayer, 148 Mass. 174.	175	v. Parker, 28 Wis. 21.	514
v. Lake Shore & M. R. Co. 128 Ill. 416.	858	v. United States, 113 U. S. 568, 28 L. ed.	159
v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 60 N. Y. 510.	576	1079.	169
Blanche Page, The, 16 Blatchf. 1, 17 Blatchf. 221	244, 248, 254	v. Williams, 5 R. I. 309.	742
Bliss v. Kaweah Canal & Irrig. Co. 65 Cal. 504.	536	Bryan v. Lyon, 104 Ind. 227.	340
Block v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 89 Wis. 371,	27 L. R. A. 305.	Bryant v. Russell, 127 Mo. 422.	247
570, 572, 587.	691	Brymer v. Atkins, 1 H. Bl. 164.	255
Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387.		Buchanan v. Milligan, 125 Ind. 362.	419
Board of Liquidation v. McComb, 92 U. S. 541,	23 L. ed. 628.	Buckeye Marble & F. Co. v. Harvey, 92 Tenn.	482
Bobbett v. State, 10 Kan. 15.	482	115, 18 L. R. A. 252.	51
Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Fed. Cas. No. 1, 562	249	Buck Mountain Coal Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Nav.	482
Boettcher v. Colorado Nat. Bank, 15 Colo. 16.	655	Co. 50 Pa. 100.	247
Bohl v. State, 3 Tex. App. 683.	691	Budd v. People, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247.	51
Bolton v. Lambert, L. R. 41 Ch. Div. 295.	461	Bull v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa. 284, 85 Am. Dec.	506
Bonner v. State, Pitts. 7 Ga. 473.	371	516.	185, 309, 312
Booker v. Smith, 38 S. C. 288.	683	Buffalo, Re, 68 N. Y. 167.	307
Bookman v. New York Elev. R. Co. 147 N. Y.	288.	Buffalo & N. Y. C. R. Co. v. Brainard, 9 N. Y.	307
Booske v. Gulf Ice Co. 24 Fla. 550.	410	109.	831
Born v. Hortsman, 80 Cal. 452.	488	Buffalo East Side R. Co. v. Buffalo Street R. Co.	249
Boston v. Richardson, 13 Allen. 146.	194	111 N. Y. 132, 2 L. R. A. 384.	655
Boston & A. R. Co., Re, 53 N. Y. 576.	185	Buford v. Strother, 10 Fed. Rep. 406.	158
Boston & M. Railroad v. Lowell & L. R. Co. 124	Mass. 368.	Bullard v. Randall, 1 Gray. 605, 61 Am. Dec. 433.	562
Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25,	24 L. ed. 989.	Bullock v. Downs, 9 H. L. Cas. 1.	562
Boston Diatite Co. v. Florence Mfg. Co. 114	Mass. 69, 19 Am. Rep. 310.	Bumgardner v. Leavitt, 35 W. Va. 194, 12 L. R.	320
Boston Water Power Co. v. Boston & W. R.	Corp. 23 Pick. 390.	A. 776.	272
Bourgeois v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 86 Wis. 402.	116	Buras v. O'Brien, 42 La. Ann. 527.	413
v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 86 Wis. 609	114	Burch v. West, 134 Ill. 258.	132
Bouton v. Smith, 113 Ill. 481.	266, 273	Burden v. Shannon, 3 Gray. 387.	836
Boyd v. Alabama, 94 U. S. 645, 24 L. ed. 302.	809	Burdett v. Allen, 35 W. Va. 347, 14 L. R. A. 397.	259
v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746	164, 165, 167	Burger v. Rice, 3 Ind. 127.	656
Boyden v. United States, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 17,	20 L. ed. 527.	Burke v. Browne, 15 Ves. Jr. 184.	371
	845, 852	Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178, 80 Am. Dec. 327.	175
		v. Leicester, 121 Mass. 242.	661
		Burt v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 472.	244
		Burtus v. McCarty, 13 Johns. 424.	655
		Bush v. Foote, 58 Miss. 5, 38 Am. Rep. 310.	69
		v. Royal, 2 Barn. & Ald. 73.	226
		v. Steinman, 1 Bos. & P. 404.	320
		Butler v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 85 Mich. 246	712
		Buton v. Hoffman, 61 Wis. 20, 50 Am. Rep. 131.	705
		Byram v. McGuire, 3 Head. 530.	576
		Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurst. & C. 722.
		v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 362, 58 Am. Rep. 512.
		C.
		Cahill v. Kalamazoo Mut. Ins. Co. 2 Dougl.	711
		(Mich.) 124, 43 Am. Dec. 457.	159
		Cain v. Teare, 7 Jur. 567.	266
		Caird v. Sime, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 326.	173
		Calkins v. State, 13 Wis. 389.	842
		Callahan v. Robinson, 30 S. C. 249, 3 L. R. A. 497	680
		Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 540, 32 L. ed. 223.

Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick. 417	175	Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County	662
Camden & A. Land Co. v. Lippincott, 45 N. J. L. 408	318	Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 88	114
Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 61 N. W. 814	555	Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Piolet, 126 Pa. 104, 4 L. R. A. 180	237
Camp's Appeal, 35 Conn. 88, 4 Am. Rep. 39	449	City of Norwalk, The, 55 Fed. Rep. 98	719
Campbell v. Com. 96 Pa. 344	684	City of Panama, The, v. Phelps ("The City of Panama"), 101 U. S. 453, 25 L. ed. 1061	245, 250, 257, 720
v. Hadley, 1 Sprague, 470	249	City Sav. Bank v. North Ala. Lumber & Mfg. Co. 91 Tenn. 15	597
v. Holt, 115 U. S. 620, 29 L. ed. 483	73	Clare v. People, 9 Colo. 122	297
v. Phelps, 1 Pick. 62, 11 Am. Dec. 139	198	Clark, R. v. Conn. 17, 28 L. R. A. 242	57
Cantrell v. Colwell, 3 Head, 471	705	Clark v. Com. 29 Pa. 129	604
Capital Bank v. Huntton, 35 Kan. 578	80	v. Inhabitants of the Hundred of Blything, 2 Barn. & C. 254	606
Carleton v. People, 10 Mich. 250	668	v. Jones, 87 Ala. 474	488
Carpenter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 501, 10 L. ed. 1047	605	v. Miller, 54 N. Y. 528	408
Carr v. National Security Bank, 107 Mass. 48, 9 Am. Rep. 6	655	v. Heyburn, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 318, 19 L. ed. 354	79, 723
Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 559	809	v. Ricker, 14 N. H. 44	283
Carroll's Will, 53 Wis. 228	219	v. Wilson, 103 Mass. 219, 4 Am. Rep. 532	605
Carter v. Beaman, 6 Jones, L. 44	471	Clatsop Chief, The, 3 Fed. Rep. 163	719
v. Hodge, 6 Misc. 575	255	Clay v. Fry, 3 Bibb, 243, 6 Am. Dec. 654	776
Carthage v. Frederick, 122 N. Y. 268, 10 L. R. A. 178	692	Clayton v. Andrews, 4 Burr. 2101	509
Cartmel v. Newton, 79 Ind. 1	746	v. Gosling, 5 Barn. & C. 360	237
Casady v. Woodbury County, 13 Iowa, 113	585	Clements v. Jessup, 36 N. J. Eq. 569	471
Case v. Beauregard, 90 U. S. 119, 25 L. ed. 370	471	Clews v. Bank of New York Nat. Bkg. Asso. 105 N. Y. 308	778
v. Johnson, 91 Ind. 479	747	Clinton v. Englebrecht, 80 U. S. 13 Wall 434, 20 L. ed. 659	253
v. State, 5 Ind. 1	663	Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 482, 93 Am. Dec. 459	165, 166
Cashman v. Harrison, 90 Cal. 297	655	Coats v. Donnell, 94 N. Y. 188	605
Cason v. Cheely, 6 Ga. 564	510	Coe v. Washington Mills, 149 Mass. 543	120
Cassaday v. American Ins. Co. 72 Ind. 95	747	v. Wise, 5 Best & S. 440	227
Cassel v. Scott, 17 Ind. 514	742	Coffeen v. Bruuton, 5 McLean, 256	140
Casner v. Walrod, 83 Ill. 171, 25 Am. Rep. 369	328	Cohen v. Solomon, 66 Fed. Rep. 411	249
Caswell v. Hazard, 121 N. Y. 484	659	Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 443, 5 L. ed. 300	826
Carlin v. Eagle Bank, 6 Conn. 233	505	Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474, 24 Am. Rep. 601	796
v. Springfield F. Ins. Co. 1 Sumn. 434	60	Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 33 L. ed. 538	406
v. Valentine, 9 Paige, 573, 38 Am. Dec. 567	111	v. Hills, 44 N. H. 227	714
Caulkins v. Caulman, 17 Serg. & R. 26	842	Cole Co. v. Madden, 91 Mo. 585	369
Caulkins v. Memphis Gaslight Co. 85 Tenn. 683	713	Coleman v. Bean, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 394	256
Cecil Nat. Bank v. Watsontown Bank, 105 U. S. 220, 26 L. ed. 1041	458	v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 38 Minn. 260	555
Central Railroad v. Brinson, 10 Ga. 207	357	Coles v. Pilkington, L. R. 19 Eq. 174	814
Central R. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 31 N. J. Eq. 475	419	Collector, The, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 194, 5 L. ed. 239	259
Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55	420	Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 413, 1 Keb. 611	104, 108
Central Trust Co. v. McGeorge, 151 U. S. 129, 38 L. ed. 98	719	Colorado Eastern R. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 203	310, 311
Chafee v. Postal Teleg. Co. 35 S. C. 378	681	Coltsmann v. Coltsmann, L. R. 3 H. L. 121	159
Chapman v. Dougherty, 87 Mo. 617, 56 Am. Rep. 469	813	Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 507, 9 L. ed. 512	69
v. Sneed, 39 Conn. 413	701	Columbia Mill Co. v. Alcorn, 150 U. S. 460, 37 L. ed. 1144	45, 47, 139
Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 462, 27 L. R. A. 42	138	Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Witherow, 82 Ala. 190	194
Chavannah v. State, 49 Ala. 896	836	Columbus City Bank v. Bruce, 17 N. Y. 507	502
Chenango Bridge Co. v. Paige, 83 N. Y. 178, 38 Am. Rep. 407	402	Columbus, H. V. & T. R. Co. v. Erick, 51 Ohio St. 146	651
Chenery v. Fitchburg R. Co. 160 Mass. 211, 22 L. R. A. 535	857	Colvert v. Wood, 93 Tenn. 454	842
Cheriot v. Foussat, 3 Binn. 220	247	Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 87	132
Cherokee v. Sioux City & L. F. Town Lot & L. Co. 52 Iowa, 280	185	v. Baldwin, 11 Gray, 199, 71 Am. Dec. 708	834
Cherry v. Frost, 7 Lea. 1	713	v. Brown, 91 Va. 762, 28 L. R. A. 110	824
Chesham, Re, L. R. 31 Ch. Div. 466	792	v. Comly, 3 Pa. 372	853
Cheshire R. Co. v. Foster, 51 N. H. 490	701	v. Crompton, 137 Pa. 138	450
Chewacla Lime Works v. Dismukes, 87 Ala. 344, 5 L. R. A. 100	501	v. Crowell, 156 Mass. 215	57
Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Randolph, 53 Ill. 510, 5 Am. Rep. 60	363	v. Dana, 2 Met. 329	167
Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 38 L. ed. 176	51	v. Ewig, 145 Mass. 119	513
Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 112 Ill. 589	186	v. Foster, 114 Mass. 311, 19 Am. Rep. 353	834
v. Dey, 35 Fed. Rep. 896, 1 L. R. A. 744, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 325	116	v. Has, 122 Mass. 40	691
v. Dunleavy, 129 Ill. 132	332	v. Jones, 10 Bush. 749	40
v. James, 22 Wis. 197	596	v. Knapp, 10 Pick. 477, 20 Am. Dec. 534	296
v. States, 30 Ill. 586	333	v. Mudgett (Holmes), 4 Pa. Dist. R. 739	168
Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 43 Minn. 527	304	v. Myers, (Va.) 31 L. R. A. 379	826
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. ed. 94	51	v. Ober, 12 Cush. 493	381
Chicago Dock & C. Co. v. Garrity, 115 Ill. 155	304	v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 564	513
Chicago Marine & F. Ins. Co. v. Stanford, 23 Ill. 168, 81 Am. Dec. 270	655	v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 25 L. R. A. 250	132
Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 970	51-53	v. York, 9 Met. 93, 43 Am. Dec. 373	206, 447
v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787	324	Comer v. Himes, 58 Ind. 573	67
Chicago Pkg. & P. Co. v. Chicago, 88 Ill. 221, 30 Am. Rep. 545	625	Comfort v. McTeer, 7 Lea. 690	597
Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lake, 71 Ill. 333	311	v. Patterson, 2 Lea. 672	597, 848
Chicago, W. D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan W. S. Elev. R. Co. 152 Ill. 519	815	Commercial Exch. Bank v. McLeod, 65 Iowa, 665, 54 Am. Rep. 36	165, 166
Chichester v. Vass, 1 Munf. 98, 4 Am. Dec. 531	184	Comstock v. Van Deusen, 5 Pick. 163	697
Child v. Dodd, 51 Ind. 484	742	Concordia Sav. & Aid Asso. v. Read, 124 N. Y. 189	256
Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Belle Centre, 48 Ohio St. 273	185	Concord Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Woodbury, 45 Me. 453	606
31 L. R. A.		Cone v. Cone, 58 N. H. 152	522
		v. Russell, 48 N. J. Eq. 206	564
		Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 49, 26 L. ed. 347	421
		Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648	76, 79, 723-726

Connehan v. Ford, 9 Wis. 240.	697	Davidson v. Koehler, 76 Ind. 308.	742
Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment, 24 Kan. 709.	820	v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 104, 24 L. ed. 619.	386, 387
Contra Costa Coal Mines R. Co. v. Moss, 23 Cal. 323.	312	Davis v. Barger, 57 Ind. 54.	747
Conway v. Nolte, 11 Mo. 74.	339, 341	v. Bible, 134 Ind. 108.	742
v. Starkweather, 1 Denio, 113.	700	v. Central Cong. Soc. 129 Mass. 367, 37 Am. Rep. 368.	857
Cook v. Burlington, 30 Iowa, 105, 6 Am. Rep. 649.	184	v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 646, 46 Am. Rep. 676.	981
v. Cook, 56 Wis. 207, 43 Am. Rep. 706.	519	v. Gillet, 7 Johns. 318.	244
v. Dickerson, 1 Duer, 691.	259	v. Lynchburg, 84 Va. 870.	387
v. Lum, 55 N. J. L. 373.	450	v. Minor, 1 How. (Miss.) 183, 28 Am. Dec. 325.	72
v. McClure, 58 N. Y. 437, 17 Am. Rep. 270.	320	v. Packard, 6 Wend. 327.	244
v. State, 90 Tenn. 407, 13 L. R. A. 183.	839	v. Packard, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 276, 8 L. ed. 684.	243
Cooke v. Baltimore Traction Co. 80 Md. 568.	787	v. Snyder, 45 Neb. 415.	751
v. Millard, 65 N. Y. 352, 22 Am. Rep. 619.	510	v. State, 45 Ark. 484.	497
Cooper v. Elston, 7 T. R. 14.	509	Dawley v. Van Court, 21 Ill. 460.	328
v. Wandsworth Dist. Bd. of Works, 14 C. B. N. S. 181.	386	Day v. Gardner, 42 N. J. Eq. 190.	172
Cooesaw Min. Co. v. South Carolina, 144 U. S. 566, 36 L. ed. 543.	481	Dayton Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 394.	306
Corbin v. Gould, 133 U. S. 308, 33 L. ed. 611.	139	Dean v. Hart, 62 Ala. 310.	842
Corey v. Bishop, 48 N. H. 146.	701	Deansville Cemetery Assn. v. Re, 66 N. Y. 569, 23 Am. Rep. 86.	691
v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 23 L. R. A. 618.	508	Decker v. Judson, 16 N. Y. 439.	256
Cornick v. Richards, 3 Len. 25.	713	Delhi v. Ottenville, 14 Lea. 191.	705
Corning v. Troy Iron & N. Factory, 40 N. Y. 191.	411	Delaney v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 33 Wis. 67.	981
Coster v. Albany, 43 N. Y. 330.	656	Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, 80 U. S. 13 Wall 311, 20 L. ed. 581.	46, 139
Cota v. Buck, 7 Met. 558, 41 Am. Dec. 464.	237	Demarest v. Flack, 128 N. Y. 205, 13 L. R. A. 854.	487
Couch v. McKee, 6 Ark. 484.	73	Deming v. Merchants' Cottonpress Storage Co. 90 Tenn. 353, 13 L. R. A. 518.	606
Coughty v. Globe Woollen Co. 56 N. Y. 127, 15 Am. Rep. 387.	221	Demsey v. Chambers, 154 Mass. 330, 13 L. R. A. 219.	461
Coulson v. Portland, Deady, 481, Fed. Cas. No. 3, 275.	746	Dennehy v. Chicago, 120 Ill. 627.	527
Covert v. Rhodes, 48 Ohio St. 66.	656	Denniston v. Clark, 125 Mass. 216.	175, 176
v. Rogers, 38 Mich. 363, 31 Am. Rep. 319.	506	Den, Wooden, v. Shotwell, 23 N. J. L. 470.	837
Coyle v. Com. 104 Pa. 117.	661, 664	Detroit v. Laughna, 34 Mich. 402.	463
Cox v. Conway, 35 Mo. App. 490.	672	v. Robinson, 38 Mich. 108.	747
v. Arnold (Mo.) 81 S. W. 562.	318, 320	De Vignier v. New Orleans, 16 Fed. Rep. 11.	42
v. James, 45 N. Y. 557, 59 Barb. 144.	668	Dickenson v. Breeden, 30 Ill. 279.	328
v. Keahy, 36 Ala. 340, 76 Am. Dec. 325.	196	Dietrich v. Murdoch, 42 Mo. 279.	306
Cracker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 604.	391	Dietz v. Mitchell, 12 Helsk. 676.	849
Craft v. South Boston R. Co. 150 Mass. 206, 5 L. R. A. 641.	536	District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 186 U. S. 463, 34 L. ed. 477.	582
Cragie v. Mellen, 6 Mass. 7.	175, 176	Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. I. 87.	519
Craig v. Kitteredge, 46 N. H. 57.	447	Dixon v. Holden, L. R. 7 Eq. 488.	283
Cramer v. Lepper, 26 Ohio St. 59, 20 Am. Rep. 756.	714	Doane v. Penhallow, 1 U. S. 1 Dall. 218, 1 L. ed. 108.	247
Crawford v. Edwards, 38 Mich. 354.	656	Dobson v. Sotheby, Moody & M. 90.	69
Credit Foncier, Ex parte, L. R. 7 Ch. 161.	502	Doe, King, v. Frost, 3 Barn. & Ald. 546.	156
Creighton v. Piper, 14 Ind. 182.	663	Pilkinton, v. Spratt, 5 Barn. & Ad. 731.	159
Creveling v. Bloomsbury Nat. Bank, 46 N. J. L. 255, 50 Am. Rep. 417.	655	Smith, v. Grady, 2 Dev. L. 366.	130
Crews v. State, 38 Ind. 28.	836	Donaldson v. General Public Hospital Comrs. 30 N. H. 279.	230
Cribb v. Morse, 77 Wis. 322.	471	Donnelly v. Boston Catholic Cemetery Assn. 146 Mass. 163.	231
v. Rogers, 12 S. C. 564, 32 Am. Rep. 511.	130	Donohoo v. Murray, 62 Wis. 100.	698
Crocket v. Trotter, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 446.	237	Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306.	120
Cron v. Cron's Estate, 56 Mich. 8.	471	Dougherty v. Moore, 71 Md. 248.	457
Cronise v. Cronise, 54 Pa. 255.	519	v. Van Nostrand, Hoffm. Ch. 58.	659
Crookshank v. Burrell, 18 Johns. 58, 9 Am. Dec. 187.	509	Douglass v. Byrnes, 59 Fed. Rep. 31.	305
Cross v. Kent, 32 Md. 581.	69	Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 50.	51
v. Truesdale, 28 Ind. 44.	650	Dowling v. Egglemann, 47 Mich. 171.	173
Crouch v. Crouch, 80 Wis. 697.	522	Downes v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 25 L. R. A. 602.	231
v. Puryear, 1 Rand. (Va.) 258, 10 Am. Dec. 528.	130	Downs v. Ross, 23 Wend. 270.	509
Crowder v. Sullivan, 128 Ind. 486, 13 L. R. A. 647.	745	Doyle v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 136 N. Y. 505.	410
Crowell v. Lambert, 10 Minn. 369 (Gil. 295).	354, 371	v. Tess, 5 Ill. 202.	532
v. Woodbury, 52 N. H. 613.	701	Druke v. Helken, 61 Cal. 346, 44 Am. Rep. 553.	450
Crowley v. Genesee Min. Co. 65 Cal. 278.	586	Drury v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 405.	443
Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284.	846, 854	Dryfus v. Moline, M. & S. Co. 49 Neb. 238.	751
Cumberland Valley Mut. Protection Co. v. Douglas, 58 Pa. 423, 38 Am. Dec. 298.	69	Dublin Twp. v. Milford Five Cent Sav. Inst. 128 U. S. 513, 32 L. ed. 534.	398
Cummings v. Stark, 138 Ind. 94.	742	Dubuque v. Illinois C. R. Co. 39 Iowa, 56.	73
Currier v. Labanon Slate Co. 50 N. H. 362.	501	Ducat v. Chicago, 67 U. S. 10 Wall. 410, 19 L. ed. 472.	43
Curtis v. Whitney, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 68, 20 L. ed. 513.	76, 77, 723	Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Sim. & Stu. 243.	447
Cusick's Election, Re, 136 Pa. 476, 10 L. R. A. 228.	840	Duffy's Election, Re, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 531.	448
Cyr v. Dufour, 68 Me. 492.	175	Dugan v. Giddings, 3 Gill. 138.	814
		Duke Queensberry v. Shebbear, 2 Eden, 329.	236
		Dulin v. Lillard, 91 Va. 718.	827
		Duncan v. Findlater, 6 Clark & F. 894.	228, 227, 229, 238
Dabney v. Stevens, 40 How. Pr. 341.	586	Duncombe v. New York, H. & N. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 190, 88 N. Y. 1.	506
Daly v. Hosmer, 102 Mich. 392.	161, 162	Dunlap v. Stetson, 4 Mason, 349.	318
Dana v. Bank of United States, 5 Watts & S. 223.	505	Dunn v. People, 40 Ill. 463.	838
Daniels v. Brown, 34 N. H. 454, 69 Am. Dec. 505.	701, 702	Durham v. Taylor, 29 Ga. 166.	814
v. Chicago & R. I. R. Co. 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 250, 18 L. ed. 224.	368	Dutcher v. Woodhull, Fed. Cas. No. 4, 204.	259
Darby v. Gilligan, 33 W. Va. 246, 6 L. R. A. 740.	471	Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273.	111
Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 6 Mont. 502.	797	v. St. John, 25 N. Y. 203.	429
		Dygert v. Remerschnider 32 N. Y. 629.	814

R.

Eastland v. Fogo, 66 Wis. 133.	697
East St. Louis v. East St. Louis Gaslight & C. Co. 98 Ill. 415, 38 Am. Rep. 97.	797
East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 91 Tenn. 699, 17 L. R. A. 691.	606
Eckert v. Binkley, 134 Ind. 614.	737
Eckstein v. Downing, 64 N. H. 248.	562
Eclipse Case, The, 2 Conkling, Admiralty, 385.	258
Edes v. Garey, 46 Md. 24.	790
Eddy v. Lafayette, 49 Fed. Rep. 807, 4 U. S. App. 247.	719
Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 566, 24 L. ed. 793.	726
Ellenbecker v. Plymouth County District Ct. 134 U. S. 31, 33 L. ed. 801.	679
Eley's Appeal, 103 Pa. 307.	130
"Elize Cornish," The, 2 Spinks, Ecol. & Adm. Rep. 34.	260
Elkins v. McKean, 79 Pa. 496.	221
Elliot v. Stevens, 38 N. H. 311.	471
Elliot v. Oliver, 22 Or. 47.	482
Ellison v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 87 Ga. 691.	737
Elmer v. Sand Creek Twp. 38 Ind. 56.	676
Elston v. Chicago, 40 Ill. 514, 89 Am. Dec. 361.	381
Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. ed. 430, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 68.	381, 536
Emmitt v. Brophy, 42 Ohio St. 82.	655
Enos v. Buckley, 94 Ill. 458.	328, 529
Enterprise Sav. Assn. v. Zumstein, 15 C. C. A. 153, 67 Fed. Rep. 1000.	480
Entick v. Carrington, 19 How. St. Tr. 1029, 2 Wils. 275.	167
Entwistle v. Shepherd, 2 T. R. 78.	258
Eppendorf v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 195, 25 Am. Rep. 171.	338
Erie's Appeal, 91 Pa. 496.	797
Ersline v. Whitehead, 84 Ind. 357.	742
Essex County Nat. Bank v. Bank of Montreal, 7 Biss. 185.	655
Evans, Ex parte , 8 T. R. 172.	464
Evans v. Chicago, St. P. & O. R. Co. 86 Wis. 603.	697
v. Mason, 64 N. H. 98.	702
v. Sanders, 8 Port. (Ala.) 497, 38 Am. Dec. 297.	538
v. Savannah & W. R. Co. 90 Ala. 54.	194
Evansville v. State, Blend, 118 Ind. 428, 4 L. R. A. 93.	730
Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. McKee, 99 Ind. 159, 50 Am. Rep. 102.	704
Evergreen Cemetery Assn. v. New Haven, 43 Conn. 234, 21 Am. Rep. 643.	184
Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791.	53-55

F.

Fagan v. Roster, 68 Ill. 84.	328
Falls v. Cairo, 58 Ill. 403.	331
Fanning v. Gregoire, 57 U. S. 16 How. 534, 14 L. ed. 1047.	809
Fargo v. Stevens, 121 U. S. 230, 30 L. ed. 888.	42
Farwell v. Myers, 59 Mich. 179.	791
Favorite, The, 2 Flipp. 86.	246
Ferguson v. Mason, 60 Wis. 383.	697
Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 650, 36 L. ed. 294.	114
Fifield v. Marinette County, 62 Wis. 532.	217
Fifth Avenue Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. S. R. Co. 137 N. Y. 231, 19 L. R. A. 331.	778
Filley v. Child, 16 Blatchf. 376.	140
Findlay v. Smith, 8 Munf. 143, 8 Am. Dec. 733.	130
Finney v. Aprar, 31 N. J. L. 296.	510
Fire Assn. of Philadelphia v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 30 L. ed. 342.	43
Fire Ins. Assn. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 577, 35 L. ed. 866.	172
v. Wickham, 128 U. S. 434, 32 L. ed. 506.	398
Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 1 L. R. A. 417.	231
First Nat. Bank v. Carson, 60 Mich. 432.	237
v. Dovetall, B. & G. Co. (Ind.) 40 N. E. 810.	506
v. Hogan, 47 Mo. 472.	536
v. Lanier, 74 U. S. 11 Wall. 378, 20 L. ed. 175.	453
v. Morgan, 132 U. S. 141, 32 L. ed. 282.	719
v. Shoemaker, 117 Pa. 94.	655
v. Turnbull, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 190, 21 L. ed. 296.	249
v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 343, 24 L. ed. 229.	655
Fischer v. Laak, 76 Wis. 313.	697
Fish v. Kelly, 17 C. B. N. S. 194.	863
Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. La Belle Wagon Works, 82 Wis. 546, 16 L. R. A. 453.	139
Fisher v. Clark, 41 Barb. 329.	672
v. Hildreth, 117 Mass. 558.	793
v. Boyce, 81 Md. 46.	790

31 L. R. A.

Fishkill v. Fishkill & B. Pl. Road Co. 22 Barb. 634.	825
Fitzgerald v. Barker, 70 Mo. 686.	656
Flack v. Sharron, 29 Md. 311.	471
Flash v. Dillon, 22 Fed. Rep. 1.	249
Fleming v. Bills, 3 Or. 286.	836
Fletcher v. Sharpe (Ind.) 1 L. R. A. 179.	471
v. Tuttle, 151 Ill. 41, 25 L. R. A. 143.	476, 479
Floaten v. Ferrell, 24 Neb. 347.	568
Florence Min. Co. v. Brown, 124 U. S. 391, 31 L. ed. 427.	655
Floyd Acceptances, The, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 666, 19 L. ed. 169.	537
Flynn v. Dougherty (Cal.) 14 L. R. A. 230.	510
Fogarties v. State Bank, 12 Rich. L. 518, 78 Am. Dec. 468.	655
Foland v. Frankton (Ind.) 41 N. E. 1031.	745
Foll's Appeal, 91 Pa. 434, 36 Am. Rep. 671.	562
Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, C. C. 100.	236
Fonda v. Borst, 2 Keyes, 48.	697
v. VanHorne, 15 Wend. 631, 30 Am. Dec. 77.	283
Fonner v. Smith, 31 Neb. 107, 11 L. R. A. 528.	655
Forbes v. McDonald, 54 Cal. 98.	734
Ford v. Ford, 70 Wis. 55.	842
v. Stuart, 15 Heav. 499.	814
Foreman v. Canterbury, L. R. 6 Q. B. 214.	229
Fort Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 132 Ind. 565, 18 L. R. A. 367.	145
Fosselman v. Springfield, 38 Ill. App. 296.	529
Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168.	196
v. Wright, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 438.	318
Fox v. Union Sugar Refinery, 109 Mass. 292.	696
Franklin v. Kelley, 2 Neb. 79.	51
Fraser v. Thompson, 1 Giff. 62.	814
Freeman v. Hill, 45 Kan. 435.	252
v. Stewart, 41 Miss. 138.	797
French, Re , 81 Wis. 597.	522
French v. Lovejoy, 12 N. H. 458.	471
v. State, 85 Wis. 400, 21 L. R. A. 402.	522
Frue v. Houghton, 6 Colo. 318.	464
Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 234, 20 L. R. A. 785.	172
Fulton v. Prandolph, 63 Tex. 330.	702
Funk v. Davis, 163 Ind. 281.	67

G.

Gage v. Gage, 66 N. H. 282, 28 L. R. A. 829.	702
Gainer v. Gates, 73 Iowa, 149.	842
Gaines v. Thompson, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 347, 19 L. ed. 62.	480
Gaither v. Stockbridge, 67 Md. 222.	603
Galey Bros. v. Kellerman, 123 Pa. 491.	676
Gallagher's Appeal, 87 Pa. 200.	843
114 Pa. 263, 60 Am. Rep. 350.	471
Galliber v. Cadwell, 145 U. S. 368, 36 L. ed. 738.	140
Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Ware, 74 Tex. 47.	213
Ganiard v. Rochester City & B. R. Co. 50 Hun, 22.	333
Garbutt v. Watson, 5 Barn. & Ald. 613.	409
Gardiner v. Burbam, 12 Johns. 459.	244
Gardner v. Donnelly, 86 Cal. 387.	255
v. Dutch, 9 Mass. 427.	701
v. Gordon, 41 Ind. 92.	742
v. Joy, 9 Met. 177.	510
v. Thomas, 14 Johns. 134, 7 Am. Dec. 445.	279, 281
Garland, Ex parte , 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 383, 18 L. ed. 366.	522
Garrett v. Belmont Land Co. 94 Tenn. 460.	712
v. Burlington Plow Co. 70 Iowa, 697.	506
Garrison v. Chicago, 7 Biss. 480.	748
Gartside v. East St. Louis, 43 Ill. 47.	528
Gass v. Simpson, 4 Coldw. 238.	445
Gates v. Buckl, 12 U. S. App. 69, 4 C. C. A. 116.	338
53 Fed. Rep. 961.
v. Madison County Mut. Ins. Co. 5 N. Y. 469, 55 Am. Dec. 360.	69
Gaynor v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 103 Mass. 206.	857
97 Am. Dec. 96.	293
Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 402.	286
Geekie v. Kirby Carpenter Co. 106 U. S. 886, 27 L. ed. 160.	140
Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 175, 17 L. ed. 520.	537
Genesee Chief, The, 53 U. S. 12 How. 443, 13 L. ed. 1058.	320
George v. Bischoff, 68 Ill. 236.	255
Georgia v. Madrazo, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 110, 7 L. ed. 73.	248
Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 188, 6 L. ed. 68.	521
Gibson, Re , 154 Mass. 378.	742
Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 17 L. R. A. 588.	858
Giddings v. Blacker, 93 Mich. 1, 16 L. R. A. 402.	749

Gilbert v. Trinity House, L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 795	230	Hand v. Cole, 88 Tenn. 402, 7 L. R. A. 96	801
Gill v. Read, 5 R. I. 843, 73 Am. Dec. 73	414	Hand Gold Min. Co. v. Parker, 59 Ga. 419	305
Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 817	858	Handy v. Handy, 134 Mass. 394	522
Gilman v. Hill, 36 N. H. 311	701	Hannah v. Savage, 8 Wash. 432	255
v. Hunnewell, 122 Mass. 139	138	Hanson v. Taylor, 23 Wis. 547	697
Gillott v. Esterbrook, 47 Barb. 463	139	v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28, 1 Am. Rep. 215	132
Girdner v. Stephens, 1 Henk. 280, 2 Am. Rep. 700	72	Harkness v. Hyde, 98 U. S. 476, 25 L. ed. 237	719
Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 36, 3 Am. Rep. 418	815	Harness v. Cravens, 126 Mo. 235	539
v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 94 Ala. 561	858	Harper v. Graham, 20 Ohio, 105	172
Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 675	231	Harris v. Woman's Hospital, 27 Abb. N. C. 37	231
Glen Cove Mfg. Co. v. Ludeling, 22 Fed. Rep. 826	46	Harrisburg, The, v. Rickards ("The Harrisburg"), 119 U. S. 199, 30 L. ed. 358	719
Glenn v. State, Clow, 46 Ind. 368	737	Harrison v. Hoyle, 24 Ohio St. 254	144
Glover v. Lee, 140 Ill. 102	266, 274	v. Stacy, 6 Rob. (La.) 15	73
Goddard v. Binney, 115 Mass. 450, 15 Am. Rep. 112	510	v. Wright, 100 Ind. 538, 58 Am. Rep. 806	655
Goff v. Dabbs, 4 Baxt. 300	715	Hart v. Albany, 3 Falke, 381	259
v. Great Northern R. Co. 30 L. J. Q. B. 148	706	v. Western R. Corp. 13 Met. 99, 43 Am. Dec. 719	606
Goodhue v. Palmer, 13 Ind. 457	714	Hartnall v. Ryde Comrs. 33 L. J. Q. B. 39	227
Goodright v. Seale, 2 Wils. 29	159	Harts v. Brown, 77 Ill. 230	268, 506
Goodwin v. Bunzl, 102 N. Y. 224	256	Haskel v. Burlington, 90 Iowa, 232	189, 190
Goodwin Gas Stove & M. Co.'s Appeal, 117 Pa. 514	562	Haslem v. Lockwood, 37 Conn. 600, 9 Am. Rep. 350	701
Gordon, Ex parte , 104 U. S. 515, 26 L. ed. 814	719	Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528	218
Gordon v. Muchler, 34 La. Ann. 608	655	Hasted v. Dodge (Iowa) 35 N. W. 462	172
Goshorn v. Purcell, 11 Ohio St. 641	652	Haswell v. Bates, 9 Johns. 80	244
Gottlieb v. Miller, 154 Ill. 44	368, 274, 527	Hatch v. Thompson, 3 Dev. L. 411	130
Gould v. Atlanta, 55 Ga. 678	527	Hatcher v. Buford, 60 Ark. 169, 27 L. R. A. 507	448
v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 52 Fed. Rep. 680	505	Hathaway v. Davis, 33 Cal. 161	255
Gouraud v. Gouraud, 3 Redf. 262	414	Havens v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 28 Conn. 69	167
Gourley v. Linsenbiger, 51 Pa. 345	446	Hay v. Weber, 37 Wis. 591	697
Gove v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 48 N. H. 41, 2 Am. Rep. 182	69	Hayes v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 125 Ill. 624, 1 L. R. A. 393	172
Governor, The, v. McEwen, 5 Humph. 265	848	v. Miscourt, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578	693, 694
Graff v. Evans, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 373	513	Hayford v. Griffith, Fed. Cas. No. 6, 283	258
Graham v. LaCrosse & M. R. Co. 102 U. S. 148, 26 L. ed. 108	504	Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810	569-572, 578
Grammel v. Carmer, 55 Mich. 301, 54 Am. Rep. 363	655	Hays v. Armstrong, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 248	682
Granger v. Parker, 142 Mass. 138	256	Hayward v. Cain, 105 Mass. 213	605
Granger Cases (Munn v. Illinois), 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77	830	Hazen v. Essex Co. 12 Cush. 475	306
* "Gran Para, The," 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 497, 6 L. ed. 375	280	Hazlehurst v. Savannah, G. & N. A. R. Co. 48 Ga. 57	419
Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa, 368	797	Healey v. Simpson, 118 Mo. 940	813
Graveley v. Graveley, 30 S. C. 104	681	Health Department v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 82, 27 L. R. A. 710	691
Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 19 L. R. A. 641	169	Healy v. Newton, 96 Mich. 228	255
v. People, 18 Colo. 185	297	Heaven v. Pender, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 508	797
Gray v. Obear, 54 Ga. 231	107	Heavenridge v. Mondy, 34 Ind. 23	747
v. Manhattan R. Co. 128 N. Y. 499	410	Heidritter v. Elizabeth Oil Cloth Co. 112 U. S. 305, 28 L. ed. 733	326
Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Fernald, 47 N. H. 444	306	Heilbronn, Re, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 434	838
Gregg v. Wilson, 50 Ind. 490	65	Heim v. Vogel, 69 Mo. 529	656
Gregory v. Piper, 9 Barn. & C. 591	196	Heiser v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co. 110 Mo. 605, 15 L. R. A. 821	221, 222
Green v. Biddle, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 1, 5 L. ed. 547	726	Heister v. Metropolitan Bd. of Health, 37 N. Y. 661	691
r. Mills, 18 C. C. A. 516, 69 Fed. Rep. 852, 30 L. R. A. 90	479, 483	Hellen v. Noe, 3 Fred. L. 498	133
v. Morrison, 5 Colo. 18	656	Heller v. Crawford, 37 Ind. 279	747
v. Ward, 82 Va. 324	387	Henderson v. Green, 34 Iowa, 437, 11 Am. Rep. 149	842
v. Winter, 1 Johns. Ch. 77	259	v. Indiana Trust Co. (Ind.) 40 N. E. 516	275, 508
Greene v. Cramer, 2 Con. & L. 60	814	Hennessey v. New Bedford, 153 Mass. 260	175, 178
Greensborough v. Underhill, 12 Vt. 604	414	Henry v. Heeb, 114 Ind. 275	747
Greenwood v. Butler, 82 Kan. 424, 22 L. R. A. 465	81	Hernot's Hospital v. Ross, 12 Clark & F. 507	226, 227
Greenwood Cemetery Land Co. v. Routt, 17 Colo. 156, 15 L. R. A. 369	480	Hern v. Nichols, 1 Salk. 289	784
Griffin v. Mississippi Levee Comrs. 71 Miss. 767	853	Hester v. Keith, 1 Ala. 316	255
Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 453	139	Hewes v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 76 Md. 159	316
Grogan v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 590	73	H. E. Willard, The, 62 Fed. Rep. 387	720
Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261, 35 Am. Dec. 319	449, 450	Hewitt v. Board of Education, 94 Ill. 529	71
Groves v. Buck, 3 Maule & S. 178	509	v. Kaye, L. R. 6 Eq. 198	448
Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 21, 10 Am. Rep. 313	445, 450	Hibbard v. People, 4 Mich. 135	165
Gudner v. Kilpatrick, 14 Neb. 847	255	Hibernia Underground R. Co. v. DeCamp, 47 N. J. L. 518, 54 Am. Rep. 197	306
Guernsey v. Cook, 120 Mass. 501	564	Hickok v. Hine, 23 Ohio St. 523, 13 Am. Rep. 255	185
Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rawlins, 80 Tex. 581	213	Higgins v. Miner, 13 Ind. 846	836
Gunter v. Graniteville Mfg. Co. 15 S. C. 443	582	v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 252	510
Gupton v. Gupton, 47 Mo. 37	813	v. Watervliet Turnp. & R. Co. 46 N. Y. 27, 7 Am. Rep. 238	391
		Hight v. Ripley, 19 Me. 137	510
		Hildreth v. McIntire, 1 J. J. Marsh. 208, 19 Am. Dec. 611	661
		Hill v. Alston, 12 Heisk. 569	848
		v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332	230, 231
		v. Burke, 62 N. Y. 111	256
		v. DeRochemont, 48 N. H. 87	700, 701
		v. Stevenson, 63 Me. 364, 18 Am. Rep. 231	450
		v. Winsor, 118 Mass. 258	587
		Hills v. Sommer, 53 Hun. 392	173
		Hinkley v. Green, 52 Ill. 223	328
		Hintinger v. Traut, 69 Iowa, 746	140
		Hodges v. New England Screw Co. 1 R. I. 312, 63 Am. Dec. 624	419
		v. Spicer, 79 N. C. 223	130
		Hodgson v. Farrell, 15 N. J. Eq. 88	339
		Holbrook v. Bowman, 62 N. H. 313	702
		Holdane v. Cold Springs, 21 N. Y. 474	697

H.

Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569	387
Halbert v. State, Martin County Comrs. 22 Ind. 125	853
Haley v. Colcord, 59 N. H. 8, 47 Am. Rep. 176	702
Hall v. Smith, 2 Bing. 156	226, 227, 232
Hallam v. Indianapolis Hotel Co. 56 Iowa, 178	506
Halloway v. Clark, 27 Ill. 484	328
Hallowell & A. Bank v. Hamlin, 14 Mass. 180	536
Hamden v. Rice, 24 Conn. 350	225
Hamilton v. Van Rensselaer, 43 N. Y. 244	123
Hamlin v. Kassafer, 15 Or. 457	352
Hammersley v. Baron de Biel, 12 Clark & F. 45	814
31 L. R. A.

Holden v. Hoyt, 34 Mass. 181.....	538
Holder v. Dickeson, Freem. C. L. Rep. 96.....	814
v. State, 58 Ark. 482.....	470
Holdsworth v. Shannon, 113 Mo. 508.....	339
Holladay v. Marsh, 3 Wend. 142, 20 Am. Dec. 678.....	131
Holland v. Dickerson, 41 Iowa, 367.....	652
Holliday v. St. Leonard's, 11 C. B. N. S. 192.....	227, 229, 232, 233
Hollins v. Brierfield Coal & I. Co. 150 U. S. 371, 37 L. ed. 1113.....	504
Holloway v. Memphis, E. P. & P. R. Co. 23 Tex. 465, 76 Am. Dec. 68.....	487, 488
Holmes v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 75.....	719
Holmes & G. Mfg. Co. v. Holmes & W. Metal Co. 127 N. Y. 252.....	420
Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324.....	188
Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 33 L. ed. 1025.....	43
Honore v. Lamar F. Ins. Co. 51 Ill. 410.....	605
Hooker v. Chicago & St. P. R. Co. 76 Wis. 542.....	860
Hopcraft v. Kittredge, 162 Mass. 788.....	453
Hopkinson v. Forster, L. R. 19 Eq. 74.....	655
Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 648, 21 L. ed. 966.....	253
Hornor v. Henning, 93 U. S. 231, 23 L. ed. 679.....	601
Horton Mfg. Co. v. Horton Mfg. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 816.....	659
Hospest v. Northwestern Mfg. & Car Co. 48 Minn. 174, 15 L. R. A. 470.....	505
Hough v. Hunt, 2 Ohio, 495, 15 Am. Dec. 569.....	565
Hough Case, 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612.....	325
Houghton v. Ross, 54 Mich. 335.....	173
Houghton County Supers. v. Blacker, 92 Mich. 638, 18 L. R. A. 432.....	729, 735
Hounsell v. Smyth, 7 C. B. N. S. 738.....	868
Houseman v. The North Carolina, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 40, 10 L. ed. 653.....	245, 250
Houston v. Moore, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 1, 5 L. ed. 19.....	729
Howard v. Bugbee, 65 U. S. 24 How. 461, 16 L. ed. 753.....	81, 723
v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 262.....	652
Howe v. Boston Carpet Co. 16 Gray, 493.....	419
Howe Mach. Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. ed. 754.....	381
Howland v. Chicago, 108 Ill. 496.....	526, 527
Howser's Case, 80 Md. 148, 27 L. R. A. 154.....	576
Howson v. Hancock, 8 T. R. 575.....	798
Huckins v. People's Mut. F. Ins. Co. 31 N. H. 247.....	69
Hudelson v. State, 94 Ind. 423, 48 Am. Rep. 171.....	836
Huffman v. Mills, 39 Kan. 577.....	371
Hull v. Ruggles, 56 N. Y. 424.....	836
Hull & Selby Railway, Re , 5 Mees. & W. 327.....	318
Humboldt Lumber Mfrs. Assn., Re , 60 Fed. Rep. 428.....	719
Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 304, 35 L. ed. 473.....	698, 712
Hunter v. Manhattan R. Co. 141 N. Y. 281.....	410
v. Westbrook, 2 Car. & P. 578.....	283
Hurley v. State, 29 Ark. 17.....	449
Hurn, Ex parte , 92 Ala. 102, 13 L. R. A. 120.....	164, 166
Hurst v. Hurst, 7 W. Va. 289.....	130
Hutchinson v. Boston Gaslight Co. 122 Mass. 219.....	788
Huyler v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq. 504.....	656
Hyde v. Larkin, 35 Mo. App. 365.....	536

I.

Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 563, 25 L. R. A. 562.....	588
Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chambers, 71 Ill. 519.....	353
v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 122 Ill. 473.....	311
v. Godfrey, 71 Ill. 500, 22 Am. Rep. 112.....	858
v. Hammer, 72 Ill. 347.....	859
v. Latham (Miss.) 16 So. 757.....	382
v. Lutz, 84 Ill. 598.....	333
v. Slattery, 54 Ill. 133.....	333
Iwaco R. & Nav. Co. v. Hedrick, 1 Wash. 446.....	861
Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gaslight Co. 66 Ind. 396.....	797
Ingles v. Strauss, 91 Va. 209.....	824
Inman S. S. Co. v. Tinker, 94 U. S. 238, 24 L. ed. 118.....	826
Iron Mountain R. Co. v. Bingham, 87 Tenn. 523, 4 L. R. A. 622.....	607
Iroquois County Supers. v. Keady, 34 Ill. 296.....	482
Irwin v. Cook, 17 Colo. 16.....	256
Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 393, 71 Am. Dec. 78.....	372, 373
Ives v. Merchant's Bank, 53 U. S. 12 How. 159, 13 L. ed. 936.....	248

J.

Jack Jewett, The , 2 Ben. 353.....	250
Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, 539.....	120
v. Saunders, 2 Leigh, 109.....	109
Jackson, Doran, v. Green, 7 Wend. 333.....	104, 108
Fitz Simmons v. Fitz Simmons, 10 Wend. 9, 24 Am. Dec. 198.....	104, 108
Murphy, v. Van Hoosen, 1 Sharswood & B. Lead. Cas. Real Prop. 191.....	130
Jackson Sharp Co. v. Holland, 14 Fla. 384.....	488
Jacobs, Re , 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636, 690, 691.....	694
James v. Howell, 41 Ohio St. 696.....	320
Jameson v. People, 16 Ill. 257.....	191
Jeffers v. East Omaha Land Co. 134 U. S. 178, 33 L. ed. 872.....	317, 318
Jefferson County Comrs. v. Lineberger, 3 Mont. 231, 35 Am. Rep. 432.....	850
Jelley v. Dills, 27 W. Va. 267.....	132
Jenness v. Chicago, 24 Ind. 369, 87 Am. Dec. 335.....	162
Jennings v. Carson, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 5, 2 L. ed. 542.....	247
v. Jennings, 21 Ohio St. 56.....	842
Jerome v. Ross, 7 Johns. Ch. 315, 11 Am. Dec. 484.....	409, 410
Jersey City Gaslight Co. v. Consumers Gas Co. 40 N. J. Eq. 427.....	711
Jewell v. Knight, 123 U. S. 432, 31 L. ed. 192.....	348
John, The , 2 Hagg. Adm. Rep. 305.....	280
Johnson v. Berkshire Mut. F. Ins. Co. 4 Allen, 388.....	69
v. Brannan, 5 Johns. 268.....	173
v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 29 Minn. 425.....	556
v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 58 Iowa, 348.....	372
v. Dalton, 1 Cow. 543, 13 Am. Dec. 564.....	279, 281
v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315.....	217, 218
Johnston v. Dillard, 1 Bay, 232.....	814
v. Latin, 103 U. S. 800, 26 L. ed. 532.....	451, 453
v. Spicer, 107 N. Y. 185.....	825
Jonas v. Cincinnati, 18 Ohio. 318.....	746
Jones v. Detroit Water Comrs. 34 Mich. 273.....	464
v. Jones, 18 Ala. 248.....	73
v. Knappen, 63 Vt. 361, 14 L. R. A. 293.....	842
Jugiro v. Brush, 140 U. S. 297, 35 L. ed. 513.....	679
J. W. Butler Paper Co. v. Robbins, 151 Ill. 568.....	266, 273, 274
J. W. French, The , 13 Fed. Rep. 918.....	719

K.

Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. L. 5.....	868
Kanne v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 33 Minn. 419.....	429
Kansas v. Bradley, 26 Fed. Rep. 289.....	453
Karow v. Continental Ins. Co. 67 Wis. 56, 46 Am. Rep. 17.....	69
Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 299, 3 Am. Rep. 628.....	558
Kearney v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 411, L. R. 6 Q. B. 759.....	576
Kee v. State, 28 Ark. 160.....	467
Keeble v. Keeble, 85 Ala. 552.....	794
Keedy v. Long, 71 Md. 385, 5 L. R. A. 759.....	790
Keel v. Larkin, 72 Ala. 493.....	226
Keith v. Clarke, 4 Lea. 718.....	712
Kellogg v. Richards, 14 Wend. 116.....	172
Kelly v. Southern Minn. R. Co. 28 Minn. 96.....	860
Kempland v. Macaulay, 4 T. R. 436.....	258
Kennedy v. Kennedy, 87 Ill. 250.....	608
Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 37 Fed. Rep. 567, 2 L. R. A. 289, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 351.....	518
Kentucky Club v. Louisville, 92 Ky. 309.....	158
Kenyon, Re , 17 R. I. 149.....	778
Kenyon v. Knights Templar & M. A. Aid Asso. 122 N. Y. 247.....	410
Kerlin v. West, 4 N. J. Eq. 449.....	605
Kernochan v. New York Bowery F. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 428.....	372
Kerwhacker v. Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. 3 Ohio St. 172, 62 Am. Dec. 246.....	304
Kettle River R. Co. v. Eastern R. Co. 41 Minn. 461, 6 L. R. A. 111.....	401
Keymer, Re , 148 N. Y. 219.....	285
Kidd v. Horry, 28 Fed. Rep. 773.....	679, 680
v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346.....	746
Kitchell v. Minnesota Brush Electric Co. 58 Minn. 418.....	67
Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 514, 32 L. ed. 1008.....	259
Kimball v. Alcorn, 45 Miss. 149.....	701
Kimberly v. Patchin, 19 N. Y. 390, 75 Am. Dec. 384.....	371
King v. Colchester, 2 T. R. 259.....	318
v. Lord Yarborough, 3 Barn. & C. 91.....	414
v. Wyne, 2 Barn. & Ald. 386.....	183
v. Ware, 53 Iowa, 97.....

Kinnaird v. Williams, 8 Leigh, 400, 31 Am. Dec. 658.	842	Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 559, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 763.	53
Kinnyngham v. Dickey, 125 Ind. 180.	742	Livermore v. Waite, 102 Cal. 114, 25 L. R. A. 312.	820
Kinsley v. Chicago, 124 Ill. 359.	526	Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Van Os, 63 Miss. 451, 56 Am. Rep. 810.	223
Kinsman v. Cambridge, 121 Mass. 558.	72	Livingston v. The Jewess, 1 Ben. 21, note.	264
Kirkham v. Russel, 76 Va. 956.	389	Lobdell v. Stowell, 51 N. Y. 70.	702
Kirkwood v. Miller, 73 Am. Dec. 134.	186	Locey Coal Mines v. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. 131 Ill. 8, 8 L. R. A. 586.	274
Kitts v. Wilson, 140 Ind. 604.	737	Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 716.	114
Klein v. Laudman, 29 Mo. 259.	414	Lockhart v. Horn, 1 Woods, C. C. 628.	73
Kline v. Central P. R. Co. 37 Cal. 400, 99 Am. Dec. 232.	372	t. White, 18 Tex. 102.	414
Knox v. Eden Musee American Co. 148 N. Y. 441, 31 L. R. A. 779.	778	Lohman v. State, 81 Ind. 15.	886
Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co. 152 Pa. 365, 18 L. R. A. 769.	788	Long v. Georgia P. R. Co. 91 Ala. 522.	793
Koenig v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 367.	513	Long's Appeal, 67 Pa. 114.	632
Koppikus v. State Capital Comrs. 16 Cal. 248.	737	Longmire v. Holliday, 6 Exch. 461.	222
Koser, Ex parte , 60 Cal. 232.	662	Loomis v. Cline, 4 Barb. 453.	283
Kountze v. Omaha Hotel Co. 107 U. S. 378, 27 L. ed. 609.	268	t. Eaton, 32 Conn. 550.	714
Kuhn v. Warren Sav. Bank, 20 W. N. C. 230.	655	Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 208, 26 L. ed. 182.	77
Kurtz v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 48 Minn. 599.	742	Louisville & M. R. Co. v. Dancy, 97 Ala. 338.	199
L.
Lacassagne v. Chapuis, 144 U. S. 119, 36 L. ed. 308.	249	Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 81 Ky. 624, 50 Am. Rep. 186.	372
Lacaze v. State, 1 Add. Rep. 59.	243, 245, 247	Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Phillips, 112 Ind. 59.	857
Laclede Bank v. Schuler, 120 U. S. 514, 30 L. ed. 705.	655	Louisville Underwriters, R. 134 U. S. 488, 33 L. ed. 991.	718
LaGrange Butter Tub Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 122 Mo. 154.	505	Lovejoy v. Murray, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 19, 18 L. ed. 134.	648
Lagrange v. County Comrs. v. Rogers, 55 Ind. 297.	742	Lowenstein v. Bew, 68 Miss. 265.	223
Lake Roland Elev. R. Co. v. Baltimore, 77 Md. 381, 20 L. R. A. 126.	899	Lowery v. Howard, 103 Ind. 440.	742
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 50, 30 L. R. A. 33.	322	Lucille, The, v. Respass ("The Lucille"), 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 73, 22 L. ed. 64.	259
Lanark v. Dougherty, 153 Ill. 163.	324	Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141.	705
Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 136.	587	Lyons v. McLaughlin, 32 Vt. 423.	111
Langdon v. People, 133 Ill. 382.	165	Lyons v. Cook, 9 Ill. App. 543.	331
Langmaid v. Higgins, 129 Mass. 353.	686	Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. 86 Tex. 143, 22 L. R. A. 802, 506.	506
Langran v. New York Gaslight Co. 71 N. Y. 29.	787	M.
Lanning v. Carpenter, 20 N. Y. 447.	192	McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338.	189
Lauder v. Chicago, 111 Ill. 291, 53 Am. Rep. 625.	527	McCallion v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. 98 Cal. 442.	252
Lavalle v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249.	555	McCarthy v. Marsh, 5 N. Y. 265.	108
Law's Estate, 144 Pa. 499, 14 L. R. A. 103.	854	Macaulay v. Diemal Swamp Land Co. 2 Rob. (V. L.) 507.	180
Lawlor v. People, 74 Ill. 230.	468	McClure v. La Plata County Comrs. 19 Colo. 122.	848
Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 238.	656	McClure v. Hayward, 43 U. S. 2 How. 608, 11.	723
Lawson v. Lawson, 1 P. Wms. 441.	444	t. Tode, 1 Kan. 148.	256
Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385.	679	McCracken County v. Mercantile Trust Co. 84 Ky. 344.	72
Leach v. McFadden, 110 Mo. 584.	813	McCullough v. Moss, 5 Denio, 567.	57
t. People, 122 Ill. 420.	681, 683	McDade v. McDade, 29 Ind. 340.	696
LeCaux v. Eden, 2 Dougl. 594.	247, 248	McDermott v. Doyle, 11 Mo. 448.	243
Lee v. Green, 83 Ala. 491.	236	McDonald v. English, 85 Ill. 232.	140
t. Griffin, 1 Best & S. 272.	509, 510	t. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529.	230
Legh v. Hewitt, 4 East, 154.	701	McDonough v. Metropolitan R. Co. 137 Mass. 210.	233
Lehigh Bridge Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. 4 Rawle, 9 36 Am. Dec. 111.	711	McElroy v. Mumford, 128 N. Y. 307.	256
Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 316, 35 L. ed. 419.	387	McGlennan v. Margowski, 90 Ind. 150.	742
Leon v. Galceran, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 185, 20 L. ed. 744.	248	McGlynn v. Billings, 16 Vt. 329.	173
Le Sasser v. Kennedy, 123 U. S. 521, 31 L. ed. 252.	453	McGowan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Wis.) 64 N. W. 891.	587
Lester v. Given, 8 Bush, 357.	655	McGregor v. Baylies, 19 Iowa, 43.	189
Levingson v. Lurgan Union, 2 Ir. C. L. Rep. 202.	229	t. Comstock, 3 N. Y. 408.	67
Levy v. McCuttee, 31 U. S. 8, 6 Pet. 102, 8 L. ed. 384.	107	McIntyre v. Sholtz, 121 Ill. 600.	69
t. People, 80 N. Y. 327.	206	McKain v. Love, 2 Hill, L. 508, 27 Am. Dec. 401.	496
Lewis v. Bruton, 74 Ala. 817, 49 Am. Rep. 816.	793	McKee v. Manice, 11 Cush. 358.	742
t. Cocks, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 470, 23 L. ed. 71.	67	McKenzie v. State, Dickinson, 80 Ind. 547.	723
t. Lyman, 22 Pick. 437.	701	McKim v. Somers, 1 Penn. & W. 297.	662
t. McElvain, 16 Ohio, 347.	652	McKinney v. Memphis Overton Hotel Co. 12 Heisk. 104.	714
Lexington v. Butler, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 268, 20 L. ed. 813.	537	t. Robinson, 84 Tex. 489.	854
Lioey v. Lacey, 7 Pa. 251, 47 Am. Dec. 513.	450	t. Springer, 8 Blackf. 506.	72
Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 70.	783	McKoin v. Cooley, 3 Humph. 561.	715
Liebermann v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 336.	217	McKoy v. McKowen, 23 Miss. 487, 59 Am. Dec. 264.	391
Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Mechanic F. Ins. Co. 7, Wend. 31.	536	McLean v. Fleming, 93 U. S. 258, 24 L. ed. 833.	140
Lillard v. Porter, 2 Head, 177.	712	t. Swanton, 13 N. Y. 535.	108
Lindemuller v. People, 33 Barb. 548.	682	McLellan v. United States, 1 Gall. 227.	244
Lindo v. Rodney, 2 Dougl. 613.	247	McMahon v. Allen, 22 How. Pr. 193.	257
Link v. Clemens, 7 Blackf. 479.	747	McManus v. Crickett, 1 East, 106.	196-198, 360
Lins v. Lenhardt, 127 Mo. 271.	813	McMerty v. Morrison, 62 Mo. 140.	73
Linsenbiger v. Gourley, 56 Pa. 166, 94 Am. Dec. 51.	447	McMillen v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 37, 24 L. ed. 335.	367
Linthicum v. Ray, 78 U. S. 9 Wall. 241, 19 L. ed. 657.	698	McNell v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341.	451
Lippincott v. Shaw Carriage Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 577.	507	McQueen's Appeal, 104 Pa. 585, 49 Am. Rep. 582.	791
Littell v. Zuntz, 2 Ala. 256, 36 Am. Dec. 415.	340	McReynolds v. Counts, 9 Gratt. 242.	842
Little Miami & C. X. R. Co. v. Dayton, 23 Ohio St. 510.	186

Maenner v. Carroll, 46 Md. 212.....	575	Missouri P. R. Co. v. Brown (Tex.), 18 S. W. 670	857
Maguire v. Maguire, 7 Dana, 181.....	519	v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463.....	558
Mallory v. Hanauer Oil Works, 86 Tenn. 566.....	420	Mitchell v. Bridgewater, 10 Cush. 411.....	175
v. Kirkpatrick (N. J.), 33 Atl. 205.....	548	Mixer v. Howarth, 21 Pick. 205, 32 Am. Dec. 256	510
Maltby v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 52 Mich. 110.	171	Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Alabama Midland R. Co.
Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Forty-second Street		87 Ala. 501.....	310, 811
& G. S. F. R. Co. 139 N. Y. 146.....	778	Mobile & M. R. Co. v. McKellar, 59 Ala. 458.....	199
Mann v. People, 15 Hun, 155.....	884	Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brame, 98 U. S. 754, 24 L.
Mapes v. People, 69 Ill. 523.....	664	ed. 580.....	719
Maple v. Beach, 43 Ind. 51.....	737	Moers v. Reading, 21 Pa. 208.....	114
Marbury v. Kentucky Union Land Co. 10 C. C.		Moffat v. Greenwalt, 90 Cal. 368.....	255
A. 303, 62 Fed. Rep. 335, 22 U. S. App.		Moll v. Benckler, 30 Wis. 584.....	697
267.....	419	Monkhouse v. Bedford, 17 Ves. Jr. 380.....	259
r. Madison, 5 U. S. 1 Cranch, 170, 2 L. ed. 71	480	Monmouth County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hutchinsan,
Marion v. Heinbach (Minn.) 64 N. W. 346.....	172	21 N. J. Eq. 107.....	606
Marr v. Bank of West Tennessee, 4 Coldw. 471.	597	Montgomery v. Maddox, 60 Ala. 181.....	194
Marsh v. Clark County Supers. 42 Wis. 502.....	218	v. Phillips, (N. J.) 31 Atl. 622.....	508
Marshall County Supers. v. Shenck, 72 U. S. 5		v. Townsend, 80 Ala. 499, 60 Am. Rep. 112	194
Wall, 772, 18 L. ed. 556.....	537	v. Townsend, 84 Ala. 478.....	194, 195
Marx v. Parker, 9 Wash. 473.....	353	v. Wright, 72 Ala. 411, 47 Am. Rep. 422.....	196
Maryville College v. Bartlett, 8 Baxt. 231.....	711	Moore v. Bowman, 47 N. H. 494.....	701
Marzett v. Williams, 1 Barn. & Ad. 415.....	558	v. Johnston, 87 Ala. 220.....	194
Mason v. Haile, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 370, 6 L. ed.		v. Luce, 29 Pa. 280, 72 Am. Dec. 629.....	73
680.....	75, 652	v. Roberts, 64 Wis. 538.....	697
r. Sainsbury, 3 Dougl. 61.....	606, 606	v. Sanford, 151 Mass. 286, 7 L. R. A. 151, 306,	307
Mathews v. Howard Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 14.....	69	Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Texas C. R.
Mathewson v. Phoenix Iron Foundry, 20 Fed.		Co. 137 U. S. 171, 34 L. ed. 625.....	406
Rep. 281.....	107	Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S.
Maxmillan v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am.		162, 36 L. ed. 925.....	78, 723, 724, 726
Rep. 468.....	230, 233	Morrill v. Morrill, 5 N. H. 134.....	701
Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 205, 31 L. ed. 657.....	519	Morris v. Hall, 41 Ala. 536.....	794
Mayou, Ex parte , 4 De G. J. & S. 664.....	471	v. People, 3 Denio, 381.....	663
Mayvee v. Avery, 18 Johns. 362.....	296	v. Powell, 125 Ind. 281, 9 L. R. A. 328.....	730
Meagher v. Storey County, 5 Nev. 244.....	402	Morris & E. R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 31 N. J. L.
Megett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 326.....	218	218.....	196
Meharry v. Meharry, 59 Ind. 257.....	67	Morrison v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co. 130 N. Y.
Meier v. Thieman, 90 Mo. 483.....	613	166.....	338
Meincke v. Falk, 55 Wis. 427, 42 Am. Rep.		Morrow v. Nashville Iron & S. & C. Co. 87 Tenn.
722.....	509, 510	262, 3 L. R. A. 37.....	430
Meinhard v. Youngblood, 37 S. C. 231.....	681	Morse v. Crawford, 17 Vt. 499, 44 Am. Dec. 349	69
Melick v. Knox, 44 N. Y. 676.....	123	Mortimore v. Mortimore, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 448	158
Melvin v. Martin, 18 R. I. 650.....	159	Mose v. Hastings & St. L. Gas Co. 4 Post. & F.
Memphis v. Ensley, 6 Baxt. 553, 32 Am. Rep. 532		324.....	788
Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Gaines, 97 U. S. 697, 24 L.		Moseby v. Williamson, 5 Heisk. 286.....	597
ed. 1091.....	600	Moses v. Franklin Bank, 34 Md. 580.....	655
Menagh v. Whitwell, 52 N. Y. 146, 11 Am. Rep.		Moses Taylor, The, v. Hammons ("The Moses
683.....	471	Taylor"), 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 411, 8 L. ed.
Meneely v. Meneely, 62 N. Y. 429, 20 Am. Rep.		307.....	248
489.....	138	Moulton v. Connell-Hall McLester Co. 93 Tenn.
Merchants' Exch. Nat. Bank v. Commercial		377.....	601
Warehouse Co. 49 N. Y. 635.....	714	v. Robinson, 27 N. H. 550.....	701
Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 77		Mt. Sterling & J. Turnp. Road Co. v. Looney,
U. S. 10 Wall. 604, 19 L. ed. 1008.....	536, 538	1 Met. (Ky.) 550.....	536
Meriden Britannia Co. v. Parker, 39 Conn. 450,		Mount Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83
12 Am. Rep. 401.....	139	Iowa, 147, 13 L. R. A. 198.....	144
Merrick v. Brainard, 38 Barb. 674.....	605	Mowrey v. Central City Railway, 51 N. Y. 666.....	961
Merriman v. Moore, 30 Pa. 78.....	656	Moyer's Appeal, 77 Pa. 498.....	453
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, L. R.		Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205
1 H. L. 63.....	226, 228, 230	132.....	679
Meserve v. Clark, 115 Ill. 580.....	256	Mullan v. Wisconsin Central Co. 46 Minn. 474.....	551
Messmer v. McCray, 113 Mo. 382.....	813	Mullanphy Sav. Bank v. Schott, 135 Ill. 655.....	267
Messonnier v. Kauman, 3 Johns. Ch. 66.....	258, 259	Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 424, 53 Am. Rep. 206	320
Metcalfe v. Hetherington, 11 Exch. 257.....	227	Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 35.....	655
Metropolitan Bd. of Excise v. Barrie, 34 N. Y.		Murray v. Murray, 6 Or. 17.....	414
657.....	809	Mussey v. Eagle Bank, 9 Met. 313.....	538
Metropolitan City R. Co. v. Chicago, 96 Ill. 620.	111	Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591,
Mettler v. Miller, 129 Ill. 630.....	328	29 L. ed. 997.....	69
Meyers v. Block, 120 U. S. 206, 30 L. ed. 642.....	249
Michener v. Dale, 23 Pa. 63.....	445
Mickey v. Burlington Ins. Co. 35 Iowa, 174, 14
Am. Rep. 494.....	69
Middlebrook v. Corwin, 15 Wend. 169.....	701
Middleton v. Fowler, 1 Salk. 232.....	391
William County v. Bateman, 54 Tex. 153.....	73
Milburn v. Cedar Rapids, 12 Iowa, 256.....	184
Milford v. Milford Water Co. 124 Pa. 610, 3 L. R.
A. 122.....	747
Miller v. Ewer, 27 Me. 509, 46 Am. Dec. 619.....	487
r. Miller, 3 P. Wms. 365.....	444, 449
r. Pence, 132 Ill. 149.....	328
r. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10.....	656
r. Washburn, 117 Mass. 371.....	697
Milliken v. Brown, 1 Rawle, 301.....	173
Ming Yue v. Coos Bay R. & E. R. & Nav. Co. 24
Or. 362.....	482
Minkey v. Hopeman, 87 Ill. 450, 29 Am. Rep. 63
Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U.
S. 23, 32 L. ed. 585.....	132, 556
Minnick Case, 6 C. C. A. 387, 37 Fed. Rep. 362, 13
U. S. App. 530.....	325
Minton v. Steele, 125 Mo. 181.....	320
Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 498, 18 L.
ed. 440.....	480
Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Ward, 67 U. S. 2 Black,
485, 17 L. ed. 311.....	698
Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. ed. 969.....	692
31 L. R. A.
		N.
		Nance v. Gregory, 6 Lea. 348, 40 Am. Rep. 41.....	714
		Nashville Gaslight Co. v. Nashville, 8 Lea. 406	900
		Nason v. Directors of the Poor, 126 Pa. 445.....	853
		National Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 13.....	471
		v. Sprague, 21 N. J. Eq. 530.....	471
		National Bank of Commerce v. Atkinson, 55
		Fed. Rep. 465.....	536
		National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U.
		S. 10 Wall. 152, 19 L. ed. 897.....	655
		v. Young, 41 N. J. Eq. 531.....	587
		National Furnace Co. v. Keystone Mfg. Co. 110
		Ill. 427.....	588
		National Ins. Co. v. Webster, 83 Ill. 470.....	69
		National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L.
		ed. 621.....	862
		Naught v. Oneal, 1 Ill. 29, Appendix, Beecher's
		Breese, 36.....	72
		Naylor v. Cox, 114 Mo. 232.....	320
		Nealis v. Dick, 72 Ind. 374.....	742
		Nebraska v. Iowa, 143 U. S. 359, 36 L. ed. 186.....	317
		Needham v. Allison, 24 N. H. 355.....	701
		Nelson v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 8 Cush. 477, 54 Am.
		Dec. 778.....	69
		v. United States, Pet. C. C. 235.....	244
		Neuendorff v. Duryea, 69 N. Y. 557.....	692

Newby v. Oregon Cent. R. Co. 1 Deady, 810....	140
Newell v. Hemingway, 16 Cox. C. C. 604.....	514
New England, The, 8 Sumn. 495.....	254
New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 47 U. S. 6 How. 344, 12 L. ed. 465	248
New Jersey Zinc Co. v. New Jersey Franklinite Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 322.....	711
Newman, Ex parte , 9 Cal. 502.....	692
New Orleans, The, 17 Blatchf. 216.....	244
New Orleans v. United States, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 682, 9 L. ed. 575.....	317
New Orleans, J. & G. R. Co. v. Harrison, 48 Miss. 112, 12 Am. Rep. 356.....	391
New Providence v. McEnchion, 38 N. J. L. 339	853
Newton v. Mahoning County Comrs. 100 U. S. 599, 35 L. ed. 711.....	822
Newton Mig. Co. v. White, 42 Ga. 148.....	711
New York, R. 135 N. Y. 233.....	185
New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30.....	782
New York C. & H. R. Co. v. Re, v. Metropolitan Gaslight Co. 63 N. Y. 326.....	310
New York, H. & N. R. Co. v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co. 36 Conn. 196.....	311
New York Protestant E. Public Schools, Re , 75 N. Y. 324.....	218
Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge Co. v. Bachman, 68 N. Y. 281.....	697
Niboyet v. Niboyet, L. R. 4 Prob. Div. 11.....	519
Nichols v. Walter, 37 Minn. 264.....	555
Nickels v. Griffin, 1 Wash. Terr. 374.....	252
Niehau v. Shepherd, 26 Ohio St. 40.....	318
Niles Waterworks v. Niles, 59 Mich. 812.....	746, 797
Nims v. Mount Hermon Boy's School, 160 Mass. 177, 22 L. R. A. 364.....	461
Noel v. Drake, 28 Kan. 265, 42 Am. Rep. 162.....	564
v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 37.....	519
Nokomis v. Harkey, 31 Ill. App. 107.....	628
Norcross v. Griffiths, 65 Wis. 599, 56 Am. Rep. 642.....	697
Norfolk v. Chamberlain, 89 Va. 196.....	387, 388
Norfolk City v. Ellis, 26 Gratt. 224.....	387, 389
North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Williams, 140 Ill. 275.....	333
Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755.....	324
Northern Railroad v. Concord & C. Railroad, 27 N. H. 183.....	311
Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036.....	830
Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. ed. 178.....	661
Norwich F. Ins. Co. v. Boomer, 52 Ill. 442, 4 Am. Rep. 618.....	605
Norwich Gaslight Co. v. Norwich City Gas Co. 25 Conn. 38.....	59
Novion v. Hallett, 16 Johns. 327.....	247

O.

O'Bear Jewelry Co. v. Volfer (Ala.) 28 L. R. A. 707.....	508
O'Connor v. Bucklin, 50 N. H. 589.....	164
Odd Fellows Mut. Aid. Assn. v. James, 63 Cal. 508, 40 Am. Rep. 107.....	854
Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. ed. 606.....	76, 77, 723
Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Stratton, 78 Ill. 188.....	333
Ohio Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Merchants' Ins. & T. Co. 11 Humph. 1, 53 Am. Dec. 742.....	600
Oil City Gas Co. v. Robinson, 99 Pa. 1.....	787
Old Colony R. Co. v. Framingham Water Co. 153 Mass. 561, 13 L. R. A. 332.....	185
Oliver v. Fowler, 22 S. C. 540.....	681
Olmstead v. Bach, 78 Md. 132, 22 L. R. A. 74.....	790
v. Camp, 36 Conn. 632, 89 Am. Dec. 221.....	306
Omaha F. Ins. Co. v. Maxwell, S. & R. Co. 38 Neb. 364.....	750
Omro Supers. v. Kalme, 39 Wis. 468.....	846
O'Neal v. Washington County School Comrs. 27 Md. 240.....	656
O'Neil v. American F. Ins. Co. 166 Pa. 72, 26 L. R. A. 715.....	116
Opinion of the Justices, 150 Mass. 592, 8 L. R. A. 467.....	461
Ordway v. Central Nat. Bank, 47 Md. 239, 28 Am. Rep. 455.....	711
Oregon, The, 158 U. S. 186, 39 L. ed. 943.....	720
O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 439.....	218
Otis, Re , 101 N. Y. 585.....	603
Otis v. The Rio Grande, 1 Woods, C. C. 566.....	254
Ottoman Calvey Co. v. Dane, 95 Ill. 203.....	138, 139
Oury v. Goodwin (Ariz.), 26 Pac. 376.....	306
Overman Silver Min. Co. v. Corcoran, 15 Nev. 147.....	305

Owen v. Gibson, 74 Ga. 485.....	776
v. Sioux City, 91 Iowa, 190.....	189
Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 240.....	70

P.
Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810.....	43
Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 358, 98 Am. Dec. 272.....	730
Palmer v. Manhattan R. Co. 133 N. Y. 261, 16 L. R. A. 136.....	391
Palmyra, The, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 531.....	244, 246
Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. 198, 25 Am. Dec. 378.....	448
Parker v. State, Powell, 133 Ind. 178, 18 L. R. A. 567.....	729
v. Sterling, 10 Ohio, 357.....	652
Parnaby v. Lancaster Canal Co. 11 Ad. & El. 223.....	228
Parsons v. Loucks, 48 N. Y. 17, 8 Am. Rep. 517.....	509
v. Winchell, 5 Cush. 592, 52 Am. Dec. 745.....	197
Paschall v. Hinderer, 28 Ohio St. 568.....	714
Pasewalk v. Bollman, 29 Neb. 522.....	765
Passenger R. Co. v. Young, 21 Ohio St. 518, 8 Am. Rep. 78.....	391
Paston v. Adams, 49 Cal. 87.....	222
Pate v. Wright, 30 Ind. 476, 95 Am. Dec. 705.....	747
Pattee v. Adams, 37 Kan. 133.....	672
Patterson v. Marine Nat. Bank, 130 Pa. 419.....	553
v. Matthews, 3 Bibb, 80.....	38
v. Seaton, 70 Iowa, 689.....	471
Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 3 L. R. A. 443.....	687, 688
v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357.....	43
Paulling v. Barron, 32 Ala. 9.....	81
Paulsen v. Portland, 149 U. S. 30, 37 L. ed. 637.....	387
Paxton & H. Irrig. Canal & L. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Irrig. & L. Co. 45 Neb. 884, 29 L. R. A. 853.....	53, 54
Pearce v. Germanic Ins. Co. ("The Lady Pike"), 96 U. S. 461, 24 L. ed. 672.....	244
v. Foote, 113 Ill. 228.....	534
v. Madison & I. R. Co. 62 U. S. 21 How. 441, 16 L. ed. 184.....	501
Pearson v. Allen, 151 Mass. 79.....	608
v. State, 66 Miss. 510, 4 L. R. A. 835.....	223
Peck v. Belknap, 130 N. Y. 384.....	401
v. Goodberlett, 109 N. Y. 180.....	550
v. James, 3 Head, 76.....	848
Peer v. Cookerow, 14 N. J. Eq. 361.....	259
Peik v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. ed. 97.....	51
Penfield v. Thayer, 2 E. D. Smith, 305.....	450
Penhallow v. Doane, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 54, 1 L. ed. 507.....	247, 259
Penn v. Calhoun, 121 U. S. 251, 30 L. ed. 915.....	408
Pennie v. San Francisco City & County Super. Ct. 89 Cal. 31.....	252
Penniman's Case, 108 U. S. 714, 28 L. ed. 602.....	75
Pennoyer v. Neff, 96 U. S. 73, 24 L. ed. 573.....	519
Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Kelly, 156 Ill. 9.....	334
Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Keokuk & H. Bridge Co. 131 U. S. 371, 33 L. ed. 157.....	501
People v. Andrews, 115 N. Y. 427, 6 L. R. A. 128.....	512
v. Arensberg, 105 N. Y. 123, 59 Am. Rep. 483.....	691
v. Arguello, 37 Cal. 524.....	797
v. Bangs, 24 Ill. 184.....	662
v. Bellett, 99 Mich. 151, 22 L. R. A. 698.....	691
v. Bradley, 33 N. Y. S. R. 562.....	513
v. Buckland, 13 Wend. 543.....	236
v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L. R. A. 559.....	831
v. Burr, 15 Cal. 358.....	114
v. Canal Board, 55 N. Y. 395.....	476
v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278.....	73
v. Dohring, 59 N. Y. 374, 17 Am. Rep. 549.....	469
v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 129, 25 L. R. A. 794.....	691
v. Farrington, 119 Ind. 164, 4 L. R. A. 535.....	471
v. Fields, 58 N. Y. 514.....	476
v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 589.....	694, 695
v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 328.....	42
v. Ingersoll, 58 N. Y. 14, 17 Am. Rep. 178.....	476, 477, 478
v. Irvin, 21 Wend. 128.....	109
v. Luhrs, 7 Misc. 503.....	513
v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34.....	691, 692
v. Miner, 2 Lans. 396.....	477
v. Moses, 140 N. Y. 214.....	692, 694
v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 535.....	140
v. New York, 3 Johns. Cas. 79.....	371
v. North River Sugar Ref. Co. 121 N. Y. 582, 9 L. R. A. 33.....	420
v. Pacheco, 29 Cal. 213.....	482
v. Rozelle, 73 Cal. 84.....	295

People v. St. Louis, 10 Ill. 351	111	Pratt v. Albright, 9 Fed. Rep. 634	249
v. Sinell, 84 N. Y. S. 898	513	v. Castle, 91 Mich. 484	173
v. Soule, 75 Mich. 250, 2 L. R. A. 494	513	v. Gilbert, 8 Utah, 54	255
v. Stokes, 71 Cal. 283	415	v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 245	176
v. The Governor, 29 Mich. 320, 18 Am. Rep. 89	490	Pray v. Wasdel, 146 Mass. 824	256
v. Tilton, 37 Cal. 614	352	Prehn v. Royal Bank, L. R. 5 Exch. 92	553
v. Underhill, 144 N. Y. 324	697	Prentice v. Dehon, 10 Allen, 353	73
v. Un Donz, 106 Cal. 63	698	v. Weston, 111 N. Y. 490	691
v. Weber, 81 Ill. 253	294	Preston v. Boston, 12 Pick. 14	331
People, ex rel. Atty. Gen., v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 463	662	v. Smith, 156 Ill. 359	534
Carter, v. Rice, 135 N. Y. 473, 16 L. R. A. 896	192	Prince Albert v. Strange, 2 De G. & S. 652, 1 Macn. & G. 25	293
Cummings, v. Head, 25 Ill. 325	729, 730	Prince of Wales Asso. Co. v. Palmer, 25 Beav. 605	286
Kemp, v. D'Oench, 111 N. Y. 359	355	Pritz, Ex parte , 9 Iowa, 30	69
Killeen, v. Angle, 109 N. Y. 564	400, 402	Proctor v. Stone, 158 Mass. 504	175
McCauley, v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11	797	Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Wager, 37 Fed. Rep. 599	25
Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477	846	Prudential Assur. Co. v. Knott, L. R. 10 Ch. 142	235
Nechamcus, v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718	691	Pullman v. New York, 49 Barb. 57	746
Peabody, v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L. R. A. 487	419	Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L. R. A. 215	332
Williams, v. Dayton, 55 N. Y. 367	514	Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 115 U. S. 587, 39 L. ed. 499	53
Williams, v. Kingman, 24 N. Y. 559	697	Purcell v. Allemon, 22 Gratt. 742	655
Woodruff, v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451	729	Purdy v. Hall, 134 Ill. 286	332
People's Pass. R. Co. v. Green, 56 Md. 84	353
Peoria P. & J. R. Co. v. Peoria & S. R. Co. 66 Ill. 174	310	Q.
Pepke v. Cronan, 155 U. S. 100, 39 L. ed. 84	679	Queen v. Williams, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 418	230
Percival v. Hickey, 18 Johns. 257, 9 Am. Dec. 210	248	Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 86, 36 L. ed. 693	603
Perkins v. Headley, 49 Mo. App. 562	173
Perrott v. Shearer, 17 Mich. 48	605	R.
Perry v. Carr, 44 N. H. 118	700	Ragland v. McFall, 137 Ill. 81	266, 273
v. Cheboygan, 55 Mich. 250	173	Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. ed. 636	51
v. New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. 55 Ala. 413, 28 Am. Rep. 740	194	Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Davis, 2 Dev. & B. L. 451	309
Petersburg v. Whitnack, 48 Ill. App. 663	528	Rankin's Appeal (Pa.), 2 L. R. A. 429	130
Peterson v. Brabrock Tailoring Co. 150 Ill. 290	505	Ransom v. Hays, 39 Mo. 445	714
Pettibone v. Hamilton, 40 Wis. 402	697	Rathborn v. Bradford, 1 Ala. 312	653
Phelps v. McNeeley, 96 Mo. 554, 27 Am. Rep. 378	471	Ray v. Stobbs, 28 Mo. 35	340
v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 10, 19 Am. Rep. 140	691	Raymond v. Sellick, 10 Conn. 484	445
v. The City of Panama, 1 Wash. Terr. 615	254	v. Thomas, 24 Ind. 478	676
Philadelphia v. Flanigen, 47 Pa. 21	746	Rea v. The Eclipse ("The Eclipse"), 135 U. S. 569, 34 L. ed. 309, 4 Dak. 218	242, 245, 250, 252, 254, 261
Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummell, 44 Pa. 375, 64 Am. Dec. 457	860	Read v. Dingess, 8 C. C. A. 388	387
v. Troutman, 11 W. N. C. 458	860	Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014	51, 54
Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308	42	Redpath v. Rich, 3 Sandf. 79	104, 108
Phillips v. Watson, 68 Iowa 28	304	Reed v. Copeland, 50 Conn. 472, 47 Am. Rep. 663	451
Phelps v. McFarlane, 3 Minn. 109 (Gil. 61), 74 Am. Dec. 743	510	Reg. v. Lumley, L. R. 1 C. C. 196	414
Pickett v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 144 Pa. 79, 13 L. R. A. 661	688	v. McNeill, L. Craw. & D. 80	467
Pickle v. Muse, 88 Tenn. 380, 7 L. R. A. 98	513	v. White, 2 Car. & K. 404	833
Piedmont Club v. Com. 57 Va. 541	219	Regent's Canal Ironworks Co., R. L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 411	406
Pier v. Fond du Lac, 38 Wis. 470	173	Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co. 106 Ill. 439	266, 273, 274
Pierce v. Pierce, 25 Barb. 253	220	Renier v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 74 Wis. 94	116
v. Schutt, 20 Wis. 424	747	Respublica v. Cobbett, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 467, 1 L. ed. 685	24
Pine Civil Twp. v. Huber Mfg. Co. 83 Ind. 121	387	Rex v. Harborne, 2 Ad. & El. 540	414
Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427	159	v. O'Bonnell, 7 Car. & P. 138	166
Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 38 L. ed. 1031	310	Reynburn v. Mitchell, 106 Mo. 385	471
Pinkham v. Blair, 67 N. H. 226	655	Reynolds v. Howe, 51 Conn. 619	712
Pittsburgh Junction R. Co.'s Appeal, 122 Pa. 511	726	v. Stevenson, 4 Ind. 612	747
Planters' Bank v. Merritt, 7 Heisk. 177	506	v. Stevens, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244	253
v. Sharp, 47 U. S. 6 How. 301, 12 L. ed. 447	858	Rice v. Barnard, 20 Vt. 479, 50 Am. Dec. 54	471

Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79.	526	Sawin v. Mount Vernon Bank, 2 R. I. 382.	342
Rouch v. Brannon, 57 Miss. 490.	471	Sawyer, Re , 124 U. S. 200, 31 L. ed. 402, 285, 482.	483
Robb v. La Grange, 158 Ill. 21.	111	Ex parte , 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 235, 22 L. ed.	244
Roberts v. Corbin, 25 Iowa 315.	656	617.	244
c. Ogle , 30 Ill. 459, 83 Am. Dec. 201.	133	v. Oakman , 11 Blatchf. 65, Fed. Cas. No.	244
Robertson v. Fleming, 4 Mass. H. L. Cas. 167.	863	12, 408.	244
Robinson v. Harrison, 2 Tenn. Ch. 11.	842	v. Twiss , 26 N. H. 345.	700
c. Holt , 39 N. H. 557, 75 Am. Dec. 233.	701	Saylor v. Bushong, 100 Pa. 23.	655
c. Schenck , 102 Ind. 307.	738	v. Daniels , 37 Ill. 331, 87 Am. Dec. 250.	287
Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 557.	105	Schaffner v. Ehrman, 139 Ill. 109, 15 L. R. A. 134.	553
Robson v. Hamilton [1891] 2 Ch. 559.	448	Schatz v. Pfeil, 56 Wis. 429.	607
Rockport v. Walden, 54 N. H. 167, 30 Am. Rep.	73	Schedel's Estate, Re , 69 Cal. 241.	252
131.	730	Schenck v. Conover, 13 N. J. Eq. 31.	259
Rodd v. Hearst "The Lottawanna", 88 U. S.	862	Scherer v. Hopkins, 42 N. Y. S. R. 189.	256
21 Wall. 558, 22 L. ed. 654.	868	Schimmele v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 34	556
Roddy v. Missouri P. R. Co. 104 Mo. 234, 12 L. R.	862	Minn. 218.	556
A. 746.	868	Schmidlapp v. Currie, 55 Miss. 597, 30 Am. Rep.	471
Rodgers v. Parker, 9 Gray. 445.	401	530.	471
Rogers v. Buffalo, 123 N. Y. 173, 9 L. R. A. 579.	139	Schmisseur v. Beatrice, 147 Ill. 310.	414
c. Rogers , 53 Conn. 121, 55 Am. Rep. 78.	136	Schneider v. Turner, 130 Ill. 28, 6 L. R. A. 164.	534
c. Talmor , 97 Mass. 291.	328	Schoonmaker v. Gilmore, 102 U. S. 118, 26 L.	248
Rohn v. Harris, 130 Ill. 525.	553	ed. 95.	274
Rolla v. Steward, 14 C. B. 565.	283	Schroeder v. Walsh, 120 Ill. 403.	266
Roll v. Raguett, 4 Ohio, 400, 22 Am. Dec. 759.	471	Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. 49 Minn. 335, 15 L.	221
Roop v. Herron, 15 Neb. 73.	553	R. A. 518.	285
Rose v. Douglass Twp. 32 Kan. 451.	711	Schuyler v. Curtis, 40 N. Y. S. R. 289.	285
c. Roseburg & M. Turpp , Co. 3 Watts. 46.	504	Schuyler's Case, 34 N. Y. 30.	778
Roseboom v. Whitaker, 132 Ill. 81.	63, 66	Schwuchow v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 444.	526
Ross v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120.	325	Scofield v. State Nat. Bank, 9 Neb. 316, 31 Am.	706
c. Case , 112 U. S. 382, 28 L. ed. 780.	215	Rep. 412.	672
c. Lister , 14 Tex. 469.	247	Scott v. Grover, 56 Vt. 495, 48 Am. Rep. 814.	555
c. Rittenhouse , 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 100, 1 L.	836	v. Minneapolis , St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co.	318
ed. 331.	144	42 Minn. 179.	555
Rothrock v. Perkinson, 61 Ind. 39.	509	Scrutton v. Brown, 4 Barn. & C. 485.	509
Rothmann v. Harding, 22 Neb. 375.	301, 302	Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co. 1 N. J.	306
Roundeau v. Wyatt, 2 H. Ill. 63.	506	Eq. 985, 23 Am. Dec. 759.	306
Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y.	301, 302	Seaman v. Higgins, 2 N. J. Eq. 214, 34 Am. Dec.	300
129, 21 Am. Rep. 507.	506	300.	399
Rouse v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 463,	701	Sears v. Russell, 8 Gray. 86.	79
5 L. R. A. 378.	72	Seckler v. Delfs, 25 Kan. 159.	237
Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. 298.	691	Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 546.	546
c. Wilson , 41 N. Y. L. J. 9.	236	Seibert v. United States, 122 U. S. 284, 30 L. ed.	78
Ryers, Re , 72 N. Y. L. J. 28 Am. Rep. 88.	472	1161.	723
Rudolph v. Brewer, 56 Ala. 180.	192	Selm v. State, 55 Md. 566, 30 Am. Rep. 419.	513
Ruffin, Ex parte , 4 Ves. Jr. 119.	711	Seldon v. Hickock, 2 Cain. 156.	702
Rumsey v. People, 19 S. Y. 41.	498	Sessions v. Moseley, 4 Cush. 87.	448
Russell v. McLehann, 14 Pick. 69.	498	Sewall v. Fitch, 8 Cow. 215.	509
Russell v. Fubryn, 34 N. H. 218.	498	Seymour v. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. 126	185
Rutherford v. Hill (Or.) 17 L. R. A. 549.	498	Ind. 466.	249
		v. Phillips & C. Constr. Co. 7 Bias. 460.	471
		Shackelford v. Shackelford, 32 Gratt. 503.	783
		v. Ward , 3 Ala. 37, 36 Am. Rep. 435.	519
		Shafer v. Bushnell, 24 Wis. 372.	813
		Sharkey v. McDermott, 91 Mo. 647, 60 Am. Rep.	310
		270.	314
		Sharon's R. Co.'s Appeal, 122 Pa. 545.	304
		Sharp v. Johnson, 22 Ark. 79.	788
		Shaver v. Starrett, 4 Ohio St. 496.	339
		Shaw v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 557, 25	69
		L. ed. 892.	798
		v. Potter , 50 Mo. 281.	798
		v. Robberds , 6 Ad. & El. 75.	256
		v. Statler , 74 Cal. 258.	550
		v. Tobias , 3 N. Y. 188.	664
		Sheehan v. Flynn (Minn.) 26 L. R. A. 632.	70
		Sheehan's Case, 122 Mass. 445, 23 Am. Rep. 374.	410
		Shellenberger v. Ransom, 41 Neb. 631, 25 L. R.	482
		A. 565.	691
		Shepard v. Manhattan R. Co. 131 N. Y. 215.	256
		Sheridan v. Colvin, 78 Ill. 247.	679
		Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819.	778
		Sherman v. Bellows, 24 Or. 553.	691
		Shovel v. State, 10 Ark. 259.	256
		Shreffler v. Nadelhoffer, 133 Ill. 555.	471
		Siebold, Ex parte , 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. ed. 717.	679
		Sigler v. Knox County Bank, 8 Ohio St. 511.	471
		Silk v. Prime, 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. pt.	472
		1, p. 353.	173
		Simmons v. Almy, 103 Mass. 35.	832
		v. Chicago & T. R. Co. 110 Ill. 340.	421
		Simpson v. Lord Howden, 8 Myl. & C. 99.	247
		v. Nadau , N. C. Conf. Rep. 115, 2 Am.	830
		Dec. 634.	528
		Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496.	256
		Sipe v. Murphy, 49 Ohio St. 536, 17 L. R. A. 184.	774
		Skellinger v. Yandes, 12 Wend. 308.	780
		Skipwith v. Strother, 3 Rand. (Va.) 214.	449
		Slauson v. Racine, 13 Wis. 398.	711
		Slaymaker v. Bank of Gettysburg, 10 Pa. 373.	247
		Slee v. Bloom, 5 Johns. Ch. 366.	788
		Smart v. Wolff, 3 T. R. 336.	713
		Smith v. Boston Gaslight Co. 129 Mass. 818.	797
		v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Iowa) 53 N.	50
		W. 128.	713
		v. Clay , 3 Bro. Ch. 640.	797
		v. Dedham , 144 Mass. 177.

Smith v. East End Street R. Co. 87 Tenn. 636.....	607	State v. McLaughlin, 15 Kan. 228.....	478
v. Hess, 91 Ind. 424.....	742	v. Medbery, 7 Ohio St. 523.....	797
v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 291.....	114	v. Mercer, 28 Iowa, 405.....	513
v. Lynch, 29 Ohio St. 261.....	663	v. Miller, 26 Iowa, 26.....	136
v. Morse, 20 La. Ann. 220.....	533	v. Mines, 38 W. Va. 125.....	183
v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 91 Tenn. 221.....	713	v. Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 322.....	845, 853
v. Rochester, 38 Hun. 612.....	411	v. Mosley, 31 Kan. 355.....	296
v. St. Lawrence County Supers. 148 N. Y. 187.....	507	v. Neils, 108 N. C. 787, 12 L. R. A. 412.....	513
v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 2 Tenn. Ch. 737.....	497	v. Nevlin, 19 Nev. 162.....	845
v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 6 Lea, 569.....	599	v. Nichols, 78 Iowa, 745.....	136
v. Silver Valley Min. Co. 64 Md. 85, 54 Am. Rep. 783.....	487	v. O'Brien, 47 Ohio St. 494.....	609
v. Skeary, 47 Conn. 47.....	506	v. O'Neill, 24 Wis. 149.....	114
v. Stafford, Hob. 218a.....	814	v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550.....	107
v. State, 21 Ark. 204.....	140	v. Salline County Ct. 51 Mo. 350.....	478, 479, 482
v. Surman, 9 Barn. & C. 574.....	509	v. Sarratt, 14 Rich. L. 29.....	681
Smith's "The Challenger," 2 Wash. Terr. 447.....	257	v. Smith, 16 Lea, 697.....	844
Smith's Estate, Re. 51 Minn. 316.....	427	v. Sullivan, 9 Mont. 170.....	296
Surr v. State, 105 Ind. 125.....	664	v. Walsen, 17 Colo. 170.....	649
Snellgrove v. Bailly, 3 Atk. 214.....	449, 450	v. Ware, 13 Or. 983.....	477
Snider's Son's Co. v. Troy, 91 Ala. 224, 11 L. R. A. 515.....	488	v. White, 10 Wash. 611.....	296
Snow v. Holmes, 64 Cal. 232.....	252	v. Wilson, 28 Minn. 52.....	634
Snowball, Ex parte , L. R. 7 Ch. 584.....	471	v. Young, 46 N. H. 206, 38 Am. Dec. 212.....	834
Snyder v. Willey, 38 Mich. 433.....	233	State, ex rel. Atherton, v. Sherwood, 15 Minn. 221 (Gil. 172), 2 Am. Rep. 116.....	855, 370, 371
Society for Savings v. Coite, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 594, 18 L. ed. 897.....	42	Atty. Gen. v. Cunningham, 63 Wis. 90, 17 L. R. A. 145.....	729
South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Donovan, 84 Ala. 141.....	859	Atty. Gen. v. Cunningham, 61 Wis. 440, 15 L. R. A. 561.....	729
Southern Exp. v. Fitzner, 59 Miss. 759, 34 Am. Rep. 494.....	391	Atty. Gen. v. Johnson, 30 Fla. 433, 18 L. R. A. 410.....	852, 370, 371
South Nashville Street R. Co. v. Morrow, 87 Tenn. 406, 2 L. R. A. 853.....	600	Bacon, v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. 59 Md. 482.....	860
Southwestern Tele. & Teleph. Co. v. Robinson, 1 C. C. A. 684, 50 Fed. Rep. 813, 16 L. R. A. 545, 2 U. S. App. 205.....	576	Bell v. St. Louis Club, 26 L. R. A. 573, 125 Mo. 308.....	513, 514
Southworth v. Smith, 27 Conn. 355, 71 Am. Dec. 72.....	701	Blasbee, v. Board of State Canvassers, 17 Fla. 29.....	370
Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 68.....	164	Central Type Foundry, v. Moore, 72 Mo. 235.....	339, 341
Spears v. Burton, 31 Miss. 547.....	414	Columbia Club, v. McMaster, 35 S. C. 1.....	513
Specht v. Com. 8 Pa. 312, 49 Am. Dec. 518.....	691	Elliott, v. Bemenderfer, 96 Ind. 374.....	352
Speir v. Utrecht, 121 N. Y. 429.....	698	Everding, v. Simon, 20 Or. 365.....	352
Spencer v. Merchaut, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763.....	387	George, v. Aiken, 42 S. C. 222, 26 L. R. A. 345.....	738
Springer v. Walters, 139 Ill. 419.....	140	German Sav. & L. Soc. v. Sears (Or.) 13 Pac. 482.....	723, 724
Sprugfield v. Connecticut River R. Co. 4 Cush. 71.....	185	Jones, v. Oates, 86 Wis. 634.....	356, 371
v. Sale, 127 Ill. 359.....	218	Law, v. Saxon, 25 Fla. 792.....	370
Staigt v. State, 39 Ohio St. 496.....	702	Loring, v. Benedict, 15 Minn. 196 (Gil. 152).....	352
Stall v. Wilbur, 77 N. Y. 158.....	666	McLoruan, v. Ryno, 49 N. J. L. 603.....	338
Star v. Pease, 8 Conn. 543.....	519	Mead, v. Dunn, Minor (Ala.) 46, 12 Am. Dec. 25.....	371
State v. Adams, 71 Mo. 620.....	792	Meckling, v. Jaynes, 19 Neb. 161.....	370
v. Addington, 77 Mo. 117.....	819	Memphis, v. Butler, 86 Tenn. 614.....	710
v. Alling, 12 Ohio, 16.....	663	Morrison, v. Morris, 103 Ind. 161.....	742
v. Anderson, 5 Kan. 115.....	482	Newark, v. Essex Club, 53 N. J. L. 99.....	513
v. Blake, 2 Ohio St. 147.....	65	Richards, v. Hammer, 42 N. J. L. 435.....	190
v. Bloom, 17 Wis. 521.....	664	Snyder, v. Newman, 91 Mo. 445.....	356
v. Brooks, 39 La. Ann. 817.....	664	Stevenson, v. Tufty, 20 Nev. 427.....	403
v. Butler, 15 Lea. 104.....	711	State Bank v. Coquillard, 6 Ind. 232.....	747
v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 499, 9 Am. Rep. 409.....	664	State Board of Comrs. v. Boice, 140 Ind. 506.....	738
v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Iowa) 55 N. W. 331.....	51	State Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Updegraff, 21 Pa. 518.....	605
v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 38 Minn. 298.....	116	State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 234, 21 L. ed. 164.....	42
v. Choate, 11 Ohio, 511.....	563	Steele v. Sanchez, 72 Iowa, 65.....	318
v. Clarke, 38 N. H. 324, 68 Am. Dec. 723.....	837	Steele v. Hoagland, 39 Ill. 234.....	273
v. Clarke, 73 N. C. 255.....	853	Stein v. Swensen, 44 Minn. 218.....	714
v. Croft, 24 Ark. 550.....	846	Steinbach v. Relief F. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 498, 38 Am. Rep. 655.....	791
v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 15 L. R. A. 561.....	478, 479, 481	Stephens & C. Transp. Co. v. Western U. Tele. Co. 8 Ben. 502, Fed. Cas. No. 13, 371.....	576
v. Curators State University, 57 Mo. 178.....	478	Stephenson v. King, 81 Ky. 425, 50 Am. Rep. 172.....	449
v. Dayton & S. E. R. Co. 36 Ohio St. 434.....	477, 478	v. Sloan, 65 Miss. 407.....	223
v. Dollaselline, 1 McCord, L. 43.....	371	Sterl v. Sterl, 2 Ill. App. 223.....	162
v. Douglas County Road Co. 10 Or. 201.....	481	Stevens v. Loranport, 76 Ind. 498.....	67
v. Easton Social. L. & M. Club, 73 Md. 97, 10 L. R. A. 64.....	513	Stewart v. Polk County Supers. 30 Iowa, 9, 1 Am. Rep. 238.....	132, 184
v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227.....	385	v. Stewart, 78 Me. 548, 57 Am. Rep. 822.....	606
v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863.....	132	Stewart's Estate, 147 Pa. 383.....	158
v. Granville, 45 Ohio St. 264.....	667	Stipp v. Brown, 2 Ind. 647.....	72
v. Guenther, 87 Wis. 675.....	220	Stokes v. Mackay, 140 N. Y. 640.....	778
v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 67 Am. Dec. 363.....	845, 853	Stone v. Chisolm, 113 U. S. 302, 28 L. ed. 991, 600, 601 v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 717, 25 L. ed. 1079.....	809, 871
v. Hatcher, 11 Rich. L. 525.....	681	v. Small, 54 Vt. 498.....	371
v. Hibernian Sav. & L. Asso. 8 Or. 396.....	481	Stoner v. Pennsylvania Co. 98 Ind. 384, 49 Am. Rep. 784.....	393
v. Horacek, 41 Kan. 87, 3 L. R. A. 687.....	513	Stoughton v. Leigh, 1 Taunt. 402.....	701
v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 59.....	844, 854	Stover v. Mitchell, 45 Ill. 213.....	331
v. Hudson, 29 N. J. L. 104.....	218	Strang, Ex parte , 21 Ohio St. 610.....	664, 667, 668
v. Jersey City, 38 N. J. L. 410.....	218	Stratton v. Allen, 16 N. J. Eq. 229.....	506
v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201.....	497	Strong v. Daniel, 5 Ind. 348.....	403
v. King, 37 Iowa, 462.....	190	Strout v. Pennell, 74 Me. 262.....	846
v. Leatherman, 38 Ark. 81.....	191	Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 191, 30 Am. Rep. 289.....	386, 388
v. Littell, 45 La. Ann. 655.....	295	Studtill v. State, 7 Ga. 2.....	296
v. Lockyer, 95 N. C. 683, 50 Am. Rep. 257.....	513	Sturge, Re , and Great Western R. Co. L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 444.....	159
v. McBride, 4 Mo. 306, 29 Am. Dec. 636.....	820	Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529.....	75, 723
v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 429.....	797
v. McFetridge, 84 Wis. 473, 20 L. R. A. 233.....	854

Sumner v. Beeler, 50 Ind. 341, 19 Am. Rep. 718...	408	Todd v. Rowley, 8 Allen, 51.....	176
Superior v. Norton, 12 C. C. A. 460, 63 Fed. Rep. 357, 24 U. S. App. 59.....	746	Toland v. Sprague, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 330, 9 L. ed. 1063.....	661
Sutton v. Hayden, 62 Mo. 101.....	813	Torrence v. Shedd, 156 Ill. 194.....	533
Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 11 C. C. A. 320, 63 Fed. Rep. 496.....	268	Tourne v. Lee, 8 Mart. N. S. 543, 20 Am. Dec. 290.....	133
Swain v. Russell, 10 Ind. 438.....	896	Towers v. Osborne, 1 Strange, 506.....	508
Swan, Ex parte , 7 C. B. N. S. 447.....	724	Town v. Bank of River Basin, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 530.....	505
Swan v. North British Australasian Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 181.....	785	Townley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 53 Wis. 636.....	861
Swanson v. Griffin, 68 Miss. 319.....	282	Treadwell v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 7 Gray, 368, 66 Am. Dec. 490.....	419, 710
Swanston v. James, 63 Ill. 165.....	331	Treasurer v. Commercial Coal Min. Co. 23 Cal. 390.....	562
Swift v. Smith, 65 Md. 423, 57 Am. Rep. 366.....	712	Treat v. Jones, 28 Conn. 334.....	293
v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 123 N. Y. 645.....	890	Troy v. Cape Fear & Y. V. R. Co. 99 N. C. 298.....	860
Swinburne, Re , 16 R. I. 208.....	159	Troy & R. R. Co. v. Boston, H. T. & W. R. Co. 86 N. Y. 123.....	410
Sydney, The , 47 Fed. Rep. 290.....	244	Tuck v. Priestler, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 629.....	285
T.		Tucker v. Ferguson, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 527, 22 L. ed. 805.....	831
Tackaberry v. Tackaberry, 101 Mich. 102.....	161	Turner v. Conkey, 132 Ind. 243, 17 L. R. A. 509.....	742
Taggard v. Innes, 12 U. C. P. 77.....	69	Twining v. Elgin, 38 Ill. App. 361.....	527
Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417.....	304, 306	Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. ed. 329.....	298
Talmage v. Peil, 7 N. Y. 328.....	419	U.
Tanner v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 60 Ala. 621.....	372	Ugla v. West End Street R. Co. 160 Mass. 351.....	576
Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. Jr. 111.....	444	Ungley v. Ungley, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 73.....	571, 572, 576
Taylor v. Beech, 1 Ves. Sr. 287.....	814	Union, The , 4 Blatchf. 90.....	246
v. Branham, 35 Fla. 297.....	487	Union Bank v. State, 9 Verg. 490.....	600
v. Carpenter, 11 Paige, 297, 42 Am. Dec. 114.....	139	Union Nat. Bank v. Bank of Kansas City, 136 U. S. 223, 34 L. ed. 341.....	603
v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 113 Pa. 162, 57 Am. Rep. 446.....	860	v. Oceana County Sav. Bank, 80 Ill. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 185.....	655
v. Shrine, 35 Treadway, Const. 696.....	663	Union P. R. Co. v. Artist, 9 C. C. A. 14, 60 Fed. Rep. 365, 23 L. R. A. 581.....	232, 233
v. Sullivan, 45 Minn. 309, 11 L. R. A. 272.....	362	v. Dodge County Comrs. 98 U. S. 541, 25 L. ed. 196.....	331
v. The Royal Saxon, 1 Wall. Jr. 311.....	247	Union School Twp. v. First Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 464.....	747
Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, 37 Iowa, 550.....	853	United Electric R. Co. v. Shelton, 89 Tenn. 423.....	572, 592
Tazewell v. Saunders, 13 Gratt. 354.....	714	United Exp. Co. v. Ellyson, 28 Iowa, 370.....	149
Teal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 242, 28 L. ed. 415.....	723	United States v. Adams, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 463, 19 L. ed. 249.....	173
Teats v. Flanders, 118 Mo. 669.....	813	v. Ames, 98 U. S. 85, 25 L. ed. 295.....	244
Teft v. Teft, 3 Mich. 67.....	521	v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 338, 32 L. ed. 121.....	192
Templeton v. Kraner, 24 Ohio St. 554.....	661	v. Biens (N. M.) 42 Pac. 70.....	453
Tennessee Club v. Dwyer, 11 Lea, 462, 47 Am. Rep. 296.....	513	v. Bissell, 8 Mont. 20.....	253
Tenney v. Foote, 4 Ill. App. 594.....	534	v. Briggs, 46 U. S. 5 How. 209, 12 L. ed. 119.....	398
v. Foote, 96 Ill. 99.....	534	v. Chase, 135 U. S. 255, 34 L. ed. 117.....	398
Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Buck, 96 Ind. 346, 49 Am. Rep. 168.....	393	v. Childs, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 232, 20 L. ed. 360.....	173
Terre Haute & S. E. R. Co. v. Rodel, 87 Ind. 128, 46 Am. Rep. 164.....	194	v. Dashiell, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319.....	845
Territory v. Guthrie, 2 Idaho, 996.....	296	v. Hall, 181 U. S. 51, 33 L. ed. 67.....	396
v. McAndrews, 3 Mont. 158.....	297	v. Haynes, 2 McLean, 155.....	254
Territory, Woods, v. Oklahoma, 2 Okla. 158.....	797	v. Haytian Republic, The ("The Haytian Republic," 154 U. S. 118, 38 L. ed. 930.....	246
Terry v. Anderson, 96 U. S. 623, 24 L. ed. 565.....	76, 723	v. Insley, 130 U. S. 293, 32 L. ed. 968.....	192
Texarkana Gas & E. L. Co. v. Orr, 59 Ark. 215.....	571	v. Keebler, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 39, 19 L. ed. 574.....	845
Texas & P. R. Co. v. Minnick, 10 C. C. A. 1, 61 Fed. Rep. 635.....	323	v. Kacher, 134 U. S. 625, 33 L. ed. 1081.....	398
v. Richards, 68 Tex. 375.....	279, 281	v. Morgan, 52 U. S. 11 How. 154, 13 L. ed. 643.....	845
Texas Exp. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 6 Fed. Rep. 497.....	54	v. Olney, 1 Abb. (C. S.) 275.....	836
Thales, The , 3 Ben. 327, Fed. Cas. No. 13, 855.....	246	v. Perrin, 131 U. S. 56, 33 L. ed. 89.....	398
Thatcher v. Humble, 67 Ind. 444.....	67	v. Prescott, 44 U. S. 3 How. 599, 11 L. ed. 739.....	845
v. Morris, 11 N. Y. 487.....	839	v. Preston, 23 U. S. 8 Pet. 57, 7 L. ed. 601.....	259
Thomas v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1, 18 L. R. A. 170.....	461	v. Quincy, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 535, 18 L. ed. 463.....	652, 733
v. Poole, 7 Gray, 83.....	698	v. Reilly, 131 U. S. 58, 33 L. ed. 75.....	398
v. Richmond, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 349, 20 L. ed. 453.....	471	v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89.....	846, 852
v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Mass. 166.....	569, 576	v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 70, 25 L. ed. 96.....	482
v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 650.....	420	v. Watts, 1 N. M. 553.....	845
v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455.....	222, 587	United States, ex rel , Riggs v. Johnson County Supers. 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 187, 18 L. ed. 774.....	338
Thompson v. Hopper, 6 El. & Bl. 191.....	792	United States Bank v. Stearns, 15 Wend. 314.....	487
v. Howard, 31 Mich. 309.....	792	United States Distilling Co. v. Chicago, 112 Ill. 19.....	523, 528
v. Read, 41 Iowa, 43.....	73	University v. Tucker, 31 W. Va. 621.....	130
v. Stacy, 10 Verg. 493.....	843	V.
v. Township 16, 30 Ill. 99.....	853	Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416.....	745, 797
Thomson v. Holt, 62 Ala. 497.....	371	Van Alstyne v. Cook, 25 N. Y. 499.....	504
Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Henderson Electric & G. L. Co. (N. C.) 21 S. E. 561.....	506	Van Beil v. Prescott, 62 N. Y. 630.....	139
Thorpe v. Brumfitt, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 650.....	636	Vander's Estate, Re , 121 Pa. 201, 12 L. R. A. 227.....	843
Thrall v. Newell, 19 Vt. 202, 47 Am. Dec. 682.....	533	Vandor v. Roach, 73 Cal. 614.....	451
Thruswell v. Handyside, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 359.....	587	Van Leuven v. Lyke, 1 N. Y. 515, 49 Am. Rep. 346.....	672
Tillinghast v. Merrill, 77 Hun. 481.....	854
v. Wheaton, 8 R. I. 536, 5 Am. Rep. 621.....	449
Tilton v. Coffield, 93 U. S. 163, 23 L. ed. 853.....	423
Timberlake v. Parish, 5 Dana, 352.....	843
Timm v. Harrison, 109 Ill. 593.....	526
Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289.....	175
Tippling v. Clarke, 2 Harv. 383.....	298
Titus v. Cairo & F. R. Co. 37 N. J. L. 98.....	536
Tobey v. Robinson, 99 Ill. 222.....	565
Tod v. Kentucky Union Land Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 47.....	537

Vanzant v. Waddell, 2 Yerg. 200.....	652	Westerlo v. DeWitt, 36 N. Y. 340, 98 Am. Dec. 517.....	450
Vaughan v. State, 56 Ark. 373.....	460	Western Nat. Bank v. Armstrongs, 152 U. S. 846, 38 L. ed. 470.....	587
Vickery v. Hendricks County Comrs. 134 Ind. 554.....	737	Western R. Co. v. Alabama G. R. Co. (at present term).....	194
Vincent v. Vincent, 1 Heisk. 333.....	842	Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Eyser, 91 U. S. 496, 23 L. ed. 377.....	571
Virgin, The, v. Vyfhins, 83 U. S. 8 Pet. 538, 8 L. ed. 1036.....	244	v. Eyser, 2 Colo. 163.....	576
Virgo, The, 13 Blatchf. 225, Fed. Cas. No. 16, 976.....	246	v. Philadelphia, 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 40 and note (Pa.) 12 Atl. 144.....	809
Vischer v. Yates, 11 Johns. 25.....	738	West Nashville Planing-Mill Co. v. Nashville Sav. Bank, 86 Tenn. 252.....	713
Voglesong v. State, 9 Ind. 112.....	691	West Wisconsin R. Co. v. Trempealeau County Supers, 93 U. S. 595, 23 L. ed. 814.....	831
Voight v. Wright, 141 U. S. 63, 36 L. ed. 638.....	826	Whaley v. Norton, 1 Vern. 483.....	421
Von Phul v. Hammer, 29 Iowa, 222.....	189	Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483.....	159
Vose v. Morton, 4 Cush. 27, 50 Am. Dec. 750.....	139	Wheaton v. Peters, 38 U. S. 8 Pet. 659, 8 L. ed. 1080.....	447
Vrooman v. Lawyer, 13 Johns. 389.....	672	Wheeler v. Jackson, 137 U. S. 245, 34 L. ed. 659.....	219
W.
Wabash R. Co. v. Brown, 152 Ill. 484.....	338	v. Northern Colorado Irrig. Co. 10 Colo. 582.....	880
Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244.....	51	Wheelock v. Moulton, 15 Vt. 519.....	712
Waddle v. Terry, 4 Coldw. 51.....	844	White v. Multnomah County Comrs. 13 Or. 317, 57 Am. Rep. 20.....	476
Wade v. Wortsman, 29 Fed. Rep. 754.....	249	v. Schuyler, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. 300.....	562
Wagener v. Booker, 81 S. C. 375.....	683	v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 645.....	774
Wahle v. Reinbach, 76 Ill. 322.....	111	Whiteball v. Crawford, 67 Ind. 84.....	67
Wait v. Nashua Armory Asso. 66 N. H. 561, 14 L. R. A. 366.....	586	Whitehurst v. Dey, 90 N. C. 542.....	73
Walcott v. Swampscott, 1 Allen, 101.....	175	Whitfield v. Longest, 6 Ired. L. 271.....	183
Walker v. Gregory, 36 Ala. 184.....	794	Whiting v. Sheboygan & F. du L. R. Co. 25 Wis. 167, 3 Am. Rep. 30.....	185
v. Herron, 22 Tex. 55.....	672	Whitney v. State, 10 Ind. 404.....	898
v. Matland, 5 Barn. & Ald. 171.....	69	Whitton v. Smith, Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 231.....	471
v. Miller, 59 Fed. Rep. 671.....	508	Whitwell v. Warner, 20 Vt. 426.....	505
Wallace v. San José, 29 Cal. 181.....	746	Whyte v. Nashville, 2 Swan, 364.....	843
Walla Walla, The, 44 Fed. Rep. 4.....	245	Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 572.....	528
Walsh v. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. 59 Md. 427.....	790	Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 102 Ill. 560.....	525-527
v. Sexton, 55 Barb. 251.....	450	Wilder v. Campbell (Idaho) 48 Pac. 677.....	726
v. State, Soules (Ind.) 41 N. E. 65.....	737	Wilkinson v. Bauerle, 41 N. J. Eq. 640.....	508, 509
Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544.....	387	Willan v. Willan, 16 Ves. 31.....	259
Walworth County Bank v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 14 Wis. 325.....	586	Willeford v. Watson, 12 Heisk. 476.....	849
Wanata, The, v. Avery ("The Wanata"), 95 U. S. 8, 600, 24 L. ed. 461.....	244, 254	William H. Webb, The, v. Barling ("The Webb"), 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 406, 20 L. ed. 774.....	244, 246
Wappello County Comrs. v. Sinnaman, 1 G. Greene, 413.....	173	Williams v. Guile, 117 N. Y. 343, 6 L. R. A. 366.....	447
Ward v. Maryland, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 418, 20 L. ed. 449.....	381	v. Hays, 143 N. Y. 442, 23 L. R. A. 153.....	69
v. School Dist. No. 15, 10 Neb. 293.....	863	v. Mills County, 71 Iowa, 367.....	140
v. Turner, 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. 1217.....	447	v. Pearson, 38 Ala. 299.....	130
v. Turner, 2 Vee. Sr. 431.....	444, 447, 449	v. Planters' Ins. Co. 57 Miss. 759, 34 Am. Rep. 494.....	391, 705
Warner v. Meyers, 4 Or. 72.....	355, 370	v. Prince of Wales Life etc. Assur. Co. 23 Beav. 338.....	286
v. Mower, 11 Vt. 380.....	505	v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 547, 25 L. ed. 708.....	438
v. Smith, 8 Conn. 14.....	691	Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 231, 25 L. R. A. 222.....	130
Warren v. First Nat. Bank, 149 Ill. 9, 25 L. R. A. 746.....	266, 274	v. Louisville Industrial School, 95 Ky. 251, 23 L. R. A. 200.....	231
Warwick v. State, 25 Ohio St. 21.....	696	Williamsport v. Kent, 14 Ind. 306.....	730
Washburn v. Great Western Ins. Co. 114 Mass. 175.....	791	Willis v. Bremner, 60 Wis. 622.....	471
v. Green ("Richardson v. Green"), 133 U. S. 30, 33 L. ed. 516.....	268	Willis v. Manufacturers' Nat. Gas Co. 130 Pa. 222, 5 L. R. A. 603.....	676
Washington & I. R. Co. v. Cœur d'Alene R. & Nav. Co. (No. 1), 180 U. S. 77, 40 L. ed. 346.....	731	Wilson v. Bell ("The Lottawanna"), 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 201, 22 L. ed. 259.....	258
Waters v. Howard, 8 Gill, 262.....	814	v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co. 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 451.....	846, 850
v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 36 U. S. 11 Pts. 213, 9 L. ed. 691.....	69	v. Shiveley, 11 Or. 215.....	318
Waterson v. Devoe, 18 Kan. 233.....	78	v. Wichita County, 67 Tex. 647.....	853
Watkins v. Glenn, 55 Kan. 417, 31 L. R. A. 82.....	75, 82, 726	Windham v. Childress, 7 Ala. 367.....	794
v. Zwietusch, 47 Wis. 513.....	217	Wing v. Gray, 36 Vt. 261.....	701
Watson v. Penn. 108 Ind. 21.....	676	v. Rogers, 138 N. Y. 361.....	255, 256
Watts v. Parker, 27 Ill. 224.....	328	Winslow v. Wallace, 116 Ind. 324.....	471
Waugh v. Waugh, 84 Pa. 360, 24 Am. Rep. 191.....	130	Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109, 221, 863.....	863
Way v. Foy, 18 Ves. Jr. 452.....	259	Winterson v. Hitchings, 18 Misc. 201.....	342
Weander v. Johnson, 42 Neb. 117.....	750, 751	Wires v. Farr, 25 Vt. 41.....	73
Weaver v. San Francisco City & County (Cal.) 43 Pac. 972.....	796	Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Ashland County, 81 Wis. 1217.....	217
Weber v. Morris & E. R. Co. 35 N. J. L. 409, 10 Am. Rep. 253.....	605, 606	Wishard v. Lenthart (No. 17,385).....	731, 737
Webster v. Webster, 4 DeG. M. & G. 437.....	814	Wolfe v. Erie Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 38 Fed. Rep. 322.....	576
v. Webster, 1 Smales & G. 439.....	814	Wollaston v. Tribe, L. R. 9 Eq. 44.....	714
Webster Case, 5 Cush. 320, 52 Am. Dec. 711.....	298	Wood v. Brush, 140 U. S. 237, 35 L. ed. 509.....	679
Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 242.....	218	v. Duncan, 9 Port. (Ala.) 227.....	733
Weller v. McCormick, 47 N. J. L. 397, 54 Am. Rep. 175.....	194, 195	v. Keith, 60 Ark. 425.....	660
Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64.....	221	v. Wood, 1 Met. (Ky.) 515.....	844
Wells v. Bailey, 55 Conn. 232.....	318	Woodman v. Fulton, 47 Miss. 682.....	73
Wells v. Tucker, 3 Blinn. 366.....	448, 450	Woodruff v. Parham, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 123, 19 L. ed. 382.....	381
Wendover v. Baker, 121 Mo. 273.....	813	v. Wentworth, 133 Mass. 309.....	564
Wenona Coal Co. v. Holmquist, 152 Ill. 581.....	332	Woodson v. Barrett, 2 Hen. & M. 80, 3 Am. Dec. 612.....	774
Wentworth v. Alexander, 66 Ind. 39.....	742	Woodward v. Blanchard, 16 Ill. 433.....	328
Wescott v. Waller, 47 Ala. 492.....	173	Woolcott v. Mead, 12 Met. 517.....	256
West v. Bundy, 78 Mo. 407.....	813	Woolfolk v. State, 81 Ga. 551.....	164, 166
v. Camden, 126 U. S. 507, 34 L. ed. 254.....	564	Woolsey v. Dodge, 6 McLean, 142.....	403
Weston v. Syracuse, 17 N. Y. 110.....	797	v. Judd, 4 Duer, 379.....	293
31 L. R. A.

Worthen v. Griffith, 59 Ark. 502.....	505	Yeaton v. United States, 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 281, 3	259
Wright v. Boston & A. R. Co. 142 Mass. 295.....	856	L. ed. 101.....	259
r. Tinsley, 30 Mo. 399.....	813	York County v. Watson, 15 S. C. 1, 40 Am. Rep.	846, 854
r. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 343, 22 Am. Dec. 507.....	300	675.....	267
Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84	106	Young v. Chapp, 147 Ill. 178.....	267
Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378.....	690
Y.
Yancy v. Yancy, 5 Helsk. 353, 13 Am. Rep. 5.....	73	Zepher, The, v. Brown, 2 Wash. Terr. 44.....	252, 254
Yates v. Whyte, 4 Bing. N. C. 272.....	605, 606	Zettel v. West Bend, 79 Wis. 515.....	697
		Zieman v. Kneckbefer Elevator Mfg. Co. 90 Wis.	58
		503.....

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

England.

Statutes.

Westm. II. Respondent superior.....	232
29 Car. II. chap. 7. Sunday laws.....	691
11 & 12 Wm. III. Inheritance through aliens.....	103

Mexico.

Constitution.

Art. 72, § 22. Lines of communication.....	279
--	-----

Statutes.

Art. 1. Regulation of railroads.....	279
4. Crime defined.....	277
5. Misdemeanor defined.....	277
6. Intentional and negligent crimes.....	277
11. Negligent crimes defined.....	277
20. Rule of decision.....	279
21. Rule for decision in absence of statute.....	279
28. Jurisdiction of civil actions.....	278
52. Drawheads of cars.....	279
72, § 22. Power of Congress over lines of communication.....	277
83. Authority of conductor.....	279
121. Railway signals.....	279
124. Liability for railroad accidents.....	279
184. Liability for negligent accidents.....	279
206. Penalty for violation of railroad law.....	279
301. Civil liability for infraction of penal law.....	277
304. Reparation for injury.....	277
305. Indemnization for injury.....	277
308. New suit for subsequent injuries.....	277
307. Judicial expenses.....	277
304. Enforcement of civil responsibility.....	277
309. Rule for decision.....	278
310. Survivorship of action.....	278
311. Right to demand support of one guilty of homicide.....	278
312. Amount of payment to be fixed by agreement.....	278
318. Persons injured by death of another.....	278
321. Damages for deformity.....	278
322. Damages for permanent inability to labor.....	278
323. Damages for loss of member.....	278
324. Reckoning loss of wages.....	278
325. Cases within rule.....	278
326. Proof necessary to maintain action.....	278
327. Proof to establish liability.....	278
330. Responsibility of master for act of servant.....	278
331. Liability of railroad companies.....	278
333. Limitation of actions.....	278
364. Effect of amnesty on civil responsibility.....	278
365. Effect of pardon on civil responsibility.....	278
366. Interruption of statute of limitations.....	278
372. Criminal liability immaterial.....	278
1059, § 8. Limitation of action for personal injuries.....	279

United States.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 2. Number of representatives.....	733
8, cl. 3. Regulation of commerce.....	821, 824
10. Obligation of contracts.....	82, 722

L. R. A.

Amend. 14, § 1. Due process of law.....	84, 385, 555
Equal protection of law.....	43, 682
Protection of rights.....	51

Ordinances.

1787, July 13. Northwestern territory.....	732
--	-----

Statutes.

1875, Feb. 18. Exemption of national bank from suit.....	719
1890, Oct. 1. Tariff.....	114

Statutes at Large.

Vol. 18, p. 816, chap. 80. Exemption of national bank from suit.....	719
26, p. 45. District of Washington.....	718
612. Tariff.....	114

Revised Statutes.

P. 49 (ed. 1899). Missouri enabling act.....	821
§ 563, subd. 8. Remedy at law in maritime cases.....	248
641. Appeals in admiralty cases.....	257
651. Certification of question to supreme court.....	398
652. Certification of question to supreme court.....	398
697. Certification of question to supreme court.....	398
917. Regulation of admiralty practice.....	253
1012. Appeals in prize cases.....	258
1910. Jurisdiction of territorial courts.....	245
1911. Jurisdiction of territorial courts.....	252
5139. National bank stock.....	449

Alabama.

Constitution.

Art. 14, § 7. Compensation for property taken for improvements.....	194
---	-----

Code.

§ 1742. Gambling contracts.....	793
1749. Sunday contracts.....	793
1756. Requisites of negotiable paper.....	236

Arkansas.

Sandels and Hill's Code.

§ 680. Judge or jury as witness.....	468
Chap. 47. Corporation law.....	536
§§ 1330-35. Business corporations.....	537
§ 1804. Executing corporate note without authority.....	537
2905. Judge or juror as witness.....	468

California.

Constitution.

Art. 11, § 18. Municipal indebtedness.....	796
--	-----

Statutes.

1883, p. 255. Fresno charter; indebtedness.....	796
---	-----

Civil Code.

§ 43. Disposing of dangerous article.....	221
1559. Contract for benefit of third person.....	863
1708. Disposing of dangerous article.....	221

Code of Civil Procedure.
§ 1903. Innocence presumed.....	414
Penal Code.
§ 470. Forgery.....	894

Colorado.

Statutes.
1887, p. 304. Distribution of water.....	829
Code, 1887.
§ 199. Special findings by jury.....	568

Connecticut.

Statutes.
1776, Nov. 7. Right to life, liberty, and happiness.....	59
1893, p. 271. Peddlers.....	56
Code, 1650.
P. 1. Guaranty of rights.....	59

Florida.

Constitution, 1885.
Art. 6, § 2. Returns of elections.....	370
8, § 6. Election of county officers.....	369
16, § 14. Term of county office.....	369

Illinois.

Constitution, 1870.
Art. 1, § 2. Right to have rights determined.....	72
4, § 22. Special laws.....	72
9, § 1. Power to tax peddlers.....	525
9. Uniformity of taxation.....	526
10. Uniformity of taxation.....	526

Statutes.

1819, March. Repealing territorial laws.....	72
P. 141, § 8. Limitation of actions.....	72
361. Limitation of actions.....	72
1861, Feb. 17. Rights of aliens.....	106
1872, Apr. 4. Limitation of actions.....	71
1879. Interest on bid in case of redemption.....	76
1887, June 16. Rights of aliens.....	106
1887, June 16. Licensing itinerant merchants.....	525
1896, June 17. Limitation of actions.....	71

Private Laws.

1867, vol. 3, p. 329. Normal school district.....	71
---	----

Gross' Statutes, 1869.

§ 7. Rights of aliens.....	106
----------------------------	-----

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 28, § 1. Common law.....	105
32, § 25. Suit to wind up insolvent corporation.....	273
39, § 1. Statute of descent.....	100
131, § 3. Repeal of repealing act.....	107
P. 232. Licensing itinerant merchants.....	525

Starr & Curtis' Annotated Statutes.

Vol. 1, p. 791. Gambling contracts.....	593
---	-----

Criminal Code.

§ 121. Corruption of water.....	111
130. Gambling contracts.....	593

Indiana.Constitution.

Art. 4, § 1. Legislative power.....	729
2. Number of legislators.....	735
3. Term of legislators.....	732
4. Enumeration of inhabitants.....	729
5. Apportionment of senators and representatives.....	730
6. Formation of senatorial or representative district.....	732
7. Qualifications of legislators.....	735
8, § 15. Lotteries.....	836
12. Municipal indebtedness.....	745
15, § 3. Term of office.....	732

31 L. R. A.

Statutes.

1889, March 9. Custody of children.....	741
1891, March 9. Custody of children.....	741
1893, March 3. Custody of children.....	741
1895, March 5. Apportionment act.....	738

Revised Statutes, 1881.

§ 615. Review of judgment.....	67
§§ 2076-2078. Lotteries.....	836
§ 5208. Tenancy from year to year.....	678

Revised Statutes, 1894.

§ 627. Review of judgment.....	67
§§ 2170-2172. Lotteries.....	836
§ 3780. Legislative authority in city of Indianapolis.....	744
3789. Appropriations.....	744
§§ 3812-3819. Board of public works of Indianapolis.....	744
§ 3821. Estimates of money requirements.....	744
3822. City contracts.....	745
3823. Liability of officer for unauthorized warrant.....	745
3825. Duty of comptroller.....	745
3830. Ordinance authorizing action of board of public works.....	744
3833. Source of payment for municipal contract.....	745
4377. Power of municipality to borrow money.....	746

Iowa.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 22. Rights of foreigners.....	183
3, § 30. Local and special laws.....	190

Statutes.

1878, § 3. Supervision of railroads.....	50
20 Gen. Assem. chap. 24, § 1. Connection of railroad tracks.....	50
21 Gen. Assem. chap. 65. Incorporation law.....	136
22 Gen. Assem. chap. 85. Right of alien to hold real estate.....	183
23 Gen. Assem. March 3, 1890. Extending municipal boundaries.....	186

Revised Statutes, 1860.

§§ 2368-2369. Right of alien to inherit land....	183
--	-----

Code.

§ 464. Power to lay out streets.....	185
470. Power to acquire land for streets.....	185
1244. Damages for street opening.....	184
1270. Taking private property for streets.....	185
1282. Transfer switches.....	50
3348. Two warrants to test city's rights over territory.....	189

McClain's Code.

§ 1763. Incorporation law.....	188
1776. Injunction against use of corporate name.....	140
2742. Limitation of actions.....	141

Kansas.Statutes.

1861, June 4. Redemption law.....	84
1893, chap. 109. Redemption from judicial sale.....	75

General Statutes, 1889.

Chap. 37, § 80. Demands against decedent's estates.....	539
§ 3886. Short form of mortgage.....	79
4349. Receiver in foreclosure case.....	79

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 254. Receiver in foreclosure case.....	79
--	----

Kentucky.Constitution.

§ 174. Uniform taxation.....	41
181. Licenses.....	42

General Statutes.

§ 4003. Tax on corporate stock.....	42
4223. Tax on foreign loan association.....	41

Civil Code of Practice.

§ 273. Practice in granting injunctions.....	39
§ 276. Granting of injunctions.....	40
§ 678. Performance by deputies.....	39

Maine.Private and Special Laws.

1887, chap. 195. Charter of Waterville.....	117
---	-----

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 3, § 34. Right of mayor to vote.....	117
60, § 2. Divorce for desertion.....	608

Maryland.Statutes.

1878, chap. 247. Coroners.....	546
1884, chap. 263. Execution of wills of person- ality.....	456

Code of Public Local Laws.

Art. 4, § 149. Coroners.....	546
------------------------------	-----

Code.

Art. 67, § 3. Limitation of action for negli- gent killing of person.....	574
75, § 36. Abatement of action for mis- nomer.....	574

Baltimore City Code, 1892.

Art. 23, §§ 1-7. Post-mortem examinations....	546
42, § 2. Death certificate.....	546

Massachusetts.Statutes.

1796, chap. 81. Highway surveyors.....	178
1796, chap. 58, § 1. Making highways.....	178
1818, chap. 121, § 1. Making highways.....	178
1871, chap. 158. Road commissioner.....	175
chap. 298, § 2. Highway taxes.....	178
1873, chap. 51, § 1. Road commissioner.....	175
1877, chap. 58. Highway taxes.....	178
1883, chap. 221. Record of designation of elec- tric poles.....	460
1887, chap. 382. Permission to erect electric poles in streets.....	459
385. Right of town to furnish light plant.....	459
1891, chap. 370, § 13. Purchase by town of light plant.....	459
1893, chap. 423, § 23. Powers of road commis- sioner.....	175
chap. 454. Purchase by town of light plant.....	459

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 24, §§ 10, 44, 47, 64. Making highways....	178
25, § 6. Injuries caused by repairing highways.....	178
§ 9, 15. Making highways.....	178

Public Statutes.

Chap. 27, § 75. Powers of road commissioner..	175
49, §§ 9, 75. Making highways.....	178
50, §§ 1, 3, 4. Making sewers.....	178
52, § 3. Making and repairing highways.....	175
13. Making highways.....	178
15. Injuries caused by repairing highways.....	178
31. Highway taxes.....	178
108, § 23. Sale of electric plant to town.....	460
109, § 3. Record of designation of loca- tion of electric poles.....	460

Michigan.Constitution.

Art. 6, § 26. Unreasonable searches.....	165
--	-----

Statutes.

1853, p. 180. Board of water commissioners....	464
1857, p. 106, subd. 60. Detroit charter; power to establish jails, etc.....	463
1861, March 15. Detroit House of Correction..	464
1873, vol. 3, p. 135. Board of water commis- sioners.....	464
1889, No. 225, § 3. Unlawful trust.....	419
31 L. R. A.

Howell's Statutes.

Chap. 344. Power of convicts.....	463
§ 6231. Divorce.....	162
Vol. 3, § 9230. Seizure of indecent books.....	108
9354 j. Unlawful trust.....	419
9365. Search warrants.....	163
9472. Recognizance from witnesses.....	166
9475. Recognizance from witnesses.....	166
9598. Disinterment of bodies.....	166
9615. Search warrants.....	166
9619. Disposition of property seized in criminal cases.....	165

Minnesota.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 2. Due process of law.....	555
7. Due process of law.....	555
8. Right to obtain practice.....	555

Statutes.

1875, chap. 98. Ejectment for land taken by eminent domain.....	554
1887, chap. 191. Libel.....	556

General Statutes, 1894.

§§ 2657-2662. Ejectment for land taken by em- inent domain.....	554
--	-----

Missouri.Constitution, 1865.

Art. 4, § 25.....	806
8, § 2.....	806

Constitution, 1874.

Art. 2, § 1. Source of political power.....	819
2. Alteration of Constitution.....	819
4, § 56. Seat of government.....	820
12, § 20. Street railway franchises.....	809
15, § 1. Amendment of Constitution.....	819
2. Manner of amending Constitution.....	819
3. Vote on question of amendment.....	819

Statutes.

1855, Nov. 23. Corporations.....	804
1857, March 2. Laclede Gaslight Co.....	862
March 3. Laclede Gaslight Co.....	862
1868, March 23. Bonds for railroad stock sub- scriptions.....	78
March 26. Laclede Gaslight Co.....	862
1889, May 18. Tax on foreign corporation.....	43

Revised Statutes, 1855.

Chap. 34, § 9. Continuation of statute.....	804
---	-----

Revised Statutes, 1889.

§ 2721. Telegraph wires in streets.....	809
5186. Contract in consideration of marriage.....	813
6159. Mechanics' liens.....	338
6161. Enforcement of mechanics' lien.....	337
6163. Service of notice.....	337
6287. Execution of judgment filed in circuit court.....	340
§§ 6705-6729. Mechanics' liens.....	338

Wagner's Statutes.

Vol. 2, p. 1032. Injunction.....	478
----------------------------------	-----

Montana.Constitution.

Art. 3 § 11. Impairing obligation of contract.....	722
15. Private roads.....	308
15, § 5. Public control of railways.....	307
7. Equal rights on railroads.....	307
9. Right of eminent domain.....	309

Statutes.

1887, § 176. Criminal practice act, aiding com- mission of offense.....	226
177. Accessory before the fact.....	226
1895, July 1. Redemption from mortgage sale.....	721

Code of Civil Procedure, 1895.

§ 601. Requirements for exercise of power of eminent domain.....	305
1235. Final judgment on appeal.....	726

Compiled Statutes, 1887.

Chap. 2, § 12, p. 502. Aiding commission of crime.....	295
§ 596. Rights of way.....	312
600, p. 116. Crossing rights of way.....	312
607, p. 218. Ascertaining damages for railway crossings.....	313
680, p. 809, div. 5. Construction of side tracks.....	307
688. Railroad companies.....	312
1495. Right to take property for public use.....	308

Nebraska.Statutes.

1893, chap. 11. Transfer switches.....	50
24. Railroad freight rates.....	53

Compiled Statutes.

Chap. 16, § 113. Transfer switches.....	50
---	----

New York.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 6. Due process of law.....	690
5, § 3. Appointment to office.....	400
9. Civil service examinations.....	400

Statutes.

1788, chap. 42. Sunday laws.....	691
1801, chap. 34. Sunday laws.....	691
1811. Insolvent laws.....	75
1847, chap. 349. Sunday laws.....	691
450. Damage for loss of life.....	719
1849, chap. 256. Damage for loss of life.....	719
1869. Atlantic avenue in new lots.....	386
1870, chap. 78. Damage for loss of life.....	719
1881, chap. 202. Deception in sale of dairy products.....	691
1583, chap. 354. Civil service.....	400
358. Sunday laws.....	691
1884, chap. 272. Manufacture of cigars in tenements.....	691
1885, chap. 183. Regulation of sale of dairy products.....	691
1887, chap. 691. Premium for purchasing goods.....	691
1892, chap. 401, § 31. Sales of intoxicating liquor.....	512
1894, chap. 681. Civil service.....	400
1895, chap. 823. Barbering on Sunday.....	690

Greenleaf's Laws.

Vol. 2, p. 89. Sunday laws.....	691
---------------------------------	-----

Andrew's Laws.

P. 467. Sunday laws.....	691
--------------------------	-----

Revised Laws.

Vol. 1, p. 192. Sunday laws.....	691
----------------------------------	-----

Revised Statutes.

Vol. 2, p. 675, § 70. Sunday laws.....	691
--	-----

Penal Code.

§ 263. Sunday labor.....	694
267. Sunday sales.....	694

North Dakota.Compiled Statutes.

§ 5099. Judgment in replevin.....	251
-----------------------------------	-----

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 416. Supersedeas on appeal.....	250
422. Cost bond.....	252

Ohio.Constitution.

Art. 2, § 1. Legislative power.....	663
13, § 6. Organization of cities.....	663

Statutes.

1890, Apr. 2 (Laws, vol. 87, p. 149). Liability of railroad companies for defective appliances.....	651
1891, March 5 (88 Laws, 77). City commissioner of Akron.....	667

1893, Apr. 20. Akron charter.....	661
Vol. 66, p. 200. Board of health.....	663

Revised Statutes.

§ 1622, ¶ 24. Authority to establish board of health.....	663
7305. Review of acquittal in criminal case.....	661
7306. Review of acquittal in criminal case.....	661
7307. Review of acquittal in criminal case.....	661
7308. Review of acquittal in criminal case.....	661

Oregon.Constitution.

Art. 2, § 2. Qualification of electors.....	353
6, § 6. County officers.....	353
7. County officers.....	353
8. Qualification for county office.....	353
7, § 17. State law officers.....	481
8, § 8. Continuing laws in force.....	354

Statutes.

1855, p. 453. Superintendent of schools.....	354
1891, p. 188. Duty of attorney general.....	481

Special Laws.

1893, p. 62. Making women eligible to educational offices.....	354
--	-----

Hill's Code.

§ 785, subd. 5. Sales of personal property to be in writing.....	509
2586. Term of office.....	351
2587. Qualification of officer.....	351

Pennsylvania.Statutes.

1889. Receiving of deposits by insolvent bankers.....	126
---	-----

Rhode Island.Public Statutes.

Chap. 172, § 6. Rights of aliens.....	159
---------------------------------------	-----

South Carolina.Constitution, 1868.

Art. 1, § 38. Excessive fines.....	678
------------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1895, Jan. 2. Dispensary act.....	683
-----------------------------------	-----

South Dakota.Constitution.

Art. 17, § 7. Power of corporation to hold real estate.....	502
---	-----

Compiled Statutes.

§ 572. Power of county to sue.....	492
2612. Duty to maintain poor person.....	492
2917. Power of corporation to deal in stock.....	500
2928. Liability of directors for impairing capital of corporation.....	500
4654. Power of debtor to prefer creditors.....	503
4660. Effect of failure of preference in general assignment.....	507
4661. When corporation is insolvent.....	503

Tennessee.Constitution, 1870.

Art. 4, § 1. Elective franchise.....	838
--------------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1885, Extra Sess. chap. 16. Investment of school funds.....	845
1890, Extra Sess. chap. 26, p. 67. Elective franchise.....	838
1891, March 30, chap. 222. Elective franchise.....	838
1891, Extra Sess. chap. 23. Elective franchise.....	838

Milliken & Vertrees' Code.

§ 712. County trustee's bond.....	845
716. County trustee's oath.....	845
1167. School funds.....	845
1712. Forfeiture of corporate franchises.....	711

3247. Allotment of dower	841
4168. Dissolution of corporation by nonuse.	599
5037. Creditor's bill	596
5038. Receiver in creditor's suit	599
Texas.
Constitution.
Art. 10, § 4. Rolling stock, personal property	213
Statutes.
1892, p. 31, § 35. Certification of question to supreme court	304
Revised Statutes.
Art. 2287. Delivery of possession of property levied on	213
Virginia.
Constitution.
Art. 4, § 2, cl. 1. Uniform taxation	381
5, § 15. Titles of acts	824
10, § 1. Uniform taxation	385
Statutes.
1871. Funding act	76
1882. Cash payment of taxes	76
1888, March 1. Charter of Alexandria	384
1889-90, p. 200. Taxation	379
217, § 32. Peddler's license	380
33. License tax	381
1896, Feb. 29. Betting	824
March 5. Trial by justice of peace	824
Code.
§ 3956. Certainty of charge in warrant	824
4106. Trial by justice of peace	824
4107. Appeal from conviction by justice	827
Hening's Statutes.
Vol. 9, pp. 262, 420. County commissioners	133
10, pp. 114, 351. County commissioners	133
11, p. 366. County commissioners	136
Washington.
Constitution.
Art. 11, § 5. Accountability of public officers	852
Hill's Annotated Code.
Vol. 1, § 211. Duty of county treasurer	852
1678. Liability of vessel for personal injuries	718
2, § 138. Action for wrongful death	718
149. Action for injury to child	718
148. Abatement of action for personal injuries	718
West Virginia.
Constitution.
Art. 3, § 10. Due process of law	132
8, § 24. County court commissioners	138
31 L. R. A.
Statutes.
1872-73, p. 175, chap. 77. Hogs running at large	131
Code, 1891.
PP. 41, 42. County court commissioners	133
P. 244. County court commissioners	133
568, chap. 60, § 3a. Hogs running at large	131
Wisconsin.
Constitution.
Art. 3, § 2. Disqualification of convict to vote	520
6. Effect of bet on right to vote	520
4, § 1. Legislative power	113
24. Legislature shall not grant divorce	518
Statutes.
1839, p. 140. Power to grant divorce	518
1889, chap. 152, § 143. Charter of superior assessments for street improvements	214
375, § 1. Insulation of electric wires	587
1891, chap. 124, § 112. Directions for assessments	217
117. Charter of superior; assessments for street improvements	214
118. Payments out of general fund	217
120. Levy of city taxes	217
125. Payments out of general fund	217
126. Appeal exclusive remedy	219
127. Assessment to be complete before contract let	219
131. Improvement bonds	218
132. Improvement bonds	218
136. Special assessments for improvements	218
137. Action to avoid special assessment	218
Chap. 195. Insurance policies	112
Revised Statutes.
§ 12, subd. 4. Effect of bet on right to vote	520
1943. Valued insurance policies	115
1947. Insurance agencies	115
2204. Implied covenants	697
2365. Effect of conviction on marriage	517
2918, subs. 7. Costs	219
2921. Costs	219
4219. Time for bringing action	115
4222. Time for bringing action	115
4720. Taking case to supreme court on exceptions	515
4995. Effect of conviction of office holder	520

LAWYERS' REPORTS,

ANNOTATED.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

I. N. PAYTON, Appt.,
v.
Lewis] McQUOWN, Admr., etc., of W. A.
Botts, Deceased.
(.....Ky.....)

1. There is no abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside a submission which is claimed to have been made under the mistaken belief that no answer had been filed, where, although the answer was not filed on the day it was due, it had been on file for several months, which fact by the exercise of ordinary diligence could have been discovered by counsel before entering the order of submission.

2. No injunction against a default judgment is justified by the facts that defendant submitted the facts constituting his defense to an attorney, with the request to prepare an answer, and then went to his home in another county relying on the attorney's promise to do so, but that for some reason unknown to defendant the answer was not filed.

3. The power given by statute to a clerk of court to issue injunction orders cannot be exercised by his deputy under a statute providing that any duty enjoined upon a ministerial officer and any act permitted to be done by him may be performed by his lawful deputy.

(June 21, 1895.)

NOTE.—Negligence as a cause for, and as a bar to, injunctions against judgments.

I. As a cause for injunctions against judgments.

II. As a bar to injunctions against judgments.

- a. In attending court.
- b. In employing an attorney.
- c. Of attorney.
- d. In ascertaining a defense.
- e. In regard to evidence.
- f. In asserting a defense.
- g. Delay in seeking.

I. As a cause for injunctions against judgments.

The case of PAYTON v. McQUOWN holds that it is not a cause for an injunction against a common-law judgment, that the complainant had requested an attorney to whom he had submitted the facts constituting his defense, to prepare an answer for him; that he had relied upon this attorney's promise to do so, and, supposing the answer would be filed and the case continued, paid no more attention to the case; and that the attorney had failed to file an answer,—as the negligence of the attorney is the negligence of the complainant. This is in accord with the general doctrine.

An injunction will not be granted against a judgment on the ground that the negligence of a party, attorney, or agent prevented a defense of the action at law.

As, where counsel advised that defense would not be necessary. Bateman v. Willoe, 1 Sch. & Lef. 301; Fentress v. Robins, N. C. Term Rep. 177, 7 Am. Dec. 704.

Or where counsel did not understand that he was employed, and did not plead. Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79.

Or where no showing is made that complainant relied on the attorney. Bardonski v. Bardonski, 144 Ill. 284.

Or where the attorney turned the case over to another attorney who was ignorant of the defense. Chester v. Apperson, 4 Helsk. 639.

Or where the attorney did not examine the writ, and was mistaken as to the court, and made no defense. Ayres v. Morehead, 77 Va. 586.

31 L. R. A.

Or on the ground that he made no defense, where the defense would not have been available. Ballow v. Wichita County, 74 Tex. 339.

Or where the attorney was grossly negligent, but there was no charge of fraud. Hiles v. Mosher, 44 Wis. 601; Wynn v. Wilson, Hempst. 696.

Or because the attorney failed to plead in a case where the judgment was not shown to be unjust. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Meyer, 30 Neb. 185.

And an injunction will not be granted on the ground of negligence of the attorney, where the defense was not made known to the attorney. Ballow v. Wichita County, supra.

Or where he neglected to defend, even though he is insolvent. Rogers v. Parker, 1 Hughes, C. C. 148.

And it was denied on account of negligence in defending, as the remedy is by writ of error coram nobis. Shepard v. Akers, 8 Tenn. Ch. 215.

Or by action against counsel. Ibid.; Ames v. Snider, 55 Ill. 496; Barhorst v. Armstrong, 42 Fed. Rep. 2.

Or on the ground that other counsel could have been employed. Crim v. Handley, 94 U. S. 652, 24 L. ed. 216.

The failure of a husband to defend for a wife as instructed will not authorize an injunction where there is no fraud. Neville v. Pope, 95 N. C. 346.

Neither will the negligence of a county clerk to disclose service of process against a county. Knox County v. Harshman, 133 U. S. 152, 33 L. ed. 593.

Neither will the negligence of a city attorney in not ascertaining the cause of action against a city. Darling v. Baltimore, 51 Md. 1.

Neither will negligence of the attorney in making a defense and the absence of complainant. Odell v. Mundy, 59 Ga. 641.

The absence of complainant and his engagements in business are not cause for enjoining a judgment. Cammann v. Traphagan, 1 N. J. Eq. 28.

And that attendance on court was prevented by press of public business will not justify an injunction, where no diligence is shown. Smith v. Lowry, 1 Johns. Ch. 320.

And absence from court a whole term by defendant in a civil case, at the instance of attorney for APPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Barren County in favor of defendant in a proceeding brought to enjoin the enforcement of an execution upon a judgment which had been entered against complainant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. M. Payton for appellant.

Mr. Lewis McQuown, appellee, in propria persona:

A new trial ought not to be awarded on account of the neglect of the agent or attorney of the party applying for it; for such neglect is equivalent to the neglect of the party himself, and he may have a remedy over against his agent or attorney.

Patterson v. Matthews, 3 Bibb, 80.

The negligence or improper conduct of an attorney employed to defend a suit at law, or his failure or neglect to defend the action, will not justify an injunction against the judgment.

1 High, Inj. 3d ed. § 210.

Where fraud is relied on as the foundation for an injunction, the allegations must be of specific and definite acts.

1 High, Inj. 3d ed. § 21.

A deputy clerk has no power to make such an order. The power to be exercised is quasi judicial and cannot be delegated.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 461; Com. v. Jones, 10 Bush, 749.

The power is delegated alone to the clerk. The confidence is reposed alone in him, and the mere appointment, by him, of a deputy does not clothe such person with this power.

Hartman v. Hartman, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 368.

It does not appear from the petition that the judge of the court was absent from the county when the injunction was granted.

Jacobs v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 10 Bush, 263.

Eastin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This equitable action was brought by appellant in the Barren circuit court against appellee and the sheriff of Hart county, Ky., for the purpose of enjoining the levy and collection of an execution then in the hands of said sheriff, and which had been issued on a common-law judgment rendered by the said Barren circuit court in favor of appellee against appellant. It is, in substance, alleged by appellant in his petition that he was employed by one Mary E. Burks, administratrix of John Burks, deceased, to aid her in collecting the assets and paying the debts of the estate of intestate, and that, while so engaged, he accepted an order given on himself by the said administratrix to appellee, with the understanding that he was to pay it out of funds that he might collect for the estate of said intestate, and not other-plaintiff, who was employed by the defendant in a criminal case, and who advised him to remain absent, is not sufficient ground to enjoin execution of the judgment rendered in the civil suit; neither is the fact that complainant had employed counsel, and received a message from him that he was sick and all his cases were to be continued. Sasser v. Olliff, 91 Ga. 84.

And reliance on a codefendant's promises to defend will not authorize an injunction, where such codefendant was an attorney, but no retainer was paid, and he made a defense for both, and nearly two years afterwards such suit was dismissed as to the attorney, and judgment taken against the complainant. Bardonski v. Bardonski, 144 Ill. 284.

Employing an attorney and simply asking him to look after all business, without referring to any particular case, will not entitle to an injunction against a judgment where such attorney failed to defend. Watts v. Gayle, 20 Ala. 817.

But in Mayo v. Bentley, 4 Call (Va.) 528, it was held that the negligence of the clerk of court in failing to set aside a judgment as directed would authorize an injunction against the same.

II. As a bar to injunctions against judgments. a. In attending court.

Complainant's absence from court through negligence will prevent an injunction against the judgment.

As to absence caused by accident or mistake, see note on Injunctions against judgments obtained by fraud, accident, mistake, surprise, and duress, to Merriman v. Walton (Cal.) 30 L. R. A. 786.

So, not appearing at the return term, or at the next term at which judgment was taken in the fall of 1861, when six months had elapsed from time of service and no counsel was employed, was such negligence as will prevent an injunction, although there was some excitement in the country on account of the war. George v. Tutt, 36 Mo. 141.

And negligence of complainant in not attending 31 L. R. A.

the trial to testify or cross-examine the witnesses will prevent him from obtaining an injunction against the judgment where he had the opportunity to defend. Ames v. Snider, 55 Ill. 498.

And absence from the state at the time of trial, when complainant knew that he had been sued, and made no preparation for trial, and gave no personal attention to the case, will prevent an injunction. Burnley v. Rice, 21 Tex. 171.

Negligence of defendants in failing to attend court, and in simply telegraphing that they will be unable to procure the attendance of their witnesses, and will not be there, will prevent an injunction against the judgment, or an execution. Roots v. Cohen (Miss.) 12 So. 593.

And negligence in failing to make preparations for trial will prevent an injunction, where complainant was unable to be present in court. McCullum v. Prewitt, 37 Ala. 573, 1 Ala. Sel. Cas. 498.

So, failure to ascertain when a case stands for trial is such negligence that a judgment rendered thereon will not be enjoined. Combs v. Choven, 89 Ga. 779.

And forgetfulness of a party as to a suit pending will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Cullum v. Casey, 1 Ala. 351.

And negligence in not attending court will prevent an injunction against the judgment, although the judge had said at the prior term that he would not try that cause. White v. Cahal, 2 Swan, 550.

A judgment in ejectment in which no defense was made, was not enjoined where complainant presumed that the suit was abandoned, and did not attend court because she did not hear anything from her attorney, who had told her to go home and rest contented, although she afterwards sent the copy of the summons served on her to him and thought that he would inform her if her presence was needed. Hoey v. Jackson, 31 Fla. 541.

Where a suit was pending and defendants were already in default when a discharge in bankruptcy was obtained by the defendant and this was not set wise, and that the execution sought to be enjoined was issued on a judgment rendered in an action at law brought by appellee against him on this accepted order. It is further alleged that he had not, at the time said suit was brought, nor at any time after the acceptance of the order, any money or assets belonging to the estate of said Burks in his hands, with which to pay said order or any part thereof; that upon being served with process in the action he went to Glasgow, and laid these facts, together with the fact that he was in no way individually liable on said claim, before a practicing attorney of that bar, whom he requested to prepare and file an answer for him in the action, and who promised and agreed to do so; that, supposing that this would be done, and supposing that the action would thereupon stand continued for that term, he then returned to his home in Hart county, Ky., but that, for some reason unknown to him, the said attorney failed to file the answer or make defense for him, and the appellee wrongfully and fraudulently took the judgment against him on which the execution sought to be enjoined was issued. The petition further charges that Lewis McQuown, who, as administrator of W. H. Botts, deceased, is appellee herein, and who recovered said judgment against appellant, is also the attorney for the estate of said John Burks, deceased, and, as such, has directed parties indebted to said estate not to pay their indebtedness to appellant, but to pay to another; and that, in consequence thereof, appellant will never be able to collect anything more belonging to said estate, or to pay the demand of appellee; and concluded with the usual averments that, unless an injunction be issued, his individual property will be levied on and sold, and he will be subjected to great, irreparable loss and injury. On the day on which this petition was filed, to wit, August 24, 1893, and without notice to appellee, an order of injunction was entered, and an injunction as prayed for was issued, restraining the sheriff from levying said execution on the property of appellant, and from taking any further steps thereunder, until the further order of the court, which was in due time executed upon said sheriff. At the succeeding term of the court—not, however, on the third day of the term, which commenced on the third Monday in November, but on the 18th day of December, 1893—appellee filed an answer controverting all the allegations of the petition, and pleading affirmatively the facts attending the giving of the order on appellant by Mr. Burks, and its acceptance by appellant. That order, with the acceptance thereon, is made a part of the answer, and shows on its face that it was drawn on appellant and accepted by him individup as a defense, an injunction was refused against the judgment, although the defendants being in default supposed the judgment had been entered before the discharge as they could have compelled the plaintiff to take his judgment in due course, and have no right to complain of the result of their own negligence. Bellamy v. Woodson, 4 Ga. 173, 48 Am. Dec. 221. But see next case.

But in Carrington v. Holabird, 17 Conn. 580, where a party supposed a judgment was taken against him, and failed to make any defense, but obtained his discharge in bankruptcy thereafter, when in fact a judgment was obtained out of the usual course at the ensuing term after discharge in bankruptcy, an injunction was granted.

And the failure of complainant or his counsel to be present at the trial at law, solely because a witness was absent, is not such negligence as will preclude an injunction against the judgment, where in the equity case the defendants do not object to the jurisdiction, and admit the equity of complainant. Vanlew v. Bohannon, 4 Rand. (Va.) 587.

As to absence from court, see Cammann v. Traphagan, Smith v. Lowry, and Sasser v. Olliff, supra, I.; and Cabell v. Roberts, infra, II., b.

As to absence from court, see also note on Injunctions against judgments obtained by fraud, accident, mistake, surprise, and duress, to Merriman v. Walton (Cal.), 30 L. R. A. 736.

b. In employing an attorney.

The inexcusable negligence of complainant in employing an attorney to attend to the case will prevent an injunction against the judgment.

So, negligence in not employing counsel will prevent an injunction against a judgment. Landrum v. Farmer, 7 Bush, 46; Waldrom v. Waldrom, 76 Ala. 286; Kelleher v. Boden, 55 Mich. 296; Dwight v. Richards, 4 La. Ann. 240; Duncan v. Gibson, 45 Mo. 352; Watts v. Gayle, 20 Ala. 817.

Where a member of a partnership asked attorneys to defend a case, but gave no facts or names of witnesses to establish the defense, and such partner, died, and the other suffered judgment by default, there was such negligence as prevents an injunction. Walker v. Kretsinger, 48 Ill. 502.

And writing to a lawyer to defend, where the party is himself absent from court, will not excuse negligence in not making a defense. Cabell v. Roberts, 6 Rand. (Va.) 580.

So, negligence of a defendant in preparing for his trial, or in employing counsel, or in summoning witnesses, will prevent an injunction, although he may have had a good excuse for not being present himself at the time of the judgment. McColum v. Prewitt, 37 Ala. 573, 1 Ala. Sel. Cas. 498.

The negligence of a messenger from defendant in not delivering a copy of the summons until the time for answer expired, to an attorney for the defendant with instructions to appear and plead payment, where default was taken a year afterward, will prevent relief by injunction against a judgment. Sullivan v. Shell, 36 S. C. 578.

And an injunction was not granted against a decree where defendant was negligent, and merely wrote to a lawyer to defend him, without giving any information, and the deposition of the lawyer was not taken, and the letter was not produced. Hill v. Bowyer, 18 Gratt. 364.

The negligence of defendant in not furnishing his attorney with full information of a suit that he believed was pending, where the attorney could not find the case, and the clerk informed him that no such case was pending, and the complainant had information between terms of the court sufficient to cause a full investigation, will prevent an injunction against the same, although he was prevented from attending court by the danger incidental to reorganizing courts after the war. Prater v. Robinson, 11 Helak. 391.

And negligence of complainant in examining the summons and complaint, and his failure to show the same to his attorney, will prevent an injunction against the judgment, where there is no charge of fraud on the part of the prevailing party. Slappey v. Hodge Bros., 99 Ala. 300.

ually, and without qualification as to the manner in which or the fund from which it was to be paid. No motion was made to dissolve the injunction; no reply was filed or offered to be filed to this answer; no proof was taken by either party; but, at the next term of the court, to wit, on March 12, 1894, it appears, singularly enough, in view of the state of the record, that the action was submitted for judgment, on motion of appellant. On the next day, March 13, 1894, appellant moved to set aside the order of submission, and in support of that motion filed the separate affidavits of the two attorneys who were representing him in the case. On the 17th day of March the court below overruled this motion to set aside the submission, dismissed appellant's petition, and dissolved the injunction, with damages at the rate of 10 per cent on the amount of the execution enjoined and costs, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The principal question to be considered is whether or not the motion to set aside the order of submission was properly overruled. The statements of the affidavits of counsel, filed in support of this motion, practically amount to but little more than the statement of each of these gentlemen that he did not know that an answer had been filed at the time the order of submission was entered. It is true that one of these affiants says "that if he was present in court on the day said answer was offered and filed, that he did not hear said motion, and said answer was not in the papers of said suit when the November term ended;" but he does not say how he knows this, or that he ever inquired for or looked at the papers of the case to see whether or not an answer had been filed. The other affiant says that he was detained from court by sickness during several days of the November term, but that, "in a few days after said last term," he looked through the papers in the suit, and that there was then no answer among them. This must have been in December, and he does not pretend ever to have made any further investigation, though nothing further was done in the case until the 12th day of March following, when the case was submitted for judgment, either on his motion or the motion of his partner. Both affiants lay much stress on the fact that appellee's answer was due on the third day of the November term, and that no order was made extending the time for filing same. But it is not pretended that any agreement was made that none should be filed at a later

For negligence in employing an attorney, see George v. Tutt, supra, II. a.

For cases in regard to employment of attorney, see note on Injunctions against judgments obtained by fraud, accident, mistake, surprise, and duress, to Merriman v. Walton (Cal.) 80 L. R. A. 786.

c. Of attorney.

The negligence of an attorney is considered the negligence of his client, and where the defense was not made on account of the negligence of the attorney for complainant, and a good excuse is not shown, the complainant will not be entitled to an injunction against the judgment.

That a judgment is against good conscience will not authorize an injunction, where, through fault of complainant or his attorney, defense was not interposed in proper time. Shricker v. Field, 9 Iowa, 366.

So, where an attorney who was irresponsible had neglected and failed to make a defense that could have been made at law, proceedings on the judgment were not enjoined. Kern v. Strausberger, 71 Ill. 413.

And an injunction was not granted against a judgment against W. as a member of the firm of B. & Co. where his lawyer made no defense, and was negligent in not ascertaining what members of the firm were parties defendant, though he had been notified that such a suit was pending, and the client W. had a good defense, and lived in the county, where it did not appear that he had furnished his counsel with a copy of the summons, and he would have had to verify his plea. Wallace v. Richmond, 26 Gratt. 67.

And the negligence of complainant's counsel in filing a frivolous demurrer, and absenting himself from trial, will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Borland v. Thornton, 12 Cal. 440.

So, negligence of complainant's attorney in not prosecuting a suit of replevin will prevent an injunction against the judgment, where complainant was himself guilty of negligence, and did not attend court or have any witness there, and there was no fraud on the part of the opposite party. Albro v. Dayton, 28 Ill. 325.

11 L. R. A.

And negligence, in not obtaining a continuance, by an attorney who was sick, will prevent an injunction. Pharr v. Reynolds, 8 Ala. 521.

Or negligence in not informing his client that he could not attend to the case. Clark v. Ewing, 93 Ill. 572; Griffith v. Thompson, 4 Gratt. 147.

Where complainant's counsel was furnished with a copy of the writ, but took no trouble to inquire in what court the suit was brought, and did not read the writ, but carelessly placed it with papers belonging to another court, and never thought of it until after judgment, an injunction was not granted. Ayres v. Morehead, 77 Va. 568.

And where complainant's attorney by oversight "failed to enter an appearance," and for more than a year after judgment had been rendered the complainant and his attorney neglected to make any inquiry about the action, an injunction was refused. Amherst College v. Allen (Mass.) 42 N. E. 570.

Negligence in not procuring a bill of exceptions, or in employing an attorney who could be relied upon, where complainant was unavoidably detained from court, will prevent an injunction against proceedings on a judgment. Ballance v. Loomiss, 22 Ill. 82.

So, the negligence of an attorney in not perfecting the record for the appellate court, or in not taking an appeal in the proper time or manner, will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Galbraith v. Barnard, 21 Or. 67; Ballance v. Loomiss, supra; Augusta Mut. L. Assn. v. McAndrew, 68 Ga. 490; Miller v. Berneckes, 48 Mo. 194; Smith v. Fouché, 55 Ga. 120; Holman v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex.) 30 S. W. 1120; Ruppertsberger v. Clark, 53 Md. 402; Musgrove v. Chambers, 12 Tex. 32; Bowman v. Field, 11 Mo. App. 594; Watt v. Cobb, 22 Ala. 530; Robbins v. Mount, 8 Ga. 74; Palmer v. Gardiner, 77 Ill. 143; Dibble v. Truluck, 12 Fla. 185. See also note to Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Wells (Ark.) 30 L. R. A. 560, Injunctions against judgments for matters arising subsequent to their rendition.

In Morgan's Appeal, 110 Pa. 271, it was said that negligence in appealing cannot be cured by enjoining the judgment.

Or negligence in not asserting the remedy of mo-day in the term, nor does it appear that appellant or his counsel were in any way led to believe that none would be filed; but, on the contrary, it does appear that this answer was filed, without objection, in open court, on the 13th day of December, at that same term of court. One of appellant's counsel says in his affidavit that he is informed that his client is at that time at home with a sick wife, and this may account in some measure for the fact that, although counsel discovered on March 13 that the answer had been filed, and the motion to set aside the order of submission was not considered until March 17, yet no reply controverting the allegations of the answer was tendered or filed, and no proof offered to sustain the averments of the petition. But, however this may be, we are unable to find anything in either of these affidavits sufficient to explain or overcome the fact that this answer was allowed to remain in the record uncontroverted from December 13, 1893, or to rebut the conclusion that, by the exercise of ordinary diligence, counsel could and would have discovered this fact before they voluntarily entered the order of submission on March 12, 1894. Upon these considerations alone, it seems to us that the chancellor might, as he did, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, have refused to set aside the order of submission.

But, in support of the action of the court below in overruling this motion and dismissing the petition, another very potent consideration is found in the fact that the grounds, as set forth in the petition on which this injunction was asked, are insufficient to justify it. We are aware that this could, and perhaps should, properly have been taken advantage of by a motion to dissolve the injunction, and that no such motion was made; but still it is not to be entirely excluded on this motion, made after the entire case had been submitted for judgment. This injunction was asked, as above stated, against a common-law judgment, on the ground that appellant had requested an attorney, to whom he had submitted the facts constituting his defense, to prepare an answer for him; that he had relied upon this attorney's promise to do so, and had gone to his home in another county, supposing that his answer would be filed, and the case be continued, but that, for some reason unknown to him, the attorney had failed to file the answer. This, in our opinion, is wholly insufficient to entitle appellant to relief by injunction against a judgment by default rendered against him under tion for a new trial. French v. Garner, 7 Port. (Ala.) 549; Phelps v. Peabody, 7 Cal. 50.

Or in not asserting the remedy of motion to set aside the judgment. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henderson, 88 Tex. 70; Smith v. Powell, 50 Ill. 21.

Or in not prosecuting a writ of error. Rogers v. Kingsbury, 22 Ga. 80.

d. In ascertaining a defense.

The negligence of complainant or his attorney in failing to use reasonable diligence to ascertain his defense will prevent an injunction against the judgment.

So, negligence in ascertaining defense will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Governor v. Barrow, 13 Ala. 540; Goldsmith v. Stetson, 39 Ala. 183; Stetson v. Goldsmith, 31 Ala. 649; Wixom v. Davis, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 15; Garrett v. Lynch, 45 Ala. 204; Williams v. Lockwood, Clarke, Ch. 172; Headley v. Bell, 84 Ala. 346; Taliaferro v. Branch Bank, 23 Ala. 755; Skinner v. Deming, 2 Ind. 558, 54 Am. Dec. 463; Perrine v. Carlisle, 19 Ala. 686; Lee v. Insurance Bank, 2 Ala. 21; Hinrichsen v. Van Winkle, 27 Ill. 334; Harrison v. Crumb, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 991; Smith v. Powell, 50 Ill. 21; Dilly v. Barnard, 8 Gill & J. 170; Cheyney v. Wright, 7 Phila. 431; Stinnett v. Branch Bank, 9 Ala. 120.

And negligence in not discovering mistakes in the statement of a partnership account, which showed the judgment to be unjust, where complainant had free access to the books, will prevent an injunction against proceedings on a judgment, as such a case presents gross negligence. Palmer v. Bethard, 66 Ill. 529.

That the complainant did not have time to examine books when they were produced at the trial of the action at law will not entitle to an injunction, as he should have applied to the court for further time for this purpose, which would doubtless have been granted if the facts and circumstances had warranted it. Hines v. Beers, 76 Ga. 9.

A party who neglects to examine the note upon which he is sued, and to avail himself of all proper credits when he had the opportunity to do so, cannot have the judgment enjoined. Jarboe v. Kepler, 4 Ind. 177.

31 L. R. A.

So, an injunction will not be granted against a judgment, where the complainant has been guilty of negligence in not knowing on what note he had been sued, and does not tell what pleas he made. Head v. Pitzer, 1 Mo. 548.

And the failure to use diligence to ascertain the consideration of the note sued upon will prevent an injunction against proceedings on a judgment, where there is no reason or excuse given for not ascertaining the same in time. Miller v. Gaskins, Smedes & M. Ch. 524.

And a surety will not be entitled to an injunction against a judgment on a note, where one of the names has been erased with a pen, and he claims that he would not have signed the note without such other party on it, and that he was ignorant of the erasure, although the note was presented at the trial, as his negligence will bar an injunction. Shelmire v. Thompson, 2 Blackf. 270.

Gross negligence in not searching the records to ascertain a defense will prevent equitable relief. Vaughn v. Johnson, 9 N. J. Eq. 173.

A defendant who claimed that he was not the party named in the process, but swore to an affidavit of defense without knowing what it contained, was guilty of negligence and is not entitled to an injunction. Burke v. Gibson, 6 Kulp, 310.

Where complainant was guilty of negligence and made no effort to prepare for the trial, an injunction will not be granted. Kriechbaum v. Bridges, 1 Iowa, 14.

And a judgment will not be enjoined on the ground of ignorance of a defense, where the same was mixed with negligence. Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. v. Erb, 16 W. N. C. 113.

And the failure of a defendant to remember a fact which would have been a complete defense on a motion for summary judgment will not be ground for enjoining the judgment, as this is not fraud of the opposite party or such mistake as will be relieved against. Bailey v. Anderson, 6 Humph. 149.

Delay in filing a bill of interpleader setting up that, owing to the absence of one of the defendants, who left for a foreign country after service of process, it was not discovered until after judgment that the plaintiff at law was not the party entitled to the judgment, is fatal to an application for an such circumstances. Aside from the personal negligence thus confessed, on part of appellant himself, in going off to another county, and never looking after his case, in which, as we understand, the default judgment was not rendered till the second term after process was served, is the fact that the gross and unexplained negligence which he thus charges upon his attorney, instead of excusing, is, under the law, to be treated as his own negligence. This doctrine was laid down in one of the early decisions of this court, and, so far as we are aware, has not been materially modified or departed from. In Patterson v. Matthews, 3 Bibb, 80, this court said: "It is a settled rule that a new trial ought not to be awarded on account of the neglect of the agent or attorney of the party applying for it; for such neglect is equivalent to the neglect of the party himself, and he may have a remedy over against his agent or attorney." And, in considering this exact question, Mr. High lays down the rule in this language, to wit: "The negligence or improper conduct of an attorney employed to defend a suit at law, or his failure or neglect to defend the action, will not justify an injunction against the judgment." High, Inj. 3d ed. § 210. This being the law, the question of the validity or invalidity of the defense which might have been made to the action becomes wholly immaterial, and it is therefore unnecessary to consider the question how far appellant could have availed himself of the defense that it was understood that he was not to be individually bound on this accepted order, but was only to pay it out of funds collected for John Burks' estate, when, by the terms of the writing itself, the obligation was personal and unqualified. No matter what his defense may have been, having failed, either by his personal negligence or that of his attorney, to answer or make defense, he was not entitled to the relief sought in this action; and, although no motion was made to dissolve the injunction on this ground, yet it was a proper matter to be considered by the court below in disposing of the case as it did.

There is still another question, pertaining more directly to the validity of this order of injunction, and which might properly have been raised on a motion to dissolve, but which might also properly have been considered by the court on the hearing; and that is the fact that this injunction was granted by the deputy clerk of the Barren injunction. Larabrie v. Brown, 1 DeG. & J. 204, 26 L. J. Ch. 416.

In Center Twp. v. Marion County Comrs. 110 Ind. 580, it was said that equity will not relieve a party from a judgment at law for failure to interpose a defense, or for mistakes that could have been discovered by the use of ordinary diligence.

But in Wilday v. McConnell, 63 Ill. 278, where the claim in judgment had been paid, and the receipt had been forgotten at the time the default was entered, and when the motion was made to set it aside its existence had not occurred to the defendant, and the evidence was conclusive that he was not apprised of the receipt until after final judgment, an injunction was granted, as the party could not be said to be guilty of negligence.

e. In regard to evidence.

Diligence is required by attorneys and their clients in regard to evidence; and so negligence in not procuring evidence or witnesses at the trial will prevent an injunction against the judgment.

The fact that complainant was unable to find any witness by whom a defense could be proved does not show such diligence as will entitle to an injunction. Wells v. Wall, 1 Or. 295.

And negligence in obtaining the presence of witnesses or advising counsel will prevent an injunction against a judgment,—especially where other preparations are not made for the trial. Hoopes v. Kuhn, 4 Call (Va.) 274; Robb v. Halsey, 11 Smedes & M. 140; Mook v. Cundiff, 6 Port. (Ala.) 24.

So, negligence in not obtaining evidence that might have been had will prevent an injunction against proceedings on a judgment. Fisher v. Greene, 5 Colo. 541; Vaughn v. Johnson, 9 N. J. Eq. 173; Kersey v. Rash, 3 Del. Ch. 321.

And negligence in failing to obtain witnesses, and in not making the defense that the claims had been satisfied and merged before judgment, will bar complainant from enjoining the judgment. State Bank v. Stanton, 7 Ill. 352.

On a judgment recovered for such sum as referees should say was due, the negligent failure of the defendant to produce vouchers and credits before them prevents him from thereafter obtaining an injunction against the judgment entered upon the report. Webster v. Hardisty, 28 Md. 562.

And negligence in not obtaining a continuance in order to procure evidence will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Ratliff v. Stretch, 130 Ind. 282; Naylor v. Phillips, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 58; Canada v. Barksdale, 84 Va. 742.

The negligence of complainant in not resisting the use of incompetent evidence will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Galena & S. W. R. Co. v. Ennor, 116 Ill. 55.

And the failure to prove that the plaintiff is not the owner of a judgment filed against an estate, and that the claim is unfounded, will prevent enjoining the same, where such fact could have been proved if the complainant had not been negligent, and no fraud or accident is shown. Stilwell v. Carpenter, 59 N. Y. 414, Reversing 1 Thomp. & C. 615.

And negligence in preparing for trial will prevent enjoining a judgment, although money had been sent to complainant's attorney to take depositions, where the money was not received, and the attorneys, believing the case to be abandoned, made no preparation, and the case was tried in complainant's absence, and he resided only 150 miles from court. Meliendy v. Austin, 69 Ill. 15.

The failure of complainant to consult with his witnesses and ascertain what facts could be proved is gross negligence, and will prevent an injunction against proceedings on the judgment. Tallman v. Becker, 85 Ill. 183.

As to negligence in regard to evidence, see Ames v. Snider, supra, II. a; Albro v. Dayton, supra, II. c; Walker v. Kretzinger, infra, II. f.

An injunction will not be granted against a judgment on the ground of newly discovered evidence, where complainant was negligent. Burnley v. Rice, 21 Tex. 171; Holmes v. Stateler, 57 Ill. 209; Cadwalader v. Atchison, 1 Mo. 659; Kirby v. Pascault, 53 Md. 581; Cantey v. Blair, 1 Rich. Eq. 41; Cunningham v. Buchanan, 10 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 523; DeLima v. Glaseell, 4 Hen. & M. 369; Faulkner v. Harwood, 6 Rand. (Va.) 125; Fuller v. Little, 69 Ill. 229; Glover v. Hedges, 1 N. J. Eq. 113; Greenfield v. Frierson, 7 Helsk. 633; Hill v. Harris, 42 Ga. 412; circuit court. The order is signed, "Jas. B. Martin, C. B. C. O., by J. H. Bohannon, D. C." Has a deputy clerk power to grant such an order? The clerk certainly has this power, under certain circumstances, as it is provided in § 273, Civ. Code Prac., that "the injunction may be granted at the commencement of the action, or at any time before judgment, by the court, or by any circuit judge; or by the clerk of the court, or by the county judge, if the judge of the court be absent from the county, or by two justices of the peace, if the judge, and the clerk of the court, and the county judge, be absent from the county." And, if the exercise of this power to grant injunctions were merely ministerial in its character, it would be conceded that the power thus conferred on the clerk might be exercised by his deputy. By section 678 of the Civil Code of Practice it is provided that "any duty enjoined by this Code upon a ministerial officer, and any act permitted to be done by him, may be performed by his lawful deputy." But this language, in our opinion, in referring to duties to be performed, and acts permitted to be done, by a ministerial officer, is intended to include only duties and acts which are ministerial only in character and such as are to be performed and done by the officer in his ministerial capacity. When, however, a ministerial officer or one whose general duties are of that character, is clothed, in special cases, as may be done, with the power to perform acts in their nature judicial, or quasi judicial, we do not think it was the purpose or intention of the legislature by this section of the Code to authorize the performance of such acts by a deputy. The clerk of a court is, strictly speaking, a ministerial officer; but that this power of granting injunctions conferred upon him by the section referred to is, in its nature, not purely ministerial, but is judicial or quasi judicial, seems to us manifest; and that it cannot be delegated, either by him or any of the other officers upon whom it is conferred, either to a special or a regular deputy, seems equally manifest. It is not analogous to the power conferred upon him to issue attachments, which may be done by a deputy. There he is required to see that an affidavit in a special form prescribed by law is filed; but here, where an immediate order of injunction is asked for, without notice, as was done in the case before us, it is expressly provided, by section 276 of the Code, that it shall not be granted unless the court or officer

Hevener v. McClung, 22 W. Va. 51; Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. v. Erb, 16 W. N. C. 113; Levan v. Patton, 2 Heisk. 108; Ludington v. Handley, 7 W. Va. 390; Munn v. Worrall, 16 Barb. 221; Peace v. Nalling, 1 Dev. Eq. 239; Taylor v. Sheppard, 1 Youngs & C. Exch. 271; Semple v. McGatagan, 10 Smedes & M. 98; Smith v. McLain, 11 W. Va. 654; Titcomb v. Potter, 11 Me. 218; Turley v. Taylor, 6 Baxt. 376; Green v. Robinson, 5 How. (Miss.) 80; Harnsbarger v. Kinney, 13 Gratt. 511; Bloss v. Huil, 27 W. Va. 508; Bishop v. Duncan, 3 Dana, 15; Leggett v. Morris, 6 Smedes & M. 723; Floyd v. Jayne, 6 Johns. Ch. 479; Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. 40; Akers v. Akers, 83 Va. 633; Forsythe v. McCleight, 10 Rich. Eq. 308; Branch Bank v. Tillman, 10 Ala. 149; Baeye v. Beard, 12 B. Mon. 561; Wilson v. Bastable, 1 Cranoh. C. C. 304.

For the particular facts in the above cases, see note on Injunctions against judgments for matters arising subsequent to their rendition, to Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Wells (Ark.) 80 L. R. A. 560.

1. In asserting a defense.

The negligence of complainant or his counsel in failing to assert a legal defense that might have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence, and that should have been made, will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Hettzell v. Bents, 8 Phila. 261; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Holbrook, 92 Ill. 297; Broda v. Greenwald, 66 Ala. 588; Champlon v. Woods, 79 Cal. 17; Conway v. Ellison, 14 Ark. 360; Cunningham v. Caldwell, Hardin (Ky.) 123; Elston v. Blanchard, 3 Ill. 420; Kersey v. Rash, 8 Del. Ch. 321; Newman v. Morris, 52 Miss. 402; Odell v. Mundy, 59 Ga. 641; Ross v. Holloway, 60 Miss. 553; Miller v. Morse, 23 Mich. 365; Hendrickson v. Hincley, 58 U. S. 17; How. 443, 15 L. ed. 123; Barber v. Rukeyser, 39 Wis. 590; Hill v. Harris, 51 Ga. 628; Hambrick v. Crawford, 85 Ga. 333; Kriechbaum v. Bridges, 1 Iowa. 14; Green v. Robinson, 5 How. (Miss.) 80; Little v. Price, 1 Md. Ch. 182; Reeves v. Cooper, 12 N. J. Eq. 223; Crawford v. Wingfield, 25 Tex. 414; Walker v. Shreve, 87 Ill. 474; Tutt v. Ferguson, 13 Kan. 45; Barker v. Elkins, 1 Johns. Ch. 466; Woodward v. Dromgoole, 71 Ga. 523.

And complainant must show that he is without fault or negligence, to obtain an injunction against a judgment. Wood v. Lenox, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 318; 31 L. R. A.

Buntain v. Blackburn, 37 Ill. 406; Barker v. Elkins; 1 Johns. Ch. 466; Whitaker v. Wickersham, 5 Del. Ch. 187; Gulf. C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henderson, 83 Tex. 70; Meek v. Howard, 10 Smedes & M. 502; Glover v. Hedges, 1 N. J. Eq. 118; Foster v. Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. 146 U. S. 88, 36 L. ed. 890; Cole v. Hundley, 8 Smedes & M. 473; Horn v. Queen, 4 Neb. 108; Gott v. Carr, 6 Gill & J. 309.

So, a garnishee negligent in making his defense will not be entitled to an injunction against the judgment. Paynter v. Evans, 7 B. Mon. 420; Carroll v. Parker, 1 Baxt. 299; Yarborough v. Thompson, 8 Smedes & M. 291, 41 Am. Dec. 623; Sanders v. Fisher, 11 Ala. 812; Houston v. Wolcott, 7 Iowa, 173; Stroup v. Sullivan, 2 Ga. 275, 46 Am. Dec. 390; Hair v. Lowe, 19 Ala. 224; Richmond Enquirer Co. v. Robinson, 24 Gratt. 548; Danaber v. Prentiss, 22 Wis. 311; Alleman v. Kight, 19 W. Va. 301; Braden v. Reitzenberger, 18 W. Va. 238; Nevins v. McKee, 61 Tex. 412; Field v. McKinney, 60 Miss. 763; Anderson v. Oldham, 82 Tex. 228; Haseltine v. Brickey, 16 Gratt. 116.

That a debtor did not suppose plaintiff would press his attachment suit until another case was settled is not ground for enjoining a sale on the judgment in attachment, or an excuse for not making a defense. Lott v. Michel (Miss.) 16 So. 794.

And negligence in failing to make a defense because the defendant believed the plaintiff would allow him credits will prevent an injunction. Coleman v. Goyne, 37 Tex. 552; Reeves v. Hogan, Cooke (Tenn.) 175, 5 Am. Dec. 684; Garlick v. Reece, 8 La. 101.

So, where complainant carelessly put the summons and complaint in his pocket and never read it, and he and his attorney, believing the suit was for only a certain amount, made no defense, and the attorney consented to judgment for such amount, and it was taken for a much larger amount, their negligence will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Slappey v. Hodge Bros. 99 Ala. 300.

And negligence in failing to make a defense through pressure of business will prevent an injunction, although the defendant claimed to have relied on an understanding that the case was to be dismissed, where the complaint does not show with to whom the application is made shall be satisfied, by the affidavit of the applicant or by other evidence, that irreparable injury will result to the applicant if the injunction be not immediately granted. This requirement clearly demands investigation and consideration judicial in its character. He is to consider and determine, as a quasi judicial officer, at least, the sufficiency of the application in law and in fact, under the evidence presented, before granting the order. In defining judicial power, this court has said: "We regard it as an indisputable proposition that where the inquiry to be made involves questions of law as well as fact, where it affects a legal right, and where the decision may result in terminating or destroying that right, the powers to be exercised and the duties to be discharged are essentially judicial." Com. v. Jones, 10 Bush, 749. All the elements entering into this definition of judicial powers seem to us to exist in this power of granting injunctions. But the language of the section conferring this power, as well as the fact that it is conferred on no others except those whose function and duties are strictly judicial, seems to us conclusive that this power is intrusted to the clerk personally, that it is in its nature judicial, and is one that cannot be delegated. By the language of the provision itself the power is given to the clerk, and not to his deputy. It certainly involves the exercise of discretion and judgment, and, under the general rule governing such powers, the person to whom they are delegated and in whom the trust is reposed cannot delegate or intrust their exercise to the judgment and discretion of another. In a certain contingency the clerk may grant an injunction, and, if the judge, the clerk, and the county judge be absent from the county, then two justices of the peace may grant the injunction. If it had been contemplated that the deputy clerk, in any state of case, should have this power, the law would have conferred it in the event of the absence of the clerk from the county,—as it must be presumed that the clerk would leave a deputy in charge of his office,—and would have said that, if the judge and the county judge and the clerk, and all his deputies, are absent from the county, then the two justices may act. We cannot believe that it was ever intended to intrust so important a function, involving as it necessarily does the exercise whom the contract for dismissal was made. Gamble v. Campbell, 6 Fla. 347.

So, allowing a judgment to be taken by default, intending to reserve the right of appeal, which was not done, will prevent enjoining proceedings on the judgment. Bostwick v. Perkins, 1 Ga. 136.

And negligence in not making a defense to an action at law because another defendant advised complainant not to attend to it will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Young v. Morgan, 13 Neb. 48; Hayden v. Moore, 4 Bush, 107.

And the statement of a third party that he had arranged the matter with the plaintiff is not an excuse for failing to make a defense. Walker v. Shreve, 87 Ill. 474.

The negligence of one partner in not making a defense for the firm, at the instance of the other partner, who spoke to an attorney, but gave him no names of witnesses, prevents an injunction against a judgment on a firm debt. Walker v. Kretzinger, 48 Ill. 502.

The negligence of a complainant in not making a defense is not excused by the promise of the sheriff to inform him, after service of process, whether or not he or another party of similar name was the party intended to be served. Higgins v. Bullock, 73 Ill. 205.

And an injunction will not be granted against a judgment where a new trial has been refused at law on account of negligence of the defendant in not defending, and sufficient excuse is not shown. Dodge v. Strong, 2 Johns. Ch. 228.

And negligence in the assertion of a homestead right by which it is made ineffectual will preclude an injunction against a sale on execution, where there was no fraud on the part of the other side, and the whole trouble was caused by complainant's own laches. Platt v. Sheffield, 63 Ga. 627.

Where a tort in forcibly taking a note from complainant and procuring a judgment thereon against a third party was alleged, but complainant waited without reasonable excuse until the judgment was rendered on the note and until the tort was barred at law, an injunction was refused against proceedings on the judgment. Hays v. Urquhart, 63 Ga. 323.

So, where a judgment was obtained on a note, and it was claimed the consideration was a defective engine, and the judgment was rendered nearly two years after the note was given, and it did not appear but that complainant was well acquainted with the insufficiency of the engine, his negligence in failing to make a defense prevented an injunction. Parker v. Morton, 5 Blackf. 1.

And negligence of a party, not excused, in failing to ascertain the amount of a judgment rendered against him, within the time allowed for appeal or error, will prevent an injunction. Anderson v. Oldham, 82 Tex. 228.

g. Delay in making.

Where the wife of G recovered judgment against B, who filed motions to retax costs and to revive two judgments against G, and five years afterward B commenced an action, and asked for an injunction against the judgment until such motions, still pending, were heard and determined, the lack of diligence in securing the determination of the motions prevented an injunction. Boley v. Griswold, 2 Mont. 447.

After an administrator has by mistake allowed a claim where the allowance has the effect of a judgment he must act with promptness in seeking to enjoin the same, and cannot be relieved for mistake of law. Eccles v. Daniels, 16 Tex. 136.

And negligence for three years in not ascertaining or making a defense where a judgment was taken, will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Noble v. Butler, 25 Kan. 645; Lawson v. Bettison, 12 Ark. 410.

And an injunction against a judgment that is erroneous will be refused on account of complainant's gross negligence. Muscatine v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 1 Dill. 536.

Failure to make a defense at law, as distinguished from negligence in respect to defenses generally, will be treated in a subsequent note on Jurisdiction of equity in general to grant injunctions against judgments, to Jarrett v. Goodnow, post, —.

See further, as to negligence, note on Injunctions against judgments by confession, to John V. Farwell Co. v. Hilbert (Wis.) 30 L. R. A. 242, and note on Enjoining judgments against or in favor of sureties, to Michener v. Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. (Ind.) post, 59.

I. T.

of judicial discretion, to every deputy clerk in this commonwealth, many of whom are wholly without experience, and who, under the laws of this state, may even be under the age of twenty-one years; and we think, therefore, that the injunction issued in this action was invalid, and should have been dissolved, for the additional reason that it was issued by a deputy clerk. We are of the opinion that the court below properly dissolved appellant's injunction and dismissed his petition with damages and costs, and that judgment is affirmed.

SOUTHERN BUILDING & LOAN ASSOCIATION, of Knoxville, Tenn., Appl.,
v.

L. C. NORMAN, Auditor of Public Accounts,

(.....Ky.....)

1. The requirement of Stat. § 4228. that every foreign building and loan association doing business within the state shall pay into the treasury annually 2 per cent of its annual gross receipts, does not violate Const. § 174, requiring all nonexempt property, whether owned by natural persons or corporations, to be uniformly taxed in proportion to its value, but providing that nothing shall prevent a taxation based on "franchises."
2. The obligation of previous contracts of subscription to a foreign building and loan association doing business within the state is not impaired by Stat. § 4228, imposing an annual tax of 2 per cent of the annual gross receipts of all such associations.
3. The freedom of commerce between states is not interfered with by Stat. § 4228, requiring every foreign building and loan association to pay into the treasury annually 2 per cent of its annual gross receipts.
4. The equal protection of the laws is not denied to foreign building and loan associations doing business within the state, by Stat. § 4228, requiring such associations to pay into the treasury annually 2 per cent of their annual gross receipts.

(November 20, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Franklin County in favor of defendant in a mandamus proceeding to compel the issuance of a warrant for the repayment of taxes claimed to have been unlawfully exacted from petitioner. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. G. Bullitt, with Messrs. Knott & Edelen, for appellant:

The sections in question violate § 174 of the Constitution of Kentucky, which was supposed to guarantee absolute equality of taxation.

This exaction was not in the nature of a license to do business in the commonwealth. A license is a permission to do business in the future, while a tax is an exaction on present values or past business.

Bouvier, Law Dict.; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law.

NOTE.—For exclusion or recognition of foreign corporations, see note to Cone Export & C. Co. v. Poole (S. C.) 24 L. R. A. 289.
31 L. R. A.

The acts in question operate as to existing subscriptions, to impair the contract of subscription.

De Vignier v. New Orleans, 16 Fed. Rep. 11.

The sections in question operate to impair that freedom of commercial intercourse between the states which is attempted to be conserved by the Constitution of the United States.

Wellton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 280, 23 L. ed. 849; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. ed. 708; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 464, 26 L. ed. 1068; Com. v. Smith, 92 Ky. 38; Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 143; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649; Fecheimer v. Louisville, 84 Ky. 306; Fire Assn. of Pennsylvania v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 30 L. ed. 343.

The state having permitted the appellant to come into the state and transact business, it is a denial of the equal protection of the laws to exact from it 2 per cent of its business under the guise of taxation.

Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 118 U. S. 396, 30 L. ed. 118.

Mr. W. J. Hendrick for appellee.

Haselrigg, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal involves the constitutionality of the statute requiring every foreign building and loan association doing business in the state to pay into the treasury annually $2 on every $100 of its annual gross receipts. Ky. Stat. § 4228. The law is assailed as being, (1) in violation of section 174 of the state Constitution; (2) as impairing the obligation of contracts in existence when the law became operative; (3) as an unwarrantable interference with the freedom of commerce between the states; and (4) as denying to the association the equal protection of the laws. It is apparent that a brief inquiry into the nature of the business done by the association is pertinent to a proper understanding of each of these contentions, and especially in so far as the business is supposed to be affected with an interstate character. We say "brief inquiry," because the general characteristics of these associations are alike, and in recent years have become well known. The appellant's principal office is at Knoxville, Tenn. Its course of business is this: Each subscribing member contracts to contribute each month a stated sum, which the company agrees to invest on bond and mortgage; collecting the interest monthly, and reinvesting at frequent intervals the entire moneys received from all sources for the benefit of the stockholders, share and share alike. These contributions are made at the rate of 60 cents per month on each share of stock subscribed, until the time when such instalments and their accumulations should amount to the sum of $100 for each share. This period is approximately seven years. Prior to the 11th of November, 1892, when the law in question became operative, none of the stock had matured, though the appellant had been doing business in the state and had made numerous contracts. From the date named until June 1, 1893, the gross receipts of the association were $98,057.60, but how much of this was old and how much was new business does not appear.

1. Is the statute in conflict with section 174 of the state Constitution? The section reads as follows: "All property, whether owned by natural persons or corporations, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, unless exempted by this Constitution: and all corporate property shall pay the same rate of taxation paid by individual property. Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prevent the general assembly from providing for taxation based on income, licenses, or franchises." In this connection it is pertinent to read a portion of section 181 of the same instrument: "The general assembly may, by general laws only, provide for the payment of license fees on franchisees, stock used for breeding purposes, the various trades, occupations, and professions, or a special or excise tax." It is said that the imposition of the levy of 2 per cent on the gross receipts of the association is not in the nature of a license tax, because, as those terms imply, such a tax is enforced to obtain a license to do business in the future, and cannot, in the nature of things, be an exaction on past business. A license, it is said, is a permission, and the payment of a license tax proper is required as a condition precedent to doing a business otherwise prohibited. It is not an income tax, because the company has no property out of which an income may arise; and it is not a franchise tax, it is said, because the state has granted no franchise, that being a grant of another sovereignty. The conclusion is reached, therefore, that the statute imposes a tax on the business of the association. As this business in this state consists solely in selling shares of stock to Kentucky members, it is manifest the company can have no gross receipts, except from payments made by its Kentucky subscribers. These subscribers, under section 4093, Ky. Stat. are required to pay taxes on their shares of building and loan association stock as on other individual personal property. Therefore, say counsel, undisguised double taxation, and hence taxation not in proportion to its value, is imposed, not, as sometimes unavoidably happens, on the same property in the hands of different owners, but double taxation of the same property in the hands of the same owners, because the association is a purely mutual one, and the assets belong exclusively to the shareholders. The fallacy of the argument, it seems to us, lies in the assumption that this statute imposes a tax on property at all. Certainly it is not an ad valorem tax. The associations of the kind described generally have no tangible property within the state, and we do not regard the purpose of the statute to be to force an artificial situs on the obligations due the association from its members for stock, dues, etc. Indeed, those contracts cannot be said to have any certain value. The members own the contracts of subscription, it is true, but upon notice these may retire from membership, and withdraw the value of their payments, subject to conditions not necessary to notice. The business nevertheless is a valuable one, and it is for the privilege of doing this business that the tax is imposed. It is not a tax on the corporate franchise, for the conclusive reason that the state does not grant this, but it is a tax on the franchise of doing business in this state, and in this sense a franchise tax. It is true, the amount of the gross receipts of the company are taken as the measurement of the tax, but this is only the adoption of a fair and just standard. Such taxes may be measured by dividends, by the amount of the capital stock, by the extent of the business transacted, by the net earnings, by the gross receipts, etc. In the earlier cases a tax upon the gross receipts of a railroad was held not to be a direct tax on the property, but a tax upon the franchise of the corporation, measured by the extent of its business. State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 284, 21 L. ed. 164. But subsequently the same court, in Fargo v. Stevens, 121 U. S. 230, 30 L. ed. 888, and Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 336, 30 L. ed. 1800, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, modified or rather denied the right of the state to thus tax an interstate agency under such a guise. With this feature of the taxing power, however, we have nothing to do here. To the extent that such a claim is urged by counsel, we shall notice it presently. Regarded as a tax for the privilege of doing business in the state, we see at once that the plea of want of uniformity and failure to tax in proportion to value becomes unavailing; so, also, the contention that there is double taxation. If the tax is found to be in effect a franchise tax, the complaint cannot be made that the property of the corporation is otherwise taxed, or is nontaxable. Society for Savings v. Cotte, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 594, 18 L. ed. 897; People v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 328. In our opinion, however, there is in fact no unequal or double taxation imposed. So far as borrowing members are concerned, they do not list their shares for taxation, and, while the subscribers for paid stock pay on their shares as on other individual property, the company pays no annual tax on these shares. After paying on its gross receipts for any given year, it never again pays on the receipts of that year. It never receives them again. The one payment exhausts the force of the statute for all time.

1 L. R. A.

2. Counsel say that, viewed from the standpoint of the company, the subscriptions may be regarded as choses in action, and having no situs in this state, except the artificial one created by this statute, the contracts of subscription made before the law was passed are impaired to the extent of the tax imposed. In De Vignier v. New Orleans, 16 Fed. Rep. 11—, the case relied on by counsel,—it was held that "in the absence of any provisions of the statute which had entered into and formed part of the contract, giving the right to impose a tax, bonds or other obligations of a city, which belong to nonresidents, cannot be taxed without impairing the force of the obligation itself." But we have seen that there is no purpose here to tax the property of the corporation, or impart to its property a forced location, contrary to the settled rules which govern that class of property. The principle announced in the case is not applicable.

3 and 4. Finally it is said that the freedom of commerce between the states is interfered with, and the equal protection of the laws denied the corporation. The statute, whatever may be said of the nature of the tax it imposes, in express terms, affects only business done within the state. The business—traffic or commerce, if you please so to term it—of the corporation is purely internal or domestic. Having under consideration the validity of a tax imposed on a Nebraska express company by a Missouri statute (Act May 16, 1889) similar to the one now in question, the supreme court, by Justice Lamar, after quoting the statute, said: "It is manifest that these provisions of the statute, so far from imposing a tax upon the receipts derived from the transportation of goods between other states and the state of Missouri, expressly limit the tax to receipts for the sums earned and charged for the business done within the state. This positive and oft-repeated limitation to business done within the state, that is, business begun and ended within the state, evidently intended to exclude, and the language employed certainly does exclude, the idea that the tax is to be imposed upon the interstate business of the company. 'Business done within the state' cannot be made to mean business done between that state and other states." Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 810. This case is decisive also of other contentions made by the appellant here. The tax under consideration was one on the gross receipts of a foreign corporation, and it was contended that the act violated "the requirements of uniformity and equality of taxation prescribed by the Constitution of Missouri, and thereby denies to the complainant the equal protection of the laws of the state which the 14th Amendment to the Constitution guarantees shall not be abridged by state action." The court said that it had repeatedly "laid down the doctrine that diversity of taxation, both with respect to the amount imposed and the various species of property selected either for bearing its burdens or for being exempt from them, is not inconsistent with a perfect uniformity and equality of taxation in the proper sense of those terms," citing Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 237, 33 L. ed. 892, 895, and Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 606, 607, 33 L. ed. 1025, 1032. The perfect application of these principles to the case at hand becomes apparent when we observe the substantially perfect identity between our statute and the Missouri statute. For not only was the complainant a foreign corporation, and the tax one on its gross receipts on business done in the state, but the rate was $2 on the $100 of such receipts taken in for one year next preceding a time certain fixed in the statute. The court further proceeds to demonstrate that the manner of taxing the express company, which had no tangible property in the state, of consequence, was necessarily different from that of other corporations, but there was no unjust discrimination on that account. We may observe here that the burdens imposed on appellant by the statute under consideration are substantially the same as those imposed on other similar corporations, similarly situated. In the case of Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 30 L. ed. 343, relied on by the appellant, the plaintiff in error was a fire insurance company of Pennsylvania doing business in the state of New York, and the question was what effect the 14th Amendment of the Constitution should be given in the matter of taxing the foreign corporation. The court first decided that "issuing a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce." The case of Paul v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357, was also distinctly approved, wherein it was said: "Having no absolute right of recognition in other states but depending for such recognition and the enforcement of its contracts upon their assent, it follows, as a matter of course, that such assent may be granted upon such terms and conditions as those states may think proper to impose. They may exclude the foreign corporation entirely, they may restrict its business to particular localities, or they may exact such security for the performance of its contracts with their citizens as in their judgment will best promote the public interest. The whole matter rests in their discretion." And a tax of 3 per cent on the premiums received by the complaining company in the state of New York for a given year was upheld because a like tax had been imposed on New York insurance companies doing business in Pennsylvania. The court also approved its former decision in Ducat v. Chicago, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 410, 19 L. ed. 972, where it was said: "The power of the state to discriminate between her own domestic corporations and those of other states, desirous of transacting business within her jurisdiction, is clearly established. As to the nature or degree of discrimination, it belongs to the state to determine, subject only to such limitations on her sovereignty as may be found in the fundamental law of the Union." The right to impose the tax in the case at hand does not depend, it seems to us, on its being paid as a condition precedent to the entrance of the corporation into the state. If the corporation, by the diligence of its agents, entered the state before any law was enacted to exclude it or tax its privileges, it still cannot be said that the state assented to such entrance, or gave it any official recognition whereby it was precluded from imposing a reasonable tax on its right to transact business, and rating it according to the amount of business done after the enactment of the law. It was at least a tax on the privilege of doing business after the enactment of the law, and its collection postponed in order that the sum of it might be fixed with regard to the amount of business done. It might have been fixed without regard to such amount. We do not think that the modification of the charge of $25 on the agent of the corporation, fixed on all alike, affects the right to impose the tax in question. This was in the nature of a fee for the license not exceeding the cost of its issue, and the regulations with respect thereto.

It may be observed, finally, that while the language of some of the cases cited, and others not referred to, sustains the position that the state may favor its own corporations, or impose a less tax on them than on foreign ones, the assertion of that principle is not necessary here to sustain the statute in question. It does not follow, because different plans of taxation are adopted with respect to the two classes, that there is a discrimination against either. It is practically impossible to compare a tax rate fixed on property on the ad valorem system with a rate fixed without reference to the value of property, but as a tax on the privilege of doing business. But an examination of our various statutes will, we think, show no discrimination against the nonresident corporation.

The judgment dismissing the petition is affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, THIRD CIRCUIT.

James HOYT et al., Appts.,

v.

J. T. LOVETT COMPANY.

(71 Fed. Rep. 173.)

1. Prior use of a name by other persons is sufficient to defeat a trade mark, although it was not a commercial use and was only for a short period, if it was such that the name had already become extensively recognized and well known before it was claimed as a trademark.
2. The words "Green Mountain" cannot be appropriated by an individual as a trademark for grape vines and grapes which are the natural product of the Green mountains, to the exclusion of others who deal in similar articles originating in the same locality.
3. An organic article which by the law of its nature is reproductive and derives its chief value from its innate vital powers independently of the care, management, or ingenuity of man, such as seeds, plants, or vines, cannot be the subject of a trademark so as to prevent the use of the name of the parent stock by any person cultivating and selling its products.

(December 8, 1896.)

APPPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for infringement of a trademark and to enjoin the further infringement thereof. Affirmed.

Before Acheson and Dallas, Circuit Judges, and Wales, District Judge.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Rowland Cox, for appellants:

The term "Green Mountain," when applied to grapevines, was an arbitrary or fanciful designation which could be adopted as a trademark.

Williams v. Spence, 25 How. Pr. 366; Williams v. Adams, 8 Biss. 452, 7 Rep. 613; Windsor v. Clyde, 9 Phila. 518.

A right of property in a trademark does not depend upon priority of use. In this respect trademarks differ essentially from patents.

Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 521, 32 L. ed. 526; Colman v. Crump, 70 N. Y. 580.

The material question in the case is whether a person who, by his enterprise, industry, or skill, produces a new vine or plant can select and apply to it an arbitrary name, and be protected in the use of that name as a trademark. Analogous cases say that he can.

Selchow v. Baker, 98 N. Y. 59, 45 Am. Rep. 169; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 94; Menendez v. Holt, supra; Congress & E. Spring Co. v. High Rock Congress Spring Co. 45 N. Y. 291, 6 Am. Rep. 82; Cox, Manual of Trade Mark Cases, 650; Id. 429; Id. 727.

The circumstances that the defendant uses the designation "Green Mountain," without using the incidental features which complainants have employed in connection with it, is an immaterial circumstance.

Where the trademark consists of a word which is chiefly addressed to the ear, the manner in which it is used is obviously immaterial.

Enoch Morgan's Sons Co. v. Wendover, 48 Fed. Rep. 420, 10 L. R. A. 283; Hier v. Abrahams, 82 N. Y. 519, 37 Am. Rep. 589; Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 32 L. ed. 526.

The presumptions in favor of a patent or statutory right are of great weight.

American Bor Mach. Co. v. Day, 32 Fed. Rep. 585; McMillin v. Barclay, 5 Fish. Pat. Cas. 205; Coffin v. Ogden, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 120, 21 L. ed. 821; Comstock v. Sandusky Seat Co. 3 Bann. & Ard. 188, 13 Off. Gaz. 230.

If, in any instance, it appears that the defendant is endeavoring to "steal away another's business and goodwill" (Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 97), he will be restrained.

Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co. 188 U. S. 537, 34 L. ed. 997; Le Page Co. v. Russia Cement Co. 51 Fed. Rep. 941, 17 L. R. A. 354, 5 U. S. App. 112; Coats v. Merrick Thread Co. 149 U. S. 562, 37 L. ed. 847; Taendstieksfabriks Aktiebolagat Vulcan v. Myers, 139 N. Y. 364.

Prior to 1889 the term "Green Mountain," had never been used in commerce. To the extent that it was used it signified just what we claim it signifies to-day, a product of the complainants or their assignor. It had not taken its place in the language as indicating a particular thing. When complainants adopted, applied, and registered it, they did not disturb its original meaning as indicating, (1) a vine of a particular variety, (2) grown by them.

NOTE.—The above case presents a novel question in respect to the right to have a trademark in such organic, reproductive articles as grapevines. 31 L. R. A.

As to trademark in geographical names, see Levy v. Waitt (C. C. App. 1st C.) 25 L. R. A. 190, and cases there cited.

Kohler Mfg. Co. v. Beshore, 58 Fed. Rep. 264, 59 Fed. Rep. 576.

Mr. Augustus T. Gurllis, with Mr. Henry S. White, for appellee:

It is not the registration that makes a party owner of a trademark, he must be the owner before he can register.

Brower v. Boulton, 58 Fed. Rep. 389; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 311, 20 L. ed. 581.

The latter case settled the doctrine for this country:

1. That the generic name of an article can never be a trademark;

2. That the name of a district of country where an article originates can never be monopolized by one person as against another who is dealing in similar articles originating in the same district;

3. That trademark rights rest upon priority of use;

4. That a claim to monopoly cannot be sustained upon the theory of trademark or trade-name.

Hostetter v. Fries, 17 Fed. Rep. 620; Leclanche Battery Co. v. Western Electric Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 276; Evans v. Von Laer, 32 Fed. Rep. 158.

No circular, price list, or advertisement, no matter how frequently repeated, can constitute a trademark.

Candee v. Deere, 54 Ill. 489, 5 Am. Rep. 186. The complainants can have no trademark in the name "Green Mountain."

The public use of the name was established by Mr. Paul, before complainants ever heard of the Green Mountain. That which has once gone into public use cannot thereafter be appropriated by any one.

Egbert v. Lippmann, 104 U. S. 335, 26 L. ed. 755.

No one has a right to appropriate a sign or symbol which from the nature of the fact it is used to signify others may employ with equal truth, and therefore have an equal right to employ for the same purpose.

Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 311, 20 L. ed. 581; Humphreys Homeopathic Medicine Co. v. Hilton, 60 Fed. Rep. 758.

The geographical name merely cannot be a valid trademark.

Wales, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

James Hoyt and Edwin Hoyt sued the J. T. Lovett Company for the infringement of their common-law and registered trademark, under which they claimed the exclusive right to propagate and sell grapevines, grapevine slips, and grapes cultivated and produced by them, and to which they had given the name of "Green Mountain Grape." The circuit court dismissed the complainants' bill, on the ground that "the case seems clearly to fall within the principles stated by Mr. Justice Jackson in Columbia Mill Co. v. Alcorn, 150 U. S. 460, 37 L. ed. 1144, and is governed by it." In the case referred to the court says: "The general principles of law applicable to trademarks, and the conditions under which a party may establish the exclusive right to the use of a name or symbol, are well settled by the decisions of this court, . . . which . . . establish the following general propositions: . . . (8) That the exclusive right to the use of the mark or device claimed as a trademark is founded on priority of appropriation; that is to say, the claimant of the trademark must have been the first to use or employ the same on like articles of production. (4) Such trademark cannot consist of words in common use as designating locality, section, or region of country."

The law being thus settled, we have only to consider its application to the facts of the case now before us.

1. Priority of adoption and use. Each of the parties to the present suit has been for many years extensively engaged in the business of a nurseryman; the complainants at New Canaan, in the state of Connecticut, and the defendant at Little Silver, in the state of New Jersey. The bill alleges that the complainants, in and about the year 1885, discovered the vine to which, after three years of experimental cultivation and propagation, they gave the name of "Green Mountain Grape;" that they selected and used this name as a trademark in advance of all others, and have since continuously used it to denote and indicate their grapevines, and also the grape produced therefrom; that the said trademark was registered in the patent office of the United States on the 27th of August, 1889; and that the defendant has fraudulently used the name. The answer denies all the material matters set out in the bill, excepting the fact of registration, and specially denies that the complainants were the first to select and adopt the name which they claim as a trademark. The record shows that J. M. Paul, who carried on a nursery on a small scale at North Adams, Mass., in the year 1884, and probably earlier, found some grapevines growing wild on or near the side of the Green mountains, in the state of Vermont, on the farm of Mr. Clough, from whom he bought them, and that in the spring of that year he sent one of the vines to Mr. Hathaway, of Easton, N. Y., with a wooden label attached thereto, bearing the words "Green Mountain." Previous to this Mr. Paul, while on a visit to the home of his old-time friend, Mr. Hathaway, had mentioned his discovery of the vines, and the two, after talking over the subject of a suitable name for the new vine, had concluded that "Green Mountain" "would cover the whole." The first vine planted by Mr. Hathaway did not live, and in the spring of 1885 he planted another of the same variety, labeled with the same name, received from Mr. Paul, which survived, and bore fruit in the summer of 1886; and from this last vine he sold eyes on slips to different buyers, among whom was the J. T. Lovett Company, by the name of the "Green Mountain Grape." This witness also states that he had sold and given away some of these vines to his neighbors as the Green Mountain grape, and that the vines are now known in his neighborhood by that name. Mr. Hathaway is distinct in his recollection of the circumstances thus briefly narrated, and he is corroborated as to the fact of prior use by other witnesses. Mr. Edwin Hoyt, one of the complainants, and the only witness produced in support of the bill, says that Mr. Paul sent them a sample of the Green Mountain grape in the spring of 1885; that they had at first thought of calling it the "New Canaan Grape," and had prepared a device taken from a pictorial Bible, representing the two returning spies bearing on their shoulders a staff from which was suspended a large cluster of grapes, but upon further reflection "we thought the words 'Green Mountain,' the place where the vine originated, would carry with it the idea of hardiness; that perhaps the vine would take better; . . . and we finally adopted the name 'Green Mountain,' with the same picture;" and that this name has been used by them since January, 1889. Mr. Hoyt also states that the vine was discovered by Mr. Paul, who bought it of Clough. In a letter from the complainants to the defendant, dated September 11, 1888, they wrote: "We send you by express a sample of our new grape, the 'Green Mountain.' This grape originated in the Green mountains; hence its name." The complainants published two advertisements, dated, respectively, February, 1890, and August, 1890, in which, after describing the excellent qualities of their new grape, they notified the public that: "Each vine sold will be sealed with our trademark. Our copyright name 'Green Mountain,' gives us the exclusive right for its propagation for sale."

On August 25, 1890, the defendant wrote to the complainants, inquiring: "On what terms will you supply us some seals? A party offered us the wood of a vine of the Green Mountain grape last fall, which he said came into his possession before you had purchased. This was before we knew that you were going to have the grape copyrighted, and we bought the wood, and propagated from it a few vines, perhaps a hundred."

The complainants reply by letter to this inquiry, on August 27, 1890: "You say you got the wood of a party who procured it before we had purchased it. We do not think this can be so, as we have had it nearly five years now, but did not offer it for sale until last spring a year ago. Would you object telling us from what source you received your wood? Mr. Paul told us there were no vines sold which would do us any harm. He is dead now, and there is no finding out to whom he sold vines, or the date he bought the vines from Mr. Clough."

At the time of the sale by Mr. Paul to the complainants,—December 20, 1885,—he entered into a written contract with them, the substance of which was that he would furnish the wood grown from the Green Mountain vine on his place, or under his control, so long as the said Hoyt's Sons shall require it, or until six years shall have expired; and without the latter's consent would not furnish the wood to any other person. It is quite probable that the complainants honestly believed they had acquired the sole right, under this agreement, to propagate and sell the vine, but they acted mistakenly, since the evidence proves that, besides Hathaway, at least two other persons—Mr. Terry and Mr. Francis—had each procured a Green Mountain vine from Mr. Paul, and had successfully cultivated them, before the complainants had decided to adopt "Green Mountain" as a tradename. The registration of the trademark does not help the complainants. It amounts to nothing more than prima facie evidence of ownership, and does not confer a title upon the complainant, if some other person has, by adoption, acquired a prior right to its use. Glen Cove Mfg. Co. v. Ludeling, 22 Fed. Rep. 826.

In Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 322, 20 L. ed. 588, the court said: "The office of a trademark is to point out distinctively the origin or ownership of the article to which it is affixed; or, in other words, to give notice who was the producer. This may, in many cases, be done by a name, a mark, or a device well known, but not previously applied to the same article."

The defendant is not charged with an attempt to palm off his goods as the goods of the complainants, nor is there any evidence that the defendant attempted to deceive the public by a counterfeit or any imitation of the latter's device. On this branch of the case the evidence appears to be conclusive that the complainants had been anticipated in the use of the name which they undertook to claim as a trademark. We have not overlooked the contention of counsel that the prior use by Messrs. Hathaway, Terry, and Francis was not a commercial use, and was only for a short period before the registration. This distinction is unimportant in view of the fact that the name had already become extensively recognized and well known before the selection by complainants as descriptive of this particular variety of grape; and the length of time it had been on the market, if anterior, is not material. No usage or custom has been brought to our notice in support of the suggestion that the right of the public to the use of a name, as applied to a particular article, is limited by the number of sales, few or many, which may have been made previous to its adoption by a person who claims it as a trademark. It is not pretended that Mr. Hathaway was under any obligation which should have prevented him from selling the vines when he did; and one lawful prior sale by him, like Mercutio's wound, is enough.

2. The right to the use of a geographical name. This conclusion dispenses with anything more than a brief reference to the other defenses. The words "Green Mountain" being used to denote the place of origin of the article to which they were affixed, and the fact that this article is a natural product, bring the present case within the rule laid down in Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark and Columbia Mill Co. v. Alcorn, already cited. In the first of these cases the attempt was made to secure to the complainant the exclusive use of the name "Lackawanna Coal," as applied, not to any manufacture of theirs, but to that portion of the coal of the Lackawanna valley which they mined and sent to market, differing neither in nature nor quality from all other coal of the same region. The reasons why such use cannot be allowed are thus presented by Mr. Justice Strong, speaking for the court: "No one can claim protection for the exclusive use of a trademark or tradename which would practically give him a monopoly in the sale of any goods other than those produced or made by himself. If he could, the public would be injured rather than protected, for competition would be destroyed. Nor can a generic name, or a name merely descriptive of an article of trade, of its qualities, ingredients, or characteristics, be employed as a trademark and the exclusive use of it be entitled to legal protection. . . . 'He has no right to appropriate a sign or a symbol, which, from the nature of the fact it is used to signify, others may employ with equal truth, and therefore have an equal right to employ for the same purpose.' And it is obvious that the same reasons which forbid the exclusive appropriation of generic names or of those merely descriptive of the article manufactured and which can be employed with truth by other manufacturers, apply with equal force to the appropriation of geographical names, designating districts of country. Their nature is such that they cannot point to the origin (personal origin) or ownership of the articles of trade to which they may be applied. . . . It must then be considered as sound doctrine that no one can apply the name of a district of country to a well-known article of commerce, and obtain thereby such an exclusive right to the application as to prevent others inhabiting the district or dealing in similar articles coming from the district, from truthfully using the same designation."

In Columbia Mill Co. v. Alcorn, the court repeats and approves the rule thus laid down. Its application here is obvious. All the vines which were sold or given away by Mr. Paul were the products of the original vine taken from the Green mountains, and "hence its name." The vine planted by Mr. Hathaway, and the wood sold by him to the defendant, were reproductions of the parent stock, and both buyer and seller could rightfully use the name by which it had been first called. To have sold it under any other name would have been a deception on dealers in similar articles, who were entitled to know its pedigree and history. The name given to the vine and to the grape is geographical, designating a particular district or country, and cannot be employed by the complainants to the exclusion of others who deal in similar articles originating in the same locality.

3. The remaining objection to the bill is that the protection of a trademark cannot be obtained for an organic article which, by the law of its nature, is reproductive, and derives its chief value from its innate vital powers, independently of the care, management, or ingenuity of man. This question is conceded to be novel and unprecedented. Tested, however, by the general principles regulating sales of personal property, there is no doubt that a sale of seeds, plants, or vines, when detached from the soil in which they grew, carries with it, on delivery, the right of property in the buyer, not only in the article so bought, but also in the natural increase or products of the same when sown or replanted. Neither the common law nor the statutes relating to trademarks extend the protection of tradenames to things which are valued more for their natural powers of reproduction and increase than for any other qualities. The facts in the present case afford an apt illustration of the incongruity of a contrary doctrine. A man buys a grapevine, to which is attached a metallic label stamped with the trademark of the seller. In the absence of a special contract between the parties, what is to prevent the buyer from cultivating the vine, and selling its products, whether of wood or of fruit, under the name of the parent stock? Certainly not a trademark. To repeat the words of Mr. Justice Strong: "No one can obtain protection for the exclusive use of a trademark or tradename which would practically give him a monopoly in the sale of any goods other than those produced or made by himself."

The Hoyts did not make the Green Mountain vine, nor, strictly speaking, did they produce it. It grew out of the earth, was fashioned by nature, and endowed with powers and qualities which no human ingenuity or skill could create or imitate. If such protection as that now claimed by the complainants was allowed, a breeder of cattle could with equal propriety and reason demand like protection for the natural increase of his herd. In every aspect such claims would seem to be impracticable and inequitable.

There was no error in the decree of the circuit court, and it is therefore affirmed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Nebraska, ex rel. BOARD OF TRANSPORTATION, Ptf. in Err.,

v.

SIoux CITY, O'NEILL, & WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY et al.

(.....Neb.....)

*1. The construction placed upon provisions of the Federal Constitution by

*Headnotes by RYAN, C.

NOTE.—The decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which control the constitutional question presented in the above case are so fully set forth in the case itself that no annotation will be attempted.

On the general subject of restriction of business, see note to State v. Loomis (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 760, 31 L. R. A.

the Supreme Court of the United States must be followed by state courts in all matters to which such provisions are applicable.

2. The provisions of chapter 11, Laws 1893, which require railroad companies, as an absolute finality and without the right of judicial investigation by due process of law, to carry freights over longer lines for the same rates as required by any railroad company for hauling the same freight between the same points by a shorter line, no matter how great the disparity in the length of such hauls may be, are in conflict with the provision of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, that no state shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

3. It is not within the power of the court to make such an arrangement for the business intercourse of common carriers as, in the opinion of such court, they ought to make for themselves, for such function is legislative rather than judicial.

4. The power of the legislature to require railroad lines to build and maintain transfer switches between themselves, being but an incidental consideration, is not discussed or decided in this case. The main purpose of chapter 11, Laws 1893, being the regulation of business intercourse of connecting railroad companies, said act is held invalid, as not being susceptible of enforcement as an entirety, for the reasons given in the second and third paragraphs of this syllabus.

(January 9, 1906.)

ERROR to the District Court for Holt County to review a judgment in favor of defendants in a mandamus proceeding to compel defendants to construct and maintain a transfer switch to connect their roads according to the provisions of a statute requiring it. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. A. S. Churchill, Attorney General, George A. Day, Deputy Attorney General, and W. A. Dilworth, for plaintiff in error:

With the proper averments a court of equity would by its decree fix the place, the manner of construction, and adjust the cost of construction, as well as the costs of the suit, where either company unreasonably refused to agree as to the location.

Texas Exp. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 6 Fed. Rep. 437; McCoy v. Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 3.

The act is not void for uncertainty. Neither does it deprive it of either its liberty or property without due process of law.

State v. Republican Valley R. Co. 17 Neb. 647, 52 Am. Rep. 424.

That this transfer switch is simply a facility for conducting the business of the railroad, there can be no doubt. If so, then this disposes of all the contention that the law is without due process of law, or that it denies to them the equal protection of the law, or the taking of property without just compensation, or that its effect is to impair the obligations of a contract.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Becker, 32 Fed. Rep. 854; Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa, 312, 12 L. R. A. 486, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 584; Peoria & P. U. R. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 109 Ill. 135, 50 Am. Rep. 605; State v. Republican Valley R. Co. supra; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Boland, 96 Ala. 626, 18 L. R. A. 260; Reagan v. Mercantile Trust Co. 154 U. S. 418, 38 L. ed. 1030.

Other states have similar laws to this, and, in many cases, more stringent.

San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. State, 79 Tex. 264; State v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 83 Mo. 144; State v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 722; Smith v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 86 Iowa, 202; Vincent v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 49 Ill. 33; People v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 55 Ill. 95, 8 Am. Rep. 631; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Suffern, 129 Ill. 274; Hoyt v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 93 Ill. 609; People v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 28 Hun, 549; 31 L. R. A.

Abbott v. Johnstown, G. & R. H. R. Co. 80 N. Y. 81, 38 Am. Rep. 572; State v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 29 Conn. 538; Covington Stock-Yards Co. v. Keith, 139 U. S. 128, 35 L. ed. 73; Mason v. Missouri P. R. Co. 25 Mo. App. 480; Budd v. People, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247; Brass v. North Dakota, 153 U. S. 391, 38 L. ed. 757.

The transfer switch is simply an exercise of the police power of the state.

Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; State v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 29 Neb. 412; American Rapid Teleg. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641, 18 L. R. A. 454; Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 807.

It is the duty of a public servant to give all the assistance possible to promote the good of the general public, and when he assumes the duties of a public servant, he takes upon himself the protection of the public interests in preference to his own, and these railroad companies will not be heard to urge their own individual and selfish interests as against the good of the general public.

Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Rae, 18 Ill. 488, 68 Am. Dec. 574.

On petition for rehearing.

The court erred in holding and deciding that the act entitled "An Act to Regulate Railroads and to Compel Them to Put in Transfer Switches" was in contravention to the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

As to whether any rate is reasonable or unreasonable is a question of fact to be determined from the evidence produced before the proper tribunal.

Budd v. People, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014.

Where does this court find any evidence in this case to support the presumption of an unreasonable rate?

The increasing or diminishing volume of business, the market price of the articles to be transported, the relation through freight, the articles of freight upon which the railroad must depend as compared with other roads transporting similar commodities through more populous communities, the development of competition, the opening of new lines of communication, the course of business which may concentrate empty cars at either terminus of the line,—all have a bearing upon the making of reasonable rates.

Evans v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 641; Boston Chamber of Commerce v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 754; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 30 Fed. Rep. 2, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 428; Concord & P. Railroad v. Forsaith, 59 N. H. 123, 47 Am. Rep. 181; Seefeld v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 43 Ohio St. 571, 54 Am. Rep. 846; Buchanan v. Northern P. R. Co. 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 655.

The reasonable rate must be ascertained from the facts of the particular case.

Coze Bros. & Co. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 460; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 690, 31 L. ed. 844.

The board of transportation is clothed with power to determine what is a just and reasonable charge on all the lines of railroad within the state, and this may be done in advance of the rendition of the service.

State v. Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co. 22 Neb. 822.

The court erred in holding and deciding that said act was incapable of being enforced, for the reason that there was no tribunal which was authorized to determine and fix the details of the business connections between the various railroads affected by said act.

Ibid.; State v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. Railroad, 19 Neb. 476; State v. Missouri P. R. Co. 29 Neb. 550.

The court erred in holding and deciding that the main and sole object of said act was the compelling of the various railroad companies affected thereby to enter into business relations and intercourse with each other, and was not the compelling of said railroads solely to connect their tracks.

Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa, 312, 12 L. R. A. 436, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 584.

Messrs. Lloyd W. Bowers, William B. Sterling, Wright, Hubbard, & Bevington, John B. Hawley, and B. T. White, for defendants in error:

As the statute neither itself determines, nor provides any tribunal clothed with authority to determine, such essential preliminaries to the building of the switch track as the place of its beginning or ending, its intermediate route, the method or material of its construction, or its cost, and yet the track is to be built by the joint action of the railroads to be connected, and is neither required nor permitted to be built by any one of them alone, it follows that the act undertakes to oblige the railroads themselves to agree upon all necessary preliminaries to construction such as the above named. It does not, however, declare which railroad shall yield to the others' desires in case of disagreement, and is fatally uncertain and incomplete in failing to do that, or otherwise determine where and how the switch track shall be built.

If the statute is not fatally defective in its own provisions, then it requires one railroad to reach agreement with the other, as to the necessary preliminaries of constructing the track, by yielding to the demands of that other railroad concerning such preliminaries. In that view the act requires one railroad to help build such a track as the other demands; and that is depriving the first railroad of its liberty and property without due process of law, in violation of Amend. 14, § 1, of the United States Constitution, and of art. 1, § 3, of the Nebraska Constitution, beside denying to the first railroad the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the same section of the Federal Constitution.

By the act a railroad is required to engage in the business of transporting freight beyond its own line of road, and so is forced (whether it chooses or not) into an occupation which it has never bound itself to enter. Such legislation is a deprivation of liberty and property without due process of law, abridges the immunities guaranteed to railroads as to others, and denies them the equal protection of the laws.

Zabriskie v. Hackensack & N. Y. R. Co. 18 31 L. R. A.

N. J. Eq. 178, 90 Am. Dec. 617; Ames v. Lake Superior & M. R. Co. 21 Minn. 255; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 1047, 1059; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 145; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 87 Fed. Rep. 567, 2 L. R. A. 239, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 351; Aitchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 663, 28 L. ed. 291.

The act compels involuntary contracts of agency between different railroads and their employees, and in so doing opposes the United States Constitution.

The rates fixed by the act for any transportation of freight in the course of which a transfer switch is traversed are unreasonable, and have the effect of taking property without due process of law, in disregard of both the Federal and state Constitutions.

Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 88 L. ed. 1014; Black, Const. L. pp. 318, 324, 325; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, § 194, p. 598; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 37, 16 Am. Rep. 611.

Section 3 of the act, declaring in terms that no extra charge shall be made for the service of delivering or receiving freight on a transfer switch, explicitly requires the taking of property without due process of law.

The right of railroads, under their charters from Congress and the state of Nebraska, to charge reasonable rates, is a contract right, and is subject to regulation only by the legislative power of the state in the proper exercise of the police power, and for the purpose and to the extent of preventing unreasonable charges.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, article, Constitutional Law, p. 741; Black, Const. L. pp. 536, 741; Story, Const. § 1892; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 712, *577; Pingry v. Washburn, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 264, 15 Am. Dec. 676; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & Heat Producing & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 850, 29 L. ed. 516.

The rates fixed by the statute for the transportation of freight in the course of which a transfer switch is traversed are absolute and are conclusively imposed, whether actually reasonable or not. The rates are established finally, instead of being merely declared presumptively reasonable; and under the terms of the statute judicial inquiry into the actual reasonableness of the rates is immaterial and improper; for this reason, the act takes property without due process of law.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 184 U. S. 418, 88 L. ed. 970, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 209.

Ryan, C., filed the following opinion: This action was begun in the district court of Holt county, as shown by the prayer of the application, for a writ of mandamus to compel the defendants to build forthwith a transfer or connecting switch at O'Neill, in said county, whereby the lines of the respondent railroad companies might be connected one with the other, and, upon completion of said transfer switch, to henceforth maintain the same in good condition, and to receive and forward freight in car-load lots, offered by one road to the other, on or over said transfer switch, and to place in force a joint schedule of rates between stations on the lines of each of said roads, whereby freight in car-load lots might be carried from a station on one road to a station on the other, which said rates should be for the rate for the shortest mileage by any railroad between the point of shipment and the point of destination, or to show cause, by a day fixed, why said order should not be complied with, and, upon final hearing, that said order be made final, and for such other and further order as might be required, and which a full and complete carrying out of the statute set forth in the application aforesaid should demand. It is not necessary to more fully state the nature of this action, further than to say that, by the application, it was shown that the lines of railroad owned and operated by the defendant companies touched each other at O'Neill, and at that point each received and delivered freight; that the board of transportation of the state of Nebraska, before the commencement of this action, had found a necessity for a transfer switch between said lines, and had duly ordered the same to be constructed; and that the respondents, and each of them, had failed and refused to build and maintain such switch. The right to the relief above prayed was based upon the provisions of chapter 11, Laws 1893. It is not possible to determine whether or not the connection by transfer switch could have been compelled under the provisions of section 113, chap. 16, Comp. Stat., for there are contained in the application no averments showing the existence of prerequisites indispensable under this section. A general demurrer to the petition by each defendant was sustained, and from the judgment of dismissal thereupon following plaintiffs have prosecuted error proceedings to this court.

The first and second sections of chapter 11, Laws 1893, contain the provisions concerning which most of the arguments in this case have been made. The enacting clause and these sections are in the following language:

"Be it enacted by the legislature of Nebraska:

"Sec. 1. That all railroads touching the same point in this state, at which point such railroads receive and deliver freight or at some near point, shall build and maintain transfer switches for common use in transferring freight in car-load lots from one such railroad to another, and receive and forward such freight according to the provisions of this act; provided, that the railroads interested may apply to the state board of transportation to be relieved of this duty in any case where its performance is unusually burdensome; and if, upon a personal examination of the locality where the transfer switches are to be put in, and taking testimony of the persons residing in the locality, by the secretaries of such board, they find it unjust and unreasonable to require the building of such transfer switches, then such board may relieve such roads of such duty, and that evidence from any locality along the lines of roads interested shall be considered by said board, and be competent testimony in such case.

"Sec. 2. That whenever a shipper of freight from any point in this state to any other point in this state over two or more lines of railroads to reach such point of destination, it shall be the duty of all such railroads as come under the provisions of this act to receive and deliver all such freight in car lots, on board cars upon such transfer switch. The railroad company at point of shipment shall make a through waybill to point of destination, and the rate to be charged for such shipment shall not be the sum of two or more locals, but shall be apportioned between the different roads according to the mileage of each necessarily used in such shipment, and shall be the rate for the shortest mileage distance by any railroad between point of shipment and point of destination."

"1 L. R. A.

The mandatory requirement of the first section is that railroad companies, situated as the defendants, shall build and maintain transfer switches for transferring car-load lots from one road to the other, and receive and forward the same according to the provisions of said act. The case has been presented on both sides upon the theory that the clause "according to the provisions of this act" relates to and qualifies each antecedent requirement; that is, of putting in and maintaining the transfer switch, as well as of receiving and forwarding freight. In this, we think, counsel correctly construed these provisions. In view of the fact that at the date of the passage of this act there was already in existence a section of the Compiled Statutes which required the construction of transfer switches, it is very clear that the main purpose of the act under consideration is to be found in its second section. The validity of this act will therefore be considered with reference to its chief object as defined in the said second section, rather than with reference to the duty to construct transfer switches,—a matter of minor importance. In Iowa a transfer-switch law was enacted by the legislature, of which some provisions resemble those found in the above act. It is not necessary that these should be copied or described at length, for the argument of the attorney general was based upon analogies sufficiently indicated by an opinion of the supreme court of that state filed in a cited case, to which we shall now refer. In Smith v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Iowa) 53 N. W. 128, thus confidently relied upon by the plaintiffs in error, there were considered but two questions. Of these, the first was whether the state was the proper party plaintiff. The other proposition decided is found correctly stated in the fourth paragraph of the syllabus, thus: "Code, § 1292, provides that a railroad corporation whose road intersects or crosses any other line of railway of the same gauge 'shall' connect its road with such other railway so intersected. Act 1878, § 3, provides that the railroad commissioners shall have general supervision of all railroads in the state, and inquire into any neglect or violation of the laws of the state. Acts 20th Gen. Assem. chap. 24, § 1, provide that corporations having intersecting roads shall, 'whenever ordered by the railroad commissioners,' unite and connect their tracks. Held, that the commissioners should order the connection of such tracks only when they deem it best, and need not do so regardless of its advisability." In this case the railroad commissioners had, in effect, found that there was no necessity for the connection sought to be required, but ordered it, on the theory that the statute compelled them so to do, whether the connection was necessary or not. How the supreme court of Iowa viewed the construction followed by the railroad commissioners is clearly indicated by the language above quoted. In the case just considered, however, there was involved no such question as that which chiefly concerns us in this case. Since we have had brought to our notice the holding of the supreme court of Iowa in one case, it may subserve a useful purpose to note that in State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Iowa) 55 N. W. 331, another ruling of that court has been made, which is correctly reflected in the following language of the syllabus: "An order of the railroad commissioners that the defendant railroad company transfer cars delivered to it by another company, from its station to another point, as a switching service and at switching rates, will not be enforced where such point is beyond the yard limits, and the service rendered is on the main line, and is done under orders, as in case of trains, and not under the direction of the yard master." The court, in its opinion, said that if the order of the railroad commissioners was to be enforced by a decree, as prayed, such enforcement involved a change in the management of the company as to the classification and operation of its trains, and for this reason a demurrer to the petition containing the prayer above indicated was held to have been properly dismissed. Indirectly, there was thus considered one of the minor questions to which the law under discussion might naturally give rise, but, as this question is not necessarily involved, we shall proceed to consider other questions, which cannot be ignored.

It is insisted by the plaintiffs in error that section 3 of the act under consideration is not within the inhibition of the following language of section 1 of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, to wit: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." In the construction of the Federal Constitution and statutes, state courts must follow the Supreme Court of the United States. Franklin v. Kelley, 2 Neb. 79; Bressler v. Wayne County, 25 Neb. 468. In delivering the opinion of the court in Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014. Mr. Justice Brewer briefly reviewed the history of the adjudications of the United States Supreme Court respecting legislative control over railroads. As such a review is not inappropriate in the consideration of this case, and as no one is more likely to correctly summarize such history than Judge Brewer, his language is quoted, as follows: "In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutta, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. ed. 94, and Peik v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 U. S. 164, 24 L.

ed. 97, the question of legislative control over railroads was presented, and it was held that the fixing of rates was not a matter within the absolute discretion of the carriers, but was subject to legislative control. As stated by Mr. Justice Miller in Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 569, 30 L. ed. 244, 248, in respect to those cases: 'The great question to be decided, and which was decided, and which was argued in all those cases, was the right of the state within which a railroad company did business to regulate or limit the amount of any of these traffic charges.' There was in those cases no decision as to the extent of control but only as to the right of control. This question came again before this court in Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 307, 331, 29 L. ed. 636, 644; and while the right of control was reaffirmed a limitation on that right was plainly intimated in the following words of the chief justice: 'From what has thus been said it is not to be inferred that this power of limitation or regulation is itself without limit. This power to regulate is not a power to destroy, and limitation is not the equivalent of confiscation. Under pretense of regulating fares and freights, the state cannot require a railroad corporation to carry persons or property without reward; neither can it do that which in law amounts to a taking of private property for public use without just compensation, or without due process of law.' This language was quoted in the subsequent case of Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 690, 689, 31 L. ed. 841, 843, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56. Again, in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 458, 33 L. ed. 970, 981, it was said by Mr. Justice Blatchford, speaking for the majority of the court: 'The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company, involving as it does the element of reasonableness, both as regards the company and as regards the public, is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination.' And in Chicago & G. L. R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 344, 36 L. ed. 176, 179, is this declaration of the law: 'The legislature has power to fix rates, and the extent of judicial interference is protection against unreasonable rates.' Budd v. People, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, announces nothing to the contrary. The question there was not whether the rates were reasonable, but whether the business, that of elevating grain, was within legislative control as to the matter of rates. It was said in the opinion: 'In the cases before us the records do not show that the charges fixed by the statute are unreasonable.' Hence there was no occasion for saying anything as to the power or duty of the courts in case the rates as established had been found to be unreasonable. It was enough that upon examination it appeared that there was no evidence upon which it could be adjudged that the rates were in fact open to objection on that ground." Commenting upon the principles involved in the cases which he had just reviewed, Mr. Justice Brewer said: "It has always been a part of the judicial function to determine whether the act of one party (whether that party be a single individual, an organized body, or the public as a whole) operates to divest the other party of any rights of person or property. In every Constitution is the guaranty against the taking of private property for public purposes without just compensation. The equal protection of the laws which, by the 14th Amendment, no state can deny to the individual, forbids legislation, in whatever form it may be enacted, by which the property of one individual is, without compensation, wrested from him for the benefit of another, or of the public. This, as has been often observed, is a government of law, and not a government of men, and it must never be forgotten that under such a government, with its constitutional limitations and guaranties, the forms of law and the machinery of government, with all their reach and power, must in their actual workings stop on the hither side of the unnecessary and uncompensated taking or destruction of any private property legally acquired and legally held."

In Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, referred to in the above review of cases by Judge Brewer, the restrictions just referred to were applied to such facts and in such a manner as to illustrate their inhibitory force. In that case there was under consideration a law of Minnesota which empowered a commission to prescribe rates for the transportation of freight upon the several railroad lines in that state. Upon a failure of any railroad company to comply, within a fixed time, with the rate established by such commission, the commission was empowered by law to post such rate, which thereupon became as binding upon the railroad company concerned as though adopted and promulgated by its authority. Under the provisions of this law, the supreme court of Minnesota had held that the rates thus published were the only ones that were lawful, and therefore in contemplation of law the only ones that were equal and reasonable, and hence that, in a proceeding by mandamus to compel a railroad company to comply with this rate, there was no fact to traverse, except the alleged violation of the law in refusing compliance with the recommendations of the commission. In delivering the opinion of the majority of the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Justice Blatchford said: "This being the construction of the statute by which we are bound in considering the present case, we are of opinion that, so construed, it conflicts with the Constitution of the United States in the particulars complained of by the railroad company. It deprives the company of its right to a judicial investigation, by due process of law, under the forms and with the machinery provided by the wisdom of successive ages for the investigation judicially of the truth of a matter in controversy, and substitutes therefor, as an absolute finality, the action of a railroad commission which, in view of the powers conceded to it by the state court, cannot be regarded as clothed with judicial functions or possessing the machinery of a court of justice." That the rates referred to in the foregoing quotation were fixed by a commission to which that power has been delegated by the legislature of Minnesota, in principle, was the same as though the legislature itself had exercised that power, for the latter could not delegate to the former a power not possessed by itself. Considered independently of the entirely fortuitous circumstance that the commission had fixed rates, the majority of the Supreme Court of the United States in effect held, in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, that it was not within the power of the legislature to provide, as an absolute finality, that only certain fixed rates could be charged by railroad companies for the transportation of freight. In the subsequently decided case of Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. supra, the entire court seems to have assented to the correctness of the following proposition, therein quoted from the majority opinion in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, to wit: "The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company, involving as it does the element of reasonableness both as regards the company and as regards the public, is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination." As this seems unquestionably to be the conclusion established by the able review of the cases which has been hereinbefore quoted from Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co., it should be accepted as such an authoritative construction of the part of the 14th Amendment which is involved in this case that it must bind this court, whatever its views independently of this construction might have been.

In view of this construction by the Supreme Court of the United States placed upon the part of the 14th Amendment with which we are now concerned, let us consider some of the provisions of the 2d section of the act entitled "An Act to Regulate Railroads and to Compel Them to Put in Transfer Switches," the same being chapter 11, Laws 1898. The first sentence of this section is imperfect, but its evident meaning is that where freight shall be shipped over two or more lines of railroad, between points in this state, it shall be the duty of all such railroads to receive and deliver such freight in car lots, on board cars, upon such transfer switch as connects their lines. By this section it is furthermore required that the railroad company, at the point of shipment, shall make a through waybill to the point of destination, the rate for the shipment not to be the sum of two or more locals, but for the shortest mileage distance by any railroad between the point of shipment and the point of destination. For the sake of illustration, let us suppose that a triangle is formed by three distinct lines of railroad within this state; that of each of two of these lines the length is 100 miles; and that the length of the line on the third side is 25 miles. A shipper of a ton of hard coal, we will suppose, directs that his coal be sent from the intersection of the short line with one of the longer lines, over both of the longer lines, to the point at which such coal shall reach the extremity of the short line furthest from the initial point of shipment. It will thus be required to travel 200 miles to reach its destination; it might have done so by traveling 25 miles. Chapter 24, Laws 1893, has been held in Ames v. Union P. R. Co. 64 Fed. Rep. 165, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 885, to have fixed inadequate rates, and the enforcement of this statute is now suspended by injunction. Nevertheless, we shall assume, for the mere purposes of illustration, that these rates afford as fair a basis between themselves for comparisons as any other that could be found. For hauling 2,000 pounds of hard coal, a railroad company, under this maximum rate law, was permitted to charge for a distance of 25 miles the sum of 76 cents; for hauling the same ton of coal 200 miles, there might be required as compensation the sum of $2. It may be objected that this case is merely hypothetical, and that, practically, this supposed condition is impossible. Let us therefore suppose that a dealer finds it necessary to send a car load of hard coal from Omaha to Plattsmouth. For some reason, perhaps to avoid the payment of drayage charges, he elects to send the coal by the way of Columbus, and as he has the right, under this law, he requires it to be billed over the Union Pacific Railway to Columbus, and thence over the Burlington & Missouri River Railway to Plattsmouth. There are by this route required to be traveled 91 miles over the line of the first-named railway, and 180 miles over the other,—in all, 271 miles. The same shipment might be made by the Missouri Pacific Railway, in which case the haul would be but 26 miles. Referring again to the maximum rate law for what may be assumed to be relatively fair rates, at least in the judgment of the legislature which passed the act under consideration, we find that the rate for 25 miles, the rate most nearly approximating that for the distance between Omaha and Plattsmouth by a direct line (as stated in the first illustration), is 76 cents per ton, while by the lines in fact traveled, had they been in fact exactly 220 miles, the rate would be $2.20 per ton; that is, $1.44 in excess of what could have been charged over the shortest available route. And these are but fair illustrations of the practical results brought about by chapter 11, Laws 1893; and apparently, that there may be no means of avoiding this result, this law forbids any charges to be made for transfer switching. Even the reasonableness of the charge for transporting over the short line, the Supreme Court of the United States, as we have already seen, has held is a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination. If, as was held in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, the establishment of an arbitrary rate, which deprived the railroad company of its right to a judicial investigation by due process of law under the form and with the machinery provided for the investigation judicially of the truth of the matter in controversy, and the substitution therefor, as an absolute finality, of the action of a commission not clothed with judicial functions or possessed of the machinery of a court of justice, was in conflict with the Constitution 31 L. R. A.

of the United States, there is no escape from the conclusion that a law which, as a finality, establishes a rate dependent, not upon the length of a haul by the route chosen by the shipper of freight, but by the length of a much shorter route of which he refuses to avail himself, is open to the same objection. No argument can be made to sustain this law, which equally would not tend to sustain those under which the Supreme Court of the United States held invalid the rates established by commissioners in Minnesota, and other rates fixed in a similar manner in Texas. This law, in addition to the objections held sufficient as against the statutory regulations of rates in Minnesota and Texas, is subject to the criticism that no railroad company can know, in advance, for what compensation it may be required to haul freights over its line. There is therefore no way by which we can escape the logical result of these conditions authoritatively declared by the Supreme Court of the United States sufficient to vitiate other legislative enactments, in which but a portion of the objectionable features of the statute under consideration was embodied. The attempt to establish rates of compensation, as was done in chapter 11, Laws 1893, must therefore be held to be in violation of the provisions of the 14th Amendment, and therefore to be nugatory.

It is, however, insisted by the plaintiff in error that, independently of legislative establishment of rates, it lies within the power of courts to define what rate over connecting lines is reasonable, and to enforce its observance. This question, too, has received the attention of courts, and always, we believe, with the result reached in the cases we shall now review.

In Paxton & H. Irrig. Canal & L. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Irrig. & L. Co. 45 Neb. 884, 29 L. R. A. 853, Judge Post, for this court, said: "It was at the consultation suggested that it is within the power of a court of equity to prescribe the conditions upon which one irrigating company may connect with the ditch of another; but that assertion rests, to say the least, upon doubtful grounds. Conceding irrigating companies as quasi public corporations, to be subject to the strict obligations of common carriers, it does not follow that they may by the courts be compelled to enter into particular agreements or assume particular relations, however just and equitable, towards each other. That subject has recently engaged the attention of the Supreme Court of the United States, by which the power to prescribe terms for the interchange of business by connecting carriers is declared to be legislative rather than judicial in character, notwithstanding the provisions of the interstate commerce act. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 667, 28 L. ed. 291; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 115 U. S. 587, 29 L. ed. 499; Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 559, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 763. See also Beach, Priv. Corp. 839; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 37 Fed. Rep. 567, 2 L. R. A. 289, 2 Inters. Com.

Rep. 351." Such of these citations as refer to cases determined by the Supreme Court of the United States we shall now consider at such length as shall be profitable.

In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. supra, Waite, Ch. J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "A connection of roads may make a connection in business convenient and desirable, but the one does not necessarily carry with it the other." Later in this opinion he said that it was not the law that every railroad company which forces a connection of its road with that of another company has a right under the Constitution of Colorado, or at the common law, to require the company with which it connected to do a connecting business at the junction, if it does a similar business with any other company under any other circumstances. This, he said, might be made the law by the legislative department of the government, but it did not follow as a necessary consequence from the constitutional right of a mechanical union of tracks, or from the said constitutional prohibition against undue or unreasonable discrimination in facilities.

In Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. supra, it was sought to compel the use of the cars of the plaintiff over the line of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain, & Southern Railway Company, though that company had been consolidated with the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, Chief Justice Waite, in the opinion delivered by him for the court, in this case, said: "The business [of the sleeping-car company] is always done under special written contracts. These contracts must necessarily vary, according to the special circumstances of each particular case. Certainly, it cannot be claimed that a court of chancery is competent to require these companies to enter into such a contract for the furnishing and hauling of Pullman cars, as the court may deem reasonable. A mere statement of the proposition is sufficient to show that it is untenable."

In the Express Cases, supra, the circuit court had required by its decree that the railroad companies which were defendants should, as common carriers, afford each express company certain facilities for the transportation of its business as a common carrier, the character of such facilities to be the same as, by virtue of a contract formerly in existence, it had been the duty of each railroad company to provide. By this decree the rate of compensation to be paid had been fixed at not exceeding 50 per cent more than the railroad company's prescribed rate for the transportation of ordinary freight, and not greater than the railroad company would charge for the transportation of express matter on its own account, or for any other express or other corporation, or for private individuals, and a bond was required to secure such payment. The right of each party to apply for a modification of this decree under the rules in equity proceedings had been reserved by the decree itself as to the measure of compensation prescribed. In the opinion of a majority of the court, delivered by Chief Justice Waite, the following language was used:

31 L. R. A.

"The difficulty in the cases is apparent from the form of the decrees. As express companies had always been carried by railroad companies under special contracts, which established the duty of the railroad company upon the one side, and fixed the liability of the express company on the other, the court, in decreeing the carriage, was substantially compelled to make for the parties such a contract for the business as in its opinion they ought to have made for themselves. Having found that the railroad company should furnish the express company with facilities for business, it had to define what those facilities must be, and it did so by declaring that they should be furnished to the same extent and upon the same terms that the company accorded to itself or to any other company engaged in conducting an express business on its line. It then prescribed the time and manner of making the payment for the facilities and how the payment should be secured, as well as how it should be measured. Thus, by the decrees, these railroad companies are compelled to carry these express companies at these rates, and on these terms, so long as they ask to be carried, no matter what other express companies pay for the same facilities or what such facilities may, for the time being, be reasonably worth, unless the court sees fit, under the power reserved for that purpose, on the application of either of the parties, to change the measure of compensation. In this way, as it seems to us, 'the court has made an arrangement for the business intercourse of these companies, such as, in its opinion, they ought to have made for themselves,' and that we said in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. supra, followed at this term in Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. supra, could not be done. The regulation of matters of this kind is legislative in its character, not judicial. To what extent it must come, if it comes at all, from Congress, and to what extent it may come from the states, are questions we do not now undertake to decide; but that it must come, when it does come, from some source of legislative power we do not doubt. The legislature may impose a duty, and, when imposed, it will, if necessary, be enforced by the courts; but, unless a duty has been created either by usage, by contract, or by statute, the courts cannot be called on to give it effect."

The other citations in Paxton & H. Irrig. Canal & L. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Irrig. & L. Co. supra, need not be considered at length, for, while inferior in authority, they follow the same line as do the cases above reviewed.

The same doctrine was recognized in Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014.

Among the cases cited by the plaintiff in error is Texas Exp. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 6 Fed. Rep. 437, determined in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Texas, in which case it was said: "If it is practicable to define express matter with reasonable certainty, and to fix by law maximum rates for its carriage, it is most clearly not within the province of the judicial department of the government to do this. When and how far it may become necessary or expedient to do so must be left to the legislature to determine and declare; and until the legislature does so provide, the parties hereto, and all others similarly circumstanced, must be remitted to their right and power to contract in reference to the compensation for such service, subject to the limitations placed upon defendants by their duties as exclusive public carriers on public highways, that their terms for carrying shall be reasonable, and such as involve no unjust discrimination; to be determined in each particular case by the agreement of the parties in interest, and in case of their failing to agree, to be determined by the proper court on full statement and proof of the particular case." The language of the latter part of the above quotation is relied upon by the attorney general to sustain the proposition that, if the provisions of the statute cannot be upheld, this court may supply the deficiency; and, separated from its context, this part of the quotation doubtless tends strongly in that direction. This part of the quotation, however, is greatly qualified when we take into account that immediately preceding this portion, favorable to the contention of the plaintiff in error, it was said that "if it is practicable to define express matter with reasonable certainty, and to fix by law maximum rates for its carriage, it is most clearly not within the province of the judicial department of the government to do this."

From this review of the Federal decisions with reference to this subject-matter, it is clear that it does not lie within the power of courts to formulate contracts whereby shall be regulated the rights and duties of parties concerned, even though each of such parties is a common carrier. The practical difficulties which in the Express Cases surrounded, and in the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered futile, the attempt of the circuit court to define the duties of the express companies, on the one hand, and the railroad companies, on the other, apply with still greater force to the case at bar. In the Express Cases there were on either side the proposed parties to a contract relation which was to exist for a considerable space of time in the future, and all these parties were in court. Between themselves they had formerly been able, without difficulty, to make a contract which the circuit court believed sufficiently furnished analogies for all the points to be adjusted. In the case at bar the only criterion furnished for the adjustment of rates is that no more shall be charged for such haul as, by the election of the shipper, shall be made necessary, than the cost of shipment by the shortest route possible. In this case there was before the district court no party interested in shipments other than the carrier. The parties who, it was assumed, proposed to ship, were unnamed and unknown, and there was no attempt to suggest the points between which shipment should be made, or the compensation therefor which should be established. If it was impossible for the circuit court, in the Express Cases, practically to solve the problem with which it was confronted, there can be no question as to the futility of every effort of this or any other court to formulate rules or rates in compliance with the uncertain requirements of section 2 of chapter 11 of the Laws of 1898. The district court, therefore, very properly declined attempting the performance of this hopeless task. There has been suggested no method by which the act under consideration can be put into effect which has not already been considered; and, in justice to the attorney general, it is but fair to say that, to sustain the provisions of this act, he has advanced every available argument and consideration which, in our opinion, is even plausible.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

STATE of Connecticut

v.

William CONLON, Appt.

(65 Conn. 478.)

A statute authorizing the mayor and certain other officers to issue a license "to such persons as they find proper persons to engage in a temporary or transient business," for a fee not less than $1 nor more than $100, as the authority issuing such license may direct, and making such business when unlicensed a misdemeanor except in the sale of products of a farm or the sea, is, so far as it applies to ordinary and lawful business, a violation of the Connecticut bill of rights, declaring that all men "are equal in rights and that no man or set of men is entitled to exclusive public emoluments or privileges from the community."

NOTE.—For amount of license fees, see note to State, Tol. v. French (Mont.) 80 L. R. A. 415.
81 L. R. A.

(January 24, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Tolland County convicting him of selling goods without a license in violation of Pub. Acts 1898, p. 271.
Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles E. Perkins and Jeremiah J. Desmond, for appellant:

The Constitution protects the rights of every person to follow any calling or occupation not harmful to society, in common with others.

Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 515, 80 Am. Rep. 323; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 84; Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, pp. 11-196, note.

Whether the legislature could prohibit sales of goods by any one who was not permanently established in business, would be, to say the least, very doubtful; but to give one person in a city the right to say who should or should not exercise that right, to deprive one person of it and give it to another at his discretion, cannot be sustained upon any principle of liberty.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 393.

This case does not come within the cases of license.

Nor does it come within the rules governing the sale of liquors or gunpowder or other injurious or dangerous substances or trades which are or may be nuisances.

Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 86, 21 L. ed. 394; Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, p. 197.

It may be admitted that certain rules and regulations may be made as to transient or temporary sellers of goods.

Com. v. Crowell, 156 Mass. 215.

In Sayre v. Phillips, 148 Pa. 482, 16 L. R. A. 49, an ordinance requiring a very high license fee from peddlers, but exempting residents of the borough, was held invalid.

See also Baltimore v. Radecke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. Rep. 289; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220; Barthe v. New Orleans, 24 Fed. Rep. 568; Richmond v. Dudley, 129 Ind. 112, 18 L. R. A. 587; Re Frazee, 68 Mich. 396; Anderson v. Wellington, 40 Kan. 173, 2 L. R. A. 110; Chicago v. Trotter, 186 Ill. 480; State v. Mahner, 48 La. Ann. 496.

Although many of these decisions were cases of ordinances, and not acts of the legislature, the principles upon which they are decided are general and constitutional, and apply to legislative acts as well as to ordinances.

State v. Dubarry, 44 La. Ann. 1117; Rich v. Naperville, 42 Ill. App. 222; Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354; State Center v. Barenstein, 66 Iowa, 249; Hannibal v. Price, 29 Mo. App. 280; State v. Orange, 50 N. J. L. 389.

Mr. Joel H. Reed, State's Attorney, for appellee:

This statute is a proper exercise of the police power of the state.

Cooley, Taxn. 412, 413; Com. v. Smith, 6 Bush, 303; Mork v. Com. Id. 397; Cooley, Const. Lim. 742-746.

Where the legislative meaning is plain and not open to construction, as is the case with this statute, and the powers therein exercised are not restricted by the terms of either state or national Constitution, it is not competent for the courts to declare the statute void for the reasons named. They cannot run a race of opinions upon points of right, reason, and expediency with the law-making power.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 197-201; Bishop's Fund v. Rider, 13 Conn. 103; State v. Wheeler, 25 Conn. 290; White v. Stamford, 37 Conn. 578; Goshen v. Stonington, 4 Conn. 209, 10 Am. Dec. 121; Calden v. Bull, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648; 1 Bl. Com. 91; Bridgeport v. Housatonic R. Co. 15 Conn. 496; Welch v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 149, 79 Am. Dec. 239; Booth v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 118; Welch v. Hotchkiss, 39 Conn. 140, 12 Am. Rep. 388; Camp v. Rogers, 44 Conn. 291; Wheeler's Appeal, 45 Conn. 306.

If the court has the power to declare it void it will not do so except in very clear cases.

White v. Stamford, supra; Lothrop v. Stedman, 42 Conn. 588.

31 L. R. A.

Hamersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

"An act concerning sales of merchandise by itinerant peddlers" contains the following provisions:

"Sec. 1. The mayor of any city, the warden of any borough, and the selectmen of any town, may issue a license to such persons as they find proper persons to engage in a temporary or transient business, in one locality, either in a building, tent, or other premises, for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, . . . in their respective cities, boroughs, or towns, for a term not exceeding one year, upon the applicant paying to such municipal corporation a fee not less than $1 nor more than $100, as the authority issuing such license may direct.

"Sec. 2. Any person engaging in any business mentioned in section 1 of this act, except in the sale of articles that are the product of a farm or of the sea, without obtaining a license therefor, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than $7 nor more than $200, or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both." Pub. Acts 1893, p. 271.

The state's attorney for Tolland county filed an information charging the defendant with a misdemeanor under this act in the sale of boots and shoes at a store in the city of Rockville. The defendant demurred to the information, because the statute is void, as being contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of Connecticut and of the Constitution of the United States, and to the principles of natural justice. The demurrer was overruled; and the defendant was tried, convicted, and sentenced. This is an appeal from the judgment of conviction; and the only error assigned by the defendant is the action of the superior court in overruling the demurrer.

The legislature has power to require a license for the transaction of any business, either for the purpose of raising a revenue, or for the purpose of regulating the conduct of such business, as public interests may demand. This power, however, is, in the manner of its exercise, subject to the limitations embodied in the Constitution, including in that term the Constitution of the United States as well as that of Connecticut. The former, so far as it relates to such question, is in reality a part of the latter, and must be so regarded by this court in determining the validity of any legislative act. The question whether or not a particular law is obnoxious to any such limitation does not depend upon the wisdom of the law. We therefore dismiss as immaterial all considerations urged in argument as to the propriety of this legislation, and consider only the legal effect of the act, and the power of the legislature to enact such a law.

1. What is the legal effect of the act? The validity of the law in this case depends upon its real legal effect, and not merely upon its phraseology. In determining whether any law invades a right secured by constitutional enactment, the court looks at the essence as well as the form. Re Clark, 65 Conn. 17, 28 L. R. A. 243. The act is not an exercise of the power of taxation. This is too plain for argument. It is purely a trade regulation; and the crime of which the defendant was convicted consists solely in the violation of such regulation. The power, first, to regulate the conduct of all business, or of any particular business, harmless in its nature, and which every citizen has the right to carry on; and, second, to regulate, even to the extent of prohibition, any business in its nature injurious to the public,—is vested in the legislature in the broadest terms; but the exercise of that power in the two cases is governed by different principles. In the latter case the controlling object is giving to the public that protection from danger which the state is bound to give, and ordinarily the legislature must be the judge of the degree of danger and of the required protection. It may restrict the business by requiring large license fees, or by other protective regulations; and it may restrict the conduct of the business to a limited number of persons, or to persons possessing certain qualifications, to be determined by public officers to whom the administration of the law is given, or, in certain cases, to such persons as these public officers may select; thus treating the persons intrusted with the business as quasi public officers, and authorizing their selection on grounds of special fitness, similar to those applicable to the appointment of any state officer or agent. The illustrations of such regulations of a business dangerous to the public are familiar and the cases maintaining the power of the legislature to establish them are too numerous to cite.

But the law in question is not a regulation of a business dangerous to the public, and does not come within the special principles applicable to such regulations. It relates to all business "for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise," to the bread and meat essential to the support of life, and to every commodity a human being has need of. The only distinction made by the law is that between a business that is temporary and transient and all other business. It does not define a "temporary or transient" business. Such phrase has no technical legal meaning. The natural meaning of the words as generally understood does not furnish a definite guide to what the statute permits and what it prohibits. Its validity might perhaps be questioned on the ground that the language used is too vague to constitute and define a crime, but that question was not discussed in argument. The defendant is punished for selling boots and shoes in the conduct of a temporary and transient business. There is nothing in the nature of such business more dangerous to the public when called temporary than if called permanent. There is no distinction as to public danger between a boot and shoe business conducted by a man for an indefinite time, and the same business conducted after his death, by his executor in the settlement of his estate, for a short and definite time. The statute does not relate to any temporary business involving dangers peculiar to itself. It draws no line of distinction except between a business that is temporary and one that is not temporary. One is no more dangerous to the public than the other. One is no more essential to the conduct of human affairs than the other. Indeed, it would be impracticable to carry on the necessary transactions of life without "temporary and transient business for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise." It may be that future conditions will produce a general conviction that any temporary business is as dangerous to public morals and good order as lotteries, disorderly houses, tippling shops, or those suspicious vagrants who more than 200 years ago were called "peddlers and petty chapmen," and whose business was absolutely prohibited. 8 Col. Rec. 485. It is unnecessary to consider how far the legislature may anticipate common experience in declaring a business generally regarded as harmless and lawful to be dangerous to public morals and order. It is enough that the legislature has made no such declaration as to the business under discussion. The act therefore must be held to deal with temporary or transient business for the purpose of regulating an ordinary and lawful business essential to the conduct of human affairs, in which all citizens have an equal right to engage. The legislature has full power to regulate such a business, but its regulations must be governed by very different principles from those which may govern the regulations of a business in its nature dangerous to the public. In the one business no citizen has an absolute right to engage; in the other all citizens have the right, and an equal right, to engage. The difference is vital.

What is the regulation prescribed by this act? It is simply a prohibition of the business unless a license is obtained from the officers of the municipality where the business is to be conducted. If the terms on which such license should be granted were defined, a different question would be presented. If the legislature believes that fraud and deception are increasingly liable to be practiced in the conduct of any kind of business, or of all business, it may undoubtedly require, by way of security against such fraud and deception, the persons engaging in such business to take out licenses on terms prescribed by law and applying equally to all citizens. In Massachusetts, "An Act to Prevent and Punish Fraud in Sales of Goods, Wares, and Merchandise at Public or Private Sale by Itinerant Vendors, and to Regulate Such Sales," was recently passed. The act attempted to define "itinerant vendors" so as to include ordinary transient business, provided security for their customers by requiring a deposit of money to be made with the state, and by other regulations, and required the amount of the license fee charged to be ascertained according to law, and a license to be issued to whoever complied with the law. This act was held not to violate the Massachusetts Constitution by a majority of the supreme court. Com. v. Crowell, 156 Mass. 215. However such an act might be regarded under our Constitution, it is wholly different from the act under discussion, which not only forbids the transaction of the business without a license, but permits the local authority to grant a license to one, and to refuse it to another, in pursuance of a discretion unguided and unrestrained by law. It says: "The mayor may license such persons as he finds to be proper persons to engage in a temporary business for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise," and "any person engaging in such business without obtaining a license therefor shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The unrestrained power of selecting the favored recipients of a license is given to the mayor. All persons who cannot obtain this special privilege are forbidden to carry on the business under a penalty that may extend to a fine of $200 and imprisonment in the common jail for six months. If the word "may," as here used, could be given the effect of "shall," the question would be presented in a little different form. It would be our duty to construe "may" as "shall," if necessary to give effect to an act, and the context would permit such construction. But here the context plainly forbids that construction. The conditions of the act do not support a mandate to issue a license upon compliance with rules established by law. On the contrary, they clearly provide for the exercise of a discretion unrestrained by law. The phrase "such persons as he finds proper persons to engage in a temporary business" is too vague to support any definite judicial or quasi judicial action. There is not a regulation established which the licensees are bound by law to observe, and there is absolutely no legal test and no indication of who may be a "proper person." Without some test fixed by law, every person must be presumed to be a proper person to conduct an ordinary and lawful business. The mayor is authorized to select from those legally presumed to be proper persons such as he finds proper. The necessary legal effect of this phrase is "such persons as he pleases." So that, if "may" were construed as "shall," the act would then say: "The mayor shall license such persons as he pleases." Again, the provision giving the mayor absolute power to fix the license fee at $1 for one year, or $100 for one day,—i. e. to fix the license fee so that it shall be, at his pleasure, either nominal or prohibitive,—in connection with the other provisions, renders it certain that the purpose of the statute, as well as its legal effect, is to authorize the mayor to permit or forbid the transaction of an ordinary lawful business at his pleasure. This purpose of the act to secure to favored persons special privileges in the conduct of a lawful business, open of right to all citizens, is further indicated by the provision that exempts from the operation of the act "articles that are the product of a farm or of the sea."

We can find no escape from the conclusion that the legal effect of the act is to authorize the local officers of each municipality to grant exclusive privileges to such persons as they please in the transaction of a lawful business essential to the conduct of human affairs, and in which each citizen has an equal right to engage for the support of life.

2. Has the legislature power to enact such a law? The Constitution of Connecticut is somewhat peculiar in its limitation of legislative power. The "legislative power of this state" is, in the broadest terms, vested in the "general assembly." This power is, in a certain way, defined and limited by the provisions dividing the powers of government into distinct departments, and by those relating to the operation of the state government and duties of particular officers. But, unlike the Constitutions of many states, it contains no specific limitations on the exercise of legislative power, except some slight restrictions in one or two recent amendments. The limitations, however, are no less real, and perhaps more effective, than if phrased in specific terms. Our bill of rights constitutes the fundamental condition on which all powers of government can be exercised. Its more definite declarations are chiefly concerned with the administration of justice, especially of the criminal law, the preservation of the trial by jury, the protection of private property from confiscation for public use, the right of the citizen to bear arms, and the subordination of the military to the civil power; but the protection of the citizen in the equal enjoyment of those essential rights belonging to citizens of a free government is guaranteed, not in narrow phrases of detailed statement, but in terms as broad as those which vest the legislative power in the general assembly or the judicial power in the courts. The bill of rights begins as follows: "That the great and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and established, we declare that all men when they form a social compact are equal in rights; and that no man or set of men are entitled to exclusive public emoluments or privileges from the community." No legislative act is law that clearly and certainly is obnoxious to the principle of equality in rights thus solemnly made the condition of all exercise of legislative power. It is patent that not everything that can be called a right is included in this guaranty. The protected rights are those that inhere in "the great and essential principles of liberty and free government" recognized in the course of events that resulted in our independence, and established by the adoption of our Constitution. The language used is purposely broad, as the language in reference to the absolute power of legislation is broad; and the relation of limitation to power can, in the nature of things, be settled only through specific applications as emergencies arise. Among the principles thus established were those universally accepted as so essential to free government as to justify the resort to armed rebellion in our war of independence; and, of these, equality under the law, in the rights to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," was clearly recognized.

Upon the first establishment of government in Connecticut, reliance for the security of civil rights and liberties was placed on the fact that the legislature, in which was concentrated all powers of government, depended on the free and annual election of the people but as early as 1650 the free enjoyment of certain "liberties, immunities, and privileges" was recognized as essential to the stability of commonwealths, and the denial thereof as threatening their ruin. The enjoyment of such rights, however, was then recognized as due only to "every man in his place and proportion." Code 1850, p. 1. The full recognition of the principle of equality in rights, as well as of the necessity of protection by a fundamental law, was of later growth. In 1873 the right of every man to "enjoy the same justice and law within this colony" was recognized. Revision of 1872. These principles were embodied in a statutory declaration of rights, which remained substantially unchanged until the adoption of our Constitution. During the period preceding and following the Revolution, the conviction became general that equality under the law in the enjoyment of certain rights was so essential to free government that it must be defended against invasion even from the law-making power. In a proclamation issued June 18, 1776, Gov. Jonathan Trumbull expressed the conviction of the colony of Connecticut, in maintaining that the people "form themselves into society, and to set up and establish civil government for the protection and security of their lives and properties" from invasion by those "appointed by the people the guardians of their lives and liberties," and that the course of the King of Great Britain in "depriving us of our natural, lawful, and most important rights, and subjecting us to the absolute power and control of himself, and the British legislature," justified a rebellion. 15 Col. Rec. 450. And the declaration by Congress that equality under the law, in the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, is a self-evident truth, was formally approved by this state November 7, 1776 (1 Rec. Conn. pp. 3, 243), and in August, 1777, was ordered to be recorded at length in the state records, "that the memory thereof may be preserved to posterity" (1 Rec. Conn. 367). It was an express purpose of our Constitution "effectually to define, secure, and perpetuate the liberties, rights, and privileges" derived from our ancestors, and we deem it clear that our bill of rights includes this principle of equality among those principles essential to liberty and free government, to establish which it declares that all members of our political society are equal in rights, and that "no man or set of men is entitled to exclusive public emoluments or privileges from the community." Our legislation affecting any important interest has been so generally confined within the clear lines of legislative power that there has been no occasion to apply the limitations of the first section of the bill of rights. The nearest approach to a judicial determination on this subject is in Norwich Gaslight Co. v. Norwich City Gas Co. 25 Conn. 88, where the court holds that, if the law then under consideration can be fairly viewed as intended to operate as a discriminating restriction upon carrying on an ordinary business in respect to which the government has no exclusive prerogative, it comes directly within the definition of a monopoly, and may be obnoxious to the first section of our bill of rights. The application of the bill of rights, approved in that case is, plainly necessary to the decision of this. We entertain no doubt of its correctness, and feel bound to hold distinctly that an act of the legislature, the only legal effect of which is to grant exclusive privileges in the conduct of an ordinary lawful business, in respect to which the government has no exclusive prerogative, is obnoxious to the first section of the bill of rights, and void. There is, in respect to its validity, no distinction between such a law and one authorizing such privileges to be granted by subordinate officers in the exercise of a mere arbitrary discretion, wholly uncontrolled by law.

The act upon which the information against the defendant is based, so far as its provisions relate to the right to engage in any lawful "temporary or transient" business, cannot operate so as to make engaging in such business a misdemeanor, and therefore the information does not show any legal offense.

It is unnecessary to consider the other grounds on which the defendant demurred to the information.

There is error in the judgment of the Superior Court, and it is reversed.

The other Judges concur.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

James B. MICHENER et al., Appts.,
v.
SPRINGFIELD ENGINE & THRESHER
COMPANY et al.

(.....Ind.....)

1. Under the reformed procedure a court having both law and equity jurisdiction cannot dismiss a bill to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment merely because the facts stated do not entitle complainant to such relief, if it can be so amended as to entitle him to some relief.

2. A surety will be discharged, even after judgment against him, by the discharge of the principal because of matters inherent in the transaction.

NOTE.—Enjoining judgments against or in favor of sureties.

I. Against sureties.

- Remedy at law as a bar to injunction.
- Valid defense must be shown.
- In matters of negligence or for failure to make a legal defense.
- In summary proceedings.
- For newly discovered evidence.

I.—Continued.

- Where defense was prevented.
- For equitable defenses.
- On account of statutes.
- Pleading and parties.
- Injunction bonds.

II. In favor of sureties.

In MICHENER v. SPRINGFIELD ENGINE & THRESHER Co. a surety was refused equitable re-

3. A surety against whom a default judgment is taken, after which the principal's liability is discharged for failure of consideration, may file a bill under Rev. Stat. 1894, § 627, to review the judgment against him for newly discovered matter, without disturbing that in favor of his principal.

4. A suit to enjoin a judgment against a surety will not lie on the ground that the principal's liability has been subsequently discharged, where a statute permits the surety under such circumstances to file a bill to review the judgment against him for newly discovered matter, without affecting that in favor of his principal.

(April 26, 1893.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of Circuit Court for Howard County in favor of defendants in an action brought to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.
Messrs. Bell & Purdum, C. N. Pollard, and Morrison & Holman, for appellant:
The discharge of the principal in an obligation discharges the surety or indorser from such obligation, even after a judgment has been taken against him upon default, and he is entitled to injunctive relief to prevent the enforcement of the judgment.
Brandt, Guaranty & Suretyship, 1st ed. § 125, 2d ed. 149; Ames v. Maclay, 14 Iowa, 281; Beall v. Cochran, 18 Ga. 88; Miller v. Gaskins, Smedes & M. Ch. 524; Dickason v. Bell, 13 La. Ann. 249; Cowley v. Northern P. R. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 825; Nealis v. Dicka, 72 Ind. 374; Buskirk, Pr. 318; Elliott, Appellate hief of injunction against a judgment by default rendered against him, where the principals successfully resisted and prevented a judgment against them on the ground of failure of consideration, as he had adequate remedy of review under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 627, providing that any person who is a party to a judgment may file in the court where such judgment was rendered a complaint for a review of the same. This is in accord with the general doctrine.

I. Against sureties.

a. Remedy at law as a bar to injunction.

Where there is an adequate remedy at law in the trial court, or by proceedings in error or on appeal, or by affidavit of illegality, an injunction will not be granted in favor of a surety against a judgment.

So, where a surety claims that he is released and the plaintiff moves for leave to issue execution on the judgment, the surety cannot enjoin such proceedings on the judgment, as he can obtain relief in the other proceedings. Martin v. Orr, 96 Ind. 27.

And in Gilder v. Merwin, 8 Whart. 522, it was held that a surety cannot obtain an injunction against a judgment on the ground that since the judgment he has discovered that he was relieved by an extension granted to the principal, where he has an adequate remedy at law by application to open the judgment.

And the failure of a creditor to prove up his claim on a note against the estate of the deceased maker thereof will not authorize a surety to enjoin a judgment on the note obtained by such creditor against himself, as he might have paid off the claim and proved up the same, or had himself appointed administrator if none had been appointed. Grindol v. Ruby, 14 Ill. App. 439.

So, a surety is not entitled to an injunction against a judgment on the ground that his liability is only secondary, where he has an adequate remedy by paying the debt and suing the principal for reimbursement. Stein v. Benedict, 83 Wis. 608.

And an injunction will not be granted against the levy of an execution issued on a judgment on a forged replevin bond in an action of trespass, on the ground that the surety never had his day in court on the question of forgery, where there is a remedy by affidavit of illegality. Rounsville v. McGinnis, 93 Ga. 579.

And the sureties on a claim bond cannot enjoin proceedings on an execution on the ground that the plaintiff and defendants in attachment tried that case with another, where they were not prejudiced and there is an adequate remedy in the court from which execution issued. Trieste v. Enslin (Ala.) 17 So. 366.

that a surety on a bail bond had no notice of the judgment not served on him will not authorize an injunction, as he has a remedy by action of nullity or appeal. Cook v. State, 16 La. 226.

. A.

Under Mansf. (Ark.) Dig. § 2435, authorizing a judgment in case of conviction against the principal and surety on a supersedeas bond without notice, where such judgment in a criminal case is rendered at a subsequent term without notice the same will not be enjoined, because if void there is a remedy by appeal, and if not void equity will not interfere. Shaul v. Duprey, 48 Ark. 381.

A surety is not entitled to an injunction against a judgment rendered against him and his principal, on the ground that his principal was not served with process, as the remedy is by motion in the case. Mason v. Miles, 68 N. C. 564.

b. Valid defense must be shown.

A surety is not entitled to an injunction against a judgment, where he does not show a valid defense to the same.

An execution will not be enjoined on the ground that an entry was not made upon the execution showing who was principal and who was surety, where the judgment was against several joint makers of a note, as such entry is not required by law, although one of the parties was a surety. Work v. Harper, 31 Miss. 107, 66 Am. Dec. 549. See Gatewood v. Burns, infra, I. c.

And a surety on the forthcoming bond for property seized on execution cannot enjoin a judgment against him on the ground that his principal has made away with the property, as this is not a good excuse for nondelivery. Laughlin v. Ferguson, 6 Dana, 111.

The surety on a note is not entitled to an injunction against the judgment thereon, on the ground that in another suit by the principal for an injunction against collection of the same debt a judgment was rendered against the sureties on the injunction bond to which complainant was not a party. Gowan v. Graves, 10 Helsk. 579.

An indulgence granted to a principal will not entitle his bail to an injunction where his conduct operated as an estoppel. Bay v. Tallmadge, 5 Johns. Ch. 305.

And a surety consenting to an indulgence granted to the principal cannot obtain an injunction against the judgment for the debt. Furber v. Bassett, 2 Duv. 433.

And an injunction will not be granted against a judgment at law, on the ground that the defendant was a surety for plaintiff in another matter, and that he might thereafter be liable as such surety. Thomas v. Bush, 1 Bibb, 506.

In Skinner v. Barney, 19 Ala. 668, it was held that a judgment at law would not be enjoined at Procedure, §§ 182, 183, 185; Walker v. Heller, 90 Ind. 198.

The court may decree the satisfaction of a judgment upon a complaint for that purpose.

McQuat v. Cathcart, 84 Ind. 587; Bowen v. Clark, 46 Ind. 405.

Messrs. Blacklige, Shirley, & Moon for appellees.

McCabe, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, James B. Michener, brought this suit against the Springfield Engine & Thresher Company and Edgar A. Simmons, sheriff of Howard county, concluding with a prayer to enjoin an execution and judgment against him and for all just and proper relief, and for satisfaction thereof. It appears from the complaint that John H. Kennedy, Benjamin E. Hockstedler, and Christian Kly, as principals, on December 1, 1888, executed three several promissory notes to the appellee company, amounting in the aggregate to $415, in consideration of a sale to them by said company of a separator engine and thresher of its manufacture; that, after the execution of said notes, appellant, Michener, wrote his name across the back of each as accommodation guarantor or indorser thereon; that after the maturity of the $140 note it was paid by said principals; that afterwards, the next note falling due, calling for $187.50, said payee brought suit on both of the unpaid notes against the principals and appellant as indorser, and on July 12, 1890, appellant was defaulted, and judg-the instance of a surety, on the ground that the plaintiff therein is not the owner of the judgment, where such claim was not maintained by the evidence. The court does not pass on the question whether such a defense was valid or not.

A surety on the bond of a trustee for creditors is not entitled to an injunction against a judgment thereon, on the ground that a claim against the estate was fraudulently allowed, as the surety is only liable for the assets, and is not prejudiced by errors in their distribution. Taylor v. Mallory, 76 Md. 1.

So, a judgment against a surety was not enjoined where his principal procured his signature by fraudulent representations in which the plaintiff at law did not participate. Griffith v. Reynolds, 4 Gratt. 46.

Servicio at defendant's place of residence while he was known to be absent from the state, and judgment rendered on the Fourth of July, which is a legal holiday, will not authorize an injunction against an execution on a judgment, where there is no statute prohibiting courts from sitting on the Fourth of July if it does not fall on Sunday, although complainant was a surety, and the plaintiff was notified to sue the principal and failed to do so, but assisted him in taking his property out of the state, and such principal was insolvent. Hamer v. Sears, 81 Ga. 288.

And an injunction was refused against a judgment on a bond, although there was usury in another bond given by the principal to the same creditor, which was paid. Cantey v. Blair, 2 Rich. Eq. 46.

So, where the principal paid interest in advance to propitiate the creditor, where there was no agreement therefor. Harnsberger v. Kinney, 18 Gratt. 511.

The collection of a debt against a surety was not enjoined although the creditor agreed, on request, to proceed against the principal debtor and failed to do so, where it was not shown that the surety was induced to forego some advantage which he would otherwise have taken. Wilds v. Attix, 4 Del. Ch. 200.

An injunction will not be granted against a judgment on a replevin bond, on behalf of a surety who never signed it, where he acknowledged it to be under his hand and seal, and an innocent purchaser acquired the same without notice of the defect. Maupin v. Whiting, 1 Call (Va.) 224.

Under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 2874, providing that no injunction shall be granted to stay any judgment or proceedings except so much as the complainant shall show himself equitably entitled to be relieved against, an injunction will not be granted for failure of attorneys to plead that the obligors on a bond signed as sureties on conditions, where such defense would not have availed, or for stipu-lating that the judgment should abide that in another case, where the defense was not made known to the attorneys. Ballow v. Wichita County, 74 Tex. 339.

c. In matters of negligence or for failure to make a legal defense.

The negligence and failure of a surety to make a defense where the same would be good at law will prevent an injunction; and equitable relief has been denied where it was claimed on the ground of release, set-off, usury, indemnity, mistake, nonliability, secondary liability, or that plaintiff was not entitled to sue on account of his relation with the principal.

So, an injunction will not be granted on the ground of new evidence, where complainant was negligent in making his defense at law. Floyd v. Jayne, 6 Johns. Ch. 479.

And a surety failing to exercise any diligence in making or ascertaining his defense, or not excusing his lack of diligence, cannot obtain an injunction against the judgment. Smith v. McLain, 11 W. Va. 664; Smith v. Powell, 60 Ill. 21.

The failure of a surety in an action at law to plead his discharge will prevent an injunction against the judgment. Jackson v. Patrick, 10 S. C. N. S. 197; Meek v. Howard, 10 Smedes & M. 502.

So, a surety of a sheriff amerced for the failure of a deputy to return an execution cannot enjoin such judgment where he failed to defend at law. Bierne v. Mann, 5 Leigh, 364.

And a surety having an opportunity to avail himself of the defense at law, of indulgence to the principal, and omitting to do so, cannot afterwards resort to a court of equity to obtain the benefit of such defense. Schroeppell v. Shaw, 3 N. Y. 446.

So, a surety who fails to plead his discharge at law cannot thereafter enjoin such judgment, as this is a legal defense in Illinois whatever may be the rule in England. Parker v. Singer Mfg. Co. 9 Ill. App. 383.

And the release of a surety by neglect "to sue the administrator of the principal" where the surety is injured, is a defense both in law and equity, and, not having been made at law, cannot afterwards be a ground for enjoining the judgment; and "a verbal request to sue without a resulting injury" to the surety does not afford any ground for equitable relief. Herbert v. Hobbs, 8 Stew. (Ala.) 9.

A sale execution and proceedings on a judgment will not be enjoined at the instance of a surety claiming a release and that he was not served with process or did not appear, where he has neglected to avail himself of an affidavit of illegality through mistake of his attorney. Hambrick v. Crawford, 55 Ga. 385.

And failure of a surety to make the legal defense ment was rendered thereon against him for $339.08 and costs, taxed at $21.90; that said judgment against him was based exclusively on his said indorsement of said notes; that Kennedy, Hockstedler, and Kly appeared, and thereafter made defense to said action, and at the March term of said court for 1892, upon the issues duly formed between them and said company, a trial thereof resulted in a verdict and judgment in their favor that the consideration of said notes had wholly failed, and that said plaintiff company take nothing by their suit, and that said defendants recover their costs; that, notwithstanding the full discharge of said principals by said judgment, which remains in full force, the said company is trying to collect said judgment against the appellant, and to that end caused an execution to issue thereon for the aforesaid amount thereof, and the aforesaid amount of costs, less a credit of $70, and placed the same in the hands of the sheriff of said county, Edgar A. Simmons, made a defendant in the complaint, which he still holds, and threatens to levy on the property of appellant, and to sell the same to satisfy said writ. The court overruled appellees' demurrer to the complaint, the demurrer being based on the ground of the alleged insufficiency of the facts in the complaint to constitute a cause of action. Appellees call in and sustain this ruling by assigning cross error thereon. The appellee company moved the court to dismiss the cause for want of jurisdiction, which motion the court sustained, and dismissed the cause for want of

of discharge of other sureties will bar him from equitable relief from the judgment by a bill of discovery, as the bill of discovery should have been filed as soon as judgment was taken, where no excuse is made for not filing it before the judgment was taken. M'Grew v. Tombeckbee Bank, 5 Port. (Ala.) 547.

And the failure of a bail to plead his discharge to an action on a sci. fi. will prevent an injunction against the judgment obtained thereon. Allen v. Hamilton, 9 Gratt. 255.

So, a surety after permitting a judgment, and after levy of execution, voluntarily uniting in withdrawing the effects of his associate from the operation of such process, and permitting a second judgment "for the validity and for the satisfaction of the demand," cannot then come into equity and have the judgment and execution enjoined on the ground that he was released by indulgence to the principal. Creath v. Sims, 46 U. S. 5 How. 102, 12 L. ed. 110.

A surety cannot maintain an action for injunction on the ground of a set-off for money paid by him and a cosurety for plaintiff, where the amount paid by plaintiff is not stated and no reason given for not making a legal defense. Wolcott v. Jones, 4 Allen, 367.

So, a surety asking for an injunction against a judgment containing usury must tender the amount loaned, with interest, as 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 772, § 8, Stat. 1837, p. 487, § 4, providing for a suit without any tender, only applies to a "borrower," besides the complainant should not have waited until after judgment. A further claim that the surety was discharged by an extension of time to the principal was held insufficient because not made at law and by two of the judges on the further ground that the agreement for extension was void being made for an usurious consideration. Vilas v. Jones, 1 N. Y. 274, Affirming 10 Paige, 76.

So, the claim of a surety that he did not defend as he was a mere surety and was ignorant of the usury will not authorize an injunction against a decree on the ground of usury, as he should have been diligent and ascertained such defense. Moran Woodyard, 8 B. Mon. 537.

So, where a surety obtained a judgment against his cosurety for contribution, and the defendant in that suit by a bill of discovery could have maintained the defense that the plaintiff had been fully indemnified, an injunction against the judgment was denied. Wright v. Klug, Harr. Ch. 12.

And mistake of law as to bar of a debt by limitation will not authorize an injunction. Harner v. Price, 17 W. Va. 523.

A surety was refused an injunction against a judgment on a bond for purchase money payable to court commissioners where the injunction was claimed on the ground that other sureties were to sign it, and did not, where no defense of non est factum was made at law or excused. Shields v. McClung, 6 W. Va. 79.

Or against a judgment for money surrendered by a collector to the confederate government, where there was no forcible seizure, and no allegation of the loyalty of the collector, and there was negligence in not making a defense. Rogers v. Parker, 1 Hughes, C. C. 143.

Or where he claimed that the principal should be first exhausted, but he did not have it determined, as he might have done, in the action at law, that he was a surety, under N. C. Code, §§ 2100, 2101, providing for such determination. Gatewood v. Burns, 99 N. C. 257.

See Work v. Harper, supra, I. a.

Under Swan's (Ohio) Stat. 482, providing that where a showing is made that one or more of the persons bound, signed as surety for his codefendant, the execution should direct the debt to be made out of a principal first, a surety who neglects to have the fact that he is such ascertained cannot enjoin an execution sale of his property on the ground that the principal must be first exhausted. Elliott v. Elmore, 16 Ohio, 27.

And a surety cannot have a judgment against him enjoined on the ground that his principal is the equitable owner of such judgment, where such defense was not made in the action in which the judgment was rendered and no excuse is given for failure to make it. Stein v. Benedict, 83 Wis. 603.

An injunction will not be granted in favor of an indorser on a note against a judgment on such note on the ground that a bank—the real party in interest—was prohibited from obtaining such bills by negotiation of its own paper, by the statutes of the state, where negligence is shown in not making such defense at law. Lee v. Insurance Bank, 2 Ala. 21.

In Kelley v. Kriess, 68 Cal. 210, it was held that an injunction will not be granted where complainant neglected to defend the action at law or to prosecute a motion for a new trial.

And that a defendant at law was a married woman and surety for her husband is not ground for enjoining an execution sale on the judgment, where such defense was not made at law or excused. Wilson v. Coolidge, 42 Mich. 112.

But in Medart v. Fasnatch, 15 La. Ann. 621, it was held that an injunction may be obtained by a wife against the enforcement of a judgment against her and her husband jointly, on a debt made in fraud of the law, where she is surety for her husband, as the disability of the wife gives equity jurisdiction.

And in Bradshaw v. Combs, 102 Ill. 423, where a surety had been released by an extension granted to the principal without the consent of the surety, an injunction was granted against an execution. The question as to whether or not the defense was jurisdiction. This ruling is questioned by the assignment of errors by the appellant.

The ground on which the learned counsel for appellees seek to support the action of the trial court is that, this being an application to a court of equity for the extraordinary relief by way of injunction, it has no jurisdiction of the cause, because the plaintiff had a plain and adequate remedy at law; and that he had such remedy at law, they cite Ross v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120 (rehearing, 140 Ind. 145). It was there held that a judgment by which the party recovering it had secured an unfair advantage, and wherever by accident, mistake, fraud, or otherwise an unfair advantage has been obtained in proceedings at law, and it is against conscience to make use of such advantage, a court of equity will restrain the party from making use of the same; and, after judgment, any facts which prove it to be against conscience to execute such judgment, and of which the injured party could not avail himself in defense of the suit, will authorize the court to interfere by injunction, and restrain the party from enforcing the judgment. But we held in that case that the facts which gave rise to the appellant's right to relief occurring after the rendition of the judgment against him constituted material new matter under our Code, authorizing a review, though it would not have authorized a review prior to the Code; and that the remedy of review of a judgment at law authorized by the Code was a remedy at law, and was adequate; and therefore dea legal one is not discussed in the opinion, although made in the briefs.

And in Felch v. Lee, 15 Wis. 265, an execution sale was restrained on behalf of the surety, where the principal was the equitable owner of the judgment. The case does not show why defense was not made at law.

A judgment obtained by a second indorser against the first will be enjoined where the proceeds of a discounted note were divided between the maker and second indorser under an agreement, although the defense was not made at law, where the question of jurisdiction was not raised in equity. Galbrath v. Martin, 5 Humph. 50.

d. In summary proceedings.

A surety is entitled to an injunction against a judgment in summary proceedings, where he has had no opportunity of defending and he has a good defense to the action.

As, where a surety obtained a summary judgment, without notice, against a co-surety for the whole of the debt as though he was the principal, such judgment may be enjoined as to one half of the debt. Creed v. Scruggs, 1 Heisk. 560.

And a surety upon a bond for a writ of error may have enjoined an execution and proceedings upon a judgment, where his name has been forged to such bond. Brooks v. Harrison, 2 Ala. 209.

So, a judgment on a forged appeal bond, rendered in a court of last resort, may be enjoined by an inferior court, as such judgment is void as to the surety whose name is forged, and equity always gives relief, and the supreme court of Texas has not such equitable jurisdiction, although it had power to enquire into the execution of this bond, and the complainant is not concluded by the judgment, as he was not a party. Stapleton v. Wilcox, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 542.

And a surety on an appeal bond is entitled to enjoin an execution on a judgment of the supreme court, where his name is omitted in that judgment, as the execution is void as to him. Trammell v. Watson, 25 Tex. Supp. 210.

And an execution issued from the supreme court on an appeal bond will be enjoined at the instance of an indorser on a note who was a defendant in the lower court, and who did not appeal, and whose name was signed to the appeal bond without authority; and his equity is better than that of a surety on an appeal bond where the appeal prevented the debt being made from the principal. Coles v. Anderson, 8 Humph. 499.

Sureties on a sheriff's bond may obtain an injunction against a judgment taken on motion, without notice, for non-return of an execution, where the sheriff's term of office had expired before the return day, as the same could not be corrected in the supreme court rendering the judgment. 31 L. R. A.

ment because no errors appear on the face of the record. Kinzer v. Helm, 7 Heisk. 672.

And after a judgment against a sheriff and his sureties on a motion on notice only to the principal, the only ground for injunction is a statement of the facts constituting a plea of non est factum, and the fact that the sureties resisted the application for a judgment in the summary motion, in order to be a bar, must be shown by the record. McClure v. Colclough, 6 Ala. 492, 5 Ala. 65.

And sureties on a forfeited replevin bond may have the execution thereon enjoined in excess of their liability on the bond. Miles v. Davis, 36 Tex. 690.

And a surety on a claim bond is entitled to an injunction, where the bond has been quashed and afterwards a judgment of forfeiture was entered and there has been no trial of the right of property. Alsop v. Allen, 43 Tex. 598.

So, on a trial of the right of property in an attachment, where judgment went against the claimant for the property and against the surety for damages, and the latter tenders the damages, he may have an execution against him for the value of the property enjoined, where there was no judgment against him for the property requiring its return or making it subject to the lien judgment. Gentry v. Lockett, 37 Tex. 503.

And after a judgment had been rendered for plaintiffs for property claimed in attachment, and the sheriff had returned the claimant's bond forfeited, a bill by the surety to stay execution on the ground of release on account of consolidation of cases and change of venue taken, and because the forfeiture was void, is a bill under Ala. Code, § 3522, to stay proceedings on the judgment in a personal action, and injunction should issue on giving the statutory bond. Ex parte Fechheimer, 103 Ala. 154.

In Langridge v. Judge of 21st Jud. Dist. Ct. 46 La. Ann. 20, it was held that a surety on a bond for the appearance of a criminal was entitled to an injunction on the ground that the principal had not been called by the sheriff under order of court.

But in Whiteside v. Latham, 2 Coldw. 91, it was held that an injunction will not be granted against a judgment rendered on motion against a surety of the purchaser of property at a commissioner's sale, as no notice is necessary and the remedy is in that action.

And in Clegg v. Darragh, 68 Tex. 337, it was held that a surety on a claimant's bond is not entitled to service of process in the cause, but is bound to take notice of all proceedings, and that negligence and delay of eight months after judgment will prevent him from obtaining relief on the ground that the principal's name was signed without authority.

And a surety on a forthcoming bond cannot enjoin proceedings on the same on the ground that nied the relief by injunction. It is therefore contended by the appellee company that the discharge of the principals on the trial, after the judgment against the surety, was a fact occurring after the judgment against the surety constituting "material new matter discovered since the rendition of the judgment," and hence that entitled appellant to the remedy of review, excluding him from the right to the extraordinary remedy by injunction. This contention granted would by no means justify the assumption that the trial court had no jurisdiction, and rightly dismissed the cause for want thereof. When the two jurisdictions of law and equity were separate, it might be, under that system, when the plaintiff's cause of action stated by him in a court of equity was of such a nature that it fell within the exclusive jurisdiction of a court of law, the court of equity had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and it could take no other action in the matter than to dismiss the cause for want of jurisdiction. This was so because courts of equity had no other powers than equity powers. Not so in our reformed system of procedure. Not only does the same judge, under that system, exercise both law and equity powers, but he exercises both legal and equitable jurisdiction, and administers both legal and equitable relief in each case, when the facts pleaded and proved warrant it. How, then, can the cause be dismissed for want of jurisdiction merely because the plaintiff asks for equitable relief, while his facts show that he is entitled to legal relief? The court being clothed by the Code with power and jurisdiction to administer both or either legal or equitable relief in the same case, its jurisdiction is not, and cannot be, defeated by it appearing from the facts stated that the equitable relief sought cannot be awarded because such facts show that the only relief the plaintiff is entitled to is purely legal relief and vice versa; nor is the jurisdiction defeated because the facts stated in the complaint are not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to either legal or equitable relief. The remedy in such a case is a demurrer for want of sufficient facts. On the filing of there was usury in the debt for which the judgment was rendered, as it is questionable if a court of equity can go behind the judgment of forfeiture. Baine v. Williams, 10 Smedes & M. 113.

e. For newly discovered evidence.

A surety will be granted an injunction against a judgment on the ground of newly discovered evidence of usury, payment, or release.

So, a surety in a replevin bond given for a judgment may enjoin proceedings thereon, on the ground that the same contained usury of which he had no knowledge until after the execution of the same. Crutcher v. Trabue, 5 Dana, 80.

And sureties may be relieved of the judgment against them by the payment of principal and interest, where usury was not discovered until after judgment on account of the death of the principal. Jones v. Kilgore, 2 Rich. Eq. 63.

So, a discovery by a surety in a sheriff's bond, after judgment, of a receipt showing payment of the debt, will entitle to an injunction against the judgment. Harvey v. Seashol, 4 W. Va. 115.

And a surety may obtain an injunction against proceedings on a judgment, where the debt has been paid by his principal but he did not know of that fact in time to make a defense in the action at law, and the evidence has been discovered since judgment. McGehee v. Gold, 63 Ill. 215.

New evidence that a surety was released by an extension, discovered after judgment, will entitle to relief against the same, where it could not have been discovered before by due diligence. Cox v. Mobile & G. R. Co. 44 Ala. 611; Kennedy v. Evans, 31 Ill. 258; Montague v. Mitchell, 23 Ill. 451.

And a judgment against sureties will be enjoined where they were released by an extension granted to the principal for a valuable consideration, and the creditor also took collaterals which did not mature until after the debt, and the sureties had no knowledge of the release until after judgment. Armistead v. Ward, 2 Patton & H. (Va.) 504.

f. Where defense was prevented.

An injunction was granted in favor of a surety against a judgment, where the plaintiff at law had acted collusively or prevented a defense by improper conduct.

So, a judgment against a surety, obtained by misrepresentation of the attorney for plaintiff that he did not propose to molest her, but that the same was only to enable him to make the money from the principal and thus save her from liability, thereby preventing a defense, should be enjoined where she had a valid defense to the action. Union Bank v. Geary, 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 99, 8 L. ed. 80.

1 L. R. A.

And a surety prevented from making a defense by fraudulent representation of plaintiff at law may obtain an injunction against proceedings on the judgment. Kelley v. Krieses, 63 Cal. 210.

So, an injunction will be granted against a judgment on a note, where the same was given to compound a felony, and a defense was prevented by falsehood and fraud of the plaintiff at law, in representing that judgment had already been taken. Burpee v. Smith, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 327.

And preventing a surety from making a valid defense of release by the discontinuance of several actions, and by delay until his only witness had died, authorizes an injunction against the judgment. Mack v. Doty, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 393.

And proceedings on a judgment and execution held by one surety against the other sureties for the whole debt will be enjoined, where the holder of the judgment had prevented a defense by representing that he would not take judgment for more than his share, and the sureties offer to pay that amount. Markham v. Angier, 57 Ga. 43.

And a surety on an administration bond may enjoin proceedings on a default judgment against the administrator upon an account twenty years old, rendered in a county other than that in which he resided, as the presumption of fraud between the administrator and creditor is almost conclusive. Washington v. Barnes, 41 Ga. 307.

g. For equitable defenses.

Where the grounds of relief are equitable a surety is entitled to an injunction against a judgment. Some courts hold that in matters of release of a surety on account of an extension granted to the principal an injunction will be granted, as this is an equitable defense. Some hold that the remedy is concurrent at law or equity. But the weight of authority is that this is a legal defense and a failure to make such defense, which is not excused, will prevent an injunction. See supra, I. c, In matters of negligence or for failure to make a legal defense.

Where a surety on a bond in the county court was to hold the fund as security for such suretyship, and he gave a note to the principal simply as such a demurrer, the plaintiff may either amend his complaint pending the demurrer, or he may amend it after the demurrer is sustained. Appellant was deprived of this right by the dismissal of his cause. If we could say that the complaint was so defective that it could not be so amended as to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action entitling the plaintiff to either legal or equitable relief, then we could very well hold that, the result reached in the dismissal of the cause being the same that would have been reached in the sustaining of the demurrer, there was no available error, though the method of reaching the result was erroneous.

This leads us to inquire whether this complaint was so defective in its statement of facts as that it could not have been amended so as to state a cause of action, either legal or equitable. It is not contended by the appellees that it might not be so amended. The complaint states, and the demurrer admits, that appellant was an accommodation indorser, a mere surety for Kennedy, Hockstedler, and Kly on the notes which were the foundation of the judgment against appellant, and that afterwards in the same action said principals defeated said notes against them on the ground of failure of consideration. In Bridges v. Blake, 106 Ind., at page 835, it was said: "Upon its face the mortgage purported to be a contract of suretyship, and the general rule is that to enforce such a contract it is essential that the obligation against the principal must be subsisting. The extinguishment of the direct engagement of the principal, no matter how accomplished, extinguishes the collateral liability of the surety." Baker v. Merriam, 97 Ind. 539, and cases cited; State v. Blake, 2 Ohio St. 147; Brandt, Suretyship, § 131." But there are exceptions to this general rule. For instance, the discharge of the principal by the act of the law in which the creditor does not participate will not release the surety. A familiar illustration of this rule is that the discharge of the principal in bankruptcy or under insolvent laws, on account of infancy, coverture, or non compos mentis, does not discharge the surety. Gregg v. Wilson, 50 Ind. 490; Post v. Loscy, 111 Ind. 74, evidence, and was to pay the interest to the principal's wife, an injunction was granted against a judgment at law obtained by an assignee of the note, as the surety could not make the defense at law that the terms of the written contract were varied by a parol contract. Cornelius v. Thomas, 1 Tenn. Ch. 233.

An action by a surety to enjoin a judgment at law in favor of a co-surety against him for contribution may be maintained where there are new parties and new equitable issues in the suit, and the co-surety has received assets sufficient to reimburse him. Simmons v. Camp, 65 Ga. 673.

And a surety paying a debt for his insolvent principal pending a suit against him on an account assigned by the principal to a third party may have the judgment against him enjoined on the ground of equitable set-off, as the law only authorizes mutual set-offs. Tuscumbia, C. & D. R. Co. v. Rhodes, 8 Ala. 203.

And sureties are entitled to an injunction against a judgment in order to set off a judgment held by them against plaintiff's assignor. Hobbs v. Duff, 23 Cal. 566.

A surety who is released by the refusal of the creditor on request to sue the principal may obtain an injunction against the judgment at law, if his defense was refused in the action at law as doubtful on the ground that it was an equitable defense; and a surety may come into a court of equity and require the creditor to sue the principal. King v. Baldwin, 17 Johns. 384, 8 Am. Dec. 415, Reversing 2 Johns. Ch. 554.

And a surety may obtain relief by injunction against a judgment, where he has been discharged by an extension granted to the principal; and he is not bound by an attempt to defend at law, where such defense was held an equitable defense. Dunham v. Downer, 31 Vt. 249.

And where an injunction was asked against a suit at law, in behalf of the surety, on account of an extension to the principal, the chancery court allowed the action at law to proceed until judgment, as the defense might be made, but stayed execution. Mackintosh v. Wyatt, 3 Hare, 562.

In Hempstead v. Watkins, 6 Ark. 317, 42 Am. Dec. 606, it was held that where sureties are discharged by the act or failure of the principal and made no defense in the action at law, they may have enjoined the judgment rendered therein, as the jurisdiction of chancery and common law is concurrent.

A surety was granted an injunction against proceedings on a judgment where there was a suit pending to settle his principal's estate, and the creditor was indebted to such estate, and relief was given by way of set-off and compensation. Meade v. Grigsby, 26 Gratt. 612.

In McHaney v. Crabtree, 6 T. B. Mon. 104, it was held that the release of a surety by extension or release granted to the principal is an equitable defense, and cannot be used as a legal defense to an action on an injunction bond given to enjoin a judgment.

h. On account of statutes.

Under the law of Mississippi the liability on an official bond of a sheriff is limited to the amount of the penalty, and a surety who has been compelled to pay the whole amount of his bond is entitled to an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment subsequently obtained by a third party, where the plea of payment pais darrein continuance was refused on the ground that the mandate of the supreme court was imperative. Humphreys v. Leggett, 50 U. S. 9 How. 297, 13 L. ed. 145.

Where the remedy by certiorari was lost without fault of complainant, on the ground that the act in regard to certiorari was unconstitutional, an injunction was granted against a judgment on a constable's bond for a false return of "No property," where all the property the debtor had was exempt. Cobbs v. Coleman, 14 Tex. 594.

A surety on a sheriff's bond who pays his part after the joining of issue in a suit on the bond may have the judgment thereon enjoined in an action of nullity, as La. Civ. Proc. 613, provides for an action of nullity against a money judgment on exhibition of a receipt previously lost proving payment, though such proof was not presented on the trial of the main case. In this case the payments were made after the answer was filed. Florat v. Handy, 35 La. Ann. 814.

See also, as to statute, Elliott v. Elmore, and Gatewood v. Burns, supra, I. c., and Ex parte Fechtelmer, supra, I. d.

i. Pleading and parties.

A surety is not entitled to an injunction against 60 Am. Rep. 677; Brandt, Suretyship, § 126; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 778. This author, at section 125, says, and we think correctly, that, "if the principal is discharged because of matters inherent in the transaction, even after judgment against the surety, the latter will be exonerated thereby." But appellees' learned counsel contend that, notwithstanding these principles entitling appellant to relief, he cannot invoke the aid of the extraordinary remedy of injunction, for the reason that he had a plain, efficient, adequate, and complete remedy at law by a complaint to review on account of new matter arising since the rendition of the judgment against him in the defeat of the obligation against his principals; citing Ross v. Banta, supra, in support of this contention. The judgment here involved being in the nature of a judgment at law, and as judgments at law can only be reviewed by virtue of the Code, that remedy, as was held in the case cited, is a legal remedy.

But it is contended by the appellant that he is not bound to resort to the legal remedy if that remedy is not as practicable and effia judgment on the ground of set-off, unless he tenders the amount due. Smith v. Smith, 76 Tex. 410.

And a surety on a joint judgment on a note obtained from his principal by the plaintiff at law through fraud will not be granted an injunction, where the principal is not a party to the injunction action. Emmons v. McKesson, 5 Jones, Eq. 92.

So, a surety is not entitled to an injunction against a judgment on the ground of usury, where the principal is not made a party defendant in the injunction suit. Boughton v. Allen, 11 Paige, 321.

And an injunction will not be granted in behalf of a surety on a note on the ground of delay in bringing suit against the principal where the petition does not show that he signed the note as security, or served notice requiring the holder of the note to proceed against the principal. Dailey v. Wynn, 38 Tex. 614.

An injunction was refused against a judgment on a writ of error bond, which injunction was claimed on the ground that other defendants in the court below were also liable for the same debt, but who did not prosecute proceedings in error. Turner v. Smith, 9 Tex. 626.

And an injunction was refused against a judgment on a foreign transcript where the defendant obtained a complete record from another state showing that the judgment creditor had seized sufficient property of the principal debtor to satisfy the judgment, but it was not alleged that anything had occurred since the first judgment was rendered, releasing this complainant, and it was an attempt to introduce new evidence upon matters in judgment. Campbell v. Briggs, 8 Rob. (La.) 110.

But a surety on a note who is the only party defendant to a judgment need not make the other parties to the note defendants in his suit to enjoin the judgment. Burpee v. Smith, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 327.

j. Injunction bonds.

A surety on an injunction bond given to stay a judgment against the acceptor of a bill of exchange has no claim, where such judgment was paid by the surety, against an indorser of the bill of exchange for remuneration of the amount so paid. Bohannon v. Combs, 12 B. Mon. 563.

In Louisiana the supreme court on affirming an appeal dissolving an injunction may amend the judgment below so as to embrace the surety on the injunction bond and condemn him in damages for enjoining a sale. Mora v. Avery, 22 La. Ann. 417.

An erroneous judgment against sureties on an injunction bond will not be reversed where they do not complain of error. Martin v. Sykes, 25 Tex. Supp. 197.

Where the principal sought to have a judgment against him and his surety enjoined, but did not make his surety a party in the injunction suit, and such surety was also on the injunction bond, the court properly entered judgment against both principal and surety for the debt on the dissolution. L. R. A.

tion of the injunction, as N. C. Rev. Code, chap. 32, §§ 14, 17, provide that on the dissolution of an injunction a judgment shall be rendered on the bond as on an appeal bond. Emmons v. McKesson, 5 Jones, Eq. 92.

See also Gowan v. Graves, supra, I. b., and McHaney v. Crabtree, supra, I. g.

II. In favor of sureties.

A judgment on a guardian's bond assigned to his surety, who paid only a part of the same, was enjoined at the instance of the guardian, where such judgment was for money charged against him as assets received from a former insolvent guardian for whom this surety and the second guardian were both sureties on his bond. Flickinger v. Hull, 5 Gill, 60.

Under Tenn. acts 1899, chaps. 69, 81, providing for a judgment on motion without notice in favor of a surety against his principal, a judgment so taken against a person not a party to the suit, where the relation of surety did not exist, will be enjoined, as the remedy at law is doubtful. Ialer v. Turner, 7 Humph. 116.

An execution issued on a judgment obtained by a surety without notice against a party whose name was forged to a note may be enjoined in any county where it is sought to be enforced, as the court rendering judgment could not give relief as it had no jurisdiction. Douglass v. Joyner, 1 Bart. 32.

And as analogous to a case of cosureties, a resident of a school district obtaining a judgment against such district and exhausting the school property and seeking to hold other residents liable, will be enjoined from further proceedings on the ground that he himself is also liable as a resident of that district. Kenyon v. Clarke, 2 R. I. 67.

And a judgment in favor of an acceptor against the drawer of a bill was enjoined where the plaintiff at law allowed his name to be used to prevent a defense which the defendant had against the real party in interest and the acceptor or surety had not paid anything on the bill. Greenleaf v. Maher, 2 Wash. C. C. 44 and 393.

So, a judgment obtained by a surety against his principal will not be enjoined on the ground that the payment for which the judgment was obtained was made by another surety, where there was negligence on the part of complainant in ascertaining such defense. Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. 40.

But a principal cannot obtain an injunction against a judgment on the ground of release of his surety by the creditor. Ragsdale v. Gossett, 2 Lea, 729.

For injunctions in favor of sureties, see, further, Markham v. Angier, supra, I. f; Creed v. Scruggs, supra, I. d; Simmons v. Camp, supra, I. g.

For sureties obtaining injunctions against judgments for matters arising subsequent to their rendition, see note to Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Wells (Ark.) 30 L. R. A. 560.

I. T.

cient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration, both in respect to the final relief and the mode of obtaining it, as the equitable remedy; there the aid of equity, and injunction relief may be invoked. That is the true rule in such cases. Thatcher v. Humble, 67 Ind. 444; Bishop v. Moorman, 98 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 731; Beach, Inj. § 32, and authorities there cited; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 514, 32 L. ed. 1008; Lewis v. Cocks, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 470, 23 L. ed. 71. And it is further contended by appellant that the legal remedy is not as practicable and as efficient as the remedy by injunction, because he contends that a complaint to review would require him to seek to review the whole proceeding, and thereby, if successful, he would open the whole case; not only the judgment against himself, but the judgment in favor of and discharging his principals from liability on the notes. If that is so, then there could be no review at all of any part of the proceeding; because the only ground for saying that there is a right to review in appellant at all is on the ground of the new matter of the discharge of the principals in the notes after the judgment had been taken against the surety; and if to review on account of that matter means to review the other judgments exonerating and discharging the principals from liability on the notes, as well as to review the judgment against the surety thereon, then there is no ground for review whatever. The statute provides that "any person who is a party to any judgment . . . may file in the court where such judgment is rendered a complaint for a review of the proceedings and judgment." Rev. Stat. 1894, § 627 (Rev.

Stat. 1881, § 615). Under this statute appellant was entitled to review the judgment against him without disturbing the separate judgment in the same proceeding in favor of his principals. The general prayer for relief was broad enough in this case to have justified the court in awarding the legal relief of a review of that judgment, and the facts stated in the complaint only lacked one element to entitle the plaintiff to the legal relief of a review, and that was to file a transcript of the record of the judgment referred to and described in the complaint. The facts stated did not entitle the plaintiff to equitable relief by way of injunction, because they show that he had an ample legal remedy by review; but that did not, as before observed, justify the dismissal. It did not state facts sufficient to warrant the legal relief by way of review, because it did not set forth as an exhibit thereto a complete transcript of the judgment, or so much thereof as is necessary to fully present the error complained of. McDade v. McDade, 29 Ind. 340; Comer v. Himes, 58 Ind. 573; Meharry v. Meharry, 59 Ind. 257; Whitehall v. Crawford, 67 Ind. 84; Stevens v. Logansport, 76 Ind. 498; Frank v. Davis, 103 Ind. 281. For that reason the court ought to have sustained the demurrer to the complaint, and allowed the plaintiff to amend his complaint in this respect if he so desired.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule appellees' motion to dismiss, and sustain the demurrer to the complaint, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint if he so desires.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Jesse HOLDOM, Conservator, etc., of Paul Holz, Appl.,
v.

ANCIENT ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN.

(159 Ill. 619.)

The killing of the insured by the insane beneficiary in a life policy under such circumstances that it would be murder if the beneficiary was sane does not forfeit the policy nor bar a suit for the money.

(October 11, 1895.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First Department, reversing a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a mutual benefit certificate in favor of one who while insane murdered the insured. Reversed.

Statement by Phillips, J.:

On April 10, 1888, appellee made and delivered to one Carl Holz a certificate in consideration of payment of an examination fee and all dues and assessments, etc. The certificate states that Carl Holz is a member of Allegheny Lodge No. 346, located in Chicago, and entitled to participate in the beneficiary fund to the amount of $2,000, which at his death shall be paid to his son Paul Holz. Suit was brought by the beneficiary by his conservator on that certificate, the declaration averring that Carl Holz departed this life on the 16th day of December, 1890, and avers

Note.—For the effect of suicide to defeat recovery on an insurance policy providing that it shall be void in case of suicide "sane or insane," see Billings v. Accident Ins. Co. (Vt.) 17 L. R. A. 89, and note.

The case of Shellenberger v. Ransom (Neb.) 25 L. 81 L. R. A.

R. A. 564, denying that murder of an ancestor will defeat an inheritance by the murderer, is followed by Carpenter's Appeal (Pa.) 29 L. R. A. 145. Contra, Riggs v. Palmer (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 340. See also note, 25 L. R. A. 564.

compliance by Carl Holz with all the rules and laws of the order and at the time of his death was a member in good standing, and appellee had satisfactory evidence of death. Avers that appellant is a minor son of deceased and the beneficiary in the certificate, the appointment of conservator, and that $2,000 has not been paid nor any part thereof. Appellee pleaded the general issue and a special plea alleging that the beneficiary in the certificate on December 15, 1890, killed and murdered the insured whereby he forfeited and lost all rights as a beneficiary under the certificate. Replication was filed to the special plea averring that the beneficiary did not murder the insured as alleged in the plea, but avers that he did kill the insured as alleged while the beneficiary was insane. To that replication appellee filed a general demurrer which was overruled, and appellee elected to stand by the demurrer on an agreed state of facts. Judgment was entered for plaintiff for $2,000 with costs of suit. An appeal was prosecuted to the appellate court of the first district, where that judgment was reversed and a judgment entered for the defendant. The beneficiary by his conservator prosecutes this appeal.

Messrs. Munson T. Case and Case & Hogan, for appellant:

If the beneficiary, Paul Holz, killed the deceased, Carl Holz, without committing a crime, and thereby an injury was done the next of kin of the deceased, to whom would Paul Holz or the estate of Paul Holz be liable on this account? Certainly not to the insurance company.

Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 U. S. 754, 24 L. ed. 580; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 25 Conn. 265, 65 Am. Dec. 571.

The defendant below could not plead in bar or as a set-off anything which did not constitute a cause of action on its part against Paul Holz or the estate of Paul Holz.

Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Broughton, 109 U. S. 121, 27 L. ed. 878; Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, 30 L. ed. 740; Harrisburg v. Rickards, 119 U. S. 199, 30 L. ed. 353.

No crime was committed by the beneficiary.

Schreiner v. High Court of Illinois Catholic O. F. 35 Ill. App. 576; dissenting opinion in Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 519, 5 L. R. A. 340.

We may not "enhance the penalties and forfeitures provided by law for the punishment of crime."

People v. Thornton, 25 Hun, 456; Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 240.

The courts have uniformly refused to punish the estate of a deceased suicide when the suicide at the time of committing the act of self-destruction was insane.

Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Broughton, and Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, supra; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Daviess, 87 Ky. 541; Keels v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 29 Fed. Rep. 198; Blackstone v. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co. 74 Mich. 592, 3 L. R. A. 486; Buswell, Insanity, §§ 814-822; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 187-189; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 25 Conn. 265, 65 81 L. R. A.

Am. Dec. 571; Anthony v. Slaid, 11 Met. 290; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 124, and cases cited.

Only such demands as constitute a subsisting cause of action can be set off; nothing can be pleaded as a set-off on which a separate action cannot be maintained.

22-Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 267, 280-290; Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 U. S. 754, 24 L. ed. 580; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. New York & N. H. R. Co., and Anthony v. Slaid, supra.

Suicide is as great a temptation to the insured to benefit his estate under certain circumstances as murder of the insured is to the beneficiary.

Van Zandt v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 55 N. Y. 176, 14 Am. Rep. 215.

An insane act is not distinguishable from an accidental act.

Breasted v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 8 N. Y. 805, 59 Am. Rep. 482.

Public policy should not be invoked to vitiate the contract in this case.

Sir George Jessel in Printing & Numerical Registering Co. v. Sampson, L. R. 19 Eq. 465; Davies v. Davies, L. R. 38 Ch. Div. 364; Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 242, opinions by Best, Ch. J., and Burroughs, J.

An infant cannot be held in an action based on contract by framing the action in tort.

Pollock, Torts, § 47; Bishop, Non-Cont. L. § 566.

The legislature has declared that insanity absolves from crime.

Rev. Stat. Ill. Crim. Code, §§ 282, 284.

Mr. James McCartney, for appellee:

An insane person is responsible in a civil action for his tort in all cases where a sane person would be responsible.

McIntyre v. Sholty, 121 Ill. 660; 1 Chitty, Pl. p. 76; Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506, 5 L. R. A. 340; Hatch v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 120 Mass. 550, 21 Am. Rep. 541; Amicable Soc. v. Bolland, 4 Bligh, N. R. 194; Princes of Wales Assn. Co. v. Palmer, 25 Beav. 605; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 57; Porter, Ins. *129 et seq.; Cooley, Torts, pp. 97 et seq.

An insane person causing the death of another by an act which would be felonious if sane, is liable in damages therefor.

Jewell v. Colby, 66 N. H. 399; McIntyre v. Sholty, supra.

A beneficiary in an insurance policy who kills the insured cannot recover the insurance money.

Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 29 L. ed. 997; Hatch v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. supra.

A person insured in the Ancient Order of the United Workmen Society may change his beneficiary at will. The beneficiary has no vested interest in the insurance money until the death of the insured.

Bagley v. Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W. 181 Ill. 498; Martin v. Stubbings, 126 Ill. 387; Supreme Council of C. K. of A. v. Franke, 187 Ill. 118; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 92 Mich. 584; Sabin v. Phinney, 184 N. Y. 428.

Public policy would not favor permitting an insane person to profit by his own wrong.

Greenhood, Pub. Pol. pt. 1, Rule 11; Cooley,

Torts, pp. 97 et seq.; McIntyre v. Sholty, supra; Krom v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb. 647; Morse v. Crawford, 17 Vt. 499, 44 Am. Dec. 849.

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question of law presented in this record is: Does an insane beneficiary in a life insurance policy, who kills the insured under such circumstances as would cause the killing to be murder if the beneficiary was sane, thereby forfeit his right to recover the insurance money? This presents a question of first impression. That an assignee who was sane, of a policy of life insurance, caused the death of the assured by felonious means, has been held sufficient to defeat a recovery on the policy. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 29 L. ed. 997; Prince of Wales Assn. Co. v. Palmer, 25 Beav. 605.

The general doctrine is that insane persons are liable for damages caused by their torts, distinguishing these from criminal liability. In Morse v. Crawford, 17 Vt. 499, 44 Am. Dec. 849, it was held that the insanity of a bailee did not relieve him from liability for destroying property held by him as bailee. In Cross v. Kent, 32 Md. 581, a lunatic was held liable in damages for burning a barn whether occurring through negligence or as an insane act. Taggard v. Innes, 12 U. C. C. P. 77, it was held that insanity constitutes no defense in a civil action for damages in an action of trespass vi et armis. In Williams v. Hays, 148 N. Y. 442, 28 L. R. A. 153, it was held that insanity of one who is the owner pro hac vice of a vessel did not relieve him from liability to other owners for negligence in her management. On this latter case many authorities are collected and considered and the question is treated exhaustively. In McIntyre v. Sholty, 131 Ill. 660, it was held that insanity did not avail as a defense to a civil action from damages resulting from killing a person which was under circumstances that would have been a felony had the insane person who did the killing been sane at the time. Such is the current of authorities as to the liability of an insane person for his torts. By the great weight of authority it is held in such cases, the lunatic, not having the element of intention or malice, is only liable for damages that would be compensatory, and not liable for vindictory damages; and such is the rule in this state. McIntyre v. Sholty, supra.

The reason for the rule that an insane man shall be held liable for his tort is, where a loss must fall upon one of two persons equally innocent it must be borne by the one who caused it. The liability is in no way dependent upon the intent or design to commit the act, for a lunatic can have no will and can form no design or intent, and would not be liable for a tort wherein the intent is a necessary ingredient. Such is the rule with reference to torts. A very different question is, however, presented with reference to a contract of insurance and the liability of a company on its policy. In the absence of an express stipulation relieving the company from liability in such case where there is no fraud or design, a fire insurance company is not relieved from liability on its policy by reason of loss by fire through negligence of the assured or his servants. Shaw v. Robberds, 6 Ad. & El. 75; Walker v. Maitland, 5 Barn. & Ald. 171; Bush v. Royal, 2 Barn. & Ald. 73; Dobson v. Sotheby, Moody & M. 90; Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 86 U. S. 11 Pet. 213, 9 L. ed. 691; Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 507, 9 L. ed. 512; Catlin v. Springfield F. Ins. Co. 1 Sumn. 484; St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 8 Mo. 713, 41 Am. Dec. 661; Gates v. Madison County Mut. Ins. Co. 5 N. Y. 469, 55 Am. Dec. 360; Nelson v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 8 Cush. 477, 54 Am. Dec. 776; Mathews v. Howard Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 14; Huckins v. People's Mut. F. Ins. Co. 31 N. H. 247; Johnson v. Berkshire Mut. F. Ins. Co. 4 Allen, 388; Mickey v. Burlington Ins. Co. 35 Iowa, 174, 14 Am. Rep. 494; Cumberland Valley Mut. Protection Co. v. Douglas, 58 Pa. 423, 98 Am. Dec. 298; Gore v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 48 N. H. 41, 2 Am. Rep. 168; National Ins. Co. v. Webster, 83 Ill. 470.

If a loss is incurred by peril insured against, the liability exists even though the remote cause be the negligence of the assured or his servants, unless that negligence be so gross as to authorize the presumption of fraud. In Karow v. Continental Ins. Co. 57 Wis. 56, 46 Am. Rep. 17, in a clearly reasoned and well-considered case it is held, where there is nothing in the policy to the contrary, an insurer is not released from liability because the property was burned by the assured while insane.

The reason for such rule is that an insurance company for a consideration paid has assumed the risk of the property being destroyed by fire. That assumption of risk includes injuries to the property by fire resulting from the negligence of the assured or his servants where not expressly excepted. It also is an assumption of all risk of the assured becoming a lunatic or insane and destroying the insured property when in that condition, unless by the terms of the policy such liability is saved by an express exception.

An insane person may be liable for burning the property of another for the reason that where a loss must be borne by one of two innocent persons it must fall upon the one occasioning that loss, yet the burning of his own insured property does not necessarily injure the insurance company, if that company for a sufficient valuable consideration assumes that risk. That assumption of risk is the contract of the company for a consideration paid to it. In no consideration of policy or justice should it be relieved from its contract in the absence of fraud, malice, or design. These qualities cannot exist in the mind of an insane person. To hold that the insurance company should be relieved from liability under such circumstances would be to change the contract of the parties at the instance of one for its benefit to the prejudice of the other without his consent and where there is no misrepresentation, mistake, or fraud, covin, design, or malice. Such is not the law. A fire policy covers all risks of loss or damage by fire except only such as are excepted by the terms of the policy and such as are caused by the intended voluntary act, design, or procurement of the assured. It had been held by repeated adjudications in various courts of this country and in Great Britain, where there is no express provision in a life policy, that in the event of the insured dying by his own hand the policy shall become void, the right to recover thereon is not forfeited and the policy is not vacated by reason of the suicide of the assured while in a state of temporary insanity.

The proposition is so fully established and recognized that a citation of authorities to sustain it would be supererogation. Here again the reason for the rule is like that in case of fire insurance policies. The contract of the parties is to be construed as it has been made and not to be changed at the request of one of the parties to it for that party's benefit without the consent of the other where there has been no fraud, mistake, misrepresentation, deceit, or other intentional wrong, to induce the making thereof or to accelerate the time of payment.

These rules do no violence to what has been termed a maxim of the insurance law of all nations, i. e., that the assured cannot recover for loss produced by his own wrongful act. Thompson v. Hopper, 6 El. & Bl. 191. By which is meant an act intentionally wrongful. In a case before the supreme court of North Carolina in 1883 it appeared the complainant instituted proceedings for the assignment of dower in the estate of her husband for whose death she had been convicted as an accessory before the fact and sentenced to imprisonment for life. The trial court ruled against the allowance of dower, and on appeal it was held: "We are unable to find any sufficient legal ground for denying to the petitioner the relief which she demands; and it belongs to the law-making power alone, to prescribe additional grounds of forfeiture of the right, which the law itself gives, to a surviving wife. Forfeitures of property for crime are unknown to our law, nor does it intercept for such cause the transmission of an intestate's property to heirs and distributees, nor can we recognize any such operating principle. We have searched in vain for an authority or ruling on the question, and find no adjudged case; the fact that none such is met with affords a strong presumption against the proposition." Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 240.

In the recent case in the supreme court of Nebraska, of Shellenberger v. Ransom, 41 Neb. 631, 25 L. R. A. 565, it appears A died owning an estate and left surviving her husband, a son and daughter. The husband became tenant by the curtesy, and the children took an estate in fee. Under the statutes of that state on the death of a child the father inherits. The father murdered the daughter to obtain that inheritance. He conveyed the lands and the vendees filed bill for partition against the son who set up the fact of the daughter having been murdered by the father of which the vendees had notice, and prayed the court to find the father took no estate, etc. It was held: "Knowledge of the settled maxims and principles of statutory interpretation is imputed to the legislature. To the end that there may be certainty and uniformity in legal administration, it must be assumed that statutes are enacted with a view to their interpretation according to such maxims and principles. When they are regarded, the legislative intent is ascertained. When they are ignored, interpretation becomes legislation in disguise. The well-considered cases warrant the pertinent conclusion that when the legislature, not transcending the limits of its power, speaks in clear language upon a question of policy, it becomes the judicial tribunals to remain silent;" and held the father became vested with the estate of the daughter.

The line between legislation and interpretation is clear, and for the courts to declare a forfeiture for crime where the legislature has remained silent is legislation by judicial tribunals,—a subject with which they have no concern.

There can be no public policy in the punishment of such persons. This discussion brings us back to the first proposition with which this opinion commenced and we hold:—

Where an insane beneficiary in a life policy kills the assured under such circumstances as would cause the killing to be murder if the beneficiary was sane, such killing does not cause a forfeiture of the policy nor bar his right of recovery for the insurance money.

The judgment of the Appellate Court is reversed and the judgment of the Circuit Court of Cook County is affirmed.

Rehearing denied March 10, 1896.

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF NORMAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, Appt.,

v.

Charles H. BLODGETT.

(156 Ill. 441.)

1. Bonds given by the board of education of a school district, to obtain money which was not borrowed or used for any purpose for which the board was authorized by its charter to issue bonds, are void.
2. A complete defense under the statute of limitations is property within the protection of a constitutional guaranty of due process of law.
3. Deprivation of a remedy is equivalent to the deprivation of the right which it is intended to vindicate, unless another remedy exists or is substituted for that which is taken away.
4. A right of defense is a remedy of the defendant within the constitutional protection of rights.
5. A school district or municipal cor-

NOTE.—For a note on remedy as part of the obligation of a contract, see Best v. Baumgardner (Pa.) 1 L. R. A. 366.

See also Beverly v. Barnitz (Kan.) post, 74.

poration has the same constitutional protection that an individual would have against the abrogation by statute of its already complete defense under the statute of limitations.

(January 14, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for McLean County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover money loaned by plaintiff to defendant for which illegal bonds had been issued. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Fifer & Phillips for appellant.

Messrs. John E. Pollock and A. J. Barr, for appellee:

Money paid for illegal bonds may be recovered back.

Jackson County v. Hall, 53 Ill. 440; Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 294, 26 L. ed. 156.

The legislature might restore the remedy after the bar was complete.

Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 620, 29 L. ed. 483; Hewitt v. Wilcox, 1 Met. 154; Wood v. Kennedy, 19 Ind. 68; Welch v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 149, 79 Am. Dec. 239; Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill, 324; Hampton v. Com. 19 Pa. 329; Baughner v. Nelson, 9 Gill, 304, 52 Am. Dec. 694.

As to contracts for the payment of money there is no such thing as an adverse possession, but the statute simply affects the remedy, and not the debt.

Jones v. Jones, 18 Ala. 249; Williams v. Jones, 18 East, 439; Le Roy v. Crowninshield, 2 Mason, 157; Medbury v. Hopkins, 3 Conn. 472; Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 Wend. 475; Byrne v. Crowninshield, 17 Mass. 55; Pearson v. Dwight, 2 Mass. 84; Egberts v. Dibble, 3 McLean, 86.

A legislature has power, when it interferes with no vested right, to enact retrospective statutes to validate invalid contracts, or to ratify and confirm any act it might lawfully have authorized in the first instance.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 374; United States Mortg. Co. v. Gross, 93 Ill. 494; Hawthorn v. People, 109 Ill. 302; Mason v. Wait, 5 Ill. 127.

Baker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The board of education of normal school district, defendant below, and appellant here, was incorporated in 1867, by special act of the legislature. Private Laws 1867, vol. 3, p. 329. The act by which it was incorporated was declared to be a public act. On July 15, 1867, the board borrowed of W. E. Woodward $1,500, and issued to him therefor three bonds for the sum of $500 each, and numbered respectively 30, 31, and 32, said bonds bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually. Said bonds were afterwards purchased from the holders thereof by Charles H. Blodgett, appellee herein, at their full face value. He held them until after their maturity, when new bonds of like import, numbered 60, 61, and 62, respectively, and dated September 1, 1873, and running five years, were issued to him in lieu thereof. On March 2, 1874, the board executed and delivered to appellee a certain other bond for $500, numbered 77; said bond bearing date said March 2, 1874, running five years, and drawing 10 per cent interest, payable semi-annually. The bond states upon its face that it was issued in lieu of bond No. 36, surrendered; and the consideration therefor, $500, was paid by appellee to the treasurer of the board.

Interest was paid on the original bonds until their maturity, and on bonds 60, 61, 62, and 77 up to September 1, 1877, but no interest has been paid on any of them since that date.

Section 9 of the charter of the board of education of normal school district reads as follows:

"For the purpose of erecting schoolhouses and purchasing school sites, it shall be lawful for said board to borrow, at a rate of interest not exceeding 10 per cent per annum, and issue bonds therefor, in sums not less than $100; which bonds shall be executed by the president and clerk of said board, in the name of the board, and countersigned by the treasurer of the board; and to secure the payment of said bonds said board may mortgage any part or the whole property belonging to said board."

And it is stipulated and agreed in the case at bar that the money for which the above-mentioned bonds were given was not borrowed or used by the board of education for any purpose for which said board was authorized by its charter to issue bonds.

The board of education had no power to issue the bonds, and they were void. It was so held by this court in 1880, in the case of Hewitt v. Board of Education, 94 Ill. 528.

Afterwards an act was passed by the legislature which was approved June 17, 1893, and in force July 1, 1893, and which act was as follows:

"An Act to Amend an Act Entitled 'An Act in Regard to Limitations,' Approved April 4, 1872; in Force July 1, 1872."

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the People of the State of Illinois represented in the General Assembly: That an act entitled 'An Act in Regard to Limitations,' in force July 1, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following, to be numbered section 27:

"Sec. 27. That when any person has paid money into any incorporated school district of this state, and bonds have been issued by such incorporation therefor, which are illegal, and where the statute of limitations has run against the recovery of the original consideration for which said bonds were issued, then in such case the statute of limitations is hereby extended, and the person so paying money for such illegal bonds, or his legal representatives or assigns, shall have a right of action in his own name, or as such representative against such corporation, for one year from the time this act takes effect, and not after, to recover the amount of the original consideration paid for such bonds, together with 6 per cent interest per annum on such original consideration from the date that interest ceased to be paid on such bonds until July 1, 1891, and 5 per cent interest per annum thereafter." Laws 1893, p. 139.

Thereupon, on July 6, 1893, and in less than a week after the act went in force, appellee brought this action of assumpsit in the McLean circuit court to recover the amount of the original consideration paid for the above-mentioned bonds, with interest. The declaration consisted of the consolidated common counts. Appellant interposed the general issue and a plea of the five years' statute of limitations; and appellee replied to the latter plea, counting upon the act approved June 17, 1893, concerning limitations. The case was finally submitted to the court under a stipulation which waived formal issues on the pleadings, both parties to have the full benefit of all the facts appearing in the agreed state of facts signed by them. The stipulation of facts and the bonds were all the evidence offered. The court, upon that evidence, found the issues in favor of the plaintiff below, and rendered judgment against the defendant below for $3,900 damages, and costs of suit; and from that judgment this appeal was prosecuted.

The principal question at issue in the case is in regard to the constitutionality and validity of the act approved June 17, 1893. The claim of invalidity is based on various contentions made by appellant. One of these contentions is that the act is in violation of the last clause of § 22 of art. 4 of the Constitution of Illinois, which provides as follows: "In all cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special law shall be enacted." Another is, that the act is a partial, unequal, and invidious statute, and for that reason forms no part of that "law of the land," in accordance with which, by the rule of the common law and by the mandate of § 2 of the Bill of Rights in the state Constitution, all men are entitled to have their rights determined. Another is, that under the Constitution the legislature cannot create a debt against a municipal or school corporation for corporate purposes, and subject it to a tax for its payment, without its consent. And the other is that the statute is in conflict with the rule that when the bar of a statute of limitations has become complete by the running of the full statutory period, the right to plead the statute as a defense is a vested right, which cannot be destroyed by legislation, since it is protected therefrom by § 2 of the Bill of Rights incorporated in the state Constitution, which declares that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

We will consider the last of these contentions, only.

It has been stated so frequently in decisions and in the books, that "due process of law" and "law of the land" mean one and the same thing, that it may be regarded as elementary.

As early as 1820 this court decided, in effect, that a completed bar of the statute of limitations is a vested right. In March, 1819, the first legislature of the state enacted: "That all the laws and parts of laws passed by or under the authority of any territorial government, heretofore existing, be, and they are hereby repealed." A proviso excepted certain statutes of the territorial government, but did not except the statutes of limitation theretofore in force, and there was no saving clause that applied to them.

31 L. R. A.

The same legislature passed an act for the limitation of actions. Laws 1819, p. 351, and p. 141, § 8. In Naught v. Oneal, 1 Ill. 29, Appendix, and Beecher's Breese, 36, the court, in deciding a demurrer to a replication, said: "If the cause of action accrued one year or more before the repeal of the statute of limitations, still, the old statute of limitations is a good bar to the action. It is a complete bar before the repeal, and the repeal of a statute does not affect the rights acquired under the repealed statute." The question, as detached from tangible property, does not seem to have arisen in this court since that date, until now.

The doctrine, as we understand it, is well and correctly stated in Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed. On page 448 he says: "When the period prescribed by statute has once run, so as to cut off the remedy which one might have had for the recovery of property in the possession of another, the title to the property, irrespective of the original right, is regarded in the law as vested in the possessor, who is entitled to the same protection in respect to it which the owner is entitled to in other cases. A subsequent repeal of the limitation law could not be given a retroactive effect, so as to disturb this title. It is vested as completely and perfectly, and is as safe from legislative interference, as it would have been if it had been perfected in the owner by grant, or any species of assurance."

And on page 454 he says: "Regarding the circumstances under which a man may be said to have a vested right to a defense against a demand made by another, it is somewhat difficult to lay down a comprehensive rule which the authorities will justify. It is certain that he who has satisfied a demand cannot have it revived against him, and he who has become released from a demand by the operation of the statute of limitations is equally protected. In both cases the demand is gone, and to restore it would be to create a new contract for the parties,—a thing quite beyond the power of legislation."

The same doctrine is stated by other text-writers, in perhaps different but equally strong language. Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 480; Wood, Lim. Act. p. 26, § 11, p. 30, § 12.

In almost all of the states of the Union in which the question has arisen, it has been held that the right to set up the bar of a statute of limitations as a defense to a cause of action, after the statute has run, is a vested right, and cannot be taken away by legislation, either by a repeal of the statute without saving clause or by an affirmative act; and that it is immaterial whether the action is for the recovery of real or personal property, or for the recovery of a money demand, or for the recovery of damages for a tort.

Brown v. Parker, 28 Wis. 21; Davis v. Minor, 1 How. (Miss.) 183, 28 Am. Dec. 325; McCracken County v. Mercantile Trust Co. 84 Ky. 344; Girdner v. Stephens, 1 Heisk. 280, 2 Am. Rep. 700; Kinsman v. Cambridge, 121 Mass. 558; Bigelow v. Bemis, 2 Allen, 496; Stipp v. Brown, 2 Ind. 647; Ryder v. Wilson, 41 N. J. L. 9; McKinney v. Springer, 8 Blackf. 506; Baldro v. Tolmie, 1 Or. 176;

Ball v. Wyeth, 99 Mass. 888; Prentice v. Dehon, 10 Allen, 353; Yancy v. Yancy, 5 Helsk. 353, 18 Am. Rep. 5; Bradford v. Shine, 13 Fla. 393, 7 Am. Rep. 239; Moore v. Luce, 29 Pa. 260, 72 Am. Dec. 629; Couch v. Mc Kee, 6 Ark. 484; Woodman v. Fulton, 47 Miss. 682; Wires v. Farr, 25 Vt. 41; Rockport v. Walden, 54 N. H. 167, 20 Am. Rep. 131; Lockhart v. Horn, 1 Woods, C. C. 628; Harrison v. Stacy, 6 Rob. (La.) 15; Thompson v. Read, 41 Iowa, 48; Atkinson v. Dunlap, 50 Me. 111; Whitehurst v. Dey, 90 N. C. 542; McMerty v. Morrison, 62 Mo. 140.

The rule, however, is held to be otherwise as to debts in Texas and in Alabama. Bentlnck v. Franklin & G. City Co. 38 Tex. 458; Jones v. Jones, 18 Ala. 248.

Great reliance is placed by appellee on the prevailing opinion in Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 620, 29 L. ed. 483, where it was held that a debtor has no property in the bar of a statute of limitations as a defense to a promise to pay a debt, and that such bar, after it has become complete, may be removed by a statute. The decision, however, was by a divided court, there being a vigorous dissenting opinion by Justice Bradley, which was concurred in by Justice Harlan. The doctrine of the dissenting opinion is most in consonance with former decisions of this court, and is supported by the great weight of authority. That opinion seems to us to present the better view. It expresses so strongly and so well our understanding of the law, that we will quote from it at some length.

The learned justice says that the constitutional provision that forbids that any person shall be deprived "of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," was intended to protect every valuable right which a man has. He then adds: "The words 'life, liberty, and property' are constitutional terms, and are to be taken in their broadest sense. They indicate the three great subdivisions of all civil right. The term 'property,' in this clause, embraces all valuable interests which a man may possess outside of himself,—that is to say, outside of his life and liberty. It is not confined to mere tangible property, but extends to every species of vested right. In my judgment it would be a very narrow and technical construction to hold otherwise. In an advanced civilization like ours, a very large proportion of the property of individuals is not visible and tangible, but consists in rights and claims against others, or against the government itself.

Now, an exemption from a demand or an immunity from prosecution in a suit, is as valuable to the one party as the right to the demand or to prosecute the suit is to the other. The two things are correlative, and to say that the one is protected by constitutional guaranties and that the other is not, seems to me almost an absurdity. One right is as valuable as the other. My property is as much imperiled by an action against me for money, as it is by an action against me for my land or my goods. It may involve and sweep away all that I have in the world. Is not a right of defense to such an action of the greatest value to me? If it is not property in the sense of the Constitution then we need another amendment to that instrument. But it seems to me that there can hardly be a doubt that it is property.

The immunity from suit which arises by operation of the statute of limitations is as valuable a right as the right to bring the suit itself. It is a right founded upon a wise and just policy. Statutes of limitation are not only calculated for the repose and peace of society, but to provide against the evils that arise from loss of evidence and the falling memory of witnesses. It is true that a man may plead the statute when he justly owes the debt for which he is sued; and this has led the courts to adopt strict rules of pleading and proof to be observed when the defense of the statutes is interposed. But it is nevertheless a right given by a just and politic law, and, when vested, is as much to be protected as any other right that a man has.

The fact that this defense pertains to the remedy does not alter the case. Remedies are the life of rights, and are equally protected by the Constitution. Deprivation of a remedy is equivalent to a deprivation of the right which it is intended to vindicate, unless another remedy exists or is substituted for that which is taken away. This court has frequently held that to deprive a man of a remedy for enforcing a contract is itself a mode of impairing the validity of the contract. And, as before said, the right of defense is just as valuable as the right of action. It is the defendant's remedy. There is really no difference between the one right and the other in this respect."

The political rights and privileges delegated to counties, school districts, and cities are not within the constitutional provisions against laws which impair vested rights. But their property rights are protected by the same constitutional guaranties which shield the property of individuals from legislative aggression. People v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278; Richland County v. Lawrence County, 12 Ill. 1; Milam County v. Bateman, 54 Tex. 153; Aberdeen Female Academy v. Aberdeen, 18 Smedes & M. 645; Grogan v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 590; Dubuque v. Illinois C. R. Co. 39 Iowa, 56.

In our opinion, the act of June 17, 1893 amendatory of the act in regard to limitations is unconstitutional and invalid.

It follows that the circuit court erred in its rulings upon some of the propositions of law submitted to it, and in rendering judgment against the defendant.

The judgment is reversed.

Rehearing denied June 10, 1895.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

John L. BEVERLY, Piff. in Err.,

v.

Martha BARNITZ.

(55 Kan. 466.)

*Chapter 109, Laws 1893, commonly known as the "Redemption Law," whether applied to existing or future contracts, is not in conflict with the provision of the Federal Constitution (art. 1, § 10) that "no state shall . . . pass any . . . law impairing the obligation of contracts."

(Johnston, J., dissents.)

(December 7, 1895.)

ERROR to the District Court for Shawnee County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to foreclose a mortgage and which refused to make the provisions for redemption provided by Laws 1893, chap. 109. Reversed

A decision was handed down in this case on April 30, 1895, but a petition for rehearing was subsequently filed and the court revised its ruling, rendering the former decision of no effect and it is therefore omitted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. A. McMath, for plaintiff in error:

This law does not change, alter, or impair the contract rights of the parties to the mortgage.

In Kansas all of the features of the common-law mortgage have been long since wholly swept away or abrogated.

The mortgage merely gives a lien upon the mortgaged property which can be enforced, not in the manner prescribed in the contract itself, but only in accordance with the rules and practice of the court as the same may be prescribed or limited by statute.

Waterson v. Devoe, 18 Kan. 233; Seckler v. Delfs, 25 Kan. 165.

If the parties to this mortgage could not include in it a valid contract for vesting title, or right of possession, or regulating the time or manner of sale, still less could they make a valid contract which would limit the right of redemption.

Courts of equity have always strenuously resisted all attempts to abridge this right by contract, and have almost uniformly set aside and disregarded every restriction, or limitation, or condition, attempted to be placed upon this right by contract.

Vernon v. Bethell, 2 Eden, 113; Spurgeon v. Collier, 1 Eden, 55; Poindexter v. McCannon, 1 Dev. Eq. 375, 18 Am. Dec. 591.

Under the construction of the mortgage contract which obtained in Kansas at that time when this mortgage was made, and still obtains, and in view of the invalidity of any contract which the parties may have attempted, or may be presumed to have made, as to the extent of the estate thereby granted, or the right of possession, or the manner of sale, or in any way limiting the right of redemption, the mortgagee obtained no contract rights which are affected or impaired by the new law.

*Headnote by MARTIN, Ch. J.

Jones, Mortg. § 18; Paulling v. Barron, 32 Ala. 9; Moore v. Martin, 38 Cal. 439; Thorne v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 127; Heyward v. Judd, 4 Minn. 487; Scobey v. Gibson, 17 Ind. 572, 79 Am. Dec. 490; Davis v. Rupe, 114 Ind. 588; Robertson v. Van Cleave, 129 Ind. 229, 15 L. R. A. 68; Traveler's Ins. Co. v. Brouse, 83 Ind. 62; Malony v. Fortune, 14 Iowa, 418; White v. Rittenmyer, 30 Iowa, 278; Holland v. Dickerson, 41 Iowa, 367; Babeock v. Gurney, 42 Iowa, 156; Fonda v. Clark, 43 Iowa, 300; Olmstead v. Kellogg, 47 Iowa, 460; International Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Hardy, 85 Tex. 610, 24 L. R. A. 284; Iverson v. Shorter, 9 Ala. 713; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Neeves, 46 Wis. 147; Von Baumbach v. Bade, 9 Wis. 559, 76 Am. Dec. 283; Farnsworth v. Vance, 2 Coldw. 108; People v. Livingston, 6 Wend. 526; McCoun v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 50 N. Y. 176; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936; Cook v. Gray, 2 Houst. (Del.) 455, 81 Am. Dec. 185; James v. Stull, 9 Barb. 483; Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill, 324; Chndrick v. Moore, 8 Watts & S. 49, 42 Am. Dec. 267; Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 769, 27 L. ed. 468; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925; Berthold v. Fox, 13 Minn. 501, 97 Am. Dec. 243.

The latter cases distinguish between such laws as affect the construction and operation of the contract, and those which affect merely the remedy, and hold that the laws in reference to which the parties must be assumed to have contracted were those which in their direct or necessary legal operation controlled or affected the construction and operation and obligations of the contract, not those which affected merely the remedy.

Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825; Curtis v. Whitney, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 68, 20 L. ed. 513.

Whatever pertains merely to the remedy may be changed, modified, or abrogated by the legislature in its discretion, and to any extent, provided a substantial remedy be left to the creditor, and that such changes may constitutionally be applied to existing contracts.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 595; Cusic v. Douglas, 3 Kan. 123, 87 Am. Dec. 458.

Decisions can be found in which similar legislation postponing or otherwise changing the remedy to the prejudice of the creditor has

NOTE.—The opinion of Chief Justice Martin in the above case, with that of the former Chief Justice, Horton, in Watkins v. Glenn, which is adopted by Johnston, J., as a dissenting opinion in this case, presents so fully the whole subject that no annotation upon it will be here attempted. The case, we are informed, has been taken to the Supreme Court 31 L. R. A.

of the United States, but the opinions are so valuable that it seems best to publish them without waiting for a decision on the writ of error.

See also on the question, Pinhney v. Pinhney (Me.) 4 L. R. A. 348, and note; Best v. Baumgardner (Pa.) 1 L. R. A. 356, and note.

been upheld, as within the province of the legislature.

Chadwick v. Moore, 8 Watts & S. 49, 42 Am. Dec. 267; Von Baumbach v. Bade, 9 Wis. 559, 76 Am. Dec. 283; Rader v. Southeastery Road Dist. 36 N. J. L. 273; Gardenhire v. McCombs, 1 Sneed, 83; Holloway v. Sherman, 12 Iowa, 283; Farnsworth v. Vance, 2 Coldw. 108; Curtis v. Whitney, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 68, 20 L. ed. 513; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648; Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 769, 27 L. ed. 468.

Whether this law is politic or not, courts are not at liberty to declare statutes void because of their apparent injustice or impolicy, unless in conflict with the Constitution.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 216.

Messrs. Ferry & Doran for defendant in error.

Martin, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On November 1, 1885, George A. Kirkland executed a negotiable promissory note to Martha Barnitz for $1,500, payable in five years, with interest at 8 per cent per annum, and after maturity at the rate of 12 per cent per annum, which note was secured by a mortgage on a quarter section of land in Shawnee county, Kan., appraisement being waived. The land was afterwards sold to John L. Beverly, subject to the mortgage. On January 21, 1893, an action was commenced in the district court of Shawnee county to obtain judgment upon said note and to foreclose said mortgage. On July 7, 1893, a personal judgment was rendered for $2,113.46, bearing interest from that date at the rate of 12 per cent per annum, and $44.95 costs, and the land was ordered to be sold for the payment of said judgment. On January 9, 1894, an order of sale was issued, and the property was sold to Martha Barnitz by the sheriff on February 12, 1894, for $2,000. On February 19, 1894, John L. Beverly filed a motion asking that upon confirmation of the sale the court order, adjudge, and determine that said real estate is subject to redemption as provided by chapter 109 of the Laws of 1893, which took effect March 17, 1893, and that the sheriff be ordered and directed to make to the purchaser the certificate of sale mentioned in said chapter, he being in actual possession of said real estate by his tenant, the same never having been abandoned, but being occupied in good faith. This relief was refused by the court, and it was ordered that the sale be confirmed, and a deed executed by the sheriff to the purchaser for said premises; holding that said chapter 109 is unconstitutional, so far as intended to apply to mortgages previously executed and delivered. On a proceeding in error in this court, said judgment was affirmed. The companion case of Watkins v. Glenn was decided at the same time, and the opinions appear in 55 Kan. 417. The plaintiff in error asks a rehearing.

Does this statute impair the obligation of this prior contract? If it does so in the slightest degree, it must be held unconstitutional as to such contract. If, on the other hand, the act affects only the remedy, or some provision of the contract which is inoperative and void under the laws of Kansas, where the contract was made, then it must be held valid; and all legal presumptions, so far as this court is concerned, favor the validity of the act. Cooley, Const. Lim. 216, 217. When Chief Justice Marshall delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529, the learning upon the inhibition, "No state shall . . . pass any . . . law impairing the obligation of contracts," was well-nigh exhausted. Little was left for other or subsequent judges of that tribunal but to apply the law as there clearly laid down. The legislature of New York had in 1811 enacted an insolvent law which not only purported to liberate the person of the debtor, but to discharge him from all liability for any debt contracted previous to his discharge, on surrendering his property in the manner prescribed by the act; and it was held that, in so far as it purported to discharge a debtor from his obligation without performance, it was invalid, but not so as to releasing the debtor from imprisonment,—then a common and very persuasive remedy. The court says (page 197, L. ed. 549): "A contract is an agreement, in which a party undertakes to do, or not to do, a particular thing. The law binds him to perform his undertaking, and this is, of course, the obligation of his contract. In the case at bar, the defendant has given his promissory note to pay the plaintiff a sum of money on or before a certain day. The contract binds him to pay that money on that day, and this is its obligation. Any law which releases a part of this obligation must, in the literal sense of the word, impair it. Much more must a law impair it which makes it totally invalid and entirely discharges it." And again (pages 200, 201, L. ed. 549, 550): "The distinction between the obligation of a contract, and the remedy given by the legislature to enforce that obligation, has been taken at the bar, and exists in the nature of things. Without impairing the obligation of the contract, the remedy may certainly be modified as the wisdom of the nation shall direct. Confinement of the debtor may be a punishment for not performing his contract, or may be allowed as a means of inducing him to perform it. But the state may refuse to inflict this punishment, or may withhold this means, and leave the contract in full force. Imprisonment is no part of the contract, and simply to release the prisoner does not impair its obligation." See also Mason v. Haile, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 370, 6 L. ed. 660; Beers v. Haughton, 34 U. S. 9 Pct. 329, 359, 9 L. ed. 145, 157; Penniman's Case, 103 U. S. 714, 717, 26 L. ed. 602, 604.

In Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 311, 315, 316, 11 L. ed. 143-145, the court, speaking through Chief Justice Taney in respect to an Illinois mortgage, said: "If the laws of the state passed afterwards had done nothing more than change the remedy upon contracts of this description, they would be liable to no constitutional objection. For, undoubtedly, a state may regulate at pleasure the modes of proceeding in its courts in relation to past contracts as well as future. It may, for example, shorten the period of time within which claims shall be barred by the statute of limitations. It may, if it thinks proper, direct that the necessary implements of agriculture, or the tools of the mechanic, or articles of necessity in household furniture, shall, like wearing apparel, not be liable to execution on judgments. Regulations of this description have always been considered in every civilized community, as properly belonging to the remedy, to be exercised or not by every sovereignty, according to its own views of policy and humanity. It must reside in every state to enable it to secure its citizens from unjust and harassing litigation, and to protect them in those pursuits which are necessary to the existence and well-being of every community. And, although a new remedy may be deemed less convenient than the old one, and may in some degree render the recovery of debts more tardy and difficult, yet it will not follow that the law is unconstitutional. Whatever belongs merely to the remedy may be altered according to the will of the state, provided the alteration does not impair the obligation of the contract. But if that effect is produced, it is immaterial whether it is done by acting on the remedy or directly on the contract itself. In either case it is prohibited by the Constitution." In Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365, it was held that an enactment reducing the time prescribed by the statute of limitations in force when the right of action accrued is not unconstitutional, provided a reasonable time be given for the commencement of a suit before the bar takes effect. The court says (page 633, L. ed. 366): "The parties to a contract have no more a vested interest in a particular limitation which has been fixed than they have in an unrestricted right to sue." In Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 769, 774, 775, 27 L. ed. 468, 471, although the Virginia funding act of 1871 required the state to receive certain coupons for all taxes and demands due her, and authorized the writ of mandamus to compel the proper tax collector to receive the same; yet the act of 1882, which required the coupon holder to first pay his taxes in cash, and file his coupons in the court of appeals, and, after a circuitous proceeding, receive back his cash in lieu of the coupons, was held to affect the remedy, and not to constitute an impairment of the contract. In Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648, it was decided that the Illinois statute of 1879 entitling the purchaser, in case of redemption, to receive interest upon his bid at the rate of 8 per cent per annum (the previous law prescribing 10 per cent), was applicable to all decretal sales of mortgaged premises thereafter made, although the mortgage was given before the passage of that statute; that such reduction in the rate of interest did not impair the obligation of the contract between mortgagor and mortgagee, because the amendatory statute did not diminish the duty of the mortgagor to pay what he agreed to pay, or shorten the period or payment, or affect any remedy which the mortgagee had by existing law for the enforcement of his contract, and that existing laws, with reference to which the mortgagor and mortgagee must be assumed to have contracted, are only those which in their direct or necessary legal operation controlled or affected the obligations of their contract. And in the opinion the court says (pages 64, 65, 108 U. S., and page 653, 27 L. ed.): "The rights of the purchaser at the decretal sale, if one was had, were not of the essence of the mortgage contract, but depended wholly upon the law in force when the sale occurred. The company ceased to be a mortgagee when its debt was merged in the decree, or at least when the sale occurred. Thenceforward its interest in the property was as purchaser, not as mortgagee. And to require it, as purchaser, to conform to the terms for the redemption of the property as prescribed by the statute at the time of purchase does not, in any legal sense, impair the obligation of its contract as mortgagee. It assumed the position of a purchaser, subject necessarily to the law then in force defining the rights of purchasers." And again, the court says (page 66, 108 U. S., and page 653, 27 L. ed.): "That the reduction of interest to be paid to the purchaser would lessen the probable number of bidders at the decretal sale, and thereby diminish the chances of the property bringing the mortgage debt, are plainly contingencies that might never have arisen. They could not occur unless there was a decretal sale, nor unless the mortgagee became the purchaser, and are too remote to justify the conclusion, as matter of law, that such legislation affected the value of the mortgage contract." In Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925, it was held that a state was not forbidden by the clause of the Federal Constitution under consideration from legislating, within its discretion, to reduce the rate of interest upon judgments previously obtained in the courts, the judgment creditor having no contract whatever in that respect with the judgment debtor. The court held that the state law regulating the rate of interest on judgments formed no part of the contract, and quoted approvingly (page 171, 146 U. S., and page 930, 36 L. ed.) from the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 213, 343, 6 L. ed. 606, 650, as follows: "If the law becomes a part of the contract, change of place would not expunge the condition. A contract made in New York would be the same in any other state as in New York, and would still retain the stipulation originally introduced into it." In Curtis v. Whitney, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 68, 20 L. ed. 513, the court held that a statute which requires the holder of a tax-sale certificate made before its passage to give three months' notice, with a copy of the certificate, the name of the holder, and the time the deed will be applied for, to an occupant of the land, if there be one, before he takes his tax deed, does not impair the obligation of the contract evidenced by the certificate; and accordingly a tax deed was adjudged void for want of the notice. Mr. Justice Miller, in delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, said (pages 70, 71, L. ed. 514): "That a statute is not void because it is retrospective-has been repeatedly held by this court, and the feature of the act of 1867, which makes it applicable to certificates already issued for tax sales, does not of itself conflict with the Constitution of the United States. Nor does every statute which affects the value of a contract impair its obligation. It is one of the contingencies to which parties look now in making a large class of contracts, that they may be affected in many ways by state and national legislation. For such legislation demanded by the public good, however it may retroact on contracts previously made, and enhance the cost and difficulty of performance, or diminish the value of such performance to the other party, there is no restraint in the Federal Constitution, so long as the obligation of performance remains in full force."

In each of the foregoing cases, except that cited from 43 U. S. 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143, the Supreme Court of the United States held that the state statute enacted subsequently to the making of the contract affected the remedy only, and not the obligation of the promisor to perform his contract, and other cases of like character might be cited. In some cases expressions have been used in the opinions of the judges which, if taken alone, would obliterate the line of demarcation between the obligation of the contract and the remedy for its enforcement; but as was well said by Chief Justice Marshall in Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 383, 6 L. ed. 647: "The positive authority of a decision is coextensive only with the facts on which it is made," and opinions of judges are to be understood in the light of the issues to be decided, and as limited by them. Thus, in Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 208, 26 L. ed. 182, Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, said (pages 206, 207, L. ed. 183): "The obligation of a contract, in the constitutional sense, is the means provided by law by which it can be enforced,—by which the parties can be obliged to perform it. Whatever legislation lessens the efficacy of these means impairs the obligation. If it tend to postpone or retard the enforcement of the contract, the obligation of the latter is to that extent weakened." But it was therein held that a state law requiring the registry in the office of the controller of judgments rendered against the city of New Orleans on former contracts, before any proceeding could be had for their enforcement, was a reasonable regulation and constitutional. The bonds in judgment were issued in 1854, and prior to the act of 1870 the judgment creditor was entitled to the writ of mandamus to enforce collection. That act, however, purported to debase the courts of the state of authority to allow any summary process or mandamus against said city to compel payment, and required that judgment creditors file transcripts of their judgments in the office of the controller, after which the judgments should be paid in the order of their registration. The supreme court of Louisiana held that this act was valid, and the plaintiff's case was dismissed, and all relief denied, and this decree was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. This decision is in line with Curtis v. Whitney, supra, where the holder of the tax deed was defeated because he did not comply with the subsequent state law requiring him to give to the occupant notice of the time when he would apply for a deed, together with a copy of the tax-sale certificate. The cases are in entire harmony, and yet it seems impossible to reconcile the proposition of the two great contemporary jurists who wrote the respective opinions; each concurring, however, in the opinion of the other. It is too much to expect perfect accuracy and clearness of doctrinal statement at all times, even from great judges. Edwards v. Kearney, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. ed. 793, involved the validity of the exemption clause in the North Carolina Constitution of 1868. Under the prior statutes the exemptions to debtors in that state were quite limited, the provision of the new Constitution being much more liberal, and it was held that this was unconstitutional, as applied to prior contracts. Some expressions in the opinion of the court, delivered by Justice Swayne, might lead to the conclusion that no other or further exemptions were permissible than those existing at the date of the contract; but this would be a contradiction of the doctrines announced by the supreme court in prior and subsequent cases, and the concurring opinions of Justices Clifford and Hunt plainly show that the decision was placed upon the ground that the extension of the exemption was so large as to seriously impair the creditor's remedy for collection of his debt. Mr. Justice Clifford saying: "Beyond all doubt, a state legislature may regulate all such proceedings in its courts at pleasure, subject only to the condition that the new regulation shall not in any material respect impair the just rights of any party to a pre-existing contract." In the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Swayne, he says: "The remedy subsisting in a state when and where a contract is made and is to be performed is a part of its obligation, and any subsequent law of the state which so affects that remedy as substantially to impair and lessen the value of the contract is forbidden by the Constitution, and is therefore void." And this clause of the opinion is made the syllabus in the report of the case. It would be difficult to justify the first clause of this sentence by any decision of the supreme court, or upon any principle of general jurisprudence. We know that the general remedies provided by our state laws do not form part of a contract, for, if so, they would necessarily be effective in any state or country where suit was brought to enforce the contract. It is a fundamental principle, not requiring in its support the citation of authorities, that the remedy is governed by the lex fori, and not by the lex loci contractus. A lawyer suing in the courts of this state upon a contract made in Louisiana, New York, or Illinois, would be thought reckless indeed if he should presume to ask remedies allowable under the laws of those states, respectively, but, not recognized here. The most that can be truthfully said is that each civilized state is under a moral obligation to afford to foreign or domestic creditors adequate remedies for the enforcement of their rights, but these are subject to change at any time, whether as to existing or future contracts. If, by the last clause of the proposition, it is meant that any substantial impairment of the contract is forbidden, certainly there can be no objection to it; but the value of a contract may be incidentally lessened by state legislation without impairing its obligation at all, as decided in many cases by the supreme Federal tribunal. In Seibert v. United States, 122 U. S. 284, 30 L. ed. 1161, the syllabus in Edwards v. Kearney, supra, is quoted approvingly, but its principle was in no wise necessary to a decision of the case. By the act of March 23, 1868, the legislature of Missouri authorized the issue of bonds in payment of subscriptions to the stock of railroad companies, and therein stipulated that the county court should from time to time levy and cause to be collected, in the same manner as county taxes, a special tax, in order to pay the interest and principal of any such bond, and it was held by the supreme court that it was a material part of this statutory contract that such creditor should always have the right to a special tax, to be levied and collected in the same manner as county taxes, and that a subsequent act of the legislature which took away this right, and gave in return no equivalent means of payment, was an impairment of the contract. There are other cases of like character, and certainly a creditor who takes the bond of a municipality upon the assurance of a statute which authorizes its issue, and provides the means for its payment, has a right to rely upon such statute as implicitly as upon the stipulation of the terms of payment in a private contract; but a bondholder would have no just cause to complain if the number of the terms of court should be reduced, or the obtaining of an order of attachment rendered more difficult, or the law as to the appointment of receivers modified. Such matters do not enter into the contemplation of the parties in making a contract, so as to forbid a legislative change, nor follow the contract into other jurisdictions. The correct doctrine is concisely stated in 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 753, as follows: "The remedy provided by law for the enforcement of a contract is no part of its obligation, and whatever pertains merely to the remedy may be changed, modified, or abrogated by the legislature, in its discretion and to any extent, provided a substantive remedy be still left to the creditor, and such changes may constitutionally apply to existing contracts. But if the parties to a contract include in it, in express terms, the remedy to be sought upon its breach, or the means to be used for securing its performance, subsequent legislation changing the remedial process they have agreed upon is, as to them, inoperative."

31 L. R. A.

This brings us to a consideration of the change of our law as to the redemption of real estate. Prior to 1893, lands could not be sold for less than two thirds of their appraised value, unless appraisement was waived in the mortgage or the bond or promissory note which it was given to secure; but in case of such waiver the order could not issue for the sale of the lands until six months after the rendition of the judgment. Of course, the mortgagor might redeem at any time before actual sale, by paying his debt, interest, and costs. By the act of 1893 the statutes requiring appraisement were repealed, so that an order of sale may be issued at any time after the entry of judgment, and the land, after due notice, sold for whatever price it will bring. Upon confirmation, which may be had at any time after the sale when the district court is in session in the county, the creditor is entitled to the proceeds of the sale, up to the amount of his judgment, interest, and costs. Under our practice, a personal judgment is rendered in the first instance for the full amount due, and if the proceeds of the sale are insufficient to pay the whole judgment debt, interest, and costs, they are simply credited thereon, so that it is unnecessary to obtain a judgment over, as in the Federal courts of equity, and a general execution may issue for the balance due. The act of 1893 does not operate upon the rights of the mortgagee until his claim as such has been extinguished, either wholly, or to the full extent of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor, it is true, may redeem the land within a certain time by payment of the sale price and interest thereon, but this is a matter wholly between him and the purchaser. If the mortgagee or judgment creditor has deemed it best to become the purchaser, and thus voluntarily change his relation, it is difficult to see how he has any just cause of complaint. By the mortgage contract the real estate was pledged for the payment of the debt, subject to the equity of redemption. The state, by its proper officer, has at his instance sold the property for its payment; and after he gets the proceeds of the sale he has no further claim upon that property, although he may proceed by general execution to obtain any balance due by seizure and sale of other property. "In this state, the common-law attributes of mortgages have been by statute wholly set aside, and the ancient theories demolished. The mortgagee has a mere security, creating a lien upon the property, but vesting no title, and giving no right of possession whatever, either before or after breach. The statute confines the remedy of the mortgagee to an ordinary action and sale of the mortgaged premises." Waterson v. Devoe, 18 Kan. 228, 232, 233. "In this state a real-estate mortgage conveys no estate or title, in whatever form the mortgage may be drawn; it creates only a lien upon the mortgaged property; and such lien can be enforced only by a judgment or order of the district court. A holder of a real-estate mortgage cannot, even after condition broken, take possession of the mortgaged property, or of the rents or profits thereof, except by consent of all the parties, or by an action in the district court; and he cannot realize upon his mortgage, except by judgment of such court. And this is true, whatever the form of the mortgage may be. . . . Where the mortgaged property is not a sufficient security for the mortgage debt, the district court may in some cases appoint a receiver to take charge of the mortgaged property, and to receive the rents and profits thereof, but in no case can the holder of the mortgage, without suit, and without the consent of the mortgagor or his assignee, take possession of either the real estate mortgaged, or the rents or profits thereof." Seckler v. Delfs, 25 Kan. 159, 165.

The act of 1893 does not purport to repeal or modify section 254 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Gen. Stat. 1889, ¶ 4349), which authorizes the appointment of a receiver in a foreclosure case "where it appears that the mortgaged property is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured," or when "the condition of the mortgage has not been performed," and "the property is probably insufficient to discharge the mortgage debt." In such cases a receiver may be appointed at any time after the action is commenced, and the receivership may continue until the sale of the land by the sheriff, when the mortgagee's claim upon it is satisfied and extinguished, and, as a creditor, he has no further concern with it. The act of 1893 does not become operative until after the sale, and it matters not to the former creditor how the land is occupied during the period of redemption. Where appraisement is waived, as in this case, the mortgage creditor may now have a sale, on request, six months sooner than formerly. In certain contingencies the purchaser may obtain a deed as soon after judgment as under the old law; in others, he may be compelled to wait at most a year longer, but the redemptioner must pay interest in the meantime, which is generally accounted an equivalent for use and occupation.

It may be said, however, that the creditor is prejudicially affected by this change of the law, because purchasers may be unwilling to pay as high a price as before. But in this country land is not esteemed as in the old world. Here it is largely a subject of investment and speculation, and in many cases the purchaser would prefer a return of his money, with interest, to a deed for the land. A court could hardly say judicially that land would sell for less by reason of this change of the redemption law. Such considerations, like the lowering of the rate of interest to be paid by the redemptioner, are "too remote," as held in Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, supra, "to justify the conclusion, as matter of law, that such legislation affected the value of the mortgage contract." A real-estate mortgage is not what it purports to be on its face anywhere. In Kansas it has been shorn of all its common-law incidents, as we have seen, and this is true in most of the other states. It may be stipulated in the mortgage that upon default of payment of principal or interest the mortgagee shall be entitled to possession of the mortgaged premises. It is vain. It may be solemnly agreed that in such case the rents and profits shall be applied towards the satisfaction of the debt and interest. It is as nothing. It may be provided that for any particular delinquency a receiver may be appointed. It is a waste of words. The mortgagor may even be driven by his necessities to bargain away in the mortgage his equity of redemption. Equity will treat it as void. For any such purpose, the Kansas short form of mortgage, authorized by statute (Gen. Stat. 1889, ¶ 3886), which contains not a word upon any of these subjects, is no less potent than the most tedious ironclad instrument ever devised by the wit, the cunning, and the avarice of man. All such clauses are treated by the courts as if they were not. In Clark v. Reyburn, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 318, 19 L. ed. 354, a decree of strict foreclosure was entered on a Kansas mortgage in the United States circuit court. There was no act of Congress nor state statute nor rule of court forbidding this practice, nor purporting to give any time to redeem after foreclosure; yet the supreme court reversed the decree, holding that as the 80th equity rule directs that the practice of the circuit courts shall be regulated, where no rule is applicable, by that of the high court of chancery in England, so far as it can be applied consistently with the local circumstances and conveniences of the district where the court is held, and as, by the English practice, a period of at least six months was allowed for redemption, the decree, cutting off the mortgagor without time to redeem, was erroneous. Mr. Justice Swayne, delivering the opinion of the court, said (pp. 321, 323, L. ed. 356): "The equity of redemption is a distinct estate from that which is vested in the mortgagee before or after condition broken. It is descendible, devisable, and alienable, like other interests in real property. . . . As between the parties to the mortgage the law protects it with jealous vigilance. It not only applies the maxim, 'Once a mortgage always a mortgage,' but any limitation of the right to redeem, as to time or persons, by a stipulation entered into when the mortgage is executed, or afterwards, is held to be oppressive, contrary to public policy, and void. By the common law, when the condition of the mortgage was broken, the estate of the mortgagee became indefeasible. At an early period equity interposed and permitted the mortgagor, within a reasonable time, to redeem upon the payment of the amount found to be due. The debt was regarded by the chancellor, as it has been ever since, as the principal, and the mortgage as only an accessory and a security. The doctrine seems to have been borrowed from the civil law. . . . After the practice grew up of applying to the chancellor to foreclose the right to redeem upon default in the payment of the debt at maturity, it was always an incident of the remedy that the mortgagor should be allowed a specified time for the payment of the debt. This was fixed by the primary decree, and it might be extended once or oftener, at the discretion of the chancellor, according to circumstances of the case. It was only in the event of final default that the foreclosure was made absolute." And again he said (pp. 323, 324, L. ed. 356, 357): "The settled English practice is for the decree to order the amount due to be ascertained, and the costs to be taxed, and that upon the payment of both within six months, the plaintiff shall reconvey to the defendant, but in default of payment within the time limited, 'that the said defendant do stand absolutely debarred and foreclosed of and from all equity of redemption of and in said mortgaged premises.' . . . We have been able to find no English case where, in the absence of fraud, a time for redemption was not allowed by the decree. The subject was examined by Chancellor Kent, with his accustomed fullness of research. He came to the conclusion that the time was in the discretion of the chancellor, and to be regulated by the circumstances of the particular case, but he nowhere intimates that such an allowance could be entirely withheld."

31 L. R. A.

The equity of redemption being a creature of the courts of chancery, and impliedly reserved by the mortgagor, notwithstanding any language incorporated into the mortgage, it results that the state legislatures may deal with and regulate it upon equitable principles, and may abate the rigors of the common-law foreclosure in any reasonable way, having due regard to the obligations of the mortgage contract as interpreted by courts of equity. The Federal courts of equity first allow six months from the decree of foreclosure in which to redeem, as an incident of the remedy; and this may be extended once or oftener, "at the discretion of the chancellor, according to the circumstances of the case." In some cases—notably, in foreclosures upon railways and other extensive properties—the time is extended for years, the subject-matter of the litigation being held in the meantime by receivers appointed upon the same equitable principles as prescribed by our statute hereinbefore cited. Again, such courts refuse to confirm master's sales where the purchase price is grossly inadequate, and in cases of peculiar hardship they deny judgment over, according to the 92d equity rule, for any balance due after the application of the proceeds of the mortgaged property in satisfaction of the debt. It is one of the advantages of courts of equity that their remedies are more flexible than those afforded by the common law. In this state, however, the district courts have full equity powers, and yet foreclosures are governed by rules almost inflexible. Personal judgments are rendered for the full amount due, and the proceeds of the mortgaged property are applied only as a credit thereon, so that execution may issue at once for any balance remaining; and, so far as the reports of this court show, no sheriff's sale has ever been set aside on account of inadequacy of price alone, if, indeed, such a thing can be done. Capital Bank v. Huntton, 85 Kan. 578, 591, and cases cited. In the case cited above from 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 318, 19 L. ed. 354, we have seen that the equity of redemption is regarded by the Supreme Court of the Union as an estate distinct from the right vested in the mortgagee, and this estate is indefinite in its duration. In accordance with the English rule, the time given in the first instance is at least six months, and then it may be extended "once or oftener, at the discretion of the chancellor." And in granting these extensions, according to the circumstances of each case, the Federal courts of equity have not the remotest idea of "impairing the obligation of contracts." They are endeavoring only to enforce them in a manner dictated by an enlightened system of jurisprudence, that seeks not the financial ruin of the mortgagor, in the application of his property to the satisfaction of his debt. From causes upon which all do not agree, and that we need not discuss, the burden of a private debt has been enormously increased of late years. Farms valued five years ago both by borrower and lender at $3,000 or $4,000, and mortgaged for $1,000, are now knocked down under the sheriff's hammer for less than the mortgage debt, the accumulations of a lifetime being often swept away by the shrinkage, and this through no fault of the mortgagor. Now, may not a state legislature take cognizance of such a condition of affairs, and prescribe a rule, for application in its courts, regulating the equity of redemption, and even extending it beyond the time formerly allowed? In other words, why may it not, in a time of general depression, reasonably extend the indefinite estate impliedly reserved by the mortgagor, as the Federal courts of equity do in particular cases, beyond the six months allowed by the general practice? This reserved estate belongs to the mortgagor, and because of its indefinite duration the legislature ought to have power to regulate it, within reasonable bounds, so as to protect the interests and equities of both debtor and creditor.

Great reliance has been placed by counsel for defendant in error upon the authority of Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 148; and it would be conclusive against our position, if a Kansas mortgage of 1885 is to be governed by the rules applicable to the Illinois instrument, of date July 18, 1888, which was enforced in that case. There, in order to secure the payment of a certain bond of $4,000, Kinzie conveyed to Bronson, "in fee simple, by way of mortgage, one undivided half part of certain houses and lots in the town of Chicago, with the usual proviso that the deed should be null and void if the said principal and interest were duly paid; and Kinzie, among other things, covenanted that if default should be made in the payment of the principal or interest, or any part thereof, it should be lawful for Bronson or his representatives to enter upon and sell the mortgaged premises at public auction, and, as attorney of Kinzie and wife, to convey the same to the purchaser, and, out of the moneys arising from such sale, to retain the amount that might then be due him on the aforesaid bond, with the costs and charges of sale, rendering the overplus, if any, to Kinzie. In the opinion the court says (p. 315, L. ed. 144): "As concerns the obligations of the contract upon which this controversy has arisen, they depend upon the laws of Illinois as they stood at the time the mortgage deed was executed. . . ." And (p. 318, L. ed. 146): "According to the long-settled rules of law and equity in all of the states whose jurisprudence has been modeled upon the principles of the common law, the legal title to the premises in question vested in the complainant, upon the failure of the mortgagor to comply with the conditions contained in the proviso, and at law, he had a right to sue for and recover the land. . . ." And (page 319, L. ed.

146): "When this contract was made, no statute had been passed by the state changing the rules of law or equity in relation to a contract of this kind. None such, at least, has been brought to the notice of the court; and it must therefore be governed, and the rights of the parties under it measured, by the rules above stated. They were the laws of Illinois at the time, and therefore entered into the contract, and formed a part of it, without any express stipulation to that effect in the deed." Thus it appears that, under the laws of Illinois then existing, the mortgage contract was in law what it purported to be on its face,—it gave the legal title and the right of possession to the mortgagee on default of payment; and this no Kansas mortgage has ever done, whatever may have been its stipulations. It therefore could not be otherwise than that the laws of Illinois formed part of the very obligation of the contract, and the rights vested by its terms with the sanction of the laws of Illinois could not be devested by any subsequent law of that state. Where a remedy is agreed upon in the contract itself, with the sanction of the state law, the obligation and the remedy are indistinguishable, and in such case it is entirely proper to say that the subsisting remedy is a part of the obligation of the contract. On the other hand, it is safe to say that the general remedies afforded by the state jurisprudence and practice, entirely aside from anything contained in the contract, never constitute any part of its obligation, and may be changed from time to time; and this is the doctrine of Bronson v. Kinzie, as quoted in the first reference to the case in this opinion. The case of Howard v. Bugbee, 65 U. S. 24 How. 461, 16 L. ed. 758, although from Alabama, is in no way distinguishable from Bronson v. Kinzie, as will appear from the briefs and the opinion; and the authority of the earlier case was, of course, followed. In Alabama, as well as in Illinois, the real-estate mortgage was clothed with its common-law attributes. Paulling v. Barron, 32 Ala. 9, 11; 1 Jones, Mortg. § 18. Bronson v. Kinzie was also decided in part upon a subsequent law requiring an appraisal, and prohibiting a sale for less than two thirds of the appraised value, and there are other cases of like nature; but as appraisal laws, and those regulating the equity of redemption, depend upon different principles, it is unnecessary to occupy time now with their consideration.

It can be no objection to the statute under review that redemption comes after, and not before, the sale, for this is a feature favorable to the creditor. He may now have the sale advertised as soon as his decree of foreclosure is entered, and he is entitled to the proceeds whenever the sale is confirmed, and this may be at any time afterwards that the district court is in session. The new law speeds the sale, which is unfettered by any stay or appraisal law. Neither can it be a valid objection that the mortgagor or his assignee may redeem the property by paying its sale price with interest thereon; for the utmost relief that the courts can afford the creditor, as to the mortgaged property, is to sell it and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt. If any balance remains, the creditor must always look to other property; and our state laws are as favorable to the creditor in this respect as those of any other state in the Union, and, as we have seen, more favorable than the remedies administered by the Federal courts under their practice.

Section 24 of the redemption act in question has been the subject of much criticism. It relates to the appointment of a receiver, under certain circumstances, after the sale, and the application of the income up to the execution of the sheriff's deed; but no question arises under that section in this case, for the record does not show that any receiver was ever appointed or applied for under that section, nor under § 4349, Gen. Stat. 1889. It would seem that, even if said section should be held invalid, the other sections might yet stand firm.

There is a broad line between this case and Greenwood v. Butler, 53 Kan. 424, 23 L. R. A. 465, where the decree of foreclosure had been entered, and the rights of the parties fixed thereby, prior to the passage of said chapter 109, Acts 1893. If a state legislature may totally abolish imprisonment of the debtor as a means of enforcing payment; if it may shorten the statutes of limitation; if it may reasonably extend and enlarge exemptions of property from sale for the payment of debts; if, where coupons are by law made receivable in payment of taxes, it may require such payment in the first instance in cash, to be afterwards refunded, and the coupons taken up; if it may reduce the rate of interest on redemption from decretal sales; if it may lessen the interest on former judgments; if it may require the holder of a tax-sale certificate to give three months' notice of the time when a tax deed will be applied for; if it may require transcripts of judgments against a particular city to be filed in a certain office, as a prerequisite to payment, and divest the courts of the power to grant remedies in force when the judgments were rendered; if it may reduce the terms of court, in number and duration; if it may amend the laws as to attachments, garnishments, and receivers so as to take away causes therefor which were before sufficient; if, in short, "it may regulate at pleasure the modes of proceeding" in the courts, and all this as to existing obligations,—it is difficult to frame a process of reasoning which would forbid it from so regulating the procedure upon the foreclosure of mortgages as to define and make more certain the indefinite estate impliedly reserved by every mortgagor of real property, and called into active existence only by the foreclosure, and which indefinite estate is extended by the Federal courts of equity for six months in the first instance, and afterwards, "once or oftener," in the discretion of the chancellor, according to the circumstances of the case. Even if the statute in question should impair the remedy formerly grantable upon a foreclosure, yet it should not for this reason be held invalid, for there is no constitutional inhibition against an impairment of the general remedies for the enforcement of broken contracts; and each and every of the special examples just cited is an instance of the impairment or abolition of a remedy allowable and in force when the obligation was incurred.

Upon the whole, it does not appear that any judgment or decision of the Supreme Court of the United States requires this court to hold said chapter 109 unconstitutional, whatever may have been remarked by judges in delivering their opinions; for it is quite impossible to harmonize all that they have said, although the judgments or decisions may not be in conflict. Even doubt of the constitutionality of said chapter is not sufficient to warrant its judicial condemnation, especially by this court. In such case it seems better to leave such condemnation to the final arbiter, the Supreme Court of the Union. This opinion is of unusual, perhaps unwarrantable, length; but the question involved is so important, and the respect of the writer for the deliberate judgment of his predecessor and the associate justice who concurred with him so profound, that it has been deemed best to state fully the reasons which lead to a different conclusion from that reached by the former majority of the court.

The motion for a rehearing will be granted, The judgment of the District Court overruling the motion of plaintiff in error for the issue of a certificate of sale, instead of a deed, will be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

Allen, J., concurring.

Johnston, J., dissenting:

This case, together with Watkins v. Glenn, 55 Kan. 417, was submitted upon ample briefs and oral argument at the March, 1895, session, and after a full consideration a decision was reached in April following, when it was determined by a majority of the court that the redemption law has no retroactive operation and therefore does not apply to mortgage contracts existing at and before its passage, and that, if the legislature intended the act to apply to such contracts, it would violate section 10 of article 1 of the Federal Constitution. The judgment of the court was pronounced by Chief Justice Horton, and I am still satisfied with the views then expressed. The opinion delivered by Chief Justice Horton embodies a careful review of the authorities, and such a clear and forcible exposition of the law, that I am satisfied no additional force could be added by any further comments that I might make. I refer to that opinion for the grounds of my dissent to the allowance of a rehearing and to the judgment of reversal.*

*The opinion referred to was as follows:

HORTON, Ch. J.:

On March 1, 1886, Marshall H. Glenn and Lillie O. Glenn, his wife executed and delivered their promissory note for $1,500 to the trustees of the Home for Friendless and Destitute Children, in the city of Wilmington, and at the same time, to secure the payment of the note, they executed and delivered their mortgage deed to the home upon the following described real estate: "The south half of the northwest quarter of section twelve (12), township thirty-two (32), range seven (7) west, of the 6th p. m. in Harper county, in this state." The note and mortgage were subsequently assigned and transferred to J. B. Watkins, the plaintiff. This action was commenced in the district court of Harper county, on the 14th of April, 1891, to foreclose and sell the mortgaged premises to pay the indebtedness secured thereby. On May 13, 1891, the defendants Glenn and wife filed the following amended answer, omitting caption: "(1) The defendants, Marshall H. Glenn and Lillie O. Glenn, for their answer to plaintiff's petition in the above entitled cause filed, deny each and every allegation therein contained. (2) These defendants, for a further answer to said petition, say and allege that the said note and bond sued upon in this action have been fully paid by these defendants long prior to the commencement of this action, and on or about the 1st day of March, 1886. (3) These defendants further aver that said note, if any there be, was given for a loan of money, and that the interest on said loan was to be at the rate of 10 per cent; and the amount in the bond was to bear the rate of 7 per cent interest, and 3 per cent of said interest is represented by the mortgage and note, held by the defendant Thomas S. Moffett, and the interest on said bond is therefore usurious and illegal. (4) These defendants further aver that said bond or note is non-negotiable, and all the facts above set forth were and always have been well known to the plaintiff herein. (5) These defendants further allege that the plaintiff, J. B. Watkins, is a member of the American Banking Association, a combination and association having for its object and purpose the controlling, regulating, and fixing the amount of money in actual circulation, and for the controlling, regulating, and fixing the rate of interest, and the rate of use and forbearance of money charged and to be charged by its members of their customers and borrowers. That said association is illegal, unlawful, and contrary to public policy. That by reason of the existence of said combination and its actions as aforesaid, in the furtherance of the object of said combination, these defendants have been injured and damaged, and their ability to pay and meet their contracts has been controlled. Wherefore these defendants demand judgment against the plaintiff for costs of suit, and for such other and further relief as equity may require."

Thomas S. Moffett, one of the defendants, filed an answer and cross-petition to recover $337.50 of Glenn and wife, and also to foreclose a mortgage upon the premises described in plaintiff's petition, executed on the 1st of March, 1886, by them to secure a note of $225 with interest. Glenn and wife filed an answer to this cross-petition. The mortgage executed and delivered to the home contained the following provision: "It is further agreed that in case of default in the payment of said bond, or any part thereof, or any of the sums of money to become due herein specified, according to the tenor and effect of said bond, or in the case of the breach by the said party of the first part of any of the covenants or agreements herein mentioned by said first party to be performed, then, and in that case, the bond secured hereby shall bear interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum from date, and this conveyance shall become absolute, and the party of the second part be at once entitled to the possession of the said above-described premises, and to have and receive all the rents and profits thereof."

Trial had before the court without a jury, on the 29th of January, 1894. The court found that the allegations of the plaintiff's petition were true, and that there was due the plaintiff, as therein alleged, from the defendants Marshall H. Glenn and Lillie O. Glenn, $1,500 as principal, and $952.55, as interest, aggregating $2,452.55, and that the mortgage in plaintiff's petition set forth was and is a first and prior lien on the premises described therein. The court further found that there was due to the defendant T. S. Moffett, from Glenn and wife $438, with interest, and that the mortgage set out in his petition was a second lien upon the premises. Subsequently the court rendered personal judgments upon its findings against Glenn and wife, and for a foreclosure of the mortgaged premises, and a sale thereof to pay the judgment, interest, and costs. The judgment or decree of foreclosure provided: "It is hereby further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the sheriff making said sale shall execute and deliver to the purchaser or purchasers of said mortgaged premises, or any part thereof, at said foreclosure sale, a good and sufficient certificate of purchase for the premises so sold, upon the confirmation of said sale, as provided by the laws of the state of Kansas (Laws 1893, chap. 100, §§ 1, 2, 26), containing a description of the property purchased and the amount of money paid by each purchaser, together with the amount of costs up to said date, and stating that, unless redemption is made within eighteen months thereafter according to law, the purchaser, or his heirs or his assigns, will be entitled to a deed to the same; and that, upon the making and execution of such deed or deeds to such purchaser or purchasers, any of the defendants who may be in possession of said mortgaged premises, or any person or persons holding possession under, through, or by them, or either of them, since the commencement of this action, shall immediately surrender the possession of said premises to such purchaser or purchasers, upon production of such sheriff's deed. That upon production of such sheriff's deed to said mortgaged premises, if the parties in possession of the same neglect or refuse to surrender the possession of said premises to the purchaser at said sheriff's sale, a writ of assistance shall be issued by the clerk of the district court, upon the application of the purchaser at said sheriff's sale, directing the sheriff of said county to take possession of said mortgaged premises, and deliver the same to said purchaser. It is hereby further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that, from and after the execution of such deed or deeds, each and all of the defendants herein named shall be forever barred, both at law and in equity, from any right, title, lien, or interest in, to or against the mortgaged premises hereinbefore described."

Sections 1, 2, and 26 of said chapter 100 read as follows:

"Sec. 1. After sale by the sheriff of any real estate on execution, special execution, or order of sale, he shall, if the real estate sold by him is not subject to redemption, at once execute a deed therefor to the purchaser; but if the same is subject to redemption, he shall execute to the purchaser a certificate containing a description of the property and the amount of money paid by such purchaser, together with the amount of the costs up to said date, stating that unless redemption is made within eighteen months thereafter according to law, that the purchaser or his heirs or assigns will be entitled to a deed to the same; provided, that any contract in any mortgage or deed of trust waiving the right of redemption shall be null and void.

"Sec. 2. The defendant owner may redeem any real property sold under execution, special execution, or order of sale, at the amount sold for, together with interest, costs, and taxes, as provided for in this act, at any time within eighteen months from the day of sale as herein provided, and shall in the meantime be entitled to the possession of the property; but where the court or judge shall find that the lands and tenements have been abandoned, or are not occupied in good faith, the period of redemption for defendant owner shall be six months from the date of sale, and all junior lien holders shall be entitled to three months to redeem after the expiration of said six months."

"Sec. 26. The sheriff shall at once make a return of all sales made under this act to the court; and the court, if it finds the proceedings regular and in conformity with law and equity, shall confirm the same and direct that the clerk make an entry upon the journal that the court finds that the sale has in all respects been made in conformity to law, and order that the sheriff make to the purchaser the certificate of sale or deed provided for in section 1 of this act."

To the judgment, decree, and order of the court directing the issuance of a certificate of purchase, under chapter 100, Laws 1893, J. B. Watkins, the plaintiff below, excepted, and brings the case here for review and reversal.

The question for our determination in this case is whether chapter 100, Laws 1893, relating to the sale and redemption of real estate, was intended by the legislature to operate retrospectively, so as to apply to mortgage contracts existing at and before its passage. Involved in this is the further question whether, if the act was intended to apply to such contracts, it violates article 1, § 10, of the Constitution of the United States, which ordains that "no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts." The contention on the part of the plaintiff is that chapter 100 was not intended by the legislature to apply to mortgage contracts entered into prior to its passage, and that, if such were the intention of the legislature the act is unconstitutional as to such contracts. It is admitted upon the part of the defendants below that if, under the provisions of the statute of 1893, there is any material change or impairment of the contract rights secured under the mortgage, however slight, it is unconstitutional. But the claim is that the statute acts on the remedy only; that the plaintiff has under that act a substantial remedy to enforce the provisions of his mortgage; and therefore that it is constitutional, and was intended by the legislature to apply to all contracts, whether made before or after its passage. It is conceded "that the laws which subsist at the time and place of making the contract and where it is to be performed, enter into and form a part of it, as if they were expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms." United States v. Quincy, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 535, 18 L. ed. 403. It has been ruled in Seibert v. United States, 123 U. S. 234, 30 L. ed. 1161, "that the remedy subsisting in a state when and where a contract is made and is to be performed is a part of its obligation, and that any subsequent law of the state which so affects that remedy as substantially to impair and lessen the value of the contract is forbidden by the Constitution, and is therefore void." Again in Louisiana v. New Orleans, 101 U. S. 203, 26 L. ed. 132, the court held: "The obligation of a contract is impaired by such legislation as lessens the efficacy of the remedy which the law in force at the time they were made provided for enforcing them. Whatever legislation lessens the efficacy of these means impairs the obligation. If it tend to postpone or retard the enforcement of the contract, the obligation of the latter is to that extent weakened. The Latin proverb Qui cito dat bis dat—'He who gives quickly gives twice'—has its counterpart in a maxim equally sound, Qui serius solvit, minus solvit—'He who pays too late, pays less.' Any authorization of the postponement of payment, or of means by which such postponement may be effected, is in conflict with the constitutional inhibition."

Whether the contract sued on is modified or affected by the act of 1893, if held to apply, is a test to the constitutionality of the act. If that act lessens the value of the mortgage or its security, it cannot operate upon such a contract in existence at the time of its passage. The act provides that the mortgagor shall have eighteen months from the date of sale to redeem; that a receiver can only be appointed in case of waste; that the income during the period for redemption, except what is necessary to keep up repairs and prevent waste, shall go to the owner or defendant in execution or the owner of the legal title. Under the express condition of the mortgage sued on, in case of default in the payment of the debt secured, the mortgagee is entitled "to have and receive all the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises to apply upon his note or bond." Under the former law, a receiver could have been appointed to take possession of the mortgaged premises, collect the rents and profits thereof, and apply the same, less expenses, to the satisfaction of the debt. The act of 1893 deprives the mortgagee of this right, and therefore of a part of the security given by the very terms of his mortgage.

Again, the act carves out for the mortgagor or the owner of the mortgaged property an estate of several months, more than obtainable by him under the former law, with full right of possession, and without paying rents, profits, or taxes. Under the former law, after a foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises, the purchaser was given actual possession as soon as the sale was confirmed and the sheriff's deed issued. Thereafter the mortgagor or the owner had no possession, title, or right in any way to the premises. In the counties where the courts are almost continually in session, as Atchison, Shawnee, Sedgwick, and Wyandotte, and in other counties of the state where there are frequent sessions of the courts, a sheriff's deed generally issues in a few days after the sale. To contend that the actual possession of the mortgaged premises by the mortgagor or owner for any specific period of time, whether it be for six, twelve, or eighteen months, after a judicial sale, gives the same security to the mortgagee as the former law, which permitted the purchaser of the premises under a decretal sale to take possession as soon as the sale was confirmed and the sheriff's deed issued, is to claim that the possession of real estate is of no value whatever. As was forcibly observed by Allen, J., in Greenwood v. Butler, 52 Kan. 424, 23 L. R. A. 465: "It cannot be said that a sale of lands with a right of possession remaining in the judgment debtor for a year and a half thereafter is the same thing as a sale with a right to immediate possession on confirmation of the sale. It is simply the carving out and taking away from the estate originally decreed to be sold another estate limited for a year and a half. It diminishes the value of the lands to be sold by just exactly the value of the tenure, rent free, for a year and a half. The fact that the judgment would still draw interest does not affect the question as to the value of the security to be sold for its satisfaction." In our opinion, the obligation of the mortgage contract in this case is substantially impaired by the act of 1893, if that act operates upon contracts in existence at the date of its passage, as it injuriously affects the value of the mortgage security. The act, therefore, if applied to past contracts, is unconstitutional and void.

We think this conclusion is fully supported by the great weight of authority, and especially by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, which are controlling in the interpretation of the provisions of the Federal Constitution. In Pounds v. Rodgers, 62 Kan. 359, it was ruled that "the sale of land for delinquent taxes, under the statute, constitutes a contract between the purchaser and the state, the terms of which are found in the law then in force. All matters relative to the sale and conveyance of land for taxes under any prior statute shall be fully completed according to the laws under which they originated, the same as if such laws remained in force." In Bixby v. Bailey, 11 Kan. 359, Brewer, J., speaking for the court, in referring to the redemption law of the 4th of June, 1861, observed: "It is insisted that under the law in force at the time of the decree and sale the debtor had two years to redeem, and therefore the sheriff's deed was void. The note and mortgage were executed before the redemption law, and therefore unaffected by its provisions." He cited Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143. In Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kan. 233, Valentine, J., stated: "At the time said mortgage was executed (in 1858) there was no law authorizing a redemption of land from a sheriff's sale, and the law of June 4, 1861 (Comp. Laws, 769), cannot have a retrospective operation so as to apply to said mortgage." In view of these expressions of this court delivered by such eminent and painstaking jurists as Brewer and Valentine, and considering that section 1 of chapter 109 provides for deeds to issue at once on sales of real estate not subject to redemption, and for certificates to issue on sales subject to redemption, we think the legislature did not intend that the provisions of the act of 1893 should apply to mortgage contracts existing at the date of its passage. No statute, however positive in its terms, is to be construed as designed to interfere with existing contracts, rights of action, or suits, and especially vested rights, unless the intention that it should so operate is expressly declared. And courts will apply new statutes only to future cases, unless there is something in the very nature of the case, or in the language of the new provision, which shows that they were intended to have a retroactive operation. Potter's Dwarrr. Stat. 75; Id. 162, 163, note. Sedgwick, in his work on the Construction of Statutes and Constitutions (2d ed.), after stating that the retrospective or retroactive statutes, independently of certain exceptions, are within the scope of the legislative power, yet says that "such laws, as a general rule, are objectionable, and the judiciary will give all laws a prospective operation only, unless their language is so clear as not to be susceptible of any construction." Page 173. Again he says: "The courts refuse to give statutes a retroactive construction, unless the intention is so clear and positive as by no possibility to admit of any other construction." Page 166. If the legislature intended the act to be retrospective in its operation so as to apply to prior mortgages, the following decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the reasons given therein, are conclusive that the act is unconstitutional and void as to such contracts: Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 213, 327, 6 L. ed. 608, 610; Green v. Biddle, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 1-107, 5 L. ed. 547-573; Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143; McCracken v. Hayward, 43 U. S. 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397; Gantly v. Ewing, 44 U. S. 3 How. 716, 11 L. ed. 798; Ex parte City Bank, 44 U. S. 323, 11 L. ed. 619; Clark v. Reyburn, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 322, 19 L. ed. 356; Walker v. Whitehead, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 314, 21 L. ed. 357; Howard v. Bugbee, 65 U. S. 24 How. 461, 16 L. ed. 753; Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 47 U. S. 6 How. 301, 12 L. ed. 447; Gunn v. Barry, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 212; Brine v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 96 U. S. 627, 637, 24 L. ed. 858, 862; Memphis v. United States, 97 U. S. 233, 24 L. ed. 920; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 233, 27 L. ed. 510; Buts v. Muscatine, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 575, 19 L. ed. 490; Fort of Mobile v. United States, 116 U. S. 506, 25 L. ed. 626; Curran v. Arkansas, 56 U. S. 15 How. 819, 14 L. ed. 712; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 208, 25 L. ed. 133; Seibert v. United States, 122 U. S. 284, 30 L. ed. 1161; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. ed. 793. As sustaining the constitutionality of chapter 109 to prior contracts, we are referred to Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 140 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825; Curtis v. Whitney, 60 U. S. 18 Wall. 63, 30 L. ed. 513; Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 769, 27 L. ed. 468. The cases mostly commented upon are Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, and Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. supra. In the Cushman case, the action was between the purchaser of the mortgaged property, at the decretal sale, and the party entitled to redemption. The mortgagee was not a party, or interested. The court ruled that the Illinois statute for 1879, reducing the interest from 10 per cent to 8, was valid between the purchaser of mortgaged premises and the party entitled to redemption, although the mortgage was given before the passage of the statute. Mr. Justice Harlan, in delivering the opinion in that case, said among other things: "Certainly the obligation of that contract was not impaired by the act of 1879, for it did not diminish the duty of the mortgagor to pay what he agreed to pay, or shorten the period of payment, or interfere with or take away any remedy which the mortgagee had, by existing law, for the enforcement of its contract. The statute in force when the mortgage was executed, prescribing the rate of interest which the amount paid or bid by the purchaser should bear, as between him and the party seeking to redeem, had no relation to the obligation of the contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. The mortgagor might, perhaps, have claimed that his statutory right to redeem could not be burdened by an increased rate of interest beyond that prescribed by statute at the time he executed the mortgage. But, as to the mortgagee, the obligation of the contract was fully met when it received what the mortgage and statute in force when the mortgage was executed, entitled it to demand." And after referring to Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. ed. 793, and other prior decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, remarked: "These decisions clearly have no application to the case now before the court. The laws with reference to which the parties must be assumed to have contracted, when the mortgage was executed, were those which in their direct or necessary legal operation controlled or affected the obligations of such contract. We have seen that no reduction of the rate of interest, as between the purchaser of mortgaged property at decretal sale and the party entitled to redeem, affected, or could possibly affect, the right of the insurance company to receive, or the duty of mortgagor to pay, the entire mortgage debt, with interest as stipulated in the mortgage up to the decree of sale. And the result of the sale in this case shows that the company, as mortgagor, has received all that it was entitled to demand."

In this case there is no showing that the mortgagee can or will receive all that he is entitled to demand under the decree complained of. If the plaintiff in this case had received the full amount of his mortgage, with interest and costs, he would not be here. In the Morley case, supra, the court ruled that a state statute, reducing the rate of interest upon judgments obtained within the courts of the state, is not, when applied to one previous to its passage, in violation of section 1 of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Justice Shiras, in delivering the opinion, observed: "Interest on a principal sum may be stipulated for in the contract itself, either to run from the date of the contract until it matures, or until payment is made; and its payment in such a case is as much a part of the obligation of contract as the principal, and equally within the protection of the Constitution. But if the contract itself does not provide for interest, then, of course, interest does not accrue during the running of the contract, and whether, after maturity and a failure to pay, interest shall accrue, depends wholly on the law of the state, as declared by its statutes. If the state declares that, in case of the breach of a contract, interest shall accrue, such interest is in the nature of damages, and, as between the parties to the contract, such interest will continue to run until payment, or until the owner of the cause of action elects to merge it into judgment. . . . It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff in error, as stated above, that the judgment is itself a contract, and includes within the scope of its obligation the duty to pay interest thereon. As we have seen, it is doubtless the duty of the defendant to pay the interest that shall accrue on the judgment, if such interest be prescribed by statute, but such duty is created by the statute, and not by the agreement of the parties, and the judgment is not itself a contract within the meaning of the constitutional provision invoked by the plaintiff in error. The most important elements of a contract are wanting. There is no aggregatio mentium. The defendant has not voluntarily assented or promised to pay. "A judgment is in no sense a contract or agreement between the parties." These cases, and the other United States cases referred to, to sustain the decree of the trial court, are clearly distinguishable from the Federal decisions cited by us against the act of 1893, if it be given a retrospective operation.

Finally, it is suggested that, if chapter 109 is not retrospective, there will be great confusion in the courts in the mode of procedure in foreclosing and selling mortgaged property. But the act of 1893 itself specifically provides that in some cases real estate may be sold without redemption, and in other cases be sold subject to redemption; hence the act does not command uniformity of procedure. Laws 1893, chap. 109, § 1. Further, the suggestion of confusion of procedure in the courts could be used as effectively against the decision in Greenwood v. Butler, supra, as in this case. There were many judgments rendered in this state before the passage of chapter 109, foreclosing mortgages upon real estate, where the sales did not occur until after the passage of the act. Yet this court held unanimously that the act had no retrospective operation as to judgments rendered before its passage. Therefore the argument concerning the confusion of procedure is one of degree only between judgments and mortgages existing prior to the passage of the act. We think such an argument is without substance. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to the court below to correct the decree complained of, and to order that, after sale and confirmation, a sheriff's deed shall issue according to law.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

James BEAVAN, Appt.,

v.

Sarah WENT et al.

(155 Ill. 562.)

1. The common-law rule that one citizen cannot inherit from another where kinship must be traced through a non-resident alien cannot be rejected as repugnant or inapplicable to our institutions or the condition of things in this country, under a statutory adoption of the general principles of the common law so far as applicable.

2. The repeal of a statute which abrogated a common-law rule revives that rule.

NOTE.—Effect of state Constitutions and statutes upon the question of inheritance by or from an alien.

I. United States statutes.

II. State Constitutions and statutes and their construction.

III. Decisions under the English statutes.

Upon the question of an alien's right to inherit, see note to Easton v. Huott, post. — (1895).

Upon the question of the effect of state Constitutions and statutes upon inheritance through an alien, see note to DeWolf v. Middleton (R. I.) post, 146 (1895).

The effect of treaties upon the right of an alien to inherit will form a separate note.

As to treaty guaranties to aliens, see note to Gandolf v. Hartman (C. C. S. D. Cal.) 16 L. R. A. 277 (1892).

Upon the question of the disability of aliens and the escheat of property, see note to American Mortg. Co. v. Tennille (Ga.) 12 L. R. A. 529 (1891), and brief in Toole v. Toole (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 465 (1889).

I. United States statutes.

By the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, chap. 340 (1 Sup. U. S. Rev. Stat. vol. 1, 1874, 1891, p. 556), "An Act to Restrict the Ownership of Real Estate in the Territories to American Citizens," etc., it is enacted that it shall be unlawful for any person or persons not citizens of the United States, or who have not lawfully declared their intention to become such citizens, or for any corporation not created by or under the laws of the United States, or of some state or territory of the United States, to hereafter acquire, hold, or own real estate so hereafter acquired, or any interest therein, in any of the territories of the United States or in the District of Columbia, except such as may be acquired by inheritance or in good faith in the ordinary 31 L. R. A.

course of justice in the collection of debts heretofore created: Provided, that the prohibition of this section shall not apply to cases in which the right to hold or dispose of lands in the United States is secured by existing treaties to the citizens or subjects of foreign countries, which rights, so far as they may exist by force of any such treaty, shall continue to exist so long as such treaties are in force, and no longer.

II. State Constitutions and statutes and their construction.

Alabama.

An act of the legislature rendering an alien capable of inheriting as if he were a citizen is a removal only of the defect or want of inheritable blood, but cannot by construction be so enlarged as to render a deceased alien capable of transmitting to such alien an inheritance. Congregational Church v. Morris, 8 Ala. 182.

A state statute waiving the right to escheat, and giving an alien a right to take from a deceased alien, makes him sole heir, although there may be others of the same relationship to the decedent, who, if citizens, would take as heirs along with such one. Ibid.

The Constitution of Alabama of 1875, in which it is declared that foreigners who are bona fide residents shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property as native-born citizens, forbade the legislature to make any discrimination against resident foreigners, but left the competency of the law-making power quite ample to conferring on non-resident aliens the same property rights as might be enjoyed by such resident foreigners or by individual or naturalized citizens. Nicrosi v. Phillips, 91 Ala. 299, 307 (1890).

It has been held that such constitutional provision was a limitation merely on the otherwise

3. A statutory provision that an estate shall descend in equal parts to next of kin does not make the descent to collateral kindred immediate, so as to avoid the effect of alienage of ancestors through whom kinship is traced.

(Craig and Baker, JJ., dissent.)

(January 15, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Superior Court for Cook County sustaining a demurrer to a complaint filed to obtain partition of the real estate of William Went, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

boundless power of the legislature in the premises, and not the grant of power in any sense. Ibid.

The Alabama Code, § 1914, being § 2860 of the Code of 1876, provides that aliens, resident or nonresident, may take and hold property by purchase or descent or devise as native citizens. Ibid.

In Nicrosi v. Phillipi, supra, a wife died intestate without children or other descendants, possessed of real estate held to her sole and separate use, leaving her husband a natural-born citizen, and nonresident alien brother and sisters her surviving. It was held that under the above sections of the Code the brothers and sisters took the estate to the exclusion of her husband, whose marital rights had been excluded by the conveyance.

California.

It has been held that Cal. Const. art. 1, § 17, does not inhibit state legislation with respect to the right of an alien to inherit. Re Billings' Estate, 65 Cal. 593 (1884).

Foreigners who are bona fide residents are entitled to the same rights of property under the Constitution of the state of California as native-born citizens. Mitchell v. Hagood, 6 Cal. 148 (1858); Stemsen v. Bofor, 6 Cal. 250 (1856); Norris v. Hoyt, 18 Cal. 217 (1861).

The state Constitutions expressly prohibited nonresident aliens from inheriting. Stemsen v. Bofor, and Norris v. Hoyt, supra.

In Farrell v. Enright, 12 Cal. 450 (1859), the intestate, a resident of the state, left surviving him neither wife nor descendants nor parent, and only one brother, the defendant, and one sister, one of the plaintiffs. The brother was a resident of the state, but the sister and her husband, the plaintiffs in the action, were both aliens. Letters of administration were taken out, and under the probate proceedings the real estate was sold to a purchaser who conveyed to the defendant. Part of such real estate involved in the action had been in possession of the defendant ever since intestate's death. The plaintiffs, who had become residents of California, brought action to establish the sister's title to half the property as coheir with her resident brother. The court held that the sister had no claim, as she was not, at the time of the descent cast, within the terms of Cal. Const. art. 1, § 17, which provides that "foreigners who are or may hereafter become bona fide residents of this state shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property as native-born citizens," and that therefore the subsequent residence of such sister did not retract so as to confer upon her any right under such section to inherit any portion of the real estate of which her deceased brother died possessed.

In the above case the common law had been adopted in the state of California at the time of the intestate's death, and there was then no statute changing the doctrine. Cal. Const. art. 1, § 17, does not alter the position of nonresident aliens in respect to the inheritance of real estate, but only affects or removes the disability of bona fide resident aliens.

Messrs. Prentiss, Montgomery, & Hall, for appellant:

The "sisters and their descendants" are nonresident aliens, and as such are incapable of taking and holding real estate in this state because of our statute; therefore the estate descends as "intestate" estate to the heir at law or "next of kin" "capable of inheriting."

Rev. Stat. 1893, Hurd's ed. chap. 6; 4 Kent, Com. p. 541; 7 Am. L. Rev. pp. 56, 57; 1 Jarman, Wills, p. 311, and cases cited; 2 Redf. Wills, pp. 175, 176; Mills v. Newberry, 112 Ill. 123, 54 Am. Rep. 213; Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84; Schultze v. Schultze, 144 Ill. 290, 19 L. R. A. 90.

In State v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 160 (1859), the court held that if Cal. Const. art. 1, § 17, was to secure a certain protection to such resident aliens as might be in the state at the time of the descent cast, yet it was not designed to comprehend all the law in respect to the same, and further that the legislature could not abridge the privilege, but it was not disabled from extending it or adding other privileges, an alien being secured by the Constitution in that one privilege, state legislation, in so far as it did not conflict with any constitutional restriction, securing as many more privileges as it chose to give to aliens.

In the above case the constitutionality of the act of the legislature of California of April 19, 1856, relative to escheated estates, was involved. Under § 1 of such act, aliens were entitled to hold by inheritance real and personal estate as though they were native-born citizens of the state or of the United States, except that no nonresident foreigner could hold such estate within the limits of the state five years after the time when he inherited the same, and in case of his not appearing or claiming his estate within such period then the same was to be sold upon information of the attorney general and the proceeds deposited in the treasury of the state for the benefit of such nonresident alien, or his legal representatives, to be paid to them at any time within five years thereafter, upon production of satisfactory evidence that they were the legal heirs to, and entitled to inherit, such estate; and if they did not so appear and claim, and produce such evidence within the extended term of five years, the same became state property, placed to the credit of the school fund. The property was claimed by the state upon the ground that the same escheated to the state as the intestate died seized, without heirs capable of inheriting, and the defendants demurred on the ground that no cause of action had accrued to the state, for the reason that the five years had not elapsed since they inherited. The court held the act was constitutional, and that the statute denied the present right of the state to take the property, and that it was a good answer to one in possession to show such want of power in the state.

In the above case it was contended that Cal. Const. art. 1, § 17, was restrictive, as well as enabling; that its terms excluded any other rights or privileges to aliens than those given. But the court held such contention was erroneous, as the Constitution was not a grant of power or an enabling act to the legislature, but a limitation on the general powers of a legislative character, and restrained only so far as the restriction appeared, either by express terms or by necessary inference, the object of the provision being to secure a certain protection to such resident aliens as might be in the state at the time of the descent, the alien being secured by the Con-

While complainant traces his relationship with William Went through aliens, still there can be no doubt but that the statute of descents causes the estate to descend immediately from William Went, deceased, to appellant.

"The next of kin" takes immediately from the intestate, and not immediately through his alien ancestors. The statute is very plain. The language with reference to this particular question is as follows: "Such estate shall descend in equal parts to the next of kin to the intestate."

Starr & C. Rev. Stat. § 5, chap. 39.

While the right to inherit comes to him immediately through some person who was an alien, the statute casts the estate directly upon him.

Bingham, Laws of Descent, p. 498; Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 413.

As between brothers, a father, although a medium sanguinis, is not a medium hereditatis.

Bingham, Laws of Descent, p. 492; Parish v. Ward, 28 Barb. 331.

So the descendants of one brother can inherit from the descendants of the other ad infinitum in case where the father of the brothers is an alien, because the descent is immediate.

McGregor v. Comstock, 3 N. Y. 408.

stitution in the one privilege, while he might be secured by the legislature in as many more as it chose to give,—provided there was no conflict with any constitutional restrictions upon its power.

The court in that case referred to the prior decision in Farrell v. Enright, 12 Cal. 450 (1859), relative to the construction of such section of the Constitution, and stated that the act of 1856 was not involved therein.

In Norris v. Hoyt, 18 Cal. 217 (1861), plaintiff relied upon a patent of the United States issued upon a confirmation of a grant from the Mexican government, and the defendants alleged that the plaintiff was a foreigner, and was not, and never had been, a bona fide resident of California; and further, that the defendants entered upon the land in question under an agreement on the part of the plaintiff to pay for improvements, provided it was established that the premises belonged to him. The court held that the alleged allenege or nonresidence of the plaintiff, if established, would have constituted no defense to the action, the alien being entitled to hold by act of the party, until office found, and therefore, until such time, could maintain an action of ejectment, but that the rule was otherwise in case of a title acquired by act of law, as by descent.

It is well settled in California that under the laws of Mexico aliens could inherit real estate. McNeill v. Polk, 57 Cal. 323 (1881); Ramirez v. Kent, 2 Cal. 560 (1852); People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373 (1855); Merle v. Mathews, 26 Cal. 477 (1864); Racouillat v. Sansavain, 32 Cal. 386 (1867).

The Civil Code of California, § 671, provides that any person, whether citizen or alien, may take, hold, or dispose of property within this state, and by § 672, if a nonresident alien take by succession, he must appear and claim the property within five years from the time of succession or be barred, the property in such case being disposed of as provided by title 8, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure of that state. Section 1404 enables resident aliens to take in all cases by succession, as citizens, and no person capable of succeeding under the provisions of that title are precluded from such succession by reason of the allenege of any relative, but no nonresident foreigner can take by succession, unless he appears and claims such succession within five years after the death of the decedent to whom he claims succession.

The court in considering the above sections of the Code, in Billings' Estate v. Hauver, 65 Cal. 593 (1884), considered that the word "take," as used in § 671, was broad enough to include the taking by descent as well as by purchase, and as used to indicate the taking or acquisition of property in either of the modes above mentioned, and as not confined to the acquisition by purchase; and further, that the taking of property was not confined to an alien residing in the state, § 671 clearly extending the right to all aliens whether resident or nonresident of the state, the following section confirming such interpretation of the preceding one, speaking of nonresident aliens taking by succession, which was the equivalent of descent, the sections of the Code not violating the provisions of the Constitution; and therefore nonresident alien heirs were held entitled to take equally with resident heirs.

In the above case the court followed the prior decision in State v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 159 (1859), decided under the Constitution of that state of 1849, which, as amended by the later Constitution, provides that foreigners of the white race eligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws thereof, while bona fide residents of that state should have the same rights in respect to the acquisition, possession, enjoyment, transmission, and inheritance of property as native-born citizens.

In State v. Lyons (Cal.) 7 Pac. 763 (1885), the intestate died leaving no heirs resident within the state, and a public administrator was appointed who took possession. The petitioners, all nonresident aliens, sought to reverse a judgment obtained under Code Civ. Proc. § 1269, in favor of the state, alleging that they were the heirs at law and only heirs of the deceased, and had no notice, actual or constructive, of such proceedings, their petition being signed by the attorney in hand and at law. The court held the petitioner entitled under § 671 of the Civil Code, and that it was not necessary, in order for them to present their claim, that they should come to the state in person and claim the property, the general rule being that the parties, whether the plaintiff or defendant, resident or nonresident, might appear in court to claim their supposed rights either in person or by attorney.

In the above case the court followed and adopted the construction placed upon Cal. Const. art. 1, § 17, by the court in the cases of State v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 159 (1859), and Re Billings' Estate (Cal.) 1 Pac. 701 (1884).

It has been held, under Cal. Civ. Code, § 671, which provides that any person, whether citizen or alien, may take, hold, and dispose of property, real or personal, within this state, that an alien nonresident of the state might inherit property, and that such property vested in him upon the death of an intestate, and could only be devested by his failing to appear and claim within the times specified in the statute, and that an appearance by attorney was sufficient, personal appearance not being absolutely necessary. Re Gulliford's Estate v. State, 67 Cal. 390 (1885).

So, under Cal. Civ. Code, § 672, the court held that such section did not mean that a nonresident must necessarily appear in person, the manifest object of the provision of the Codes touching such matter being to give to nonresident aliens substantially the same rights to the property of a deceased relative as were secured to resident aliens by the Constitution, and that therefore a nonresident alien and his assignee had the same rights as a resident alien and his assignee, and further, that a nonresident appeared, whether he did so in person or by attorney "Descent," or "hereditary succession," has been defined by Blackstone to be the title whereby a man on the death of his ancestor acquires an estate by right of representation as heir at law.

2 Cooley's Bl. Com. p. 201.

In the case of McCarthy v. Marsh, 5 N. Y. 263, the New York court of appeals held that under the New York statute a person might have collateral as well as lineal ancestors.

The word "ancestor" in this connection, it has been held, applies to the estate that is to descend, and the common-law rule is so changed by our statute that the statute should be held to mean that the estate of an intestate goes immediately to the next of kin or heir at law, and that in this case William Went is the ancestor of the estate that is to descend, and not the source from whence Beavan derived his life, or in the language of the feudal law, his blood.

Bingham, Laws of Descent, p. 495; McCarthy v. Marsh, supra.

The common-law rule which prohibited a man from tracing his inheritable blood through his alien ancestors, is a rule of descent, and has been applied purely to feudal tenures.

Jackson v. Sanders, 2 Leigh, 118; Furenes v. Mickelson, 86 Iowa, 508; Calvin's Case, 7 Coke, 1; Jackson, FitzSimmons, v. FitzSimmons, 10 Wend. 21, 24 Am. Dec. 198.

Cessante ratiō legis, cessat ip̄sa lex.

or by an assignee, and that to give the word "appear" any other meaning would not be a liberal construction of the provisions of the Codes. State v. Carrasco (Cal.) 7 Pac. 766 (1885).

In State v. Carrasco, supra, an intestate left a widow and a minor child both nonresident aliens and the sum in hand under the administration was under proceedings commenced pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1290, paid into the state treasury. Subsequently the child died leaving the mother its only heir, and she, by an instrument in writing, sold and transferred her right to the proceeds of the sale to the claimant, who sought by petition, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1272, to have the money paid over to him. Judgment in the court below was given in favor of the petitioner, but the state appealed, claiming that even if the widow of the deceased could have appeared and claimed the proceeds of his estate her assignee could not do so, and that his claim showed no cause of action. The court held that Cal. Civ. Code, § 671, changed the rule of the common law and provided that any person, whether citizen or alien, might take, hold, and dispose of property, real or personal, within the state, and that as the provisions of the Code were to be liberally construed the petitioner was entitled to such estate.

The words, "nonresident aliens," as used in §§ 671 and 672 of the California Civil Code, were interpreted as indicating those who were neither citizens of the United States nor residents of the state. State v. Smith, 70 Cal. 153 (1886).

The California Code of Civil Procedure, § 1272, only authorizes a nonresident alien to show that he did appear and claim the property within five years from the time of the succession, and gives him no more than the five years, and such five years have no reference to escheat proceedings commenced by the attorney general. Ibid.

Cal. Const. art. 9, § 4, which provides that the proceeds of the estates of deceased persons who may have died without leaving any "heir" shall constitute a part of the school fund, does not limit the power of the legislature to declare that aliens may be heirs, but speaks of the proceeds of the land evidently contemplating procedure in the nature of office found by which the right of the state may be ascertained and determined. State v. Smith, supra.

And art. 1, § 17, of the same Constitution, prohibits the legislature from depriving resident foreigners of any of the rights enjoyed by native citizens with respect to the acquisition, possession, enjoyment, transmission, or inheritance of property, and there is no provision in the Constitution which prohibits the legislature from conferring the same rights upon those born in foreign countries who have never been residents of the state. Ibid.

In Griffith v. Godey, 113 U. S. 89, 28 L. ed. 334 (1885), the claimants were both aliens who had never taken steps toward naturalization. The court held that under the Constitution of California as then in force, foreigners were invested with the same rights in respect to the possession and enjoyment of property as native-born citizens, provided they were bona fide residents of the state.

Colorado.

Nonresident aliens are capable of inheriting property in the state of Colorado by virtue of the statutes of that state (Gen. Laws, chap. 4, § 19, p. 90; McConville v. Howell, 17 Fed. Rep. 104 (1883)).

By the statute of that state above referred to, all aliens may take, by deed, will, or otherwise, lands and tenements, and any interest therein, and alienate, sell, and transmit the same to their heirs or any other persons, whether such heirs or other persons be citizens of the United States or not, and upon the decease of any alien having title to, or interest in, any lands or tenements, such lands and tenements shall pass and descend in the same manner as if such alien were a citizen of the United States, and it shall be no objection to any person having an interest in such estate that he is not a citizen of the United States, but all such persons shall have the same rights and remedies, and in all things be placed upon the same footing, as natural-born citizens of the United States, and the personal estate of an alien, dying intestate, who at the time of his death shall reside in this state, shall be distributed in the same manner as the estate of natural-born citizens, and all persons shall be entitled to their proper distributive shares of such estate under the laws of this state, whether they are aliens or not.

It was contended in McConville v. Howell, supra, that although the statute was broad enough to include the case then in question, yet it was not constitutional as within the provisions of § 27 of article 2 of the Constitution, but the court upheld the same, for the reason that the rights guaranteed by the Constitution could not be taken away, but other rights might be given to the same or to other persons, the legislature having power to go further in conferring such rights upon aliens, but no power to do less than that which was required by the Constitution.

Under Colo. acts Nov. 4, 1861, and April 18, 1880, aliens were capable of inheriting mining claims in that state. Billings v. Aspen Min. & S. Co. 51 Fed. Rep. 338, 10 U. S. App. 1, 2 C. C. A. 262 (1892).

Illinois.

The provisions of Ill. act 1887 were considered in Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84 (1899). By them a nonresident alien was not capable of acquiring title to, or taking or holding, any lands or real estate in that state by descent, devise, purchase, or otherwise, except that the heirs of aliens who had theretofore acquired lands in that state under the laws thereof, and the heirs of aliens who might acquire lands under the provisions of that act, might take such lands by devise or descent, and hold the same for three years and no

The legislature of this state has by direct enactment repealed this common-law rule.

Ill. Rev. Code 1829, p. 207, § 48; Rev. Laws 1845, chap. 4, § 1; 1 Starr & C. Rev. Stat. p. 264.

The act of 1887 repeals the act of 1851, and provides, among other things, "that a nonresident alien . . . shall not be capable of acquiring title to or taking or holding real estate."

3 Starr & C. Rev. Stat. p. 60.

Where a statute is in pari materia with a prior statute, whether the prior statute is repealed or unrepealed, to discover the true meaning of the latter, it is the duty of the court to consider the prior statute.

Church v. Crocker, 8 Mass. 21; Eaton v.

Green, 22 Pick. 580; Goddard v. Boston, 20 Pick. 410; Bruce v. Schuyler, 9 Ill. 230.

Only where a later act is clearly repugnant to a former one, will the former be repealed by implication. Seeming repugnance is not sufficient, but the two acts should be construed as in pari materia and effect be given to both if possible.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 816, note 2, and cases cited; Rhode v. Bank, 52 Iowa, 375; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 4 Gill & J. 152; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24, 4 Am. Rep. 480.

The legislature which used this term (next of kin) intended so to apply it as to describe the same persons who are described by them in the statute of Charles II.; for in our statutes longer, if such alien at the time of so acquiring such lands was of the age of twenty-one years, and if not twenty-one years of age then for the term of five years from the time of so acquiring such lands, and if, at the end of the time therein limited, such lands had not been sold to bona fide purchasers for value, or such alien heirs had not become actual residents of the state, the same were to revert and escheat to the state the same as the lands of other aliens under the provisions of that act.

Objection was made to the Illinois act of 1887 upon the ground that it did not allow nonresident aliens, who would have been heirs of citizens under the Illinois statute of descents but for their alienage, to hold real estate which they might otherwise inherit as heirs for such a reasonable length of time as would enable them to sell the same and remove the proceeds of sale, reference being made to several treaties containing provision as follows: "Where on the death of any person holding real estate within the territories of the one party such real estate would, by the laws of the land, descend on a citizen or subject of the other, were he not disqualified by alienage, such citizen or subject shall be allowed a reasonable time to sell the same and to withdraw the proceeds without molestation, exempt from all duties of distraint on the part of the government of the respective states," but the court held that the appellants being subjects of the grand duchy of Baden, with which state there was no treaty which contained such a provision, the treaties existing between the United States and Baden made in the years 1857, and 1868, having reference to the extradition of criminals and to naturalization only, containing no stipulation as to the acquisition or transfer or transmission of property, such treaties did not take the parties out of the provisions of the act. Wunderle v. Wunderle, supra.

It was also contended that the act should be liberally construed so as to extend the exception in section 1 to the alien heirs of citizens as well as to the heirs of aliens, and thereby give nonresident aliens, kindred of citizens, the right to take lands by descent or devise, and to hold as therein specified; but the court held that the legislature did not intend to declare that the nonresident alien kindred of citizens should so take and hold lands for certain periods, the design being to prevent the accumulation of landed estates in the hands of nonresident aliens, and therefore the exception could not be so construed as to embrace others than the class of persons therein specifically designated. Ibid.

In answer to the contention that the act of 1887 violated § 22 of article 4 of the state Constitution, which prohibited, inter alia, the general assembly from passing local or special laws changing the law of descent, for the reason that it was special in its 31 L. R. A.

character, as conflicting with some of the treaties made by the United States with foreign governments, which conferred upon the subjects or citizens of certain foreign countries the right to take and hold lands in this country by descent or otherwise, and that inasmuch as the act was overruled by those treaties as to nonresident aliens so protected by them, its effect was to deprive the nonresident aliens, not so protected by the treaties, of the right so to take and hold lands in that state, and to leave those who were protected by the treaties in full enjoyment of the rights, thus making a discrimination between the two classes of aliens, the act classifying aliens into those who could take by inheritance and those who could not.—the court held that if the law could be regarded as special because it did not apply to aliens protected by treaties, its special character in that particular was produced by the treaties and not by the provisions of such statute, the act being sufficiently general in its terms to embrace all nonresident aliens except those included in the exception specified in § 1; and further, that the limitation of its general application, arising from the exercise of the treaty-making power of the Federal government, did not make it special within the meaning of the state Constitution, and therefore the act was general as applied to all nonresident aliens not protected by treaties, and even if it had in express terms excepted from its operations those citizens or subjects of foreign countries to whom the right to take and hold lands in the United States had been secured by existing treaties, it would still have been a general law as to a large number of nonresident aliens not embraced within the class so excepted. Ibid.

And the court further stated that this act, repealing the previous act of 1851 continued the privileges of that act to aliens who had acquired lands in Illinois under it, and conferred upon their heirs the right to take by devise or descent a defeasible estate in such lands, and therefore the embodiment of the exception in the act of 1887 did not make it a special law within the meaning of the state Constitution.

And further, that a statute ought to be upheld by the courts unless it was clear that it conflicted with the Constitution, and as it was not clear that the constitutional prohibition against special legislation was intended to refer to the operation of state laws upon different classes of foreigners, but only to their operation upon different classes among the citizens of the state, and that discrimination among different classes of nonresident aliens was intended to be forbidden by the prohibition of special legislation changing the law of descent, such an act could not be held to be a violation of the Constitution of Illinois, the right of inheritance being an incident of alienage or citizenship, and an alien could not take lands by we have directed the personal property to be distributed to the next of kin as well as the real. It cannot be said the legislature intended that only those who could on the principles of the common law inherit real property should take the personal property and exclude all other relatives in the same degree of kindred, yet that must be the case unless the legislature meant two different descriptions of persons by the same words, of which there is not the least intimation in the statute.

Reeve, Laws of Descent, pp. 17, 18.

Our statute of descents and the statute of Charles II. respecting the distribution of personal property are almost identical.

22 & 23 Car. II. chap. 2; Reeve, Laws of Descent, p. 83, and cases cited; Bates v. Brown, 73 U. S. 5 Wall. 710, 18 L. ed. 535.

In construing the meaning of the words "next of kin" as used in the statute of Charles II., the rule adopted by the court was that the quantity of blood was not to be regarded, but the proximity.

Smith v. Tracey, cited in Crooke v. Watt, 2 Vern. 124; Reeve, Laws of Descent, p. 70; Rogers v. Weller, 5 Biss. 169; Campbell's Appeal, 64 Conn. 290, 24 L. R. A. 667; Heath v. White, 5 Conn. 228; Hillhouse v. Chester, 3 Day, 166, 3 Am. Dec. 265; Bush v. Bradley, 4 Day, 298.

When feuds first begun to be hereditary it was made a necessary qualification of the heir who should succeed to a feud that he should descent nor transmit them to others as his heirs by the common law.

And the court also stated that the act of 1887, in enacting that "a nonresident alien . . . shall not be capable of acquiring title to, or taking, or holding any land or real estate in this state by descent," was merely declaratory of the common law, by which if a man left no other relations, but aliens, his lands escheated to the state without office found. Ibid.

And also that the object of the exception to the statute was to save the rights of those aliens who had already "acquired lands in this state subject to the laws thereof," that was subject to the provisions of the Illinois act of 1861. Ibid.

And it was further stated that by the use of the words "heirs of aliens who may acquire lands under the provisions of this act," as found in the above act, reference was made to the case specified in the 8th section thereof, where a nonresident alien owning lands in that state at the time the act took effect disposed of the same during his lifetime, taking security for the purchase money, and afterwards he "or his nonresident heirs" again obtained the title on a sale made under a judgment or decree enforcing payment of any part of such purchase money, and that the claimants did not come within the terms of the exception mentioned in the 1st section of the act, for the reason that they are not the heirs of an alien, the intestate being a citizen and resident of the United States at the time of his death, but they came directly within the terms of the principal or enacting clause of section 1, for the reason that they were residents and subjects of the German empire and nonresident aliens, and were by the enacting clause of § 1, expressly and explicitly declared to be incapable of acquiring title to, or taking or holding, any lands or real estate in that state by descent, and therefore could not take by inheritance from their deceased brother, the act of 1887 being a valid law.

So, the alien heirs of citizens are not included among the "heirs of aliens" to whom the Illinois act of 1887 gives a certain time in which to sell the lands of their ancestor, or to become residents of the state. Ibid.

A statute as to the right of aliens to hold property which is general as applied to all nonresident aliens who are not protected by treaties, except the heirs who have already acquired lands or who may acquire them under general provisions therein specified, does not violate a constitutional prohibition against local or special laws changing descent. Ibid.

The nonresident alien heirs of a deceased citizen of the United States do not take such an interest in the lands of the deceased as they can hold until the state interferes with them and the interest so taken by them cannot be regarded as valid until a sale in a direct proceeding is instituted by the state. Ibid.

31 L. R. A.

In that case the lands of a deceased citizen of the United States were claimed by his nonresident alien heirs whose title was void under the Illinois statute of 1887, and it was held that the interest in the land descended to the next of kin competent to take under the Illinois statute, and that therefore the widow of the intestate who survived him was entitled to take the whole of the land under the statute of descent, Rev. Stat. chap. 39, § 1, cl. 8.

In Schultze v. Schultze, 144 Ill. 290, 19 L. R. A. 90 (1893), wherein the Illinois statute of 1887 was involved, the court distinguished the case from the preceding one of Wunderle v. Wunderle, supra, upon the ground that in the latter case there was no treaty existing between the grand duchy of Baden and the United States of which the claimants could take advantage, while in the former case a treaty existed between the United States and the Hanseatic republic of Bremen, under which the nonresident alien heirs of a deceased citizen of the United States had power to sell the land of the deceased, which they would have inherited but for their alienage, and to withdraw their proceeds within a given time from their ancestor's decease.

It seems, therefore, that if there had been a treaty in existence in the case of Wunderle v. Wunderle, supra, the nonresident alien heirs would have been entitled to the benefit of that treaty, but, in the absence of such a treaty, the state law controlled, and therefore the claim of such alien heirs to the benefit of the exceptions to the Illinois act of 1887 was barred.

So, in Ryan v. Egan, 156 Ill. 224 (1895), the court adopted the construction placed upon the Illinois statute of 1887, in the case of Wunderle v. Wunderle, supra, and held that nonresident aliens, nephew and niece, were not entitled to take under the will of a naturalized citizen.

Indiana.

The Indiana statute of March 9, 1861, provides "that it shall be lawful for any nonresident alien to acquire real estate in this state by descent or devise, and to hold, sell, alienate, and convey the same as if he or she were a citizen of the United States, but the time during which such alien may thus hold, sell, alienate and convey said real estate shall expire eight years after the final settlement of the decedent's estate from which such real estate was derived."

The same act provides, § 2, that if such nonresident alien, who has acquired land for such limited time, shall die before the expiration of such time, then his heirs, if bona fide residents of the United States, shall inherit and succeed as they would have done if their ancestor had been a resident of the United States.

And § 3 of the same provides that the nonresident alien heirs of any resident of this state, who shall have died before the passage of this act, may, dur-be of the blood of, that is, lineally descended from, the first feudatory or purchaser. In consequence whereof, if a vassal died seized of a feud of his own acquiring or feudum novum, it could not descend to any but his own offspring, no, not even to his brother, because he was not descended nor derived his blood from the first purchaser, but if it was a feudum antiquum, that is, one descended from his ancestor, . . . such collateral relation as was descended and derived his blood from the first purchaser, might succeed to such inheritance.

2 Bl. Com. 220.

In course of time the feudal rigor was abated, and a fictitious method was invented by which the collateral relations of the holder were allowed to take by inheritance, it being deemed that he held a feudum novum as a feudum antiquum.

2 Bl. Com. 220, 224; Campbell's Appeal, supra; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 365, 366, note 7, cases cited.

In order to establish a title of such collateral relations it was necessary by the common-law rule of descent to trace their descent back to such common ancestor in each degree through "inheritable blood." If, therefore, any intermediate ancestor was an alien, he could have no heirs, therefore he could have no inheritable blood, and the estate escheated.

2 Bl. Com. 249; Campbell's Appeal, supra; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 366.

By statute we have expressly repealed the ing the period of eight years from and after the passage of this act, hold, alien, sell, and convey in fee simple any such real estate, in the same manner as they could do had their ancestors or deviseors departed this life subsequent to the passage of this act, provided the estate is not already vested in resident heirs.

In considering the provisions of the above statute the court, in State, Atty. Gen., v. Witz, 87 Ind. 190, 192 (1882), stated that nonresident alien heirs might inherit real estate, whether the ancestor died before or after the passage of the act, and that if he died after its passage such heirs would inherit and hold the estate for eight years after the final settlement of the decedent's estate, and if during such time such alien heirs died leaving heirs residing in the United States, such resident heirs would take and hold such real estate in fee simple; and further, that if such ancestor was a resident of the state and died before the passage of the act leaving nonresident alien heirs, such heirs would inherit and hold such real estate for eight years after the passage of the act, and if, during such time, such heirs conveyed such real estate the purchaser would acquire by such conveyance the title in fee to the same.

Iowa.

The Iowa ordinance of 1787 and the statutes of the territory of Iowa, including those of Michigan and Washington in force in the territory, did not alter the rule of the common law nor by those statutes could an alien resident or nonresident take lands by descent. Stemple v. Herminghouser, 3 G. Greene, 408 (1852).

It has been held that § 22, art. 1, of the Iowa Constitution, which provides: "Foreigners who are or who may hereafter become residents of this state shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and descent of property as natural-born citizens,"—applies only to resident foreigners, and those who might become residents, and that therefore so far as nonresident aliens were concerned, while they remained such, the common-law doctrine was unchanged; and further, that foreigners claiming by descent must be residents at the time of the descent cast. Ibid.

With respect to the Iowa statute regulating the descent of real estate at the time of the adoption of the Constitution (Stat. Feb. 13, 1849), which provided that the lands of any person dying intestate should descend in equal shares to his children, the court in the case of Stemple v. Herminghouser, supra, held that the statute evidently meant such children as had inheritable blood, as aliens, whether resident or nonresident, were not heirs, and therefore nothing less than a plain and express provision in relation to lands could change the rule of the common law. Ibid.

In Stemple v. Herminghouser, supra, an intestate died leaving a number of children residents of the 31 L. R. A.

United States, and also a number, natives of and residents in Prussia, him surviving. The children residing in the United States sought partition of the lands, and an allotment of the same among themselves, to the exclusion of the nonresident children, and the court held that such latter children were not entitled to inherit.—Greene, J., dissenting.

In Krogan v. Kinney, 15 Iowa, 242 (1868), the question was whether brothers of a decedent who were nonresident aliens could inherit as against a sister who was a citizen and a resident of the state. The court held that they were not so entitled; and further, that the Iowa act of March, 1858 (Rev. Stat. p. 421, § 2493) did not affect that case, inasmuch as it only provided that a nonresident alien might be capable in law of inheriting property devised by will to him, provided he would become a resident of the state subsequent to the date of such devise.

It has been held that the first section of the above act was limited to two classes of aliens; residents of the state, whether citizens or not, and residents of the United States who have made a declaration of their intention to become citizens; and that these were rendered capable of acquiring land in that state by purchase or descent. Rhein v. Robbins, 20 Iowa, 45 (1865).

And further, that aliens of the United States, nonresidents of the state of Iowa who have not made a declaration of their intention to become citizens, have no rights of property conferred upon them by the first section of such statute, although §§ 2 and 3 of the same give them certain qualified rights, namely the right of taking property by devise or descent, and also by purchase, provided that when they purchase they will in good faith sell and convey within ten years of the date of purchase, and that this section did not include the foreign aliens for the reason that by section 6 provision was made for such alien to take and hold property under a will made by a citizen of the state, provided such devisee subsequently became a resident of the state.

In Rhein v. Robbins, supra, where the plaintiffs, nonresident aliens, heirs of a deceased nonresident alien, and heirs at law of his son who died without issue in the state, claimed to be joint owners by inheritance, and sued in trespass, the defendant demurring upon the ground that the plaintiffs were nonresident foreigners and therefore incapable of inheriting land by descent, the court followed its prior holding in the case of Krogan v. Kinney, supra, but at the same time admitted that the statute of March 15, 1858 (Rev. Stat. §§ 2488-2493), was inexplicit and ambiguous.

And the court was further of opinion that the sections of the Revision referred to did not confer upon the nonresident foreigners the same right to property which a resident alien of the United States enjoyed, the sections in question taken as a canon-law method of computing the degrees of relationship, and the fiction that the estate descends from a common ancestor who was the first purchaser does not exist in this state. Therefore the rule can have no application.

Starr & C. Rev. Stat. chap. 39; Campbell's Appeal, supra; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 357, 358, 364-366, 392, 409, title Succession. Mr. J. Warren Pease, for appellee Sarah Went:

The appellant in this case is prohibited from inheriting the land mentioned herein by reason of his alien ancestry.

Orr v. Hodgson, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 458, 4 L. ed. 618; Mooers v. White, 6 Johns. Ch. 365; 1

Washb. Real Prop. p. 74; Wms. Real Prop. p. 58.

The law never casts a freehold upon an alien who cannot keep it. Nor is a party permitted by the common law to trace his descent through his alien father or through alien relatives.

Levy v. McCartee, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 102, 8 L. ed. 334; Jackson, Doran, v. Green, 7 Wend. 336; Jackson, FitzSimmons, v. FitzSimmons, 10 Wend. 9, 24 Am. Dec. 198; Redpath v. Rich, 3 Sandf. 79; 2 Kent, Com. p. 54; 2 Bl. Com. p. 249.

The word "descent," as ordinarily used, signifies more than a mere sudden transition from place to place, and, on the contrary, in-whole indicating that the rights of acquiring and holding lands in that state were intended to be limited to aliens resident of the state or of the United States, and not to foreign aliens, except in the single instance of a devise by the will of a resident citizen to a foreign alien, who might become a devisee in such case, provided he subsequently removed to and became a resident of the state, thus indicating that the word "alien" as used in §§ 2 and 8 of the act referred to the resident alien of the United States and not to the foreigner; and further, that the legislature intended to confine the words "every alien" to those of the United States whether residents or not and not so as to include foreign aliens.

In Purcell v. Smidt, 21 Iowa, 540 (1886), the constitutionality of the above act was involved, the particular question being whether art. 1, § 22, of the Iowa Constitution, which provided: "Foreigners who are or may hereafter become residents of this state shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and descent of property as native-born citizens,"—was a restriction upon the power of the legislature for extending the same privileges to other foreigners than those named in the clause, namely nonresident foreigners, or whether it simply enabled the clauses named to enjoy the rights specified, and limited the power of the legislature to exclude them. The court held that the act merely extended the rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and descent of property to others than those named in the Constitution, and was therefore constitutional, there being no prohibition as to the exercise of such power.

In construing the Iowa act of 1858, as embodied in §§ 2488-2493, Rev. 1860, both inclusive, in the case of Purcell v. Smidt, supra, the court held that § 1 of such act being § 2488 of the Revision, conferred upon resident aliens of the United States who had declared their intention to become citizens, and upon such as were residents of the state, the right to acquire title to real estate by descent or purchase, and was prospective only in its provisions. With regard to the 2d section of the act, being § 2489 of the Revision, the court held that such section conferred upon every alien wherever resident the right, after the act took effect, to acquire real estate by descent or devise but not by purchase; and with regard to § 3, being § 4490 of the Revision, that it conferred upon every alien wherever resident the right to take title by purchase from any person holding an absolute title, on the condition that he made a bona fide sale within ten years, to one capable of acquiring an absolute title, and that when such title was cast by descent from such alien purchaser, the heirs were subject to the same conditions, the section being retrospective. And with regard to § 5, being § 2492 of the Revision, the court held that it conferred upon all aliens, wherever resident, the right to acquire personal property by descent or distribution in the same manner as citizens after the time when the act took effect.

31 L. R. A.

In the construction thus placed by the court upon the above statute, the court overruled the prior decisions in which the construction of the statute had been considered, namely the cases of Krogan v. Kinney, 15 Iowa, 242 (1863), and Rhein v. Robbins, 20 Iowa, 45 (1865), although the Chief Justice and Justice Wright upheld the construction placed upon the statute as to the construction of the Constitution by such prior cases. Purozell v. Smidt, 21 Iowa, 540 (1886).

With reference to the construction of the Constitution given by the court in Purcell v. Smidt, supra, and Stemple v. Herminghouse, 3 G. Greene, 408 (1852), Justice Dillon, although dissenting from the reasons employed, and the construction given to the statute, concurred in the result holding that such Constitution conferred upon resident foreigners the right to transmit as well as to acquire property by descent.

In Greenheld v. Stanforth, 21 Iowa, 586 (1886), the only question involved was the right or capacity of a nonresident alien to acquire real estate in that state by descent, and the court stated that so far as the right or capacity depended upon the construction of the act of 1858, the judgment of the district court must stand affirmed by reason of the different views of the members of the court as found in Purcell v. Smidt, supra.

In that case the action was for partition, plaintiff alleging that he and defendant were the owners of an undivided half of real estate, both acquiring their respective titles by descent as the only heirs of a naturalized citizen who died intestate, leaving no wife or children, and no blood relations in the United States, except the defendant, who was the daughter of a deceased brother. Plaintiff was a son of the sister of the deceased, and a nonresident alien at the time of the decease of the intestate, but subsequently became a resident of the United States and declared his intention to become a citizen. The defendant's demurrer, on the ground that the plaintiff was a nonresident alien at the time of the intestate's death, was sustained and affirmed on appeal. Greenheld v. Stanforth, supra.

In Greenheld v. Morrison, 21 Iowa, 588 (1886), the question was as to the right and capacity of a nonresident alien to take a distributive share of an intestate's estate, no question arising in the determination of the case as to the construction of the act of 1858, inasmuch as so far as that act related to personal property it was only declaratory of the common law. The court held that, such being the case, aliens were capable of acquiring, holding, and transmitting movable property in like manner as citizens, and were not deprived of any of those rights by the state statutes, and that the provision of Iowa Rev. Stat. § 2422, which provided "that personal property shall be distributed to the same persons and in the same proportions as though it were real estate," did not prevent aliens from taking distributive shares of personal estate although dictates a gradual transition through successive downward stages until the destination is reached.

Levy v. McCartee, 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 112, 8 L. ed. 338.

The widow of deceased is capable of inheriting, and there being no other person qualified under the law to succeed to the ownership of the lands in controversy, the title passes to her.

Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84.

When a legacy lapses, or a devise is impossible to accomplish, then the subject-matter of the legacy or devise will go to the next of kin as estate undisposed of under the will.

Mills v. Newberry, 112 Ill. 128, 54 Am. Rep. 218.

nonresident aliens might not take real estate by descent.

In Brown v. Pearson, 41 Iowa, 481 (1875), the only heirs of a decedent who died in 1865, were a brother and three sisters, and the plaintiff asked that her right to an undivided one-fourth interest be confirmed. The defendants alleged that the deceased was a resident alien, and that one of the defendants was an actual resident of the state at the time of the intestate's death, and further that the other defendants were nonresident aliens at the time of the intestate's death, and that one of them so continued until the year 1874; the court entered judgment dismissing the petition, and quieted such defendant's title which, judgment was affirmed upon appeal, the court holding that under the Revision of the Iowa Statutes of 1880 a nonresident alien could not inherit.

Where an intestate died, after the Revision of the Iowa Statutes of 1880, leaving as his heirs resident and nonresident aliens, it was held that the children who were resident citizens of the state, under whom the defendant claimed, were his only heirs and inherited the whole estate to the exclusion of their nonresident alien brothers and sisters. King v. Ware, 53 Iowa, 97 (1880), following Krogan v. Kinney, Rhelm v. Robbins, and Brown v. Pearson, supra.

It is the settled law of Iowa that nonresident aliens cannot inherit under the statutes in force in 1881. Ware v. Wisner, 4 McCrary, 66, 69 (1883).

The Iowa Bill of Rights provides, § 22, art. 1, that "foreigners who are, or may hereafter become, residents of this state, shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and descent of property as native-born citizens, and, under § 2442 of the Code of that state, the widow of a nonresident alien shall be entitled to the same rights in the property of her husband as a resident, except as against a purchaser from the decedent."

In Re Gill's Estate, 79 Iowa, 296, 9 L. R. A. 126 (1890), it was held that the above provision meant any alien not residing in that state.

Prior to the year 1868 the law did not permit nonresident aliens to inherit lands situated in the state of Iowa. Furenes v. Mickelson, 86 Iowa, 506 (1892).

Article 1, § 33, of the Constitution of Iowa, which provides that foreigners who are or who may hereafter become residents of this state shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and descent of property as native-born citizens, applies only to foreigners who were at the time of its adoption, or who thereafter became, residents of that state. Easton v. Huott (Iowa) post, — (1895).

The words "who have heretofore acquired land in this state," contained in chapter 85 of the acts of the 22d General Assembly of the state of Iowa, refer, not to the widows and heirs, but to "aliens," and the right is given to the widows and heirs of 31 L. R. A.

In case it should be found by this court that appellant herein was entitled to take the undivided one half of the lands in controversy, then, in such case, we submit that the widow would be entitled to dower in such half.

Rev. Stat. 1893, Hurd's ed. ¶ 8, chap. 39; Sutherland v. Sutherland, 69 Ill. 481; York v. York, 38 Ill. 522; Brown v. Pitney, 39 Ill. 468; Lesley v. Lesley, 44 Ill. 527.

Messrs. Cratty Bros., Jarvis & Cleveland, and Flower, Smith, & Musgrove, for the other appellees:

Appellant has no interest in the property. If the will stands the entire estate is divided among the widow and the sisters. If the will fails the widow takes the entire estate.

Rev. Stat. chap. 39, §§ 1, 12, title Descents; aliens to take title after the act took effect, when the alien from whom they claim acquired the title before the act took effect. Ibid.

The chapter above referred to provides, § 1, "nonresident aliens . . . are prohibited from acquiring title to, or taking or holding, any lands or real estate in this state by descent, devise, purchase, or otherwise, only as hereinafter provided," and by § 2 any nonresident alien may acquire and hold real property to the extent of 820 acres, or city property to the amount of $10,000 in value, provided that within five years from the date of purchase of such property the same is placed in the actual possession of a relative of such purchaser, the occupant being related to such owner within the third degree of kindred, or the husband or wife of such relative; and further, that such occupant become a naturalized citizen within ten years of the purchase of said property as aforesaid.

It has been held that the above act refers to widows and heirs of aliens without restriction as to the place of the residence of the widows, the heirs, or the aliens; and it is not material to the acquirement of title under that provision, whether the widow and heirs are aliens or nonresidents, or whether the deceased alien was a resident, and therefore if an alien, whether living in that state or in a foreign country, dies seised of lands situated in that state, his widow and heirs, wherever they may reside and whether aliens or not, may take title to the land by devise or descent. Easton v. Huott (Iowa), post, — (1895).

Kentucky.

Under Ky. Stat. 1800, which provides that any alien, other than alien enemies, who shall have actually resided within this commonwealth two years, shall, during the continuance of his residence herein, after the said period, be entitled to hold, receive, and pass any right, title, or interest to any lands or other estate known within this commonwealth, in the same manner and under the same regulations as the citizens of this state may lawfully do, it was held that an alien could inherit and take by descent provided he had actually resided in the country two years previous to the death of those through whom he claimed. Louisville v. Gray, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 147, 150 (1822).

In a case where the decedent died before the adoption of the Revised Statutes of Kentucky, the capacity of the alien to take by descent as well as the right of the commonwealth, in the event that there was no person to inherit, was held to depend and be governed by the pre-existing law, that is the common law which existed in that state. White v. White, 2 Met. (Ky.) 185 (1850).

Where the claimant did not reside in the state of Kentucky at the time of the death of the intestate, it was held that for that reason he was not entitled to the benefits of the provisions of the Kentucky act of 1800, and that the fact that he had taken the Re Taylor's Will, 55 Ill. 252; Lessley v. Lessley, 44 Ill. 527; McMurphy v. Boyles, 49 Ill. 110; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 565; Schouler, Wills, 2d ed. § 298; 1 Rapalje & L. Law Dict. 679; 2 Redf. Wills, 3d ed. 176; Hard v. Ashley, 117 N. Y. 606; Floyd v. Barker, 1 Paige, 481; Mills v. Neuberry, 112 Ill. 128, 54 Am. Rep. 218; Ward v. Ward, 184 Ill. 417.

Appellant claims by descent from William Went, deceased. He cannot inherit from said Went because he does not take immediately from Went, but mediately through several alien ancestors who interrupt the descent of the estate to him.

2 Kent, Com. 13th ed. 54, and cases cited; 1 Cooley's Bl. Com. bk. 2, *226, 249; Tiedenecessary oath to become a citizen of the United States in another state of the Union did not render him capable of taking under such statute, nor did the fact of his subsequent naturalization affect his right to take, the property in the meantime having vested in the commonwealth. Ibid.

In order to entitle a person to the benefit of the Kentucky act of 1800, he must be a resident of Kentucky at the time of descent cast; otherwise he can claim no benefit under the statute. Yeaker v. Yeaker, 4 Met. (Ky.) 83 (1892).

And it has been held that the Kentucky statute of March 21, 1861 (Myers' Supp. pp. 85, 86), which provides that it shall be lawful for any nonresident alien to acquire real estate by descent or devise, and to hold, sell, alienate, and convey the same as if he or she were a citizen of the United States, but the time during which such alien may thus hold, sell, alienate, and convey said real estate shall expire eight years after final settlement of the decedent's estate,—did not repeal, nor was it in conflict with, § 1, art. 3, chap. 15, Rev. Stat., but conferred the right on nonresident aliens to inherit real estate, provided they sold and conveyed the same within the period therein mentioned; while under the Revised Statutes no alien could inherit real estate unless he had had an actual residence in the state for two years, the act of 1861 not being in conflict with the Revised Statutes, but merely cumulative. Eustache v. Rodaquest, 11 Bush, 42 (1874).

In that case the sister of the decedent was declared his heir, although she was a nonresident alien taking her title under the act of 1861, subject to the limitations prescribed thereby, and also subject to the widow's homestead right.

In that case it was further held that the provisions of the Kentucky act of 1861 were not affected or repealed by the later act of March, 1867, which provided that § 1, art. 3, chap. 15, of the Revised Statutes should be amended so as to read: "An alien, not being an enemy, shall, after he has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States according to the forms required by law, be enabled to recover, inherit, hold, and possess by descent, devise, or otherwise, any real estate in real or personal property in the same manner as if he were a citizen of the state,"—the act of 1861 merely confining the inheritance to real estate, and limiting the time in which it could be alienated, the act of 1867 embracing both real and personal estate with an absolute right to hold them. Ibid.

Louisiana.

In Phillips v. Rogers, 5 Mart. (La.) 701, 745 (1818), the only question before the court was whether an alien could inherit real estate in Louisiana, and the court decided it in the affirmative, stating that the statutes of that state made no distinction in the nature of property in order to regulate the succession, and nothing showed that aliens must be excluded from the acquisition of real or personal property by will or succession and were not capable of inheriting either; all free persons, even the minor, pupil, lunatic, and idiot might transmit their estate ab intestato, and inherit from others, nothing appearing to exclude aliens from the inheritance of real estate.

Under article 1477 of the Louisiana Code "donations inter vivos and mortis causa might be made in favor of a stranger when the laws of his country did not prohibit similar dispositions from being made in favor of a citizen of that state," and a reciprocal right in favor of the citizens of the two countries was thereby established. Duke Richmond v. Milne, 17 La. 312, 36 Am. Dec. 618 (1841).

The provision contained in article 1477 of the Louisiana Code is limited exclusively to the incapacity of receiving donations inter vivos and mortis causa, and nothing in the Louisiana laws shows that foreigners are excluded from the acquisition of real or personal property by will or succession, and that they are not capable of inheriting either (La. Code, arts. 881, 882). Ibid.

The capacity of aliens to transmit their estates ab intestato, and to inherit from others in Louisiana, is shown by article 945, which declares that slaves alone are incapable of either, and therefore, as under article 948 the incapacity of heirs is not presumed; he who alleges such incapacity must prove it. Ibid.

Under the construction thus put upon the provisions of the Louisiana Code by the court in the above case, it was held that there was therefore nothing in the laws of that state that excluded aliens from the inheritance of any kind of property.

The case of Duke Richmond v. Milne, supra, arose out of the last will and testament of the deceased which contained a disposition of a sum of money to be employed in establishing and supporting a free school for the use of certain parishes. The legacy was claimed by the plaintiff as the future lord of the town, who alleged that by virtue of the powers conferred upon him by a meeting of the inhabitants of the town he was authorized to demand and receive the legacy. The defendants denied the capacity of the commissioner to take under the will, and submitted the question to the court whether, under the laws of Louisiana, the petitioners, being aliens, could be entitled to recover the legacy, the contention being that the plaintiff could not take under the laws of Louisiana because the laws of Scotland prohibited a similar disposition from being made in favor of citizens in Louisiana. The court held that, as the incapacity of aliens by the English and Scotch laws was only extended to their holding lands or acquiring heritage, either by purchase or succession; and as, under the laws of Scotland, an alien might acquire property in goods, money, and movable estate, and make a will, and sue for personal debts; and as, un-

Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24, 4 Am. Rep. 430; Sanders' Justinian, 27; Domat's Civil Law, by Strahan, § 2502; Parish v. Ward, 28 Barb. 381; Jackson v. Sanders, 2 Leigh, 118; Bingham, Laws of Descent, pp. 492, 495, 496; 11 & 12 Wm. III. chap. 6; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law; p. 708; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 325, note 1; 4 Kent, Com. *413; Blacklaws v. Milne, 82 Ill. 505, 15 Am. Rep. 339; Orthwein v. Thomas, 127 Ill. 554, 4 L. R. A. 434; Bales v. Elder, 118 Ill. 436; Elder v. Bales, 127 Ill. 425; Croan v. Phelps, 94 Ky. 213, 23 L. R. A. 753; McCool v. Smith, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 459, 17 L. ed. 218; Hays v. Thomas, 1 Ill. 136; Hillhouse v. Chester, 3 Day, 166.

By virtue of the amendment of 1891 to the alien statute, the devise to the sisters vested in them the entire estate, subject to the rights of the widow, except as against the state, and the conveyance by them to a citizen vests in such citizen a good title.

Rev. Stat. § 3, title Aliens; Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 65, 19 L. R. A. 84; 1 Cooley's Bl. Com. bk. 2, *240, 309; 2 Kent, Com. *53, 54, 61; 4 Washb. Real Prop. 565; Fairfax v. Hunter, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 603, 3 L. ed. 453; Anderson, Law Dict. 254, 324; Livermore v. Bagley, 3 Mass. 510; Brown v. Fitz, 13 N. H. 285; Klein v. McNamara, 54 Miss. 105; Rex v. Fauntleroy, 1 Car. & P. 421; Rex v. Lyon, Russ. & R. C. C. 255; American Ins. Co. v. Avery, 60 Ind. 566; American Buttonhole, O.

der those of England, he might either be a mortgagee, and recover his debt in countries where there was a positive prohibition to hold lands; and as it was shown that if the legacy in question had occurred in a Scotch instrument, it would, by the laws of Scotland, have been considered as a mere bequest of a sum of money, and not of heritable property; and that, as the courts of that country would give effect to such legacy, therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to receive such legacy.

Maryland.

In Dawson v. Godfrey, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 321, 2 L. ed. 684 (1806), it was held that a person born in England prior to the year 1775, and who always resided there, and was never in the United States, was not entitled in the year 1793 to inherit lands in Maryland from a citizen of the United States, for the reason that the common law, which was the law of Maryland, deprived an alien generally of the right of inheriting, unless he could show some exception in his case, there being none at common law, which gives the right to inherit distinctly from the obligation of allegiance existing either in fact or in supposition of law.

In Spratt v. Spratt, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 393, 7 L. ed. 397 (1830), it was held that the Maryland act of 1791 authorizing the descent to alien heirs of lands held by aliens under deed or will, and that part of the District of Columbia, which was ceded to the United States by the state of Maryland, did not authorize the descent to such heirs of land in that part of the District which was purchased by an alien at a sale made under an order of the court of chancery, and for which no deed was executed by the purchaser on becoming a citizen of the United States or before his decease, the Maryland act not enabling aliens coming to the District of Columbia to transmit all real estate however acquired to their alien relations by descent, but only such lands as should be thereafter acquired by deed or will, the power being qualified.

The Maryland statute of March 3, 1837, was considered in De Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 80 L. ed. 642 (1890), and the court held that under it property in the District of Columbia and in the territories might be acquired by aliens by inheritance under existing laws. The act in question (24 Stat. at L. 476, chap. 340) provides, § 1, that, it shall be unlawful for any person or persons not citizens of the United States, or who have not declared their intention to become citizens, to thereafter acquire, hold, or own real estate, or any interest therein, in any of the territories of the United States or in the District of Columbia, except such as may be acquired by inheritance, or in good faith in the ordinary course of justice in the collection of debts previously created.

By the common law an alien is under a disability to inherit realty from a citizen, and no change is made in this respect by the Maryland act of December, 1791, as interpreted by the Supreme Court 31 L. R. A.

of the United States in Spratt v. Spratt, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 343, 7 L. ed. 171 (1823), 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 393, 7 L. ed. 397 (1830); Jost v. Jost, 1 Mackey, 487 (1882).

Massachusetts.

In Fox v. Southack, 12 Mass. 143 (1815), it was held that the 9th article of the treaty with Great Britain of 1794, giving the subjects of either power the right to hold property within the dominions of the other, was not affected by a posterior war and applied to vested remainders as well as to other estates.

Michigan.

In Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24, 4 Am. Rep. 430 (1870), the plaintiff sued for the recovery of certain escheated lands conveyed to him by the trustees thereof. The property was conveyed to an alien, the grant being confirmed under an act of Congress regulating grants of land in Michigan, under which all persons residing and occupying lands therein, which they or their grantors had continuously occupied and improved since a certain year, were entitled to estates in fee simple. The evidence showed that such alien married in the United States, and died leaving no children born therein, but leaving a person described as his daughter, also an alien by birth, him surviving. The daughter died leaving a husband but no children. The father had executed a deed to such daughter purporting to be acknowledged, but not witnessed, and it was claimed that, the father and daughter both being aliens, the latter could not inherit from him, in case the deed was void. The defendants claimed under the husband of such daughter, who went into possession after his wife's death and so continued until his death. The court held that, the conveyance by the father to the daughter being void because not made as required by the Michigan statute, the lands escheated to the territory and state of Michigan which had power to reconvey without inquisition of office found.

Missouri.

The Missouri Revised Statutes of 1845 provided that all aliens residing in the United States who shall have made a declaration of their intention to become citizens of the United States by taking the oath required by law, and all aliens resident in this state, shall be capable of acquiring real estate in this state by descent. In Wacker v. Wacker, 26 Mo. 426 (1858), it was held that the above statute did not apply to the nonresident alien.

The Missouri statutes, as they existed from the years 1835 to 1845, did not apply to nonresident aliens, but only permitted resident aliens to acquire real estate in that state by descent or purchase, but such statutes did not prevent nonresident aliens from taking as distributives the personal property. Harney v. Donohoe, 97 Mo. 141 (1898).

The Missouri act of February, 1855, so far changed the old law that an alien could not inherit realty as to permit the alien to take and sell within three years after the death of the ancestor, and by the & S. Mach. Co. v. Burlack, 35 W. Va. 647; People v. Caton, 25 Mich. 388; People v. Hoffman, 97 Ill. 234; Anderson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 117 Ill. 26; Gormley v. Utte, 116 Ill. 643; Castner v. Walrod, 83 Ill. 171, 25 Am. Rep. 369; Stamm v. Bostwick, 122 N. Y. 48, 9 L. R. A. 597; Potter's Dwarrr. Stat. 139; Domat's Civil Law, by Strahan, §§ 2420, 2421.

Bailey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill in chancery, brought by James Beavan against Sarah Went, Susanna Went, Jane Holland, Elizabeth Yarnold, Frances Barnes, Charlotte Elizabeth Baylis, Susan Baylis, and the unknown heirs of William Went, deceased, for partition. Sarah Went and several of the other defendants appeared and filed a general demurrer to the bill, which being sustained, and the complainant electing to abide by his bill, a decree was entered dismissing the bill for want of equity, at his costs, and he has now appealed to this court.

The bill alleges that the complainant is a resident of the state of Ohio and a naturalized citizen of the United States; that William Went, late of Chicago, departed this life August 10, 1892, being then seised in fee of certain lands in Cook county which the bill act of November, 1855, the three years was limited to the time after administration had, and therefore, in a case where administration was closed in 1866, the three years would end in 1871, and a claim not made until the year 1884 would be barred by the act. Pilla v. German School Assn. 23 Fed. Rep. 700 (1885).

Under the Missouri laws of 1865, aliens residing in this country were entitled to the same capacity of acquiring, holding, and alienating real estate as a citizen of the United States, provided they had declared their intention of becoming citizens, and those residing in the state were entitled, whether they had made such declaration or not; and under the act of 1865, an alien nonresident in that state or in the United States, who had not declared his intention to become a citizen, and who was therefore not entitled to inherit, had a limited period within which to sell and convey real estate to one who could take and hold. Sullivan v. Burnett, 105 U. S. 334, 26 L. ed. 1124 (1881).

The Missouri act of March 30, 1872, provides, § 1: "All aliens shall be capable of acquiring by purchase, devise, or descent real estate in this state, and of holding, devising, or alienating the same, and shall incur the like duties and liabilities in relation thereto as if they were citizens of the United States, and residents of this state." The court held that such statute was not retrospective and only applied to future acquisitions by aliens. Ibid.

The Missouri statutes of 1872 (Laws 1872, p. 79), removed all obstacles in the way of aliens acquiring real estate in that state, and therefore where a plaintiff claimed as heir to her deceased father who was a resident alien and died leaving children, all of whom, except the plaintiff, were residents of the state, and when the father died only resident aliens were entitled to inherit under the laws of this state, but a subsequent act removed the disability, it was held that the nonresident alien was entitled to inherit the property upon the death of the resident heirs intestate and without issue. Utassy v. Giedinghagen (Mo.) 83 S. W. 444 (1895).

The statute in question in the above case provides: "Aliens shall be capable of acquiring by purchase, devise, or descent real estate in that state, and of holding, devising, or alienating the same, and shall incur the like duties and liabilities in relation thereto as if they were citizens of the United States and residents of this state."

Nebraska.

By § 14, art. 1, Neb. Const. it is provided that no distinction shall ever be made by law between resident aliens and citizens in reference to the possession, enjoyment, or descent of property. People, Dobson, v. McClay, 2 Neb. 7 (1873).

By § 25 of the Nebraska Constitution of 1875 (art. 2, ed. 1893, Neb. Consol. Stat. p. 57) it is provided: "No distinction shall ever be made by law between resident aliens and citizens in reference to the possession, enjoyment, or descent of property."

R. A.

By § 4366, Neb. Consol. Stat. ed. 1893, p. 1025, it is provided: "Nonresident aliens . . . are hereby prohibited from acquiring title to, or taking or holding, any lands or real estate in this state by descent, devise, purchase, or otherwise, only as hereinafter provided, except that . . . heirs of aliens who have heretofore acquired lands in this state under the laws thereof may hold such lands by devise or descent for a period of ten years and no longer, and if, at the end of such time herein limited, such lands so acquired have not been sold to a bona fide purchaser for value, or such alien heirs have not become residents of this state, such lands shall revert and escheat to the state of Nebraska."

Nevada.

The Statutes of Nevada, art. 1, § 16, provide that "foreigners who are, or may hereafter become, bona fide residents of this state, shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property as native-born citizens."

In State, Ling, v. Preble, 18 Nev. 251, 253 (1894), it is stated that the rights of foreigners were not confined to those who had declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, or to those who, under the laws of the state, were entitled to become citizens by naturalization, the Constitution giving to all foreigners who were bona fide residents of the state certain rights which might be enlarged, but could not be abridged by the legislature, and further, that the rights which were guaranteed by the statutes could not be taken away, and that it was not within the power of the legislature of that state to limit the right to possess, inherit, or enjoy, such property, to aliens who might become citizens.

New Hampshire.

N. H. Act of June 20, 1827, gave alien heirs the right to take by descent. Montgomery v. Dorton, 7 N. H. 475 (1836).

New Jersey.

In Mollivaine v. Coxe, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 200, 2 L. ed. 506 (1806), it was held that a person born in the colony of New Jersey before the year 1775, and residing there till the year 1777, when he joined the British army, and thenceforth adhered to the British, claiming as a British subject and receiving compensation from that government, had a right to take lands by descent in the state of New Jersey; the New Jersey act by which such person was declared an offender against the form of his allegiance to the state not being sufficient to declare him an alien.

In Yeo v. Mercereau, 18 N. J. L. 387 (1842), an alien enemy purchased real estate in the United States prior to January, 1817, and remained in possession thereof after he became an alien friend. It was held, upon his death, that the children born in the United States might inherit by virtue of the 2d section of N. J. act of 1817, concerning aliens, for the reason that if an alien may purchase and hold lands to him and his heirs, he may transmit them by in-seeks to have partitioned, and leaving a last will and testament as follows:

Chicago, March 16, 1892.

Know all men by these presents:

That I, William Went, being sound in mind and weak in body, do this day make this instrument. Born in Prestigne, Radnorshire, England, in the year 1828, on the 28th day of July, at present a citizen of the United States of America.

I will and bequeathe all real and personal property to my wife Sarah Lewis nee Went, in trust for my surviving sisters and their lawful descendants.

William Went.

That the foregoing will was duly attested by witnesses, and was admitted to probate by the probate court of Cook county, August 15, 1892; that the testator left no issue or descendants of issue, but left him surviving Sarah Went, his widow, Susanna Went, Jane Holland, Elizabeth Yarnold, and Frances Barnes, his sisters, and Charlotte Elizabeth Baylis and Susan Baylis, the daughters of his deceased sister Charlotte Baylis, and that they and the complainant are the only next of kin and heirs at law of the testator; that the complainant is the son and only issue of William Beavan and Jane Beavan; that his father was the only issue of William Beavan and Jane Beavan, the last-named Jane Beavan being the only sister of William Went, the father of the heritance to his children, the statute placing him on a footing with native-born citizens giving him inheritable blood; and even though his children were aliens they would take by inheritance.

Where lands escheated to the state in 1834, by reason of the alienage of the heirs of the person dying last seised, and such lands were subsequently, by special act, vested in the widow, it was held that the provisions of the New Jersey act of 1845, that such persons as would have been heirs of any person dying since 1817, in case such persons had been natural-born citizens, shall inherit the land of such person dying seised, were not sufficient to pass to such alien heirs the lands which had been so vested in the widow. Den, Colgan, v. McKeon, 24 N. J. L. 536 (1854).

So, the New Jersey statute of 1846, which enabled aliens to purchase lands and hold them to them and their heirs, was held not to remove the disability of alienage from persons who would otherwise have been their heirs. Ibid.

New York.

In Jackson, Elmendorf, v. Jackson, 7 Johns. 214 (1810), a native of New York, seised of lands, went to the Danish Island of St. Thomas in 1749, and there married a Danish subject by whom he had two daughters. He died in 1780. One of the daughters also died, without issue and before coming of age. The other daughter married a Danish subject and died in 1774, leaving an infant daughter who died in 1775. It was held that the two daughters were natural-born subjects of Great Britain within the Statute of 3 Geo. II., chap. 21, but that the granddaughter was an alien, and that the lands so acquired in New York did not escheat by reason of the alienism of the granddaughter, but went to the elder brother of the grandfather, the purchaser, as the next heir at law.

Where an alien died in the state of New York, intestate and without issue, during a war with his native country, leaving personal estate, it was held that his relations residing abroad, though next of kin, being aliens residing in the country of the enemy, were not entitled to distributive shares of the property, but that the whole went to his next of kin resident in that state. Bradwell v. Weeks, 13 Johns. 1 (1815).

But upon the hearing of the above case by the chancellor (Bradwell v. Weeks, 1 Johns. Ch. 206 (1814)), the court rendered a contrary opinion, which was reversed upon appeal as above shown.

In Jackson, McCloughry, v. Skeels, 19 Johns. 198 (1821), it was held that, by N. Y. act April 3, 1808, which vested the estate, patented to a deceased soldier, in his heirs, though aliens, in like manner as it would have descended to them if they had been citizens of that state at the time of his death (1781) according to the law of descent of that state, it was intended that the heirs should take according to the law of descent at the time of the passing of the act, and that the title of the heirs, so far as it respected any limitation, was to be deemed to have accrued from the time of the passing of the act.

In Goode v. Jackson, Smith, 20 Johns. 707 (1823), it was stated that the permission by law to an alien to take and hold lands to him and his heirs, or a grant from the government by authority of law to an alien and his heirs, necessarily implied that he might transmit by descent to his children or other alien heirs, and that his heirs might take the land in question equally as if they were natural-born citizens.

In the same case it was also stated to be a general rule that when an alien was allowed specially by statute to take and hold lands to him and his heirs, he had a capacity to transmit by inheritance to his alien offspring, and they had equally a capacity to take, and further that when the legislature spoke without restriction or qualification of the heirs of an alien, they meant such heirs as he was then competent to have.

A grant of land to an alien soldier for military service during the Revolutionary war, the soldier dying during the war, was held to enable his heirs though aliens to inherit. Jackson, People, v. Etz, 5 Cow. 314 (1829).

Where an alien held lands under the provisions of the acts of 1802 and 1808, which authorized aliens to purchase and hold real estate, it was held, upon his dying intestate, that such lands descended to his heirs although they were aliens, the acts in question expressly conferring upon the aliens embraced in them the power of transmitting by hereditary descent to their heirs whatever real estate they might have acquired and died seised of in that state, giving to their blood an inheritable quality through which a title could be deduced, the established construction of those acts being, that the alien heirs of such purchasers were as capable of taking as though they were natural-born citizens. Jackson, Smith, v. Adams, 7 Wend. 267 (1831).

But where a naturalized citizen died in the year 1833, seised of real estate acquired in the year 1824, under a contract made in the year 1810, and ejectment was brought by his brother and sisters, who were aliens at the time of his death and had not complied with the requirements of the acts relating to aliens passed in 1825, the court held that they, by reason of their alienage, could not inherit the estate, even though they had been residents of the state since the year 1806; and further, that they could claim nothing under the equitable estate, as the act only recognized legal estates, the acts of 1802 and 1808 being destroyed by that of 1825, which applied as well to aliens who had come to reside in the United States before its passage as to those arriving subsequently. Kennedy v. Wood, 20 Wend. 230 (1833).

In Peck v. Young, 26 Wend. 613 (1841), action was brought to recover an undivided moiety of real estate whereof the father died seised in 1823. The father, of a foreigner by birth, became a citizen testator, said William Went having no brothers; that William Beavan and Jane Beavan, the complainant's father and mother, William Beavan and Jane Beavan, his grandfather and grandmother, and William Went and Charlotte, his wife, the father and mother of the testator, were all deceased prior to the death of the testator. The bill admits that the complainant's father and mother, his grandfather and grandmother (the grandmother being the sister of the testator's father, and through whom he traces his relationship to the testator), were all nonresident aliens.

The bill further alleges that the four sisters and the two nieces of the testator, above mentioned, were, at the time of the testator's death, and still are, nonresident aliens, they all being citizens and residents of the kingdom of Great Britain, and were and are, under the laws of this state, incapable of acquiring title or taking or holding lands or real estate in this state, by devise, purchase, or otherwise. Also, that Sarah Went, the testator's widow, on the 18th day of August, 1892, filed her renunciation of her rights under the will, and on the 11th day of January, 1893, filed her election to take her share in the estate of her deceased husband, as provided by law.

The bill claims that, by reason of the premises, Sarah Went and the complainant became each seised of an undivided one-half interest the United States at the time of the Declaration of Independence. He left the plaintiff, his married daughter, a nonresident alien who came to the states in 1834, and claimed the property from the defendant, a tenant of the grandchildren of the deceased, the children of a deceased son of the intestate's second marriage. The court held that she was entitled to it by descent, and that her alienage could not be set up as a bar to the action; but whether the plaintiff took by descent from a citizen of the United States, or whether such descent was conferred upon her by the 2d clause of the 4th section of the act of Congress of 1802, was a question which was not decided by the court.

The court in the above case based its opinion upon the fact that, the father being domiciled in the United States, for that reason the daughter became a citizen by the disruption of the ties of allegiance of herself and her father to the Crown of Great Britain; and that if she had come here when she became of age and capable of acting for herself, even after the treaty of peace of 1783, there was no doubt that she could not transfer her allegiance by marrying a British subject and going to reside abroad; and that if she was an American citizen and legally domiciled here with her father, although actually left by him abroad for nurture, the fact that she married in that country after her rights as an American citizen had become complete at the close of the war would not deprive her of the capacity to take lands by descent here although from the time of her marriage there her domicile was that of her husband and continued such until she changed it again after his death.

The legislature may remove the disability of an alien heir and authorize him to take as by descent, but the state cannot by special act authorize an alien or nearer kin to take to the exclusion of a citizen of kin more remote, as it would be divesting an heir who had acquired a title under the general law of inheritance; but where there are no heirs who can be affected, and the property is in or must go to the people, the legislature has the power to authorize the party to take as by descent, or in any other manner. Englishbee v. Helmuth, 7 N. Y. Legal Obs. 186, 189 (1849).

In Meakings v. Cromwell, 5 N. Y. 136 (1851), a testator gave his wife a life estate in his real property, and directed that upon her death it should be converted into personal estate and divided among the parties named in his will, who were aliens, and as such incapable of taking by descent. The court held that they were entitled to the proceeds as personal estate, even though aliens.

The New York Revised Statutes (1 Rev. Stat. 720, §§ 15-19) empower resident aliens who have filed a declaration of intention to become citizens, to hold land by descent and also by devise, and also entitle the heirs of such parties, inhabiting the United States, to take by descent in case of their death within six years. Wright v. Saddler, 20 N. Y. 320 (1850).

In Heeney v. Brooklyn Benev. Soc. 33 Barb. 360 (1861), the facts showed that a naturalized citizen purchased real estate in 1806, and died seised in 1843, and the plaintiffs' evidence proved that they were to be taken as his heirs, if they were qualified to inherit. One of the plaintiffs declared his intention to become a naturalized citizen, in 1840, and was naturalized in 1843, shortly after the deceased's death. The other plaintiff was naturalized in 1851, but at the time of the descent cast both plaintiffs were aliens. The question was, whether the New York statute of 1843 (Laws 1843, chap. 87, p. 62), had a retroactive effect so as to vest the title in them by descent. The court held that their subsequent naturalization did not entitle them to inherit, and that their disability to take as aliens by descent was not removed by the statute of 1843.

Nonresident aliens, the heirs of a resident alien, were entitled, under the New York statute of 1843, chap. 115, to take real estate by descent, provided that such as were of full age declared their intention to become citizens of the state as required by the act before the consummation of proceedings instituted by the state for the purposes of escheat. Goodrich v. Russell, 42 N. Y. 177 (1870).

Where a resident alien, who had filed no declaration of intention to become a citizen, died in the year 1844, seised of real estate which was subject to a mortgage, leaving two sons and a daughter of full age nonresident aliens, and also collateral kindred residents and citizens of the United States, and his three children executed a conveyance to a purchaser, who subsequently acquired, an act of the legislature releasing the state's title to him, and later it was sought to foreclose the mortgage as against the children of the deceased and such purchaser, without making the collateral kindred defendants; and the plaintiff became the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, and later contracted to sell the same to defendant, who refused the title,—the court held plaintiff's title good, as the estate descended to the children of the deceased whose title was defeasible by the state if of full age, unless they complied with the provisions of the New York statute and filed the declaration of intention to become citizens, the special act so acquired by the purchaser giving him a valid title. Ibid.

In McCarty v. Deming, 4 Lans. 440 (1871), it was held that aliens as referred to in the New York act of November 25, 1827, who failed to obtain naturalization for six years after the passage of the statutes, were excluded from its benefits, and upon their obtaining naturalization after the expiration of such period their property was subject to the provisions of the Revised Statutes regulating the descent of real property.

In McCarty v. Terry, 7 Lans. 236 (1872), the deceased, a native of Ireland, died in 1860, leaving no widow in the premises in question, as tenants in common, and seeks to have them partitioned accordingly.

The first, and we think the only, question presented by the appeal is, whether any interest in the real estate of William Went, the testator, has descended to and become vested in the complainant. No cross bill having been filed by either the widow or sisters of Went, no question arises as to their rights as among themselves, unless a consideration of their rights becomes necessary to a determination of those of the complainant. Even then, if it be admitted, as the complainant contends, that the beneficiaries under the will, being nonresident aliens, were incapable of taking any interest in real estate by devise, and that the will therefore is void, thus rendering the estate of Went intestate,—questions about which we now desire to express no opinion,—does it follow that any interest in the estate descended to the complainant?

It is, to say the least, doubtful whether, under our statute of descents, the complainant, so long as the deceased left a widow, became entitled to inherit any portion of his estate as next of kin. The complainant was a second cousin of the deceased, being a son of his first cousin. The only provision of the statute which, in express terms, provides for the descent of real estate to the next of or child surviving him, all his relatives being aliens, except the plaintiff, his sister, and a nephew, the plaintiff being naturalized by reason of her marriage with a citizen of the United States. One of the defendants was in possession under a deed from the nephew, and the other defendants claimed interest as trustees under the will of the deceased, the trusts of which were declared void by the court. There being no proof of the citizenship of the nephew, the evidence not showing that he ever resided in the state in which it was claimed he was born or in any part of the United States, the court held that, under the act which gave the decedent the power and authority to hold property in the state, his estate descended upon his death to his alien heirs equally with those who were citizens, but the act did not apply to a case where the ancestor subsequently became a naturalized citizen, as in that case, he held, not under the act, but under the same laws as other citizens, and therefore alien heirs could not inherit from him unless he complied with the provisions of the Revised Statutes.

Where a naturalized citizen devised real estate to his wife, also a naturalized citizen, and died in the year 1868, the wife dying twelve months afterward, without will and without having disposed of the premises, leaving relations who were aliens with the exception of two, namely a brother and sister, and the sister leased the premises to the brother, and subsequently, in the year 1870, an act of the legislature was passed releasing the interest of the state in the lands to the sister, who was naturalized in the year 1866, it was held that the title of the sister so acquired under the act of the legislature was valid. Ettenheimer v. Heffernan, 66 Barb. 374, 377 (1873).

By chapter 38 of the New York Laws of 1875 it is provided: "If any alien resident of this state or any naturalized or native citizen of the United States who has purchased and taken, or who hereafter shall purchase and take, a conveyance of real estate within this state, has died or shall hereafter die, leaving persons who, according to the statutes of this state, would answer the description of heirs of such deceased person, . . . such persons so answering the description of heirs . . . of such deceased person, whether they are citizens or aliens, are hereby declared and made capable of taking and holding, and may take and hold, as heirs . . . of such deceased person, as if they were citizens of the United States, the land and real estate owned and held by such deceased alien or citizen at the time of his death."

In Dusenberry v. Dawson, 9 Hun, 511 (1877), the only question in dispute related to the validity of a devise of real estate by an alien resident of the state, plaintiff insisting that the devise was valid under N. Y. Stat. 1845, chap. 115, § 5, the defendant contending that the devise was void for the reason that the testator had never filed the declaration of intention to become a citizen as required 31 L. R. A.

by § 6 of said act. The court held that the express language of the 5th section of the above act made the devise valid under the construction put upon the act in the prior case of Goodrich v. Russell, 42 N. Y. 177 (1870), that §§ 4 and 5 of the act omitted the requirement of filing the deposition by the testator's grantor or intestate in order that the devisee, grantee, or quasi heir might hold, there being no reason to suppose that the legislature intended to make it necessary.

In Bradley v. Dwight, 62 How. Pr. 300 (1881), it was stated that the title of a citizen of the state of New York, in actual possession of the lands, shall not be questioned or impeached by reason of the alienage of any person from or through whom such title may have been derived. Laws 1868, chap. 513; Laws 1872, chap. 141; Laws 1877, chap. 111.

And in Harrison v. Harrison, 3 N. Y. L. Bull. 65 (1881), it was held that nonresident aliens took under the New York act of 1855 as if they were citizens, with full power of disposition and transmission, and that upon their dying intestate the estate passed to their heirs at law capable of taking by descent or devise; that was to say, to such of their heirs as were citizens, but not to such as were nonresident aliens, the act making no provision for the latter, nor specially for the former, the former taking as an incident to the power of disposition and transmission conferred upon the original nonresident aliens.

In Wieland v. Renner, 65 How. Pr. 245 (1883), a naturalized citizen of the United States died in 1874, leaving seven brothers and sisters or their children, his only next of kin, all nonresident aliens, except the defendant and the plaintiff and his sister, and a nephew of the deceased who was a resident alien. The defendant was a daughter of a deceased sister, and the wife of a citizen residing in the states. She was the only person who could directly inherit from her uncle, and took possession claiming as sole owner. Plaintiff's mother, in 1875, sold her right to the property, by virtue of a treaty between the United States and Wurtemberg, to her son, the plaintiff, who claimed that he and the children of his deceased sister were entitled to share the property. The court held that the words "resident alien," in the New York statute of 1845, did not include or designate a "naturalized citizen," the act enabling resident aliens to take and hold real estate, including only those answering the description of heirs of a deceased alien, whether they were citizens or aliens; and that the act of 1874, which amended that of 1845 by inserting after the words "resident alien" the words "or any naturalized or native citizen," did not apply to the case, for the reason that the rights of the parties had become vested and fixed before the act was passed.

Under the laws of New York the disability of an alien to take as heir was removed, the Laws of 1845, chap. 115, § 4, as amended by the Laws of 1874, chap.

kin, other than children and their descendants, brothers and sisters and surviving parents, and their descendants, and the widow and surviving husband, is the 5th clause of § 1, chap. 89, of the Revised Statutes, and that provides merely that the estate shall descend in equal parts to the next of kin, "if there is no child of the intestate or descendant of such child, and no parent, brother or sister, or descendant of such parent, brother or sister, and no widow or surviving husband." And it is difficult to see how the complainant can inherit under this clause so long as the intestate left a widow surviving him.

Looking at the entire section, it will be seen that the first clause provides that intestate estates shall descend to the children of the intestate and their descendants. By the second clause it is provided that, where there is no child of the intestate or descendant of such child, and no widow or surviving husband, it shall descend in equal parts to the parents, brothers, and sisters of the intestate and their descendants. The third clause provides that, where there is a widow or surviving husband, and no child or children or descendants of a child or children, one half of the real estate and all the personal estate, after the payment of debts, shall descend to the widow or surviving husband, the other half to descend as in other cases 261, and by the Laws of 1875, chap. 88, recognizing the rights of alien kin of a decedent who was at the time of his death a resident alien or a citizen of the United States, to take as his heirs the lands which would have descended to them in that capacity had they been citizens of the United States, the title of an alien male heir of full age being made defeasible by the state, upon his failing to file an affirmation respecting his intending citizenship as provided for in the act. Kilfooy v. Powers, 3 Dem. 198 (1884).

It has been held that the proviso contained in the New York statute and amendments thereto against males of full age, that they shall not hold the real estate as against the state unless they are citizens, or make and file a deposition as required by law, does not render them incapable to take the title, which in no case escheats to the state without the finding of an inquisition where there are heirs competent to take, all being so competent; but the adult male heirs cannot hold against the state unless they become citizens, or file the necessary deposition, the male heirs of full age taking a title defeasible by the state, unless, before the consummation of the proceedings instituted to declare the forfeiture, they become citizens, or file the necessary deposition, but if they do either their right and title become absolute and indefeasible. Maynard v. Maynard, 36 Hun, 227 (1885).

In Maynard v. Maynard, supra, the facts showed that the property was conveyed to the husband and wife in 1852, and that they were aliens but had filed the necessary declarations to enable them to hold real estate, although they were never naturalized. They both died in the year 1881, in possession, intestate and without children, and the father and mother of the husband, who survived his wife, died before him and his only heirs at law were two brothers and two sisters, and his nephews and a niece, children of a deceased brother, all defendants in the action and nonresident aliens. One of the defendants took possession after the husband's death, under a claim of ownership, although not related to either the husband or the wife, and the state, by act of the legislature (Laws 1883, chap. 249), released to him all the state's rights in the property, but the act declared that nothing therein contained should impair any right of the heir at law, devisee, grantee, or creditor. At the death of the husband one of his nephews was an infant. The court held that under the New York act of 1845, as amended by the acts of 1874 and 1875, the alien heirs of the husband, who were females or minors at the time of his decease, took an absolute indefeasible estate in the property, and that the title of the defendant which had been confirmed by the act of the legislature was not valid as against such alien heirs.

In Nolan v. Command, 11 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 295 (1886), it was held that a resident alien could take real estate by inheritance, and hold against everybody but the state, who might divest him by proceedings for that purpose, unless he filed the necessary declaration of intention to become a citizen, and until such proceedings were instituted, might maintain action for partition, but even the fact that he had not declared his intention to become a citizen would not deprive him of his right of action, the only difference being that in such a case the state ought to be made a party defendant, and that the fact that during such proceedings the party declared his intention to become a citizen did not obviate the necessity of making the state a party.

The New York Laws of 1845, chap. 115, § 4, as amended by the act of 1874, chap. 261, and by that of 1875, chap. 88, recognize the right of alien kin of a person deceased, who was at the time of his death a resident alien or a citizen of the United States, to take, as his heirs, the lands which would have descended to them in that capacity had they been citizens of the United States. Re Beck's Estate, 31 N. Y. S. R. 965 (1880).

In Wainwright v. Low, 57 Hun, 386 (1890) Affirmed in 132 N. Y. 313 (1892), action was brought to recover possession of real estate. The facts showed that the owner of real estate, an alien by birth, upon her marriage with an American citizen executed an antenuptial deed of trust, in trust for herself for life, and at her death to such persons as she should by deed or will appoint. She died intestate without having conveyed the property except by such trust deed, leaving the plaintiff, her sister, who was never a citizen of the United States her only heir at law. The trustee under the deed subsequently conveying the property to the husband of deceased of which act plaintiff alleged that she had no notice, the defendant tracing his title from the husband as purchaser in good faith. The court held that under the New York statute of 1874 the sister was entitled as sole heir, and that such act was retroactive in its effect, and preserved the rights of persons who by its passage, had acquired interests and rights to lands which they were unable to enjoy by reason of the disability of alienage.

The New York statutes declare that "if any alien resident of this state, or any naturalized or native citizen of the United States, who has purchased and taken, or hereafter shall purchase and take, a conveyance of real estate within this state, has died, or shall hereafter die, leaving persons who, according to the statutes of this state, would answer the description of heirs of such deceased person, or of devisees under his last will, and being of his blood, such persons so answering the description of heirs or of such devisees of such deceased person, whether they are citizens or aliens, are hereby declared and made capable of taking and holding, and may take and hold, as heirs, or as such devisees of such deceased person, as if they were citizens of the United States, the lands and real estate owned and held by such deceased alien or citizen at the time of his decease; but if any of the persons so answering the description of heirs, or where there is no child or children or descendants of a child or children. The fourth clause relates solely to personal estate, and the fifth clause, as we have already seen, provides that, "if there is no child of the intestate or descendant of such child, and no parent, brother or sister or descendant of such parent, brother or sister, and no widow or surviving husband, then such estate shall descend in equal parts to the next of kin of the intestate in equal degree (computing by the rules of the civil law), and there shall be no representation among collaterals, except with the descendants of brothers and sisters of the intestate." The sixth clause provides that, "if any intestate leaves a widow or surviving husband and no kindred, his or her estate shall descend to such widow or surviving husband;" and the seventh clause provides that, if the intestate leaves no kindred and no widow or husband, his or her estate shall escheat to the county.

But it is claimed that the right of the complainant to inherit in this case may be made out from the third clause, which provides that the half of the estate not given by that clause to the widow or surviving husband shall descend as in other cases, where there is no child or children or descendants of a child or children. But the only clause which directs the course of descent where there is no child or children or descendants of a child of such devisees as aforesaid, of such deceased person, are males of full age, they shall not hold the real estate hereby made descendible or devisable to them, as against the state, unless they are citizens of the United States, and in case they are aliens, unless they make and file in the office of the secretary of state the adoption or affirmation mentioned in the 1st section of the act. Daly v. Beer, 32 N. Y. S. R. 1064 (1890).

In Daly v. Beer, supra, the facts showed that the intestate died seized of real estate which he took by devise from his father; that he left no father or mother, brother or sister, or descendant of any brother or sister, no paternal uncle or aunt, or descendant of any such uncle or aunt, but left two maternal aunts two of the defendants in the action, and two cousins, one the plaintiff and the other one of the defendants, both the children of a deceased maternal aunt, all of them nonresident aliens prior to the death of the intestate; that the plaintiff became a resident and declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States in 1889; that two of the defendants were aliens, and one a citizen by virtue of her marriage, the latter claiming as sole heir of the intestate, she having been in possession since the death of the intestate. The court held that under § 4 of chapter 115 of the New York Statutes of 1845, as amended by chapter 261 of the Laws of 1874, and chapter 36 of the Laws of 1875, alien heirs at law had power to take an absolute title to land, and that the parties took as tenants in common.

The above provisions of the New York statute were considered in the case of Stamm v. Bostwick, 122 N. Y. 48, 9 L. R. A. 597, Affirming 40 Hun, 25 (1890), wherein the question was whether a resident alien who, according to the statutes of that state, would answer the description of heir of a deceased citizen, could inherit and hold real estate owned and held by such deceased citizen at the time of his death. The land in question in this action was devised by a native-born citizen to a niece for her natural life, with remainder in fee to her lawful issue, such niece being a native-born citizen, and, at the time of the testatrix's death, the wife of the plaintiff, who, an alien by birth, filed his declaration to become a citizen after he came into possession of such estate, and was subsequently naturalized. The other party to the suit was a brother of the wife of the plaintiff, a natural-born citizen of full age, who was entitled as heir at law unless the plaintiff had the capacity to inherit and hold real estate under the provisions of the above acts. The defendants contended that the statutes had no application to the case inasmuch as the wife of the plaintiff was not a purchaser taking by deed but one who acquired land as devisee under a will. The court answered such contention by stating that in that case the intention of the legislature was best effectuated by giving to the word its most extensive signification, and that there certainly was no public policy which dictated such a reading of the statute, and that there was no apparent reason why the legislature, intending as it did that aliens should inherit and hold real estate within the state, should have made the inheritance depend upon a purchase by deed by the ancestor, when the intention of the legislature was clearly expressed that resident aliens might grant and devise all lands that they were made capable of holding by the act in question, and as it was equally the intention that if they failed to dispose of it by deed or will it should, by § 4 of the act, pass to those who were made capable of taking and holding it.

In the above case the court further held that the land in question was acquired by the plaintiff's wife as purchaser, and that therefore the plaintiff had the capacity to inherit as her heir, and that as against every person, except the state, he could hold the land without making the disposition required by the 1st section of the New York act of 1874, the question whether or not his title was good as against the state being a question with which the defendant in that action was not concerned.

By the New York Session Laws of 1893, vol. 1, chap. 207, p. 385, § 1, any person who would otherwise answer to the description of heir or devisee of a person, who at the time of his death was a citizen of the United States, shall be entitled to inherit or take from said citizen, and hold, enjoy, convey, transmit, and devise any interest in real property situated in this state in the same manner and to the same extent and with the same effect as if he was himself a citizen of the United States, notwithstanding the fact that he is a nonresident alien; and the fact that any person otherwise qualified to take, hold, enjoy, convey, transmit, and devise any interest in real property situated in this state is a nonresident alien shall not prevent his taking, holding, enjoying, conveying, transmitting, and devising such interest, providing his title, or that of some person under whom he claims, shall be derived, by descent or devise, from some person who was at the time of his death a citizen of the United States.

North Carolina.

In Rutherford v. Wolfe, 3 Hawks, 272 (1824), it was held that the North Carolina act of 1801, under which the nearest descendant or relation, not an alien, was entitled to inherit where there were nearer relations who were aliens, was not repealed by the act of 1806, which provided for a general system of descents, the latter act only providing for such a system so far as the question of consanguinity was concerned.

By § 40 of the Constitution of North Carolina every foreigner who came to settle in that state, having first taken the oath of allegiance to the state, might purchase, or by any other just means acquire, hold, and transfer, land or other real estate, and after one year's residence was deemed a free citizen; and in the case of Rouche v. Williamson, 3 or children, is the second, and it is there provided that in such case the estate shall descend to the parents, brothers and sisters and their descendants, and no mention whatever is made of collaterals. The only clause which appears to give any right of inheritance to collaterals, as we have already said, is the fifth, and it is there given to them only where there is no survivor of any of the classes there named, a widow and surviving husband being of the number. And there being here a surviving widow, it is difficult to see how, under that or either of the other clauses of the section, the complainant is entitled to inherit.

But without expressing any decided opinion upon this question, we prefer to place our decision upon another ground, and that is, that the complainant must trace his kinship to the deceased through several nonresident aliens, who, if themselves living, could not have succeeded to the estate as next of kin.

If the well-known rules of the common law applicable to this question are in force in this state, it is very clear that the complainant did not inherit from the intestate. The common-law rule is, and always has been, that a citizen cannot take by representation from an alien, because the alien has no inheritable blood through which the title can be deduced. 2 Kent, Com. 54.

Ired. L. 141 (1842), the act was held to be then in force although the latter part, which declares when such a person shall become a citizen, was repealed by the Constitution of the United States.

Under the North Carolina statute (Rev. Code, chap. 38, rule 9 of the chapter on Descents), the naturalized children of a sister, who was an alien and unnaturalized and alive, were held to take their mother's share in real estate. Campbell v. Campbell, 5 Jones, Eq. 246 (1859).

In Kane v. McCarthy, 68 N. C. 290 (1869), it was held that the phrase contained in the act of Congress of the 10th of February, 1865, relating to naturalization, "any woman who might lawfully be naturalized under the existing laws," meant only any woman who was a free white person, and not an alien enemy, and that therefore where the descent was cast, in the year 1863, upon a woman who, several years prior thereto, married in a foreign country a naturalized citizen of the United States, she was entitled to inherit, although she had always resided in a foreign country and continued so to do until after the descent was cast.

And in the same case it was also held that the expression, "married or who shall be married to a citizen of the United States," cast the descent upon a woman who was born an alien in the year 1851, and married an alien who, subsequent to such marriage, declared his intention and became a naturalized citizen.

Ohio.

* Under the Ohio laws of February, 1824, the estate of an intestate, who died leaving a widow a resident, and brothers and sisters, nonresident, aliens, his only heirs, it was held that the estate passed to the widow if his only next of kin or heirs of his blood were aliens, unless they appeared and presented their claim within fifteen years from the passing of the act, and if none made such appearance or claim within the prescribed time, they could not subsequently set up a claim to the land. Kay v. Watson, 17 Ohio, 27 (1848).

Pennsylvania.

In Jackson v. Burns, 3 Binn. 75 (1810), it was stated that the ante nati of America might continue to inherit in Great Britain, for the reason that America once owed allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain, but that the same rule did not extend to the ante nati of Great Britain, because they never owed allegiance to the American government.

In Jackson v. Burns, supra, deceased died in Pennsylvania in 1784, intestate, and without issue, and the question was whether plaintiff, his eldest brother, born in Ireland before the Revolution and never in the United States, was capable of inheriting. The court held that he was not, as by the Declaration of Independence all political connections between Great Britain and the United States were dissolved, and therefore the claimant owed no allegiance to the United States and was in all respects an alien.

Rhode Island.

Chapter 709 of the Rhode Island statute (Rev. Stat. chap. 160), which provides that in case of the death of an alien his estate shall be transmitted to his heirs, does not affect the case of an alien dying prior to the passing of that act. Haigh v. Haigh, 9 R. I. 26 (1868).

South Carolina.

In Megrath v. Robertson, 1 Desauss. Eq. 445, 449 (1796), it was held that the alien mother of a citizen was entitled, under the laws of South Carolina, to the personal estate of her daughter who died intestate without husband, child or father, and also by virtue of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of November 19, 1794, to the real estate of which such daughter died seised.

In Love v. Hadden, 8 Brev. 1 (1811), lands descended to the brother of the grantee as heir at law, such brother being in South Carolina at the time of the war and looked upon as an American citizen, but who went to foreign parts and was not heard of afterwards, the presumption being that he was dead at the time of action brought, in which case the plaintiff was next of kin, to whom the lands would descend as an inheritance provided he was capable of inheriting, the contention being that he was an alien and therefore incapable, the evidence showing that such plaintiff was the only son of a sister of the brother and was born in Ireland prior to the Revolution, and was not a citizen of the state at the date of the death of the intestate; and a nonsuit was ordered on the ground that he had not shown title by descent, the court affirming the decision.

In Clifton v. Haig, 4 Desauss. Eq. 330 (1812), it was held that a British subject, even though born before the Declaration of Independence, was an alien and not entitled to hold lands in South Carolina.

It has been held that the special act of the legislature of South Carolina of 1803, together with the general act of 1807, had for its object the removal of the disabilities imposed on aliens by the common law to take and transmit real property, and if the latter act was taken with, and regarded as a continuance of, the former, although one was a special and the other a general law, a system perfect in its symmetry, and reasonable in its operation was established, and it was unreasonable to believe that the legislature intended by the act of 1807 to make provision for a whole class to the exclusion of the few provided for in the act of 1803. Richards v. McDaniel, 2 Mill, Const. 18 (1818).

The South Carolina act of 1799 (5 S. C. Stat. 355) provides that "all free white persons, alien enemies, fugitives from justice, and persons banished from either of the United States excepted, who are now, or hereafter shall become, residents in this state,

An alien is not regarded as having sufficient inheritable blood to transmit the inheritance to collateral heirs, who are citizens. Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 675. In England this rule was changed by the statute of 11 & 12 Wm. III., which provided, in substance, that a natural-born subject might inherit, notwithstanding the fact that his father and mother, or other ancestor through whom he derived his pedigree, were born out of the King's allegiance.

The case of Lacy v. M'Cartee, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 102, 8 L. ed. 334, furnishes a very elaborate and learned discussion of the whole question. In that case both the intestate and the claimants were citizens of the United States, the former being a resident of the state of New York and the latter of the state of South Carolina. The claimants were grandchildren of the maternal uncle of the intestate, the uncle being an alien. The state of New York had adopted both the common and statute law of Great Britain, but had afterwards passed a statute declaring that none of the statutes of Great Britain should be considered as laws in that state. The Supreme Court of the United States, after reaching the conclusion that the statute of Wm. III. had thus been repealed so as to restore the common-law rule prior to the death of the intestate, held that a claimant who must make his pedigree through mediate alien ancestors shall, on making and subscribing the oath or affirmation of allegiance, . . . be deemed denizens so as to enable such persons to purchase and hold real property within this state, and in all other respects to entitle such persons to the like protection from the laws of this state as citizens are entitled unto," withholding from them the right to vote for public offices, or of being eligible to such offices, the object of the act being to remove the disability of aliens who were willing to take the oath of allegiance and were desirous of settling in the state, and to place them upon the footing that the latter's patent ex donatione regis, put an alien in England, the legal effect of the act being to waive the state's right to escheat the lands during the lifetime of the alien, but not to remove the common-law disability barring him from inheriting. McClenaghan v. McClenaghan, 1 Strobb. Eq. 295, 321, 47 Am. Dec. 532 (1847).

With regard to the words "purchase and hold real estate," as used in the above statute, the court stated that such words had, at the time of the passing of the act, a well-defined meaning which it could not be presumed the legislature ever misapprehended or misapplied, and that if the object had been to remove all disabilities of alienage and to confer all the rights of citizenship, except those that were political, it was more than probable that it would have been explicitly expressed; and further, that the denizen claimed the right in derogation of the common law under terms that qualified and restricted the privilege merely "to purchase and hold real estate," and that it would be a violation of the rules of construction to infer that the act intended to confer upon him the right to inherit by descent, as such was an entirely different mode of acquiring title, the granting of one privilege to an alien not destroying all the other privileges of a citizen upon him. Ibid.

Tennessee.

In Polk v. Ralston, 2 Humph. 537 (1841), it was held that Tenn. act 1809, chap. 53, by the expression of the term "alien" as used therein, meant foreigners by residence as well as birth, and that therefore an alien resident in that state but not naturalized had power to take and inherit personal but not real estate.

The Tennessee Code provides, §§ 2804, 2807: "An alien resident may take and hold property, real and personal, in this state either by purchase, descent, or devise, and dispose of and transmit the same by sale, descent, or devise as a native citizen, and in all cases where aliens, resident or nonresident, have heretofore acquired title to property, real or personal, in this state in a lawful manner, said aliens, their assigns, heirs, devisees, or representatives, shall hold and dispose of the same in the same manner as native citizens," the above provision being substantially the act of 1875. The Code also provides that the heir or heirs of an alien, whether resident or nonresident of the United States, may take any land so held by descent or otherwise as citizens of the United States. Emmentt v. Emmett, 14 Lea, 260, 371 (1884).

Texas.

After the adoption of the Constitution of the republic of Texas, heirs who were citizens did not exclude those who were aliens in the inheritance. Cryer v. Andrews, 11 Tex. 170 (1853).

The Constitution and laws of the republic of Texas in relation to the alien heirs of a deceased citizen provide, in effect, that if any citizen shall die intestate or otherwise, his children or heirs shall inherit his estate, and aliens shall have a reasonable time to take possession and dispose of the same in the manner thereafter to be pointed out by law, and under the statute of 1841, article 585 of Hart's Digest, every alien to whom land may be devised or may descend shall have nine years in which to become a citizen of the republic, and take possession of such land, or shall have nine years to sell the same before it shall be declared to be forfeited or shall escheat to the government. Under the construction placed upon such constitutional provision and statute, it was held that the acts of others could not affect the rights of alien heirs, whether favorably or unfavorably, and that notwithstanding a disability of coverture, infancy, or any other disability, he must assert his rights within the time specified. Ibid.

In Warnell v. Finch, 15 Tex. 163 (1855), it was held that the above provisions of the Constitution of the republic of Texas were prospective merely, and had no operation in favor of aliens, heirs of persons who had previously died.

The Constitution of Texas of 1836, which provided for the transmission of estates of citizens to their children or heirs being citizens, and that Congress should legislate to give to aliens a reasonable time to take possession and dispose of their inheritance, did not provide that an alien could transmit land in Texas by descent to an alien heir, and the subsequent statute of that state provided that the heir must sell or become naturalized within a given time. McKinney v. Saviego, 59 U. S. 13 How. 235, 15 L. ed. 365 (1855).

And in the case of Hornsby v. Bacon, 20 Tex. 556 (1857), the above provisions of the Constitution of the republic of Texas were held not to cover alien heirs of persons who died prior to the organization of the republic.

Where the plaintiffs derived their title by descent from their ancestor, and such title related back to the time of descent cast, at which time, by the laws then in force, aliens could not inherit, the plaintiffs failed in their action to recover real estate to which they claimed heirship. Blythe v. Easterling, 20 Tex. 535 (1857).

In Middleton v. McGrew, 64 U. S. 23 How. 45, 16 L. ed. 403 (1859), it was held that by the laws of Mexico alien heirs could not inherit, and that such law was applicable to real estate in Texas.

could not in that state inherit collaterally from a citizen.

After discussing the English authorities, and especially the leading case of Collingwood v. Pace, reported in 1 Vent. 413, 1 Keb. 671, and in various other reports, the court reached the conclusion that, if the pedigree must be traced through a mediate alien ancestor, the party cannot take by descent, for the inheritable blood is stopped, and there is a flat bar to the assertion of any title derived through the alien. The only exception to this rule, as settled in Collingwood v. Pace, is that brothers who are citizens may inherit from each other, although their father is an alien, but this is upon the theory that brothers inherit from each other immediately and not mediately, and therefore that they are not obliged to derive their pedigree through their alien father. To the same effect, see Jackson, Doran, v. Green, 7 Wend. 333; Jackson, Fitz Simmons, v. Fitz Simmons, 10 Wend. 9, 24 Am. Dec. 198; Redpath v. Rich, 3 Sandf. 79.

The question then arises whether the rule of the common law on this subject must be deemed to be in force in this state. There can be no doubt that the statute by which the common law was adopted in this state is comprehensive enough to include it. By that statute the common law of England, so far as the same is applicable and of a general

In that case action was instituted to recover land in two colonies in Texas, then in the possession of the defendant and claimed by the plaintiffs through a conveyance by the brothers of a deceased colonist who died in 1835 intestate and without issue. The brothers were citizens of the United States, and assumed to be the heirs at law of the decedent, the question being whether the brothers were capable of taking by inheritance within the limits of Mexico, or were disabled by their condition as aliens; the question being founded upon the jurisprudence of Mexico, which was applied to cases arising within the state of Texas.

The effect of the general provisions of the Constitution of Texas, § 10, and the statute of 1840, Hart's Digest, art. 586, was to enable aliens to acquire the title to real estate by descent equally with citizens. Barclay v. Cameron, 25 Tex. 233 (1890).

In the above case the lands were held to descend to the alien sisters of the intestate under the provisions of the above laws of the state to the exclusion of the deceased's uncle.

The rule of the common law excluding aliens from the inheritance was changed by the Constitution of the republic of Texas, so as to enable aliens to take by descent from a citizen a defeasible title. Ibid.

In Clay v. Clay, 26 Tex. 24 (1861), it was held that by the laws of the republic of Mexico an unnaturalized alien could not acquire title to real estate. To the same effect, Lacoste v. Odam, 28 Tex. 459 (1863).

The rule of the common law disabling aliens from casting descent on an alien, does not, according to the 14th section of the Texas acts of January, 1840, and of March, 1848, regulating descents, appear to have been in force in Texas. Settegast v. Schrimpf, 36 Tex. 323 (1872).

In the above case the intestate declared his intention to become a citizen, but died before the full period of his naturalization had elapsed, and the court stated that the intestate could not be considered an alien at the time of his death, as he was permitted, under the laws of the state, to exercise most of the rights of citizenship.

By the laws of Mexico, in force in Texas from March, 1836, to January, 1840, aliens were prohibited from holding lands except the title was taken directly from the government. Hammekin v. Clayton, 2 Woods, C. C. 338 (1874).

In Hammekin v. Clayton, supra, it was stated that the rule of the common law was the same as the civil law of Mexico and Texas.

So, in Andrews v. Spear, 48 Tex. 567 (1878), the court stated with respect to the common-law doctrine being in force in the state of Texas, that there was no decision under the 14th section of the act of 1740, re-enacted in the 9th section of the act of 1848, regulating descents, which showed that it had been actually enforced, and the claims of the heirs denied because the ancestor was an alien.

The Texas act of February 13, 1854, which defined the civil rights of aliens, provides, § 1: "Any alien being a free white person shall have and enjoy, in the state of Texas, such rights as are or shall be accorded to American citizens by the laws of the nation to which such alien shall belong, or by treaties of such nations with the United States;" and § 2 enables aliens to take and hold real and personal property by devise or descent from any alien or citizen in the same manner in which citizens of the United States take and hold the same by devise or descent within the country of such alien; and by § 3 any alien, a free white person, becoming a resident of the state and declaring his intention to become a citizen, in conformity with the naturalization laws of the United States, has the right to acquire and hold real estate in that state in the same manner as if he were a citizen of the United States. Hanrick v. Hanrick, 54 Tex. 113 (1890).

In Hanrick v. Hanrick, 54 Tex. 101 (1890), 61 Tex. 506 (1894), a native of Ireland, and a naturalized citizen of the United States, died in 1865, seised of real estate, intestate, unmarried, and without issue. One of the defendants, a nephew of the intestate, was a native-born subject of the United States, whose father, a brother of the intestate, died in Alabama in 1852, and such nephew claimed as sole heir to his uncle. The intestate also left two brothers and a sister, a widow, all British subjects residing abroad, him surviving. One of such brothers died in 1871, intestate, unmarried, and without issue, never having been in the United States, the other brother died a nonresident alien in 1875, intestate, leaving children and grandchildren, plaintiffs in the suit, and the sister of the intestate, a nonresident alien, still survived. One of the plaintiffs came to the United States in 1852, and was a resident of New York. After due consideration of the Constitution and laws of the state of Texas, the court held that the real estate vested as follows, one fourth in the defendant nephew the native-born citizen, by an indefeasible title; one fourth in the intestate's brother who died in 1875, by defeasible title, which was rendered indefeasible by operation of law upon the passage of the English naturalization act of 1870; one fourth in the brother who died in 1871, in like manner; and one fourth in the sister in like manner. With respect to the one-fourth share of the brother who died in 1871, the court held that it went as follows: One third to his brother, who died in 1875; one third to the sister, and the remaining third to the nephew; and further, that upon the death of the brother in 1875 his real estate vested in the same manner as if he had been a citizen, in his children and their descendants.

With all due deference to the court in the above case, the writer submits that a different conclusion nature, and all statutes or acts of the British Parliament made in aid of, or to supply, the defects of the common law prior to the fourth year of James I. (with the exception of certain statutes not material here), and which are of a general nature and not local to that kingdom, shall be considered as of full force until repealed by legislative authority. Rev. Stat. chap. 28, § 1.

It cannot be justly claimed that there is anything in the rule under consideration so repugnant to the nature of our institutions, or so unsuitable to the condition of things existing in this country, that it can be pronounced by the courts not to be in force because inapplicable. It existed in England, not as a part of the feudal system, as counsel seem to suppose, but was based upon general principles of public policy, having in view the protection of the kingdom from foreign influence and foreign domination,—principles not altogether unlike those which have given rise to our recent legislation re-imposing upon aliens the common-law disabilities in relation to taking and holding real estate in this state. True, during most of our history as a state, those disabilities have been removed, but that has been done by express legislation changing the common-law rule, and not by any attempt on the part of the courts to hold the rule not in force because inapplicable.

might have been arrived at had it considered the two English cases of Sharp v. St. Sauveur, L. R. 7 Ch. 342 (1871); and De Geer v. Stone, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 243, 52 L. J. Ch. N. S. 57, 47 L. T. N. S. 434, 36 Week. Rep. 241 (1862), both of which hold that the English statute had no retrospective effect.

Article 1658 of the Revised Statutes of Texas provides, in making title to land by descent it shall be no bar to a party that any ancestor through whom he derives his descent from the intestate is or has been an alien, and every alien to whom any land may be devised or descend shall have nine years to become a citizen of the state, and take possession of such land, or shall have nine years to sell the same before it shall be declared forfeited, and shall escheat to the government; provided, that the treaties of the United States with the nation to which such alien may belong do not otherwise direct; and provided, further, that aliens may take and hold any property, real or personal, in this state, by devise or descent from any alien or citizen in the same manner in which citizens of the United States may take and hold real or personal estate by devise or descent within the country of such alien. Hanrick v. Hanrick, 54 Tex. 101, 111 (1890).

In Hanrick v. Hanrick, supra, the above statute was considered as an affirmative one, and as additional to the then existing section 9 of the act of 1848, which was not repealed by it, either in express terms or by necessary implication, neither was the act of 1854, directly or irreconcilably opposed to such section of the act of 1848.

With respect to the English act, passed in the year 1870, it was held in the above case of Hanrick v. Hanrick that to the extent that it conferred benefits to citizens of the United States it was by virtue of the provisions of the Texas statute of 1854 immediately engrafted upon it and became the law, defining the rights of alien citizens of Great Britain and Ireland to real estate in Texas, and section 9 of the act of 1848 was, as to such aliens, so far modified as to change their previous defeasible estate thereby given into an indefeasible estate.

The effect of the provisions of the Constitution of the republic of Texas, and of the statutes of 1840 and 1848, upon the subject of alienage, was to vest a defeasible title to real estate in Texas, in the alien children and heirs of a citizen of the United States who had died intestate leaving such property, which title was valid both against individuals and also against the state, not only for the period of nine years, but for such further time until the state by some proper proceedings in the nature of office found had declared a forfeiture. Hanrick v. Hanrick, 54 Tex. 113 (1890). To the same effect are the following cases: Sabreigo v. White, 30 Tex. 576 (1866); Settegast v. Schrimpf, 35 Tex. 323 (1872); Andrews v. Spear, 48 Tex. 567 (1878); Osterman v. Bald- 31 L. R. A. win, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 116, 18 L. ed. 730 (1867); Airhart v. Massieu, 98 U. S. 491, 25 L. ed. 213 (1879); Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 208, 25 L. ed. 603 (1879).

The court further considered that the position of aliens in Great Britain and in that state (Texas) being reciprocal, by virtue of the English naturalization act of 1870, and the Texas act of 1854, and the nine years given by the latter act not having elapsed since the death of the intestate in 1835 and the passing of the English statute, no forfeiture could have been declared, the latter act upon its passage calling into active operation the Texas statute, the joint influence of the acts converting the defeasible into an indefeasible title. Hanrick v. Hanrick, 61 Tex. 596, 606 (1884).

The court considered that the act enlarged rather than restricted the rights of aliens to take and hold land in that state, being cumulative rather than restrictive in its operations, and that, after the passage of the act, as before, an alien could take a defeasible title by inheritance without regard to the law upon that subject in force in his government, but where by the laws of his government an alien took an indefeasible title by inheritance, so by virtue of that enactment he could here take and hold "in the same manner." Ibid.

The Texas statute upon which the court based its decision was § 2 of the act of February 13, 1854, "An Act to Define the Civil Rights of Aliens," which provides: "Aliens may take and hold any property, real or personal, in this state, by devise or descent, from any alien or citizen, in the same manner in which citizens of the United States may take and hold real or personal estate by devise or descent within the country of such alien."

The Texas act of 1854, defining the rights of aliens, did not repeal the provisions of the act of 1848, providing that alien heirs of real property should be entitled to nine years in which to dispose of it or become citizens and take possession, and, under the act of 1854, the English act of 1870 changed the defeasible title of alien heirs of the owner of lands situated in Texas who died in 1835 into a defeasible title. Hanrick v. Partick, Branch v. Partick, 119 U. S. 153, 30 L. ed. 396 (1886).

In Ortiz v. De Benavides, 61 Tex. 60 (1884), the plaintiff, an alien, claimed title through a Mexican citizen who died in 1816. The court held that it was settled law in that state that aliens so claiming might maintain actions for the recovery of such real estate.

It has been held that under the laws of Texas aliens could acquire title to real property in the same manner as citizens, by inheritance from a citizen. Wiederanders v. State, 64 Tex. 133, 139 (1885).

And further, that immediately upon the death of the ancestor real estate will vest in the alien heir, subject only to be defeated by his not complying with the provisions of the Texas statute, which require him to become a citizen, or give him a certain

The statute in relation to the rights of aliens in force prior to the act of June 16, 1887, was the act of February 17, 1851,—an act which seems to have superseded the chapter of the Revised Statutes of 1845 relating to aliens. The act of 1851 provided that all aliens might take, by deed, will, or otherwise, lands and tenements and any interest therein, and alienate, sell, assign, and transmit the same to their heirs, or any other persons, whether such heirs or other persons were citizens of the United States or not, in the same manner as natural-born citizens of the United States or of this state might do; and that upon the decease of any person having title to or interest in any lands or tenements, such lands and tenements should pass and descend in the same manner as if such alien were a citizen of the United States; and that it should be no objection to any persons having an interest in such estate that they were not citizens of the United States, but that all such persons should have the same rights and remedies, and in all things be placed upon the same footing, as natural-born citizens and actual residents of the United States. Gross's Stat. 1869, § 7.

There can be no doubt that this statute while it was in force operated as a complete removal of all the disabilities of alienage, so far as they affected the right of the alien to take, hold, and transmit real property in this state, and that it also superseded the common-law rule, that the interposition of an alien ancestor between an intestate and a collateral relative claiming to inherit was a barrier to the devolution of the estate by inheritance. But by the act of 1887 the common-law disabilities of alienage were in the main restored, and the act of 1851, as well as all other acts in conflict with the act of 1887, were expressly repealed.

period within which to dispose of the property, the proviso in such statute being a condition subsequent. Ibid.

In Baker v. Westcott, 73 Tex. 129 (1889), plaintiff sought to recover possession of real estate, part of a league survey granted to the original holder by title extended by special commissioner, and alleged that such original grantee conveyed the title to the purchaser whenever the latter should become a citizen of Texas; and further, that such purchaser did become a citizen of Texas, and subsequently died having by will devised the land to his son, who had since died leaving the plaintiff as his sole heir. Defendant claimed as the sole heir of such original grantee and sought to set aside the instrument under which the plaintiff claimed, as a cloud upon title, claiming that the conveyance was void because the grantee at the time of the execution was an alien, but the court held that by the Constitution of the republic of Texas, which contained a provision that "no alien shall hold land in Texas except by titles emanating directly from the government of this republic, but if any citizen shall die intestate or otherwise, his children or heirs shall inherit his estate, an alien shall have a reasonable time to take possession and dispose of the same in a manner hereafter to be pointed out by law," and that therefore, under the conveyance by such original grantee, the grantee took a title subject to be escheated at the suit of the republic, but that upon annexation his title became indefeasible, and such conveyance vested the perfect legal and equitable title of the lands in the purchaser, which title upon his death vested in his heir, who was entitled to recover. To the same effect is the case of Williams v. Bennett, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 498 (1892).

In Gray v. Kauffman, 82 Tex. 65 (1891), a resident of Germany brought suit in trespass to try title, and defendant contended that the action did not lie by reason of the plaintiff's alienage, but the court held that it was well settled in that state that aliens, under its laws, could acquire title by purchase, devise, or descent, and that therefore the action lay.

Vermont.

In State v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co. 25 Vt. 433 (1853), it was held that there was no express prohibition in the Constitution of the state of Vermont against aliens holding real estate, the Constitution, § 30, providing that every person of good character who came to settle in this state, having first taken oath or affirmation of allegiance to the same, purchase or by other just means acquire, and transfer, lands, and that the right of the state to take such lands by escheat was a proceeding that was strictissimi juris and one which had always remained dormant notwithstanding frequent occasions for its legitimate exercise in that state.

Virginia.

In Barziza v. Hopkins, 2 Rand. (Va.) 276 (1824), it was held that persons born abroad, whose parents were also aliens, could not inherit lands in Virginia, not being citizens of that state, even though their grandmother was a native of that state who removed therefrom before the Revolution, and married and resided abroad until after the treaty of peace, when she returned to the state and resided there until her decease.

In Sands v. Lynham, 27 Gratt. 291, 21 Am. Rep. 348 (1876), an alien died seized of an estate of inheritance, intestate and unmarried, and a curator of his estate was appointed. Subsequently a creditor of such alien recovered a judgment against the curator, and in a subsequent suit by such creditor against the curator a decree appointing such curator a commissioner to sell the real estate, to receive the purchase money, and to pay off the judgment out of such proceeds, was made. An inquisition of escheat was held later in which the jury found the facts as above, and that there were then parties in possession claiming under the sale. The inquisition certificate was not returned to the register of the land office until a year after it was made, and the register then advertised the property as escheated. Subsequently the purchaser at the sale under the decree filed his petition setting up his claim to the property, pointing out irregularities in the proceedings to escheat, and insisting, the jury having found the sale of the property under the decree and the actual possession of the purchasers, that the inquisition was not in favor of the right of the commonwealth, and praying that the escheator and the register of the land office might be made parties to the suit and restrained from advertising the property as escheated. The court held that such estate vested in the state of Michigan even without office found, and further, that the sale under the decree was void; the state not having been made a party to the purchase, the purchaser was allowed, the creditor's claim being just, to be substituted to the latter's right, and to hold the estate subject to the payment of the debt.

III. Decisions under the English statutes.

In Doe, Stansbury, v. Arkwright, 5 Car. & P. 575 (1833), a resident of the state of Pennsylvania prior to the date of the Declaration of Independence had

It is a rule of the common law that where one statute is repealed by another the repeal of the repealing statute revives the statute repealed, and the same rule is held to extend to the common law, so that where an act which supersedes in any particular the common-law rule, previously applicable, is itself repealed, the rule is held to be revived. Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 475; State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550; Mathewson v. Phenix Iron Foundry, 20 Fed. Rep. 281; Gray v. Obeart, 54 Ga. 231.

By § 8, chap. 181, of the Revised Statutes, it is provided that no act or part of an act repealed by the general assembly shall be deemed to be revived by the repeal of the repealing act, but we have no statute affecting the rule that the repeal of a statute superseding a common-law rule will have the effect of reviving the rule. It must accordingly be held that the repeal of the statute of 1851, by which the common-law rule which made it impossible for a collateral to inherit where he is obliged to trace his pedigree through an alien was changed, revived the common-law rule.

But it is claimed that the rule, even if in force in this state, can have no application in the present case, because, as the complainant insists, the next of kin under our statute takes immediately from the intestate, and not mediately through his alien ancestors. We find nothing in the language of the statute which necessarily leads to the conclusion contended for. It merely provides that the estate shall descend in equal parts to the next of kin of the intestate, leaving upon the party who claims the right to inherit the burden of deducing his pedigree through a line of ancestors up to the intestate. And it will not be questioned that, in this case, if any one of the ancestors, through whom the complainant deduces his pedigree, had been alive at the death of the intestate and capable of inheriting, the estate would have gone to him or her, and not to the complainant, thus showing that such ancestor is the medium hereditatis, and not merely the medium sanguinis.

Descents have long been distinguished as mediate and immediate, but as shown by Mr. Justice Story in Levy v. M'Cartee, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 102, 8 L. ed. 334, these terms are susa son born there before that date. In 1788 the father went to England to recover compensation for losses, returned in 1786, and subsequently died in that state. The son was never in England. The court held that they were both aliens, American subjects, and that a claim to lands in England could only be made through them under the statute 37 Geo. III., chap. 97, § 24.

The statute referred to in the above case, after reciting the 9th article of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States, enacted, § 24, "that all lands, tenements, and hereditaments in the kingdom of Great Britain, or the territories and dependencies thereto belonging, which, on the said 28th day of October, 1786 (being the day of the exchange of the ratification of the said treaty between his Majesty and the United States), were held by American citizens, shall be held and enjoyed, granted, sold, and devised according to the stipulations and agreements contained in the said article, any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding."

Section 25 of the same provides "that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to give any right, title, or privilege to any person, not being a natural-born subject of the realm, which such person would not have been entitled to if this act had not been made, other than and except such rights, titles, and privileges as shall be necessary for the true and faithful performance of the stipulations in the said article contained, according to the true intent and meaning thereof, or to give to any person, not being a natural-born subject of this realm, or a citizen of the said United States, any right, title, or privilege to which such person would not have been entitled if this act had not been made."

By the statutes 7 Anne, chap. 5, 4 Geo. II., chap. 21, and 13 Geo. III., chap. 21, all children born out of the King's allegiance, whose fathers or grandfathers by the father's side were natural-born subjects, are to be deemed natural-born subjects themselves, unless their said ancestors were attainted or banished beyond sea for high treason, or were at the time of the births of such children in the service of a prince at enmity with Great Britain. But the grandchildren of such ancestors are not to be privileged in respect of the alien's duty, unless they be within the realm and take an oath, etc., nor are they enabled to claim any estate 31 L. R. A.

or interest, unless the claim be made within five years after the same shall accrue.

In Doe, Auchmuty. v. Mulcaster, 8 Dowl. & R. 593, 5 Barn. & C. 771 (1826), it was held that the children of an American loyalist, who continued his allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain after the colonies were separated from the mother country, and settled in America, were entitled to take lands by descent in England within the operation of the statute of 4 Geo. II., chap. 21, as natural-born subjects of the Crown of Great Britain.

The words of the English statute of 13 Geo. III., chap. 21, § 8, are to be read "aliens, duties, customs, and impositions" and not "alien's duties, customs, and impositions," and therefore the grandchild of a natural-born subject, born out of the King's allegiance, is entitled to the benefit of that statute in regard to holding lands as a natural-born subject, although he has not complied with the formalities specified in the 3d section. Barrow v. Wadkins, 24 Beav. 327, 27 L. J. Ch. 129 (1867).

The English statute, 13 Geo. III., chap. 21, §§ 8, 4, annexed certain provisions to the time within which a claim is to be made, and to enable grandchildren to claim or demand any estate in pursuance of the right given them by § 1, and it was held that these provisions applied to Ireland as qualifying the status of the English subject which the act of union transferred. Davies v. Lynch, 16 Week. Rep. 1207 (1868).

The children of a British subject born abroad of an alien mother are capable of inheriting. De Geer v. Stone, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 248, 252, 52 L. J. Ch. N. S. 51, 60, 36 Week. Rep. 241, 47 L. T. N. S. 434 (1882).

A grandchild born abroad, whose father was also born abroad, being respectively grandchild and son of one who at common law was a natural-born British subject, would be himself a natural-born British subject, but his children, if born abroad, would be aliens. Ibid.

In the above case the great-grandson, whose father and grandfather were both born abroad, sought to inherit real estate from his great-grandfather, but the court held that he was not so entitled, and that his right having accrued upon the death of his father in 1840, thirty years prior to the passing of the English naturalization act of 1870, was not affected by that statute which had no retrospective effect.

E. W.

ceptible of different interpretations, whence some confusion has been introduced into their legal discussion, since different judges have used them in different senses. But, as said by Lord Hale, as quoted in Collingwood v. Pace, supra, "in immediate descents there can be no impediment but what ariseth in the parties themselves, but in mediate descents it is agreed, the disability of being an alien or attainted, in him that is the medius antecessor will disable the other, though he have no such disability."

In Collingwood v. Pace, which was argued before all the judges of England, the question was whether the inheritance by a brother from his brother, the father being an alien, was mediate or immediate, and it was decided, after much discussion, by seven judges against three, that the inheritance was immediate, so as not to be affected by the alienage of the father. It was held that, in tracing the line of inheritance between brothers, or their descendants it was not necessary to name the father as their common ancestor, and that alienism in any ancestor whom it was not necessary to name in tracing such inheritance or descent could not have the effect to impede it. In McGregor v. Comstock, 3 N. Y. 408, the same rule was applied to an inheritance between first cousins, their fathers being citizens, but whose grandfather was an alien.

Thus, in Jackson, Doran, v. Green, 7 Wend. 333, the intestate was a naturalized citizen, and the claimants were the heirs at law of a cousin of the intestate, who was also a naturalized citizen. It was claimed that the descent between cousins was immediate, notwithstanding the circuitry of the line of sanguinity, and that the alienage of their intervening relatives was no bar to the inheritance, but this claim was disallowed, it being held that, while the descent from brother to brother was considered immediate, that from cousin to cousin was not; and that no one who was obliged to trace his descent through an alien can inherit real estate, the intestate having died at a time when the statute of 11 & 12 Wm. III. was not incorporated into the New York law of descent.

The same rule was applied in Jackson, Fitz Simmons, v. Fitz Simmons, 10 Wend. 9, 24 Am. Dec. 198, where the intestate was a naturalized citizen, and the claimant his nephew, but whose father, a brother of the intestate, was an alien. So in Redpath v. Rich, 3 Sandf. 79, it was held that a nephew, who was obliged to trace his descent through an alien mother, could not inherit from his uncle. In McCarthy v. Marsh, 5 N. Y. 265, the intestate and the claimant were second cousins, and were both citizens, all their ancestors, up to their common great-grandfather being aliens. It was held that under the New York statute, which provided that no person capable of inheriting should be precluded from the inheritance by reason of the alienage of any ancestor of such person, the claimant was entitled to the estate, but it was admitted that at common law, and in the absence of such statute, he could not inherit, because he was obliged to trace the descent of the estate through aliens who had no inheritable blood.

In People v. Irvin, 21 Wend. 128, where the same statute was in force, it was held that the nephew of a person dying intestate, although naturalized, was not capable of inheriting from his uncle if his father was an alien and still living at the time of the death of the intestate, as the statute did not enable a person to deduce title through an alien ancestor still living. If in such case, however, the descent from the uncle to the nephew was immediate, as is claimed in the case at bar, it is difficult to see how the fact that an intermediate alien ancestor was living could have the effect of barring the inheritance.

McLean v. Swanton, 13 N. Y. 535, involved substantially the same question as the case last cited. There the decedent left him surviving a sister and a niece, the former being an alien and the latter a citizen, and it was held that the niece could not take the real estate of the decedent by inheritance, so long as her mother was living at the date of her uncle's death. It was urged on behalf of the niece that the existence of her mother might be disregarded upon the doctrine laid down by Chancellor Kent, viz.: "If a citizen dies, and his next heir be an alien, who cannot take, the alien cannot interrupt the descent to others, and the inheritance descends to the next of kin who is competent to take, in like manner as if no such alien had ever existed." 2 Kent, Com. 56. This contention was disallowed and the doctrine announced by Chancellor Kent held inapplicable, the court saying: "The difficulty of this position is, that if the name of the mother be stricken from the plaintiff's genealogical chart, it will not appear that she has any connection with Robert Swanton, whose heir she claims to be."

The cases to which the doctrine referred to in the commentaries applies, are those in which the claimant does not make title through the alien, but where she can deduce her pedigree from the person dying seised, by leaving out or passing by the alien." And again: "All the cases decided in this country, where an alien would have taken the estate but for his alienage, and in which a more remote heir was preferred, were cases of the same character, the successful claimant making out his descent independent of and not through the alien. Upon the plaintiff's theory, the statute under consideration would have been quite unnecessary; for if she can be allowed to strike out her alien ancestors, intervening between the person dying seised, and herself, whether living or dead, and make title to the land of the person so dying seised, as his immediate heir, the defect of heritable blood in such ancestors would be a matter of no moment." The same construction of the language of Chancellor Kent is adopted in Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84.

We have examined the cases cited by counsel for the complainant, where a citizen who has been compelled to trace his relationship to the intestate through an alien has been held entitled to inherit, and we find them in most

(if not every) instances, to be cases arising under a statute expressly giving the right to inherit in such cases. The decisions of this character in the state of New York all seem to have arisen while the statute of 11 & 12 Wm. III., or the section of the Revised Statutes of the state substantially re-enacting that statute, was in force. The case of Jackson v. Sanders, 2 Leigh, 109, was decided under a statute of the state of Virginia, which provided that "in making title by descent, it shall be no bar to a party that any ancestor through whom he derives his descent from the intestate, is or hath been an alien." Similar statutes are found in several of the other states. It is scarcely necessary to remark that in this state no such statute exists.

We are of the opinion, then, that, as the complainant is compelled to trace his descent from the intestate through nonresident aliens, he is barred and incapacitated from taking any interest in the real estate by inheritance.

The decree of the Superior Court dismissing his bill for want of equity must therefore be affirmed.

Craig, J., dissents.

Baker, J.:

I do not feel satisfied with the conclusion reached, and am inclined to the opinion that the law well could be, and should be, held otherwise.

George D. BARRETT et al., Appls.,

v.

MT. GREENWOOD CEMETERY ASSOCIATION et al.

(150 Ill. 385.)

1. The connection of a sewer under-draining a cemetery with a spring brook, water from which is used for domestic purposes, watering animals, and making ice for domestic use, may be enjoined, at the instance of riparian owners who will be injured by it.
2. An injunction to prevent the connection of a sewer with a spring brook the water of which is used for domestic purposes will not be refused because the water is already polluted to some extent from other sources.

(January 20, 1896.)

APPEAL by complainants from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of defendants in an action brought to enjoin the connecting of a sewer with a stream of water flowing through complainant's premises. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note.—For nuisance by pollution of stream, see also Chapman v. Rochester (N. Y.) 1 L. R. A. 296, and note; Barton v. Union Cattle Co. (Neb.) 7 L. R. A. 457, and note; Heifrich v. Catonsville Water Co. (Md.) 13 L. R. A. 117, and note.

For pollution by mining operations, see Drake v. Lady Ensley Coal, I. & R. Co. (Ala.) 24 L. R. A. 64, and note.

31 L. R. A.

Messrs. Holden & Buzzell and Whitehead & Stoker, for appellants:

A court of chancery may grant preventative, as well as remedial, relief, and this may be done where the act threatened would be punishable under the criminal laws as a nuisance.

People v. St. Louis, 10 Ill. 351; Laney v. Jasper, 39 Ill. 52; Wahle v. Reinbach, 76 Ill. 322; Minke v. Hopeman, 87 Ill. 450, 29 Am. Rep. 68; Metropolitan City R. Co. v. Chicago, 96 Ill. 620; Rand v. Wilber, 19 Ill. App. 395.

To constitute a nuisance it is not necessary that the noxious trade or business should endanger the health of a neighborhood. It is sufficient if it produces that which is offensive to the senses and which renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable.

Catlin v. Valentine, 9 Paige, 575, 38 Am. Dec. 567.

Parties, although separate owners of premises charged to be injured, and threatened with the injury, might join in an action to abate the nuisance.

Gillespie v. Forrest, 18 Hun, 112; Belknap v. Trimble, 3 Paige, 577; Catlin v. Valentine, 9 Paige, 575, note, 38 Am. Dec. 567; Lyon v. McLaughlin, 32 Vt. 423; Wood, Nuisances, § 119; High, Inj. p. 508, § 794.

Messrs. Runyan & Runyan for appellees.

Carter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill in equity filed in the circuit court of Cook county by certain land-owners, who are appellants here, to enjoin appellees, two cemetery corporations, from constructing a certain sewer so as to drain their cemeteries, and especially to underdrain certain wet and swampy portions thereof, used and to be used in burying the dead, into a running stream of water flowing through appellants' lands. The sewer empties into the brook where it crosses Morgan avenue, above appellants' lands, and is being constructed eastward along said avenue, between said cemeteries, with lateral extensions or spurs extending into the cemeteries for drainage, and especially designed to drain certain swampy portions thereof, as appear unfit for burial purposes unless underdrained. The sewer is being constructed under a contract between the two cemetery companies of the one part, and the commissioners of highways of the town of Worth, of the other part, whereby the former are to construct the sewer at their own expense, and to pay all damages to private property, and the town is to keep the same open and in repair for the use of the cemetery companies, and the adjoining property owners are to have the right to connect. There is but little dispute as to the law of the case, the controversy relating chiefly to matters of fact. The testimony was taken by the master, to whom the cause was referred. Many witnesses were examined, and the evidence is too voluminous to be set out to any considerable extent here. The testimony shows, however, that said brook is a small, shallow stream, which rises north of Morgan avenue or 111th street, in the town of Worth, and flows southerly, fed by springs along its course, across said avenue, through the 60 acres of land owned by complainant G. D. Barrett; thence south through a 100-acre tract owned by complainant W. B. Brayton, and across Raymond avenue, or 115th street, and through land owned by complainant Saxton; and thence through an 80-acre tract owned and occupied by complainant Ira. S. Brayton, and 80 acres owned and occupied by Friederich Joehnke; thence across Lyon avenue, or 119th street, over a 40-acre tract owned by complainants John T. Dale and George D. Robinson. South of Morgan avenue $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles in a direct line, but 4 miles by the brook, complainant August Croever occupies a block of ground on which he has constructed ice houses, and where he conducts an ice business of \$5,000 or \$6,000 a year. The brook that runs through the lands of other complainants, north of his premises, empties into Stoney creek, about $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile above his place. He has harvested ice from Stoney creek, and sold the same in Chicago and vicinity, for fourteen years past, for refrigerator and domestic purposes. The lands of the other complainants are used for pasturage and for farming purposes, and the water of the brook is used for stock, and, to some extent, is used in the homes of the occupants of the land for domestic purposes. This brook running through said lands receives the washings of the streets, and from manured lands used for raising cabbages, adjoining it, north of the land of complainants; and in times of freshets the brook is muddy, but it is clear in its natural condition. Ditches have been constructed along Morgan avenue, and surface water coming south on Johnson avenue, which intersects Morgan avenue, is carried along these ditches into the brook. Dr. Bayard Holmes testified as an expert bacteriologist, that bodies buried in boxes of wood would sooner or later be so liquified as to be practically incorporated with the soil in which they were buried, and that the subterranean drainage of a cemetery draining into a sewer of brick and mortar, as ordinarily built, if drained into a spring brook, would carry contamination, and pollute such a brook for 5 miles or more, and that brook, being dammed for ice-making within 4 miles from the cemetery, would result in a pond from which ice of a very pernicious quality would be harvested; that the water from a brook into which such sewerage drained would be unhealthy for cows, and unfit for drinking purposes or for cooking water, for domestic use. The testimony of other witnesses showed that the lands through which the brook runs, into which the drainage from the cemeteries emptied, would be unfitted for dairy purposes and stock-raising, by reason of the contamination of the water by the sewage.

We have read and considered all the evidence with care, and are of the opinion that it sustains the conclusions reached by the master. In his report the master found "that injurious products of decomposition do emanate from animal bodies buried in the earth; that these emanations do enter into the soil in which said bodies are buried; that the surface water, percolating through the soil, takes up these emanations; that if the sewer referred to is constructed, with the lateral drains extending into the said cemeteries referred to in the bill of complaint filed in this cause, these unwholesome products of decomposition will percolate through the soil and penetrate the sewer, and will be carried by the said sewer and emptied into the spring brook, and that the contents of the said sewer will contaminate the waters of the spring brook to a greater extent than they are now contaminated from any cause shown to exist, and will contaminate the waters of the said spring brook to a greater extent than they would be contaminated from any natural cause, or from any conditions existing prior to the construction of the proposed sewer;" that the preponderance of the evidence on the main issue was in favor of the complainants, and that the material allegations of their bill were sustained. The circuit court sustained exceptions to this report and dismissed the bill, and its decree has been affirmed by the appellate court. We think there was error in affirming the decree. The very purpose of the sewer was to furnish underdrainage, as well as surface drainage, to these cemeteries. Some portions of their grounds were so wet and swampy that water would rise in openings for graves, when dug, to such an extent as to compel their abandonment, and the selection of more elevated ground in their stead. It is true, it was shown that some of the highways of the town would be drained and benefited; but the chief purpose and object in view were to furnish cemetery drainage, and to accomplish this the cemetery companies were willing, and agreed, to pay the whole expense. Experienced bacteriologists testified that, if the sewer were constructed and finished as contemplated, poisonous exudations would be carried from decomposing human bodies by the percolating waters into the sewer, and from thence into the spring brook, polluting and contaminating its waters, and rendering them unfit for use for man or beast, and dangerous to the health of those who should use the water for drinking or domestic purposes, or who should use the milk of cows that drank from the brook, and that ice which should be harvested from ponds formed by the brook upon the lands of complainant Roeder would be of a very pernicious quality. There was some conflict in the evidence on the question as to whether or not the stream would be thus polluted by the sewer, but we think the clear preponderance of the evidence sustains the finding of the master that it would be. It would also seem to accord with the common opinion of mankind that underdrains in wet and marshy land filled with decaying bodies, leading into a running brook flowing within a mile of such land, would pollute the waters of the brook. The evidence does not show, nor does experience or science appear to teach, just how far this pollution would continue in the flowing waters. One witness testified that it might continue from 5 to 50 miles before the purification would become complete, but we think it clearly appears that the waters would probably be contaminated by this sewer while flowing through the lands of all the complainants. Some of these lands were immediately below the mouth of the sewer, and the furthest within 4 miles. The brook is small, but perennial. It is fed along its course below the mouth of the sewer by small springs of pure water rising from the bed of the stream. It flows through the private property of complainants. They used its waters for stock, for cows kept for dairy purposes, for making ice, and at times for domestic use.

The defendants attempted to break the force of the case made by complainants, by showing that the waters of the brook, and the springs along its course, were already polluted by the washings from manured lands used in gardening, and from decaying vegetables and other refuse matter, and were successful in showing that in wet weather the waters of this stream were rendered impure from these causes. They also showed that another drain, of a somewhat similar kind, from Mt. Hope Cemetery, discharged its waters into a ravine which in wet weather carried such waters into the brook in question at a point below the land of some of the complainants, and above that of others. But we know of no rule of law that sanctions one wrong because another has preceded it. It is doubtless true that streams of water cannot be kept as pure when flowing through lands occupied by populous communities as when flowing through sparsely settled lands; but these effects, that unavoidably arise from the occupation and cultivation of the soil by man do not justify the deliberate pollution of a stream of water flowing through private property, in order that the interests of private persons, or even of the public, may be enhanced thereby. There are very few streams of water flowing through a densely populated country which are not more or less polluted from general causes arising from the occupation and cultivation of the adjacent lands. The courts have no power to prevent pollution so occurring. 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 971, note; Baltimore v. Warren Mfg. Co. 59 Md. 96. But it is a well-recognized branch of equity jurisdiction to restrain by injunction the fouling of running streams that pass over the lands of others, by connecting sewers therewith, or by other means, so as to endanger the comfort and health of others, or to cause irreparable injury to their property rights. 2 High, Inj. p. 508, §§ 794, 795; People v. St. Louis, 10 Ill. 351; Wahle v. Reinbach, 76 Ill. 322; Metropolitan City R. Co. v. Chicago, 96 Ill. 620; Minke v. Hopeman, 87 Ill. 450, 29 Am. Rep. 63; Cutlin v. Valentine, 9 Paige, 575, 38 Am. Dec. 587; Lyon v. McLaughlin, 32 Vt. 423; Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273. And the mere fact that in the case at bar the waters of this stream may to some extent have been rendered unwholesome when flooded by the washings from manured lands, or by the connection of other drains, is no excuse for the threatened pollution by the cemetery companies. 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 968, 974. It is declared by section 221 of the Criminal Code to be a public nuisance "to corrupt or render unwholesome or impure the water of any spring, river, stream, pond, or lake, to the injury or prejudice of others," and the offense is punishable by indictment; but the "bare fact that the statute gives a remedy by indictment does not deprive the court of its equitable powers." Minke v. Hopeman, 87 Ill. 450, 29 Am. Rep. 63. In Wahle v. Reinbach, 76 Ill. 322, it was held that a bill would lie to enjoin the erection of a privy so near to complainant's dwelling and well of water as that it would become injurious to the health and comfort of himself and family, and, after citing previous decisions of this court, it was said: "These cases, however, recognize the doctrine, which is supported by all the authorities on this branch of equity jurisdiction, that where the injury resulting from the nuisance is in its nature irreparable, as, when loss of health, loss of trade, destruction of the means of subsistence, or permanent ruin to property will ensue from the wrongful act or erection, courts of equity will interfere by injunction, in furtherance of justice and the violated rights of property." Injunctive relief will be granted to prevent one proprietor from causing filthy or contaminated water to percolate from his soil into adjoining lands to the injury of his neighbor. 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 487. The evidence does not sustain appellants' contention that the purpose of the sewer is mere surface drainage, or the carrying off more rapidly of waters from the surface of the cemetery grounds, which, by the slower processes of percolation and natural drainage, would eventually find their way to the same stream, and in a more impure condition. The contract shows that the sewer was to be at all times kept open, and to be used by the two cemeteries for carrying away all surface water, and as a drain for said cemeteries, and the plan and purpose of construction show that one of its principal objects was the underdraining of the wet and swampy portions of the cemeteries; and much the larger portion of the evidence relates to the effect the decaying bodies buried in the cemetery would have on the percolating waters which it is intended the sewer should carry off into this brook. In Robb v. La Grange, 158 Ill. 21, it was said "under the ruling of this court, which we believe to be in harmony with the current of authority bearing on the question, a village or city cannot run its sewage beyond the incorporated limits and empty it on the adjoining premises of some landowner, where a stench is created and the sewage is detrimental to the health of the neighborhood. Nor will a village or incorporated town be permitted to empty its sewage into a stream of water where the result is the pollution of the stream. In other words, if a nuisance is established by carrying the sewage of a village, incorporated town, or city in a drain or sewer beyond the limits of the incorporation, a bill in equity will lie on behalf of any person injured." The real question in this case then is, whether the evidence is sufficient to establish a nuisance." And in view of the fact that the witnesses were examined in open court in that case when the cause was heard, and that the trial judge, at the request of the parties, went upon the locus in quo, and personally viewed the premises, and found, as a matter of fact, that no nuisance was created, this court declined to reverse such finding, but did hold that in view of the fact that the bill was filed before the sewer was completed, and the trial was had before it could be satisfactorily determined whether the final result of the sewer would be to create a nuisance or not, the bill should have been dismissed without prejudice. Under the facts proved in the case at bar, we are satisfied, as found by the master, that a nuisance would be created, and that the decree should have been for the complainants.

The town of Worth filed a cross bill to set aside the contract on the ground that the commissioners had no power to make it, and because it was not made or authorized at any meeting of the commissioners. It is plain that neither party had any right by contract to authorize the pollution of the stream in question. But we see no occasion for setting aside the contract. It will be time enough to consider how far the town is bound when its liability under the contract is asserted or denied in some proceeding making such consideration necessary. We hold, therefore, that the circuit court erred in dismissing the bill of complaint, but did not err in dismissing the cross-bill.

The judgment of the Appellate Court and the decree of the Circuit Court, except as to the dismissal of the cross bill, are reversed, and the cause is remanded to the latter court, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with the prayer of the bill of complaint.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Thomas F. DOWLING et al., Respts.,
v.
LANCASHIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,
Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

1. A statute providing that the insurance commissioner shall prepare, approve, and adopt a printed form of a policy of fire insurance to conform as near as can be made applicable to that used in a certain other state is an unconstitutional attempt to delegate to him legislative power.
2. Issuing an insurance policy when the insurance agent has full knowledge of the existence of encumbrances is a waiver of conditions in the policy against such encumbrances.
3. A copy of proofs of loss mailed to an insurance company, and a postal card acknowledging their receipt, are admissible in evidence to show that the proofs were seasonably furnished, although the proofs will not be competent evidence of the facts therein contained.

(January 7, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Eau Claire County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

Statement by Pinney, J.:

This is an action upon a policy of insurance issued by the defendant to the plaintiff Dowling in the sum of $500, $250 of which was on his stock of wines, liquors, and merchandise, and $250 upon his furniture and fixtures, in a certain saloon in Eau Claire. The policy contained an indorsement thereon as follows, to wit: "Loss, if any, payable to P. J. Bowlin & Co., mortgagee, as their interest may appear,"—under which name, it appears, P. J. Bowlin conducted business. While the insurance was in force, namely, December 9, 1893, the said property was destroyed, in part, and damaged, by fire, and the total loss upon each subject of insurance exceeded the amount of the total insurance upon the property; the total concurrent insurance being $2,500, $1,250 of which was on the furniture and fixtures, and $1,250 upon the stock of wines, liquors, and saloon merchandise. The policy in suit was the Wisconsin standard policy, in use under chapter 195, Laws 1891. It appeared that there was a chattel mortgage on the insured property, for $300, to Ann Dowling, the existence of which was not noticed or indorsed upon the policy. On behalf of the plaintiffs, evidence was given tending to show that the plaintiff Dowling informed the defendant's agent fully of the existence of said mortgage, as well as the $1,000 mortgage to P. J. Bowlin & Co., at the time the policy was issued, but such evidence was objected to by the defendant. Evidence was given tending to show that proofs of loss were made and delivered to the defendant in due season, and also the amount of the plaintiff's damages. The court instructed the jury that, if the plaintiff Dowling had stated to the defendant's agent fully the existence of these encumbrances, they would find in favor of the plaintiffs upon that issue, otherwise they would find for the defendant, and gave the jury appropriate instructions in respect to the question of damages. There was a verdict for the plaintiffs for $500, for which amount, with costs, judgment was given against the defendant, and from which the defendant appealed.

Messrs. VanDyke & VanDyke, with Messrs. Doolittle & Shoemaker, for appellant:

The standard policy law is not unconstitutional as an unreasonable abridging of the right to make contracts in matters of insurance.

Chapter 195, Laws of 1891, does not conflict with the Constitution of the United States, 14th amendment, nor with article 1 of the Constitution of Wisconsin, because such act is a proper exercise of the police power of the state.

NOTE.—For similar decisions as to delegation of power to insurance commissioner, see O'Neil v. American F. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 28 L. R. A. 715; Anderson v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. (Minn.) 28 L. R. A. 609; 31 L. R. A.

Com. v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 806, 25 L. R. A. 250; Dugger v. Mechanic's & T. Ins. Co. (Tenn.) 28 L. R. A. 796; O'Neil v. American F. Ins. Co. 166 Pa. 72, 26 L. R. A. 715.

The valued policy law (Rev. Stat. § 1943) is a restraint upon the right to contract in respect to insurance, but has been held constitutional as resting upon public policy.

Reilly v. Franklin Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 449, 28 Am. Rep. 552; Queen Ins. Co. v. Leslie, 47 Ohio St. 409, 9 L. R. A. 45.

The Wisconsin standard policy law is not unconstitutional as an unlawful delegation of legislative power to make laws.

The power delegated has respect to two separate subject-matters, viz.: (1) the policy form; and (2) riders.

In respect to the policy form, the Wisconsin act expressly limits and restricts the authority conferred upon the state officers.

The power delegated was not power to make a law for the law was complete when adopted.

Whether in what was done the public officers complied with the duty imposed or exceeded the power delegated is a judicial question, and in no way affects the constitutionality of the act.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey, 35 Fed. Rep. 866, 1 L. R. A. 744, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 325; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 970, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 209.

The New York form was by reference as effectually adopted as if it had been inserted at length in the act.

Flanders v. Merrimack, 48 Wis. 567; Kollock v. Madison, 84 Wis. 458; Jenkins v. Morning, 38 Wis. 197; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 257; Rev. Stat. § 1221.

Retaliatory acts adopt the statutes of other states by mere reference thereto, and are uniformly held unobjectionable on that account.

Home Ins. Co. v. Suigert, 104 Ill. 653; People v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 92 N. Y. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 880; State v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 115 Ind. 257; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Welch, 29 Kan. 672.

The power delegated by the act was administrative rather than legislative.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey, supra.

An act which confers an authority or discretion as to the execution of a law to be exercised under and in pursuance of it is not an unconstitutional delegation of power.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, supra; State v. Young, 29 Minn. 474; Cooley, Const. Lim. 114; Wayman v. Southard, 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 1-40, 6 L. ed. 253-262; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 77; State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 38 Minn. 281; Marshall, Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294.

But the power delegated by § 1 of the act, to the commissioner to prepare "riders," is not unlimited, but is expressly confined and restricted by § 4 of the act.

The legislature may pass general laws giving to other departments, expressly or by necessary implication, discretion to employ the proper means to fill up and regulate the 31 L. R. A.

details for themselves and subordinates, though the exercise of that discretion be quasi legislative.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 67; Re Oliver, 17 Wis. 682; Bryant v. Robbins, 70 Wis. 258; State v. Stewart, 74 Wis. 620, 6 L. R. A. 394; Muskego v. Drainage Comrs. 78 Wis. 44; Martin v. Witherspoon, 135 Mass. 175; People v. Kelly, 5 Abb. N. C. 383.

The creation of a railroad commission, and authorizing such commission to fix reasonable rates of transportation, have been held not to be a delegation of legislative powers.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey, 35 Fed. Rep. 866, 1 L. R. A. 744, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 325; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 38 Minn. 281.

Messrs. George C. Teall and Fred A. Teall, for respondents:

Chapter 195 of the Laws of 1891, which provides for the Wisconsin standard policy, is unconstitutional, for the reason that the act in question amounts to an unlawful delegation of legislative power.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 116; Cooley, Taxn. 61; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 60.

Legislative power cannot be delegated.

Thorne v. Cramer, 15 Barb. 112; Bradley v. Baxter, Id. 122; Barto v. Himrod, 8 N. Y. 483, 59 Am. Dec. 506; People v. Stout, 23 Barb. 349; O'Neil v. American F. Ins. Co. 166 Pa. 72, 26 L. R. A. 715; Anderson v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. (Minn.) 28 L. R. A. 610.

Pinney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The action is upon a "Wisconsin standard policy of fire insurance," prepared, approved, and adopted by the insurance commissioner under chapter 195, Wis. Laws 1891, p. 224, which contains the condition that the policy shall be void "if the subject of insurance be personal property, or be or become encumbered by a chattel mortgage," and also the stipulation that "no officer, agent, or other representative of the company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as by the terms of this policy may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, and as to such provisions and conditions, no officer, agent, or representative shall have such power or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto." The only waiver relied on in respect to the chattel mortgage to Ann Dowling was by parol, and the question was whether, under such policy and the act under which it was adopted, such waiver was ineffectual, so that by the breach of the condition in relation to chattel mortgages the policy was rendered void. The circuit court having ruled that the parol waiver relied on was valid, the plaintiffs obtained a verdict; and it is contended in support of it that chapter 195, Laws 1891, is unconstitutional and void, as a delegation to the insurance commissioner of legislative power, which the Constitution (art. 4, § 1) declares "shall be vested in a senate and assembly," and that such parol waiver was effectual and valid under the law as it existed before the passage of said act. That no part of the legislative power can be delegated by the legislature to any other department of the government,—executive or judicial,—is a fundamental principle in constitutional law, essential to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government established by the Constitution. The difficulty experienced by courts in distinguishing between legislative power, which cannot be delegated, and discretionary powers of an executive or administrative character, which may be intrusted to other departments or officers, in the conduct of public affairs, has been frequently experienced and acknowledged; and it arises, in a great measure, from the fact that powers of the most important character, not essentially legislative, but which the legislature might properly, in the first instance, exercise or determine by its own judgment, are frequently devolved by the legislature upon other departments, officers, or bodies. In Moers v. Reading, 21 Pa. 202, it was said that “half the statutes on our books are in the alternative, depending upon the discretion of some person or persons, to whom is confided the duty of determining whether the occasion exists for executing them. But it cannot be said that the exercise of such discretion is the making of the law.” This must be understood, we think, as applicable only to cases where the discretion is not essentially a legislative one. In People v. Burr, 13 Cal. 358, Field, J., said: “Such acts are constantly passed, and yet no one has ever questioned their validity as laws because dependent in their operation upon occasions which may never arise. . . . The legislature may determine absolutely what may be done, or it may authorize the same thing to be done upon the consent of third parties. It may command, or it may only permit; and in the latter case, as in the former, its acts have the efficacy of laws.” Where an act is clothed with all the forms of law, and is complete in and of itself, it may be provided that it shall become operative only upon some certain act or event, or, in like manner, that its operation shall be suspended; and the fact of such act or event, in either case, may be made to depend upon the ascertainment of it by some other department, body, or officer, which is essentially an administrative act. In all such cases it is upon the occurrence of the fact or event that the act becomes operative, or its suspension is accomplished. In Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491, 498, 18 Am. Rep. 716, it was declared that “to assert that a law is less than a law, because it is made to depend upon a future event or act, is to rob the legislature of the power to act wisely for the public welfare whenever a law is passed relating to a state of affairs not yet developed, or to things future, or impossible to know;” and it was said that the proper distinction is this: “The legislature cannot delegate its power to make a law, but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action to depend.” And accordingly the time when the act shall take effect may be made to depend upon the majority of a popular vote being cast in its favor under a submission to the electors, for that purpose, provided in the act. State v. O'Neill, 24 Wis. 149; Smith v. Janesville, 26 Wis. 291. In considering the true test as to whether a power is strictly legislative, or whether it is administrative, and merely relates to the execution of the law, Ranney, J., in Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio. St. 88, said: “The true distinction . . . is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made.” Substantially the same conclusion was reached in Marshall, Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 650, 681-694, 36 L. ed. 294, 306-310, in respect to the provisions of the tariff of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 612, chap. 1244, § 3), in respect to reciprocity of commerce, by which authority was conferred upon the president to suspend by proclamation the free introduction of sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides when satisfied that any country producing such articles imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States which he might deem reciprocally unequal or unreasonable, and it was held that this provision was not open to the objection that it was an unconstitutional transfer of legislative power to the president. The reasoning of the court in this case goes upon the ground that, upon a proper construction of the act, it provided for the ascertainment of an event or state of affairs in view of which the provision for reciprocity of trade should cease to exist.

1 L. R. A.

The application of the distinction so well established and clearly pointed out in these cases is, we think, decisive of the validity of the act in question. Its object was to provide for a uniform policy of fire insurance, to be made and issued by all companies taking such risks, so that no other than the standard policy, prepared, approved, and adopted by the insurance commissioner, could be lawfully issued or used within the state. Indeed, to issue or deliver any other than the standard policy was made a misdemeanor, and punishable by a fine. Bourgeois v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 86 Wis. 609. Although the act provided for “a printed form in blank, of a contract or policy of fire insurance, together with such provisions,” etc., it provides also that they were to form a part of such contract or policy, so that the essential substance of the contract required to be embraced in such form should have the sanction, force, and effect of a legal enactment; and, as applicable to the present case, the stipulations of such policy would operate, under the act, to change the law as it had previously existed in relation to parol waiver of forfeitures by the conditions of fire insurance policies. The act, in our judgment, wholly fails to provide definitely and clearly what the standard policy should contain, so that it could be put in use as a uniform policy, required to take the place of all others, without the determination of the insurance commissioner in respect to matters involving the exercise of a legislative discretion that could not be delegated, and without which the act could not possibly be put in use, as an act in conformity to which all fire insurance policies were required to be issued. Giving full effect to all the language of the act, as we must do, it provides that the insurance commissioner shall, within sixty days of the passage of this act, "prepare, approve, and adopt a printed form in blank of a contract or policy of fire insurance together with such provisions, agreements, or conditions as may be indorsed thereon or added thereto, and form a part of such contract or policy; and such form shall, as near as the same can be made applicable, conform to the type and form of the New York standard fire insurance policy, so called and known; provided, however, that five days' notice of cancellation by the company shall be given, and provided, that proof of loss shall be made within sixty days after a fire." The insurance commissioner was authorized to call upon the attorney general "for such assistance as shall seem necessary in the preparation" of such policy, and it was the duty of the attorney general to perform such service. The insurance commissioner was required, on or before September 1, 1891, to file in his office the printed form, in blank, of such contract or policy, and immediately thereafter he was to have 500 copies of the same, with this act, printed, and to mail to each company doing a fire insurance business in the state copies of the same. The 4th section provides that after September 1, 1891, no such insurance company shall use any other form of policy, and "no other or different provision, agreement, condition, or clause shall, in any manner, be made a part of said contract or policy or be indorsed thereon or delivered therewith, except" that certain "riders" may be used, which are in no case to be "inconsistent with or a waiver of the conditions of the standard policy" therein provided for. It was impossible to adopt the New York standard policy without repealing certain statutes of this state on the subject of fire insurance, directly contravening the provisions of such policy, viz., the valued policy law and the insurance agency law. Rev. Stat. §§ 1943, 1947. The act did not contain any repealing clause, but its evident intention was that the various statutory provisions existing upon the subject of cancellation of policies, and under the by-laws, rules, and regulations of companies made pursuant to their charters, and in respect to proof of loss, should be repealed; for it was provided that five days' notice of cancellation should be given, and proof of loss should be furnished within sixty days after the fire.

The New York standard policy provides that proof of loss shall be furnished within sixty days after the fire, "unless such time is extended in writing by the company,"—a provision omitted from the Wisconsin policy, as approved and adopted, as well as the provision of the New York policy that "no suit or action on this policy shall be sustainable in any court of law or equity until after full compliance by the insured with all the foregoing requirements, or unless commenced within twelve months next after the fire," to avoid, it is said, conflict with sections 4219, 4222, Rev. Stat., or the general statutes of limitation. As the legislature could not, for reasons thus indicated, adopt the New York standard policy, the power was so delegated by the act to the insurance commissioner, to prepare, approve, and adopt a printed form, in blank, of a contract or policy of fire insurance, etc., which would, "as near as the same can be made applicable, conform to the type and form of the New York standard fire insurance policy." The result was that, until the discretion vested in the commissioner should be exercised, and such form was so approved and adopted, no business of insurance could be transacted under the act. Until then the act was ineffectual, for want of certainty. Evidently, the conformity to "type and form" of the New York standard policy, had reference to the form of that policy as embracing the substance of the provisions of the contract, and as to the size and kind of type to be used in printing the policy to be adopted. Had the commissioner wholly declined to prepare, approve, and adopt any form whatever, it would not have been possible to have carried into effect so imperfect or uncertain an enactment, or to transact business under it. Within the lines indicated, a discretion was reposed in the commissioner as to the form of the policy which embodied the substance of the contract, and which was to have the sanction and force of law. The effect, clearly, was to transfer to him bodily the legislative power of the state on that subject. Within the limits prescribed, he was to prepare just such a policy or contract as, in his judgment and discretion, would meet the legal exigencies of the case, and no one could certainly predict what the result of his action might be. It was not to be published, as laws are required to be, or to be approved by the governor. It was to be filed in the office of the insurance commissioner, instead of being deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and its use was to be enforced by the penal sanction of the act. He was not required by the act to perform any mere administrative or executive duty, or to determine any matter of fact for the purpose of executing or carrying the act into effect.

The result of all the cases on this subject is that a law must be complete, in all its terms and provisions, when it leaves the legislative branch of the government, and nothing must be left to the judgment of the electors or other appointee or delegate of the legislature, so that, in form and substance, it is a law, in all its details, in presenti, but which may be left to take effect in futuro, if necessary, upon the ascertainment of any prescribed fact or event. Instead of preparing a form of standard policy, and adjusting it to the existing legislation, or modifying such legislation, if necessary, by virtue of its constitutional functions, the legislature delivered over this task wholly to the insurance commissioner, to accomplish it as nearly as might be; and this depended wholly upon his discretion and judgment as to what the law should be in this respect, for the act had not specifically declared it. Conceding that the legislature might have adopted the New York form as an entirety, by the use of general language, it is evident that the proposed form, to conform "as near as can be to the form adopted in New York," involved a duty equivalent to that of revision, which it cannot be contended could be delegated, except subject to legislative approval. While the commissioner, within the discretion intrusted to him, might have approximated, in a great degree, to the policy which the legislature may have intended, the objection, in view of the consideration stated, that it has not received the legislative sanction, is necessarily fatal to it. The cases of State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 38 Minn. 298, and Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey, 35 Fed. Rep. 866, 874, 1 L. R. A. 744, 2 Intern. Com. Rep. 325, are not in conflict, but in harmony, with the conclusion we have reached, as to what is and what is not an unconstitutional delegation of the legislative power. For these reasons, we hold that the provision authorizing the insurance commissioner to prepare, approve, and adopt a printed form, in blank, of a contract or policy of fire insurance, together with such provisions, agreements, or conditions as may be indorsed thereon or added thereto, and form a part of such contract or policy, and that such form shall, as near as the same can be made applicable, conform to the type and form of the New York standard fire insurance policy, so called and known, is unconstitutional and void. Conclusions in accord with these views, in somewhat similar cases, have been reached in other states. Anderson v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. (Minn.) 28 L. R. A. 610; O'Neil v. American F. Ins. Co. 166 Pa. 72, 26 L. R. A. 715. The instruction of the court to the jury that if the plaintiff Dowling, at the time the policy was issued, stated to defendant's agent fully the existence of the encumbrances, they would find in favor of the plaintiffs, was correct, and in conformity with previous decisions of this court on the subject of waiver of conditions of forfeitures in the policy against encumbrances. Renier v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 74 Wis. 94, and cases there cited; Bourgeois v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 86 Wis. 402.

2. Evidence was given tending to show that proofs of loss under the policy were prepared and mailed to the company at their principal office, and that a postal card had been received from the defendant acknowledging receipt of the same. A copy of the proofs was delivered to the local agent of the defendant, and a copy retained by the plaintiffs' attorney, which, with such postal card, were offered in evidence, against the defendant's objection, it being conceded that notice had been given to produce the original proofs. It was competent to show in this manner that proofs of loss had been seasonably furnished to the company, although such proofs were not competent evidence of the facts therein contained. We therefore see no objection to the admission in evidence of the copy of proofs and the postal card in question. It does not appear that any objection had been made to the proofs, and we do not think that the defendant has any just ground of complaint on account of the ruling.

It is urged as ground for reversal that the evidence showing the amount of the plaintiffs' damages was insufficient to warrant the amount of the verdict. Without recapitulating the evidence, we will content ourselves with saying that we think it was sufficient to warrant the finding of the jury. It does not appear that any ground exists for a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Frank E. BROWN

v.

Dana P. FOSTER.

(.....Me.....)

1. A practical interpretation of a statute accepted as correct for nearly three quarters of a century is entitled to respectful consideration by the courts.

2. A mayor can vote only to break a tie, and not to make one, in the election of a city officer "by joint convention of the city council," under a charter which provides "that the mayor shall preside in the board of aldermen and joint meetings of the two boards but shall have only a casting vote," although another provision declares that "the mayor, board of aldermen, and common council shall constitute the city council."

(May 29, 1885.)

EXCEPTIONS by respondent to rulings of the Supreme Judicial Court for Kennebec County made during a trial of a mandamus proceeding to compel the surrender of the books, papers, and records belonging to the office of a clerk of the city of Waterville, which resulted in the issuance of the writ. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Reuben Foster, Dana P. Foster, and Warren C. Philbrook, for respondent:

Where the presiding officer is a member of the body, he can vote in elections even though limited to "only the casting vote."

Cushing, §§ 309, 310.

Waterville's mayor is a member of the city council, and if limited by section 3 of the charter to "only a casting vote," then according to parliamentary law he can vote in elections in the first instance like other members.

NOTE.—As to casting vote in a representative body, see note to Lawrence v. Ingersoll (Tenn.) 6 L. R. A. 308; also Magenan v. Fremont (Neb.) 9 L. R. A. 786; State v. Plinkerman (Conn.) 22 L. R. A. 653; Wooster v. Mullins (Conn.) 25 L. R. A. 694. 21 L. R. A.

Mr. S. S. Brown for petitioner.

Peters, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question sought to be settled by this proceeding of mandamus is whether the mayor of the city of Waterville is entitled by the provisions of the charter of that city (Priv. & Sp. Laws 1887, chap. 195) to vote with the aldermen and councilmen in joint convention in the election of subordinate city officers (in the present case, in the election of a city clerk), besides having the casting vote in such election in case of a tie.

The case comes to us upon exceptions to the ruling of the justice of this court who tried the action, and who decided that the mayor had no such right as was claimed and exercised by him, the learned justice making at the time the following oral observations in support of his conclusion:

"It appears that eleven members of the city council in joint convention voted for the petitioner for city clerk, and ten for the respondent. Thereupon the mayor claimed the right to vote, and did vote, for the respondent, who now claims that no person received a majority of all the votes, and hence there was no election for city clerk.

"In determining the mayor's right to vote under these circumstances, recourse must first be had to the city charter of Waterville. It is provided in § 2 of this act of incorporation that the 'mayor, board of aldermen, and common council shall constitute the city council.'

"Section 3 provides that the mayor 'shall preside in the board of aldermen and joint meetings of the two boards, but shall have only a casting vote.' It is further provided in the same section that the 'city council may elect the mayor to any city office and allow him a reasonable compensation for service rendered in such office;' while by section 17 the aldermen and common council are declared to be ineligible to any office of profit or emolument the salary of which is payable by the city.

"Section 6 provides that 'all officers of the police and health departments shall be appointed by nomination by the mayor and confirmed by the aldermen. . . . All other subordinate officers shall be elected by joint convention of the city council.'

"These provisions of the charter must be construed with reference to the general policy of our law respecting municipal government, and in the light of the familiar rule of construction that, as the different parts of a law reflect light upon each other, it should be so expounded, if practicable, as to avoid any contradiction or inconsistency, and give some effect to every part of it.

"The provision that the mayor 'shall preside in the board of aldermen and joint meetings of the two boards, but shall have only a casting vote,' is found in precisely the same language in every city charter in the state from its early history to the present time; and, with the exception of the express mention of the mayor as one of those constituting the 'city council' of Waterville, all the other provisions relating to the point under consideration are essentially the same in all other charters as in the Waterville charter. It has been the obvious policy of the state to provide in their charters for annual city elections, and to give effect to the free voice of the people, and insure the orderly continuance of the city governments, by facilitating rather than obstructing the annual elections of officers; and it is understood to have been the uniform practice, under all these charters, for the mayor to exercise the right in joint convention to give only a casting vote for the purpose of breaking a tie, and not for the purpose of making one. Such a practical interpretation, which has been accepted as correct for nearly three fourths of a century, is entitled to respectful consideration in the decision of such a question.

"This view of the construction to be given the right to give 'only a casting vote' is strengthened by § 34 of chap. 3 of the Revised Statutes, which declares that, in the 'election of any city officers by ballot in the . . . convention of the aldermen and common council in which the mayor has a right to give a casting vote if two or more candidates have each half of the ballots cast, he shall determine and declare which of them is elected.' Here is a plain implication that the term 'casting vote,' as used in this connection, is restricted to a vote thrown by the mayor as a presiding officer when the votes cast by the members are equally divided. It seems clear that, if it had been the purpose of the legislature to make such an important distinction between the Waterville charter and all others as the respondent contends for, more explicit and unequivocal language would have been used than any found in this act. The mere mention of the mayor in connection with the aldermen and common council as of those constituting the city council is not sufficient to show such intention.

"It is plain, also, that no distinction was intended between the 'joint meetings of the two boards,' in which the mayor has 'only a casting vote,' and the 'joint convention of the city council,' for the election of officers; for it has not been suggested that 'joint meetings of the two boards' are held for the transaction of any business worthy of mention, other than the election of subordinate officers.

"For these reasons it seems to be my duty to grant the petition and order the writ of mandamus to issue."

In the views expressed in this statement we fully concur.

The force of the argument in favor of this pretended prerogative of the mayor rests in an introductory clause in the city charter, which declares that "the mayor, board of aldermen, and common council shall constitute the city council;" it being further provided in a subsequent section of the charter that certain subordinate city officers "shall be elected by joint convention of the city council."

But while the first clause, in very general terms, describes the mayor as a part of the city, council, the meaning of that declaration is found in other and subsequent clauses and sections, which define with particularity just what part of the city council he shall be considered to be. Such subsequent provisions of the charter declare exactly what the powers of the mayor shall be, and in what manner the same shall be exercised. Nor does the clause in section 2, which embraces aldermen and common councilmen within the composition of the city council, as well as it does the mayor, attempt to define or limit their powers or duties, but those also are left to be enumerated afterwards.

The charter confers various special powers on the mayor, among which is the power of appointment in many instances. He is so far a part of the city government that no legislative act can be passed by the other branches without his approval, unless by a vote of two thirds of the members in each of such other branches of the government. It is in this sense, and to the extent of such powers as are specially committed to him, and no further, that he is a part of the city council. No other construction of the charter as a whole will make a consistent and sensible instrument of it.

In another respect may the mayor, in a general, if not a strict and technical, sense, be denominated some part of the city council, and that is because he presides over the meetings of the aldermen, and over "the joint convention of the city council." But the section granting him that privilege expressly provides that in the business of such meetings he shall have, not a casting vote, but "only" a casting vote. This is a wise recognition of the parliamentary principle which allows a presiding officer the authority of holding a balance of power between equally divided votes of a deliberative body, in order to facilitate, but not to block, legislation; or, as the justice presiding in this case expressed it, for breaking, but not for making, a tie vote.

It will be seen on an examination of the charter in question that the phrase "city council" is employed in several instances as evidently including the two boards, and excluding the mayor. This idea pulsates throughout most of the provisions of the charter.

Exceptions overruled.

Peter DOYLE et al.

v.

Patrick WHALEN et al.

(87 Me. 414.)

1. A fund contributed for the relief of sufferers from a fire, by persons whose identity is lost so that a surplus cannot be returned to them, must be expended for the benefit of such sufferers, and cannot be capitalized for the support of the town poor generally.

NOTE.—For a case somewhat similar to the above in respect to a trust in funds donated to sufferers from some calamity, see Supreme Lodge K. & L. of H. v. Owens (Ky.) 20 L. R. A. 847.

31 L. R. A.

2. Sufferers from a fire for whose benefit a fund has been donated by individuals unknown may maintain a bill to compel the trustees to expend the fund for their benefit, if the trustees have undertaken to capitalize the fund for the general benefit of the poor of the town.

(April 13, 1895.)

R EPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Washington County for the opinion of the full bench of a suit brought to compel defendants as trustees of a fund for the relief of sufferers from a fire in Eastport to distribute the fund among such sufferers. Decree for plaintiffs.

The bill alleged that defendants were a finance committee appointed to receive and distribute a fund which had been contributed to the sufferers from the Eastport fire in 1886; and it sought an account from them of what they had done with the money, and prayed that the fund remaining in their hands and the proceeds of a building which they had erected from such funds called the "Relief Building" should be distributed among the sufferers of the Eastport fire and not applied to the general relief of the poor of the town. Defendants answered admitting that a large amount of property in Eastport was destroyed by fire; but denied that any of plaintiffs were in a condition of suffering or distress caused by the fire. They admitted that contributions of clothing, money, and supplies had been sent, but denied that such contributions were ever intended by their donors for the purpose of making good to persons not in suffering or distress losses sustained by reason of the fire. That a relief committee was chosen who received the contributions and distributed a large part thereof among those entitled to receive them; that the committee gave their time without compensation to the work of distribution, held regular meetings, considered every case and relieved every instance of distress existing, and that there then remained in the relief fund the sum of $20,000 which was invested in Eastport 4 per cent bonds, the income of which was used in the relief of actual destitution and distress existing in the town. That many people in Eastport were left without homes by reason of the fire, and it became necessary to erect a relief building for their accommodation. That by reason of cold the erection of the building was delayed for some time, but it was finally completed and used for the benefit of sufferers by the fire so long as any actual destitution or distress resulting therefrom existed, but since that time had been used to furnish apartments free of rent to worthy poor persons of said town, and a portion of the building during a part of the time had been used as a place for keeping a primary school. That the funds were therefore being used so far as practicable directly for the purposes for which they were given or for purposes which approximate as closely to such purposes as is reasonable or practicable to do. They prayed that the bill be dismissed with costs.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. A. MacNichol and G. A. Curran for plaintiffs.

Messrs. J. W. Symonds, D. W. Snow, and C. S. Cook for defendants.

Whitehouse, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 14th day of October, 1886, the town of Eastport, in this state, was the scene of a destructive conflagration, which caused temporary destitution and distress among the inhabitants. News of the disaster awakened a widespread feeling of sympathy, and a spirit of active benevolence, which resulted in generous contributions of money and various articles of supplies from nearly all parts of New England, and many points beyond, "for the relief of the sufferers by the fire." The total amount of the money thus contributed exceeded $38,000. A relief committee of twenty was promptly organized at Eastport, with appropriate officers and subcommittees, for the purpose of making these voluntary offerings of the people at once available in relieving suffering and distress. During the fall and winter following the fire, the committee received applications, and systematically dispensed the supplies and disbursed the funds thus received to those who appeared to be in need of immediate relief in consequence of the fire. A relief building was also erected, at an expense of about $5,000, taken from the relief fund, for the accommodation of those who were left homeless and shelterless by the fire.

But on the 3d day of March, 1887, the following resolution was adopted by the full committee: "Resolved, that the reduced condition of the relief fund, together with the distressed condition of over fifty families, comprising more than two hundred persons, for which the committee is obliged to provide food, fuel, and clothing for an indefinite period, forbid the appropriation of large sums of money aid in the future." It appears, however, that at this time only $3,000 in money had been disbursed, and that there was then in the hands of the finance committee an unexpended balance amounting to $35,000, of which the sum of $20,000 was soon after invested in the 4 per cent bonds of the town of Eastport; and on the 31st day of March it was voted by the committee that the $20,000 so invested "be made a permanent fund, the interest of which to be used in aiding towards the support of the town poor." On the 21st day of April, 1889, it was voted that the finance committee of the relief committee (the individual defendants in this proceeding), in connection with the treasurer of the relief committee, be authorized to act as trustees, and to hold all bonds, property, money, etc., and thereupon the committee "adjourned sine die."

It is not in controversy that since that date the treasurer of the relief committee has been the custodian of the bonds in which this fund of $20,000 was invested; that the income thereof has been regularly collected by him, and turned over to the town treasurer; and that it has then been disbursed and distributed, through the agency of the successive overseers of the poor, for the purpose of relieving actual destitution and distress in the town, without special reference to the inquiry whether the necessity for such relief was occasioned by the fire, or otherwise. The relief building, since that date, has been used to furnish apartments and tenements, free from rent, to the worthy poor, some of whom met with losses by the fire; and a portion of the building has been used as a schoolhouse, for a public school.

The plaintiffs represent that they suffered great loss by the fire, and complain, on their own behalf, and in behalf of all others of like interest with themselves, that they are aggrieved by the refusal of the committee to distribute this generous fund among the sufferers by the fire in accordance with the intention of the donors. They contend that it should have been used to repair the losses, as well as to relieve the destitution and distress, of the sufferers by the fire, and that the appropriation of it as a supplement to the pauper fund of the town is wholly unauthorized, for the reason that it aids the rich as well as the poor, without distinguishing the sufferers by the fire, by relieving all, alike, of a part of the burden of taxation, and thus diverts these charitable donations from the purposes and uses for which they were designed.

The defendants say that these benevolent contributions came properly and rightfully into custody of the relief committee, with an express or implied request that they should be distributed, in the sound discretion of the committee, for the relief of actual suffering and distress caused by the fire; that they labored faithfully and gratuitously to discharge the responsibility imposed upon them, and distributed the supplies and disbursed the funds, according to their best judgment, for the real purpose for which they were donated; and that, "in so far as they were not required and could not be used specifically for the primary purpose for which they were intended, they had been used and are being used by the inhabitants of Eastport for purposes which approximate as closely, and are as nearly akin, to the purpose for which they were designed, as it is reasonable or practicable to do." They further say that it was never the intention of the committee that the income of the $20,000 should be used as a part of the pauper funds of Eastport, or as a substitute therefor, or that the receipt or any part of it should affect the persons in whose favor it was applied with pauper disabilities. They accordingly contend that the mere fact that the plaintiffs' applications for more of the funds than they have received have not been approved by the committee does not give them the right to appeal from this domestic tribunal, and call on the court to administer the fund.

The situation presents some novel inquiries, which are not entirely free from difficulty. These prompt and liberal donations were acts of benevolence, primarily designed, undoubtedly, for the immediate relief of the needy and distressed among the sufferers by the fire. The existence of a large surplus, after suitable relief had been afforded in all cases of actual distress, was probably a contingency not anticipated by the charitable donors. But, in all the letters and telegrams received from them, it is either directly expressed or clearly implied that all contributions of money and supplies were to be applied "for the benefit of the sufferers by that fire." There is nowhere any intention of a purpose to bestow these gifts upon all the worthy poor of Eastport, and it may fairly be assumed that it was never in their contemplation to create a permanent fund for such public charitable use in that town. The result of these gratuities was to create a private charity for the benefit of a designated class of persons, who were already well-known, or who were capable of being readily ascertained. "A good charitable use is 'public,' not in the sense that it must be executed openly and in public, but in the sense of being so general and indefinite in its objects as to be deemed of common and public benefit.

It is public and general in its scope and purpose, and becomes definite and private only after the individual objects have been selected." Saltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen, 456. The essential elements of a public charity are that it is not confined to privileged individuals, but is open to the indefinite public. It is this indefinite, unrestricted quality that gives it its public character. Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306; Bangor v. Rising Virtue Lodge No. 10, F. & A. M. 73 Me. 428 40 Am. Rep. 369. "Private trusts," says Mr. Pomeroy, "are . . . for the benefit of certain and designated individuals in which the cestui que trust is a known person or class of persons. Public, or, as they are frequently termed, charitable, trusts are those created for the benefit of an unascertained, uncertain, and sometimes fluctuating body of individuals, in which the cestui que trust may be a portion or class of a public community,—as, for example, the poor or the children of a particular town or parish." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 987. "In private trusts," says Mr. Perry, "the beneficial interest is vested absolutely in some individual or individuals who are, or within a certain time may be, definitely ascertained; and to whom, therefore, collectively, unless under some disability, it is, or within the allowed limit will be, competent to control, modify, or end the trust. Private trusts of this kind cannot be extended beyond the legal limitations of a perpetuity. . . . But a trust created for charitable or public purposes is not subject to similar limitations, but it may continue for a permanent or indefinite time." 1 Perry, Tr. § 384. In Atty. Gen. v. Price, 17 Ves. Jr. 371, Lord Hardwicke draws this distinction between the creation of permanent trusts and the exercise of present benevolence, observing of the former, "It is to have perpetual continuance, in favor of a particular description of the poor, and is not like an immediate bequest of a sum to be distributed among poor relations."

The defendants, then, with other members of the committee of twenty, became trustees for the execution of a private trust for the benefit of the sufferers by the fire. The administration of the trust was, in the first instance, committed to their discretion; and having reference to the primary purpose of the contributions, after all cases of actual distress and need had, according to their best judgment, been amply relieved by them, the committee would doubtless have been justified, if such a course had been practicable, in restoring to the donors the unexpended balance. This would have been the obvious equity of the situation, but its observance was not possible, since by far the larger part of the contribution in money was received, through the agency of municipal officers, from very small donations made by numerous persons, whose names are now as unknown as the contributor of the "widow's mite."

In the administration of trusts under the general equity jurisdiction of the court, it is an old and familiar principle that if the original purpose of a public charity fail, and there are no objects to which, under the specific terms of the trust, the funds can be applied, the court may determine whether in the event that has happened, it was not the probable intention of the donor that his gift should be applied to some kindred charity, as nearly like the original purpose as possible. This is commonly known as the "doctrine of cy pres," which, in its last analysis, is found to be a simple rule of judicial construction, designed to aid the court to ascertain, and carry out as nearly as may be, the true intention of the donor. Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, 539; 2 Perry, Tr. §§ 717-720, and cases cited. But if it appears that the gift was for a particular purpose only, and that there was no general charitable intention, the court cannot, by construction, apply the gift cy pres the original purpose. "There is a class of cases," says Mr. Perry, "where the gift is distinctly limited to particular persons or establishments, and upon a change of circumstances the doctrine of cy pres does not apply." Id. § 725, note, and section 726, and cases cited. It is not applicable to private trusts to the extent of authorizing the court to convert the funds donated for a private and particular purpose into a permanent fund for a public charitable use of a different character. Coe v. Washington Mills, 149 Mass. 549; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1027.

In the case at bar there is no evidence of mala fides on the part of the defendants, or any member of the relief committee, in their management of the funds intrusted to their charge. As suggested by the learned counsel for the defendants, the apparently unwarranted resolution of March 3, above quoted, was doubtless designed to discourage the more persistent and less meritorious applications. But a careful examination of the evidence reported leads to the conclusion that the committee managed the fund under the influence of a too rigid construction of its primary purpose, and not in the spirit of helpful beneficence and liberality contemplated by the charitable donors.

It is clear, then, that the donors did not expect or intend that any part of their contribution should be returned to them, or, if so, that it is not practicable to effectuate such intention. It is equally clear that they had no purpose to create a permanent fund for a public and general charity in Eastport. Their bounty was distinctly limited to a specified class of persons then in being. As stated in some of the letters, it was "for the benefit of the sufferers by the fire." These sufferers, or their legal representatives, may still be found; and, if the privilege is granted, it may safely be assumed that they will promptly apply for their respective shares of the fund under any new scheme devised for its distribution. The trust has not failed. The application of a rule of construction analogous to the doctrine of cy pres discovers a probable intention on the part of the donors that, when the primary purpose of their contribution should be accomplished, the surplus, if any, should be used to repair the losses, as well as to relieve the immediate distress of the sufferers by the fire. As the value of the property destroyed is estimated to reach an aggregate of $750,000, and $400,000 above all insurance, it would seem that the entire relief fund might have been distributed among the sufferers under a scheme not greatly at variance with the probable intention and wishes of the donors.

It may be true, as claimed, that there has been no definite purpose to employ this fund as a substitute for municipal taxation in the support of the town poor, but such a perversion of the charity will be the inevitable result, if the course adopted after the fund was capitalized shall be pursued in the future. Such a course is contrary to sound public policy, as tending to discourage the prompt exercise or similar acts of humanity and Christian benevolence in like exigencies in the future.

The situation, therefore, requires the court to assume jurisdiction of the matter, and to appoint special masters in chancery, who, after due notice of the times and places appointed therefor, shall receive applications from all sufferers by the fire, hear evidence in regard to the nature and extent of their respective sufferings and losses, and thereupon devise a scheme for the distribution among such sufferers of the entire relief fund now available, and which may be available for that purpose at the time of final decree. In determining the proportional part of the fund which each should receive, the masters may be justified in considering, not only the actual distress and amount of loss suffered by each, but the difference in the degree of suffering entailed upon the rich and upon the poor by the same amount of loss, and such other cognate matters as, in their good judgment and discretion, will aid in reaching conclusions most in harmony with the probable wishes and purposes of the donors under these circumstances; such conclusions to be reported to the court for acceptance and approval. The fund for distribution will consist of the 4 per cent bonds of the town of Eastport, in which the sum of $20,000 was invested, with all income thereof not expended by the defendants prior to the service of this bill, and all interest which has accrued therein since the service of this bill, and also of the proceeds from the sale of the Relief Building. Such sale is to be effected by the defendants in conjunction with E. E. Shead, treasurer of the committee, who is to be made a party to this bill, under the direction of a single justice. The proceeds thereof, and also the bonds and income above named, will be held by the defendants and E. E. Shead, treasurer, until further order of the court.

Lemuel G. Downes, of Calais, Benj. B. Murray of Pembroke, and Reuel Small, of Deering, are to be appointed masters.

Bill sustained. Decree in accordance with opinion.

Haskell, J.:

I consider the donation an express, public, charitable trust. Express, because applied to a specific object. Public and charitable because given for the relief of suffering visited upon an undetermined portion of a community, the result of conflagration. It was the generous outpouring of money to relieve suffering humanity from misfortune that had befallen a city, and made hundreds of its inhabitants houseless, homeless, idle, and sick, in late autumn, with the frosts of a northern winter hard by.

To these purposes it should have been promptly applied, not with stingy hand, but with such broad and generous spirit as moved the donation. It was not indemnity, but relief. Relief for suffering, whether occasioned by loss of property, or of health, or of employment that earned bread, albeit a result from the conflagration that worked a distress to incite the donation.

The proofs show that suffering entailed by the calamity still remains. The donors intended that it should long ago have been relieved. That intent must now be put in execution. I concur, therefore, in sending the cause to masters for an account of individuals still suffering from the effects of the fire, and to devise such equitable methods of distribution as seem best suited to carry out the purposes of the donation.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

H. M. RECTOR, Appt.,

v.

MCCARTHY & JOYCE.

(.....Ark.....)

A guaranty of the payment of interest on a note runs only until the maturity of the note.

(January 4, 1896.)

NOTE.—The exact point of the above case seems to have been very rarely before the courts. The present case is therefore important and the opinion and briefs believed to present the substance of the law on the subject.

31 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pulaski County in his favor for a less sum than he demanded in an action upon a contract guaranteeing payment of interest on a note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rose, Hemingway, & Rose for appellant.

Messrs. S. R. Cockrill and Ashley Cockrill, for appellees:

A guaranty is construed strictly in favor of the grantor, and must be construed so as to give effect to the intention of the parties as gathered from the surrounding circumstances.

State v. Churchill, 48 Ark. 442; Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, § 93; Bell v. Bruen, 42 U. S. 1 How. 169, 11 L. ed. 89; Lee v. Dick, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 493, 9 L. ed. 507; Mauran v. Bullua, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 528, 10 L. ed. 1056; Baylies, Sureties & Guarantors, pp. 6, 124; White's Bank v. Myles, 73 N. Y. 335.

If the guaranty extends beyond the date of the maturity of the notes, it extends forever. The guarantors would not have even the poor privilege of discharging their obligation by the payment of the principal, for they are not parties to the note, and a creditor is not bound to accept his debt from a stranger to the contract. Can it be possible that the parties contemplated that interest should thus run on forever?

Robson v. Tomlinson, 54 Ark. 229; 1 Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, §§ 167-179.

The legal presumption was that the maker would discharge the notes when they became due. The guarantors contracted with reference to that fact.

Hamilton v. VanRensselaer, 43 N. Y. 244; 1 Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, §§ 166-175; Roberts v. Miles, 12 Mich. 297.

Every person is supposed to have some regard for his own interest; and it is not reasonable to presume that any man of ordinary prudence would become surety for another without limitation as to time or amount, unless he has done so in express terms or by clear implication.

Whitney v. Groot, 24 Wend. 82; Anderson v. Blakely, 2 Watts & S. 237; Baker v. Rand, 13 Barb. 158; Knowlton v. Hersey, 76 Me. 345; Frost v. Weathershee, 32 S. C. 354; Birdall v. Hancock, 32 Ohio St. 324, 30 Am. Rep. 572; Morgan v. Boyer, 39 Ohio St. 324, 48 Am. Rep. 454; Schwartz v. Hyman, 107 N. Y. 565.

Bunn, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Sam J. Churchill executed to appellant his two promissory notes, in the following form:

($1,083.33)

Little Rock, Ark., Jan. 1, 1890.

On or before the 1st day of January, 1892, for value received, I promise to pay H. M. Rector one thousand and eighty-three dollars and thirty-three cents, with interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum from date until paid; interest payable annually. As witness my hand, the date above written.

Sam J. Churchill.

Upon this note the appellees made the following guaranty:

We guarantee the payment of the interest on the above note.

[Signed]

McCarthy & Joyce.

It is further agreed that the said two notes were given by the said Sam J. Churchill for a lot of stock and farming implements on what was known as the plaintiff's farm, in Pulaski county, Ark., which he had leased from the plaintiff for three years from date of notes; and that the said Sam J. Churchill also executed a mortgage on said stock and property to secure the said notes; that the said Sam J. Churchill abandoned the Rector farm, which he had leased, and failed to pay the first note due for said stock; and thereupon the plaintiff H. M. Rector, through the trustee in the deed of trust securing said notes, took possession of the said stock and farm property, and sold it and appropriated the proceeds in part payment of the mortgage debt. This sale was had in February, 1891, and by said sale $173.78 was paid on the note in suit first maturing, such payment being credited as of February 17, 1891. "It is further agreed that the guaranty of interest, as written upon said notes, was written by the defendants in due course of their business as merchants, and for the purpose of enabling Sam J. Churchill to obtain the stock and farm implements for the purpose of farming, in order that he might have an opportunity thereby to pay certain prior indebtedness which he owed the guarantors. It is further agreed that no action has been taken by the plaintiff H. M. Rector to enforce the collection by law of the said notes against Sam J. Churchill since their maturity, and that the said Churchill has been entirely insolvent, and without visible property, since the maturity of said notes and since said mortgage sale."

Appellant sued the appellees for instalments of interest accruing before and after the maturity of the notes, and on the trial before the court, sitting as a jury, asked the following declarations of law: "The guaranty in suit is a continuing guaranty, and running until the notes are paid." The court refused this, and declared that the guaranty ran only until the maturity of the notes, and gave judgment only for the interest accruing before maturity. The plaintiff saved proper exceptions to the ruling, filed a motion for a new trial, saving all points, and, this being overruled, excepted, filed his bill of exceptions, and appealed.

Thus it will appear that the only controversy in this case is whether or not one who guarantees the payment of the interest on a promissory note is bound for the payment of the interest that may accrue after the maturity of the note. There are few cases in the books that bear directly upon this point, although there is no want of authorities that indirectly influence the discussion of it. And from these we gather that the courts have adopted certain rules by which the contracts of sureties and guarantors are to be construed, and some of these rules, briefly stated, are that a surety or guarantor is, first of all, a favored suitor; that the obligation of his contract will not be extended beyond its plain and obvious meaning; and when there are doubt and uncertainty as to the meaning, growing out of an ambiguity of language, that makes construction necessary, the doubt will be resolved in favor of the surety or guarantor, for the reason that he is not, and can never be, the full recipient of the consideration which has accrued or may accrue to the principal debtor, and, further because his situation is comparatively a dependent one, since he does not enjoy the opportunity of protecting himself that belongs to the other parties to the contract. We take it, therefore, that courts are to construe the contracts of these favored suitors not exactly by the same rule as they would construe the contracts of the principal parties to the contracts. Thus while, as between these principals, the contract is to be construed so as to express the meaning and intention of both parties to it, in the case of the surety or guarantor that construction is to be given to his contract which will cause it to express his meaning and intention, and this intention to be such as the guaranteed party should have reasonably attributed to the guarantor in making the contract, judging from the circumstances surrounding and the object to be attained. 1 Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, §§ 122, 123, 156. The principle announced is more readily understood by illustration than by mere general definition of the obligation. It would lengthen out this opinion too much, of course, to pursue the argument by that method. Cases wherein the contracts were held to be continuing are cited and commented upon in 1 Brandt on Suretyship & Guaranty, §§ 157-161, inclusive; and, when not continuing, from sections 161-165. In section 166 of the same book this general principle is announced: "When the words of the condition of a bond are general and indefinite as to the time during which the surety shall remain liable, if there is a recital in the bond, specifying the time during which the prescribed duty is to be performed by the principal, the general words will be limited by the recital, and the surety will only be liable for the time therein specified." Thus it is said that when an officer lawfully holds beyond the term for which he was elected or appointed, the surety on his official bond will not be bound for his acts or defaults after the expiration of the term for which he was elected or appointed. Of course, the recitals of the bond itself might be made to cover the additional time. In Hamilton v. Van Rensselaer, 43 N. Y. 244, where, Waddington and two others being indebted to the plaintiff's assignor in the sum of $10,000, it was agreed in July, 1854, that he would be released from this joint obligation upon executing and delivering his bond for one third of said amount, payable in January, 1861, with semi-annual interest, and defendant's guaranty of payment of the interest, which was done. The guaranty by defendant was as follows, indorsed on the bond given: "For value received, I guarantee the punctual payment of the interest on demand in default of its payment by Mr. Waddington." The question was whether defendant was bound for the interest beyond the date of the maturity of the bond. Held, that he was not. After adverting to the strict legal doctrine that it is only interest accruing before maturity of the obligation that is denominated interest in the true sense, and that that which accrues afterwards is, strictly speaking, damages for breach of the contract of payment, and also to the contention of plaintiff "that in construing the contract it is not to be supposed that the parties had knowledge of or reference to these legal distinctions when the contract was made, and that business men regard the sum recoverable after the principal is due, in their dealings with each other, as interest in the ordinary sense of the term, and not as compensation by way of damages." Chief Justice Church, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Conceding the soundness of this position [of plaintiff's counsel], these recognized distinctions may be resorted to by the defendant to prevent a technical or arbitrary construction against him. The true rule of construction undoubtedly is, that the intent of the parties, to be gathered from the language and surrounding circumstances, is to prevail. The intent of the defendant, ascertained by legal rules, was to agree to pay the interest expressly provided for in the bond only, but when the plaintiff urges that the defendant has employed general words guaranteeing the payment of interest upon the bond without limitation, and that these words include interest after as well as before default, and claims to enforce the rigid rule of liability therefor, it is pertinent to answer that, by strict legal rules, interest as such cannot be recovered after default in the payment of the principal, and that such interest is not, therefore, within the language of the contract." The learned judge continues: "We do not place the decision upon this narrow ground, but prefer to rest it upon the proposition, that by the plain and ordinary meaning of language used in the contract, when applied to the facts existing at the time it was made, the interest recoverable after the principal became due, whether it is regarded as interest upon a continuing contract or as damages for its nonperformance, was not in the contemplation of the parties at the time, and was not the interest specified and provided for in the defendant's contract. The construction contended for by the plaintiff might render the contract as burdensome as if it had been a guaranty of the payment of the principal itself. The defendant might never be able to discharge the obligation, except by the payment of the principal, and in that case the result would be to compel him substantially to perform a contract which, it is conceded, he never entered into." The same argument, we think, is applicable to the case now under consideration. We cannot conceive the idea that if, at the time of making the guaranty, the appellee had ever had an intimation that his obligation would be sought to be extended in the end, he would ever have entered into it. It follows, therefore, that, if bound at all, it is not because he so intended when he entered into the contract, but because of a contingency which some technical rule required him to anticipate and provide against.

31 L. R. A.

It seems to us that a guarantor of the payment of interest only,—a mere incident of the debt,—as in this case, is entitled to even greater consideration at the hands of the creditor than one who has guaranteed the whole debt; and the reason is not far to seek. Such a guarantor cannot (if the theory of plaintiff be correct) protect himself by the usual statutory provisions, and is at the mercy of both creditor and debtor; wholly subjected to the consequences of the neglect of the one, and the failure of the other. The principle announced in the case of Hamilton v. Van Rensselaer supra, was reasserted in Melick v. Knox, 44 N. Y. 676, except that in the latter case the theory that interest accruing after maturity is not in fact interest, but damages, which seems to have been in effect discarded as a vital principle in Hamilton v. Van Rensselaer, is maintained. If that theory be true, of course it is an additional ground of the affirmance of the judgment in the case now under consideration. However, as we understand it, to break the force of this theory, ap-pellant's counsel call our attention to the fact that, as a settlement of a controversy once pending here this court has in several cases declared it settled law with us that, where the conventional rate of interest is merely stipulated, and no words employed to indicate the co-existence of the rate of interest with the debt, the conventional rate ceases at the maturity of the debt, and the legal rate then begins; but that, on the contrary, when words are employed indicating the intention of the parties to have been that the conventional should be the rate until the debt should be paid, the interest accruing after maturity is in fact interest, and not damages, because it is so declared by express contract. There is force in this argument, but we are inclined, after all, to the opinion, in view of the peculiar language of our Constitution, and the object sought to be attained in the cases referred to, that the decisions of this court therein were intended to extend no further than to determine what should be the percentage before and after maturity in any given case; and that the court in none of these cases had in contemplation the distinction between the name and meaning of this percentage before and the same after maturity of the debt; and consequently the theory existing before the decisions as to this distinction remains the same with us, whatever that may have been. But this is only one of the grounds suggested by the courts as a basis for the rule contended for by appellees.

The case is not altogether free from doubt, but from all the authorities directly in point we are able to present on the subject, and from reason, equally as cogent for the position of the court below if not more so than for the opposite one, we are of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the court below, and the same is therefore affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania
v.

Benjamin F. JUNKIN et al., Appts.

(170 Pa. 194.)

A banker who receives money, knowing that he is insolvent, but puts it into a special envelope with intent to return it to the depositor, which is afterwards done, without making the money at any time part of the funds of the bank, is not guilty of receiving money from a depositor with knowledge that the bank is insolvent, which under Laws 1889, § 1, is declared to be embezzlement.

(July 18, 1895.)

NOTE.—Criminal liability for receiving deposit in bank knowing of its insolvency.

The legislation making the receiving of deposits by an insolvent banker criminal seems to be of recent origin. But it seems to be extending into new jurisdictions with some rapidity.

The court in Baker v. State, 54 Wis. 368, mentions as the states which have adopted statutes for the punishment of bankers who receive deposits when insolvent, the following: Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, California, Missouri, South Carolina, and Michigan. Wisconsin had adopted such a statute which was being construed by the court at the time this list was compiled, and to the list must be added New York, and possibly other states.

The statutes while similar are not so far identical that the construction of one will necessarily control in the construction of others. In Missouri the Constitution establishes the liability. But it has been held that the provisions of the Missouri Constitution are not self-enforcing. Fusz v. Spaunhorst, 67 Mo. 256, Overruling Cummings v. Spaunhorst, 5 Mo. App. 21.

It is held that if the Constitution states that certain acts shall be a crime, "the nature and punishment of which shall be prescribed by law" there will be no offense until the legislature has defined the crime. State v. Sattley (Mo.) 33 S. W. 41.

And also that the provision of the Missouri Constitution for the punishment of managers of banks, who receive deposits when the bank is insolvent, does not apply to a private banker but is confined to incorporated banking institutions. State v. Kelsey, 89 Mo. 623.

Although private bankers are included in the amendment to the law passed in 1887. State v. Buck, 108 Mo. 622, 120 Mo. 479.

Constitutionality of statutes.

The statutes have been attacked as unconstitutional in several instances. In Alabama the attack 31 L. R. A.

was successful. It was there held that a statute which imposes a fine upon a banker who takes deposits when insolvent of double the amount of the deposits, one half to go to the depositor, and provides for imprisonment in default of payment, but which also provides that repayment of the amount of the deposit shall be a bar to the prosecution, is in violation of the constitutional provision against imprisonment for debt. Carr v. State (Ala.) 17 So. 350. But in other states having somewhat different statutes the attacks have failed.

Such an act is not class legislation within the prohibition of constitutional provisions. Nor is it contrary to a constitutional provision against imprisonment for debt. Robertson v. People, 20 Colo. 279.

In Com. v. Smith, 11 Lanc. L. Rev. 350, the Pennsylvania act of May 9, 1889, was attacked as unconstitutional, but the court without directly passing upon the question upheld the indictment, thereby implying that the statute was constitutional.

Such acts are not unconstitutional. Baker v. State, 54 Wis. 368.

Effect of adopting existing nomenclature in defining the offense.

Some effort has been made to defeat the effect of the statutes on the ground that the acts did not come within the class covered by the name applied by the statute. But it has been held that it is immaterial that the statute describes the offense as embezzlement, it cannot be nullified by a construction which reads into its provisions the definition of embezzlement. Com. v. Rockfellow, 163 Pa. 139.

So, the fact that the statutory definition of larceny is repugant to common-law definition does not make the statute invalid. State v. Sattley (Mo.) 33 S. W. 41.

But unless the legislature expressly denominates the offense as a felony, it will be considered to be APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Court of Quarter Sessions for Perry County convicting them of embezzlement under the statute against the taking by bankers of money from depositors when they know the bank to be insolvent. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. C. Bucher, Louis E. Atkinson, Charles A. Barnett, and C. H. Berguer for appellants.

Messrs. Luke Baker, District Attorney, George Kunkel, Albert Millar, and W. H. Woods, for appellee:

Appellants' receipt of Rice's money is within the act even as construed by appellants. Rice was a depositor; he gave his money to them as a deposit; they received it. Is it any the less a receiving as a deposit because it appears they received it intending to return a like amount?

If this were a civil proceeding they would be estopped from setting up the defense that their receipt of the money was not a receipt as a deposit.

Wharton, Contr. §§ 6, 707.

The interpretation of the act by introducing into it the phrase "as a deposit" so that the receipt of money must be such as will create a contractual relation between the person giving and the person receiving, is false and absurd.

This interpretation would amount to a nullification of the act. It violates the principles of strict construction as laid down in Endlich on Interpretation of Statutes, p. 453.

If the legislature had intended that a contractual relation should exist between the bank and its depositor, and that without it no conviction should be had, it could have readily so declared.

The technical meaning is rejected as soon as the judicial mind is satisfied that another is more agreeable to the object and intention.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, p. 101.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In September, 1866, the defendants entered into copartnership in the banking business at Bloomfield, Perry county, with three others, and be a misdemeanor. Com. v. Schall, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 564.

Liability in the absence of statute.

The mere failure of a banker to disclose his insolvent condition on receiving a deposit does not amount to a false representation or pretense within the meaning of the section of the New York Penal Code for the punishment of persons obtaining property by such means. People v. Moore, 3 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 458.

In the absence of express statutes the mere failure of the banker to repay money deposited with him cannot be embezzlement. People v. Wadsworth, 63 Mich. 500.

So, the mere fact that the banker subjects himself to prosecution under the statute does not necessarily make him guilty of fraud which will render him subject to attachment. Hughes v. Lake, 63 Miss. 532.

Who liable.

The banker is liable if the money is received by the cashier. State v. Cadwell, 79 Iowa, 432.

Although deposits are received contrary to the orders of the manager of a bank, if, after learning of that fact he does not repudiate the act and return them, he will be guilty under the statute. State v. Eifert (Iowa) 65 N. W. 302.

The mere fact that the manager of the banks is away from the city where the business is carried on at the time the money is taken by the teller, will not relieve him from prosecution under the Alabama statute. Carr v. State (Ala.) 16 So. 150.

The managing officers of the bank can be convicted upon receipt of the deposit by a subordinate, if he acted under their authority. State v. Sattley (Mo.) 33 S. W. 41.

The Wisconsin act applies to persons who are themselves engaged in the business of banking, and not merely to employees of banks or banking corporations. Baker v. State, 54 Wis. 368.

Liability of partnership.

A partnership cannot be found guilty of the crime, upon proof merely that the individual partners were insolvent when the deposits were received. People v. Meadowcroft, 27 Chicago Legal News, 251.

Insolvency of the partnership must be charged if the attempt is to render the partnership liable. Com. v. Delamater, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 121.

31 L. R. A.

Sufficiency of proof.

The burden of proof is upon the commonwealth. Com. v. Schall, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 206.

The legislature may make failure within thirty days after receipt of the deposit prima facie evidence of knowledge on the part of the banker that the bank was insolvent at the time of the reception of the deposit. Robertson v. People, 20 Colo. 279.

It must be shown that the money is lost by being received by the bank, or mere receipt of a deposit from a customer who is indebted to the bank for more than the amount of the deposit is not sufficient. Com. v. Delamater, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 121.

So, under the Illinois act the depositor must be shown to have actually lost money by the act of the banker before a conviction can be had. Therefore if the money is brought into court there is an end of the prosecution. People v. Meadowcroft, 27 Chicago Legal News, 251.

But under the Kansas act the information need not allege that loss occurred to any one by reason of the act of defendant. State v. Myers, 54 Kan. 206.

Other rulings.

The Iowa act applies to national as well as state banks, and is not void when applied to them on the ground that it is an attempt to control and regulate the business operations of national banks, and to prescribe a condition upon which deposits may not be received. State v. Fields (Iowa) 62 N. W. 658.

A trust company is not within the provisions of the Missouri statute making it a felony for the officers of an insolvent bank to receive deposits. State v. Reid, 125 Mo. 43.

The cause of the failure is immaterial. And it is also immaterial whether the insolvency consists in inability to pay depositors only, or to pay other liabilities. Carr v. State (Ala.) 16 So. 150.

Under Pennsylvania act an indictment is sufficient which charges that defendant being a banker and knowing that he was insolvent received money from a depositor. Com. v. Rockafellow, 168 Pa. 139.

Money received on a certificate of deposit is a deposit within the meaning of the statute. State v. Cadwell, 79 Iowa, 432; State v. Sattley (Mo.) 33 S. W. 41.

A bank is insolvent within the meaning of the statute when it is unable to meet its liabilities as they become due in the ordinary course of business. State v. Cadwell, supra. H. F. F.

under the name of "Perry County Bank," capital, $30,000. In the year 1876, by death and retirement, the number of partners was so reduced as to leave but these two defendants, who continued the business down to March 24, 1894, when the bank closed its doors because of undisputed insolvency. The defendants, from the time the bank opened until it closed, were lawyers, actively engaged in the practice of their profession in Perry and adjoining counties, so that the personal attention they gave the bank's affairs during that period was only such as men in their situation could give. While often in the bank, they were not there in daily supervision, exercising that watchfulness the nature of the business demanded. Sponsler, it is true, was president, and inspected and passed upon much of the paper discounted, but he did not watch the daily balances of customers, and guard the resources of the bank from depletion by bad banking. This was intrusted to the cashier. When it was organized, William Willis was chosen cashier, and he remained in this position until his death in 1891, when his son, James, who had been an assistant to his father for some years before the latter's death, was chosen to his place. He then continued as cashier until the bank closed. Most of the important details of the management were intrusted to the father and son while cashiers. In the interval of two or three weeks between the death of the father and the selection of the son, Sponsler, one of defendants, acted as cashier. Whether defendants realized the fact is not clear, but the evidence now makes it clear that at this time, when James Willis succeeded to the cashiership, the bank practically was insolvent, because a large part, if not all, of its original capital had been sunk, and no new capital had been contributed. The bank, under the new cashier, as is usual with lame institutions of that character, went limping along, in hopes of bettering its condition, which, however, continued to grow worse, until the end, on Saturday, the 24th of March, 1894. Some days before its close, Junkin without doubt, and Sponsler probably, knew the bank was very seriously embarrassed for money. Their expectation of relief from this condition is not material; their knowledge of the fact is. On Saturday, the 24th, about a quarter to 3 o'clock and just before the bank finally closed, Josiah Rice handed over the counter, as a deposit, $20. The money was received by Harry E. Bonsall, a clerk, acting under Willis, the cashier, and although afterwards returned to Rice, nevertheless, at the time, the money was mingled with the general funds of the bank. After the bank closed, Rice instituted this criminal prosecution against Junkin and Sponsler, bankers, under the act of May 9, 1889, for receiving a deposit, knowing at the time the bank was insolvent. Being convicted and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, we have before us this appeal.

Appellants prefer sixteen assignments of error to the charge of the court and answers to points. With the exception of the eighth, it would be a waste of time to discuss and pass judgment on these multiplied complaints of error. While the gravity of the consequences of this judgment to their clients doubtless impelled counsel to press them upon our consideration, they are so destitute of merit that an elaborate review is not called for by any duty on our part to the commonwealth or the defendants. The case was most carefully and ably tried. The learned judge of the court below in all his rulings displayed unassailable impartiality, and certainly defendants, unless as to the assignment noted, have no ground whatever of complaint. All assignments except the eighth are therefore formally overruled.

The eighth involves an interpretation of the act of 1889. That act being very short, we quote it in full, thus: "Sec. 1. Be it enacted," etc., "that any banker, broker, or officer of any trust or savings institution, national, state, or private bank, who shall take and receive money from a depositor, with the knowledge that he, they, or the bank, is at the time insolvent, shall be guilty of embezzlement, and shall be punished by a fine in double the amount so received, and imprisoned from one to three years in the penitentiary." The title of the act is "An Act Relating to the Receiving of Deposits by Insolvent Bankers," etc., and the title is part of the act, to be resorted to in interpreting it. There are three essential elements which the commonwealth must prove beyond a reasonable doubt before the jury can find the guilt which the act makes punishable: (1) Actual insolvency at the time the money is received; (2) knowledge of the insolvency; (3) the receipt of the money as a bank deposit. As to the first two elements, there was much evidence tending to establish the fact of insolvency on and long prior to March 23, 1894, and knowledge of such insolvency by both Junkin and Sponsler; and the verdict of the jury on competent evidence, under proper instructions, has established both in favor of the commonwealth. But did the defendants, as bankers, in the face of the prohibition of the statute, receive Rice's money as a bank deposit on the 24th? The essential element of crime, unless otherwise declared by statute, is the intent to commit it, or the wilfulness of it. The legislature can declare an act a crime, and make it punishable, regardless of the intent; but this statute will not bear such interpretation. Its aim is to punish dishonesty; the moral guilt which prompts to falsehood and deception; for there is necessarily moral guilt on the part of a banker who, with knowledge of insolvency, receives as a bank deposit the money of a customer. By necessary implication, when he so receives it he says to the depositor: "My bank is solvent, and is able to repay this amount when called for." If such were not the implied representation, relied on, too, by the depositor, he would not leave his money. To constitute the criminal intent, it is not, however, necessary that the banker at the time intended to defraud the depositor. His intention to repay may have existed. It is the concealment of his present, to him known, inability to pay, and in that condition receiving, as part of the funds of the bank, the depositor's money, which he knows, without the false representation, he would not receive, that constitutes the criminal intent. Was Rice's money received as a deposit of the bank? The defendants, in their sixteenth point, the answer to which is the subject of the eighth assignment of error, requested the court to instruct the jury "that if they believed from the evidence that Willis was ordered not to take deposits on the 24th of March, 1895,—the day the money of Rice was taken,—and, if money was taken, that it must be returned, and it was returned, the verdict must be, 'Not guilty.'" To this the court made answer: "This point is denied. We do not think the question as to whether the money deposited was to be returned, or the fact that it was afterwards returned, is material to the case." Is this rigid interpretation of the act warranted? It must be borne in mind that there was evidence to which the jury were to apply it in making up their verdict. The defendant had called to the stand B. F. Junkin, who had been ill, and confined to his room, from the 1st of February previous to the 24th of March, the day the bank closed. He stated he first learned of its alarming condition on the evening of the 23d of March. On the morning of the 24th he sent a messenger for Willis, the cashier, to come to his house. He came, and he said to him: "Jim, you must not open that bank this day. Absolutely you must not do it." He says: 'I will open it. I must open it.' 'No,' I said, 'Jim, it is closed now, and you can leave it closed, and leave it stand just as it is. This thing must stop.' He says: 'I can't close the bank in the daytime.' 'Why not?' I said. 'Well, I can't and won't close it in the daytime.' I said: 'Jim, if you won't close as I order you to do, and you open its doors, you must not take one deposit this day; not over its counter or anywhere else.' He says: 'I can't open the bank and not take deposits. That would not be banking.' And I says: 'I don't want banking to go on. I want it stopped.' He says: 'I will open the bank, and take deposits just as I have taken deposits.' I said: 'Jim, if you do that, you do it at your peril, and I warn you not to do it,' and I said: 'If you persist in doing this, if you persist in opening the bank against my order, and taking deposits against my order, then take care of yourself. And if you receive deposits, then make special deposits of them, put each up by itself, and put it by itself, and return it to the depositors;' and that he said he would do." This statement is corroborated by Mrs. Junkin, and is partially admitted by Willis, the cashier, the principal witness for the commonwealth. Willis opened the bank, as he declared he would. All the deposits except two or three taken in that day were marked special, and the money and checks put in special envelopes, and afterwards returned. They never entered into or formed part of the funds of the bank. Rice's deposit, as noticed, was taken over the counter by Bonsall, and, as defendants alleged, inadvertently mingled with the bank's funds; but they afterwards returned to him a like amount,—$20. Putting aside for the present the question raised as to Junkin's answerability criminally for the acts of his agent, assume that he had himself been in the bank that day, and personally received this $20 at the counter, and had put it in an envelope, marked with Rice's name, to be returned to him in case the bank closed, and then did return to him the same $20, would that, within the meaning of act, have been the receipt by a banker, knowing the bank to be insolvent, of money on deposit? The peril to and loss of the depositor's money arises from the concealed insolvency of the bank; but if it never mingles with or forms part of the bank's funds, which are assets for the payment of creditors generally, remains separate from all other funds, and is capable of absolute identification, so that it may be returned, and is actually returned, that does not constitute the criminal receipt of money as a bank deposit. The real deposit, whether on time or call, when passed over the counter, is thereafter the property of the bank absolutely. It is the intention of the depositor and the bank that the latter shall thereafter use it as its own by loaning it to others, and paying it out on checks drawn by others. The express or implied promise of the bank is that it will repay him, not that money, but that amount of money. In the case we are supposing the intention of the banker is to hand back the identical money received, and that intention is manifested, not by what he says, but by what he does, not only at the time, but afterwards. This method of not receiving money on deposit by a banker knowing his insolvency, as demonstrated by the event here, is not an open, unequivocal observance of the law. He subjects himself to the peril of misconstruction of his real intention, and invites criminal accusation. But, unwise as may be the conduct, if no intention in fact existed to appropriate in aid of his insolvent bank the depositor's money, and he did not in fact so appropriate it, he is not a criminal. If such a transaction is not a deposit by a depositor, if there be no contract to which the minds of both parties assented, then it is not within the terms of the act. Penal statutes which inflict punishment must be strictly construed. If Junkin himself would not have been guilty, had he, under such circumstances, personally received the money, he would not be answerable criminally if he instructed his agent to so receive it. Whatever may be the answerability of the principal for the wrongful act of his agent in civil actions, he is not answerable criminally when the act is in positive disobedience of his explicit instructions. Willis was the agent in control. Bonsall was his subordinate. Whether the neglect to specially mark Rice's deposit was wilful or inadvertent on their part, the act cannot be imputed to Junkin, whose orders were directly to the contrary; and if he is believed in his statement that he had been confined to his room by illness for months before and months afterwards, he cannot even be accused of neglect to personally attend in the bank on that day to see that his orders were executed.

As to the other defendant, William A. Sponsler, there is testimony that for a year before the bank closed he had been so ill as to be confined most of the time to his bed. On the day it closed he was in a very dangerous condition, and wholly unable to even converse on business affairs. Because of his disability, about a week before the bank closed, he had given his son power of attorney to take his place in the management. The son testifies that he came to Bloomfield from Newport on Saturday, the 24th, and about 11 o'clock in the forenoon went into the bank, and gave Willis this instruction: "James, I tell you what I want.

you to do. All the money that you take in today I want you to keep separate, each parcel by itself, and not to receive it as a deposit. Keep it by itself, and on Monday return it to each of the respective parties who deposited or left the money with you. He said: 'I will do so.' And he said: 'That is what Judge Junkin told me I should do this morning and that is what I am doing.' As Rice's deposit was made at a quarter to 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when, as alleged, according to both defendants' instructions, that or no other money was to be received as a bank deposit, it follows Sponsler's situation is the same as Junkin's.

Much of the testimony as to the instructions given Willis was contradictory in its character, but in passing on this assignment of error we must assume the defendants' averments to be the fact, because their sixteenth prayer for instruction only asked the court to say to the jury: If they believed from the evidence Willis received such orders, then defendants were not guilty. The court's answer was, in effect, that it was immaterial what they believed from this evidence. This instruction may have operated to the conviction of defendants. We think the learned judge of the court below mistakenly gave too rigid an interpretation to the act of 1889 in favor of the commonwealth. Under that interpretation the negligent, incompetent, and unfortunate banker can be convicted of a serious crime, as well as the swindling and dishonest one. This was not the object of the act. If the legislature intend such result it must be accomplished by a law leaving no reasonable doubt of such intention.

The judgment is reversed, and a v. f. d. n. awarded.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

Oliver N. KOEN et al.

v.

F. W. BARTLETT et al., Appts.

(..... W. Va.)

(December 11, 1896.)

1. An owner in fee simple makes an oil and gas lease for a term of five years, and as much longer as the premises are operated for oil and gas, or the rent for failure to commence operating is paid, for, among other things, one eighth part of all oil produced and saved, to be delivered in the pipe lines to the credit of the lessor. The lessor then sells and conveys one undivided moiety of the one sixteenth part of all the oil produced and saved. Afterwards, but before any oil is bored for or produced, the lessor sells, grants, and conveys the land in fee simple to his six children, to each one a part, by metes and bounds, in consideration of natural love and affection, by deed of general warranty, "except that the party of the second part takes the same subject to any lease for oil or gas made by the party of the first part or any sale of royalty for oil or gas made by him;" and, by the same deed, he retains full control of said land in all respects and for all purposes, during his lifetime. Soon thereafter oil wells are bored, and oil produced, saved, and put in the pipe lines in large quantities. Held, the one-eighth royalty goes of right to the tenant for life and his grantees, during the continuance of the estate for life, and not to the owners in fee of the estate expectant thereon.

2. The tenant of an estate for life, unless restrained by covenant or agreement, has a right to the full enjoyment and use of the land and all its profits during his estate therein, including mines of oil or gas open when his life estate begins, or lawfully opened and worked during the existence of such estate.

*Headnotes by HOLT, P.

NOTE.—For nature of property in mineral oil, see Williamson v. Jones (W. Va.) 25 L. R. A. 222, and note.

For right of dower in mines, see Seager v. McCabe (Mich.) 16 L. R. A. 247.

31 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Circuit Court for Marion County affirming a decree of the trial court in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enjoin the delivery of certain oil or its proceeds to appellants who claimed under an assignment from the life tenant of the property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. S. Meredith and John Bas- sel, for appellants:

Defendants Bartlett and Brand are entitled to the one half of the royalty, or the one sixteenth of all of the oil produced from said wells by virtue of being the assignees or grantees of said Kerns.

Hurst v. Hurst, 7 W. Va. 289; Chandler v. Chandler, 55 Cal. 267; 2 Devlin, Deeds, 961.

The life tenant, whether by curtesy in dower, or by the act of the parties, is entitled always to occupy, use, and control the land in all respects and for all purposes so as to derive the greatest benefit and profit therefrom, without committing waste.

Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 72.

A lease of land for the sole and only purpose of mining and excavating for oil vests a corporeal interest.

Barker v. Dale, 3 Pittsb. 190, 8 Mining Rep. 594.

Oil in place is realty, but it becomes personality by severance,—a thing the lessee under the Nay lease had a perfect right to do and is doing within the lifetime of Elijah Kerns.

Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 281, 25 L. R. A. 222.

When profits result from property in which there is an estate in reversion or remainder, and also an estate in possession, they follow the right of possession and go to the person who is entitled to the possession at the time when they accrued or became due.

Allen v. DeGroodt, 98 Mo. 159, 14 Am. St. Rep. 633, note.

It is not waste in a tenant in dower of coal lands to take coal to any extent from a mine already open, or to sink new shafts into the same veins of coal.

Crouch v. Puryear, 1 Rand. (Va.) 258, 10 Am. Dec. 528; Findlay v. Smith, 6 Munf. 143, 8 Am. Dec. 733; Macaulay v. Dismal Swamp Land Co. 2 Rob. (Va.) 507; Lefners v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263.

So far as the rights of the life tenant are concerned, there is no distinction between a mine open at the beginning of the estate, and the right to open one at that time, which right is or may be exercised at any time during the continuance of the life tenancy.

Priddy v. Griffith, 150 Ill. 560.

Messrs. Alfred Caldwell, W. P. Hubbard, Raphael Hayden, and Frank Hayden also for appellants.

Messrs. John A. Hutchinson, A. B. Flemming, U. N. Arnett, and Charles Powell for appellees.

Holt, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

F. W. Bartlett and H. P. Brand, appellants on appeal from a final decree entered by the circuit court of Marion county on the 26th day of May, 1894, giving Koen the oil in question, as against Bartlett and Brand, the adverse claimants. On the 19th day of September, 1892, defendant Elijah Kerns was the owner in fee simple and occupant of a tract of land of 75 acres situate in Marion county, on Whetstone run, within the productive part of the Mannington oil field, as shown by the event. On that day he executed to C. S. Nay a lease for that part north of the county road, to mine and operate for oil and gas for the term of five years, and as much longer as the premises might be operated for oil and gas, at a royalty of one eighth of the oil delivered in the pipe line. On the 4th day of March, 1893, Nay sold, transferred, and assigned his lease to plaintiff O. N. Koen. By deed dated 28th of September, 1892, Elijah Kerns had sold and conveyed to O. N. Koen the undivided moiety of the one-sixteenth part of all the oil and gas produced and saved from said land so leased. By deed dated 30th September, 1892, O. N. Koen sold and conveyed one undivided two thirds of his interests conveyed to him by Kerns to Thornton F. Koen and J. T. Koen. Oliver N. Koen, by deed dated October 5, 1893, sold and assigned the Nay oil lease to the South Penn Oil Company, who opened the mine, found oil, and are producing it in large quantities. Elijah Kerns, by six separate deeds, dated December 3, 1892, for natural love and affection, sold and conveyed in severalty, by metes and bounds, to his six several children, in fee simple, in expectancy on the grantor's life estate thereby retained and reserved to himself, the said tract of land leased as aforesaid. Whatever interests these expectant owners of the inheritance had came by various conveyances to the plaintiffs, O. N. Koen et al. These deeds to the children are all alike, and any one will answer our present purpose:

Elijah Kerns to Emeline Hays. Deed.

This deed, made this 3d day of December, in the year 1892, between Elijah Kerns, of Marion county, West Virginia, grantor, of the first part, and Emeline Hays, of the same county and state, grantee, of the second part, witnesseth: That for and in consideration of the love and affection of the said Elijah Kerns for his said daughter, Emeline Hays, formerly Emeline Kerns, and other valuable considerations, the party of the first part does grant and convey unto the party of the second part the following described real estate, to wit: A tract or parcel of land lying on Whetstone run, in Mannington district of Marion county, adjoining lands of Rachel A. Jones, M. E. Holbert, C. C. Fox, and Nimrod Hays, and bounded as follows: 'Beginning at a stone by the road, and, with line of said Rachel A. Jones, S., 84 E., 38 poles, to pointers; thence, with Holbert's, S., 16 W., 36½ poles, to pointers, to C. C. Fox; and with his line, N., 71 W., 33½, to stone; and, with the road and Hays' line, N., 50 W., 18 poles, to stone; N., 68 E., 10 poles, to stone; N., 34 E., 16 poles, to the beginning,—containing nine (9) acres, more or less, with its appurtenances and privileges. And the party of the first part covenants with the party of the second part that he has good right and title to said property, and that they will warrant generally the same, except that the second party takes the same subject to any lease for oil or gas made by said first party, or any sale of royalty for oil or gas made by him, and that the said first party retains full control of said land in all respects and for all purposes during his lifetime, and the second party takes said land as her full share of said Elijah Kerns' real estate. Witness the following signature and seal.

his Elijah X. Kerns. [Seal.]
mark.

Elijah Kerns, by deed dated 18th November, 1893, in consideration of $2,400, sold, granted, and conveyed, by deed of general warranty, to F. W. Bartlett, H. P. Brand, and another the undivided one-sixteenth part of all oil and gas in and under said tract of land of 75 acres. This one sixteenth of the oil which the South Penn Oil Company has produced, and is now producing, and putting in the pipe line, is the matter now in controversy. The plaintiffs, O. N. Koen and others, claim it by virtue and effect of the deeds from Kerns to his children. F. W. Bartlett and H. P. Brand claim it by virtue of the above deed from Kerns, the life tenant, by reservation. Koen claims it as having passed to the children as owners in fee in expectancy by such deeds. Koen filed his bill to prohibit the pipe line from delivering it or its proceeds to Bartlett. Bartlett answered, setting up his title as the owner. The intermediate court, by decree of 3d March, 1894, put it in the hands of a receiver to sell, and holds the proceeds for the one who should be held to be entitled. The intermediate court, by decree of 26th May, 1894, held that Bartlett and Brand were not entitled to the said one sixteenth of said oil in the pipe lines, but that plaintiffs, O. N. Koen and others, were entitled thereto, and decreed accordingly. On appeal to the circuit court, by decree of December 4, 1894, the decree of the intermediate court was affirmed, and Bartlett and Brand appealed. The point in dispute turns on the legal effect upon the right to the oil produced, and put in the pipe line, under the oil lease of the deeds from Kerns to his children.

It is conceded on both sides that Elijah Kerns gave a right to mine for oil and gas, and that the South Penn Oil Company has produced, and is producing it lawfully, and placing it in the pipe line, as profits produced and issuing from the mines of the freehold, not opened in fact until the — day of —, 1893, after the conveyance to the children. It is conceded on both sides that, by these deeds to his children, Kerns reduced himself to a tenant of a conventional life estate, seised of the present freehold estate in possession, subject to oil lease; while his children became the owners in fee in expectancy, vested in right of present ownership, but not having the right of present possession and enjoyment. See Hurst v. Hurst, 7 W. Va. 289, 339. Whether it is with or without impeachment for waste is, in the view here taken, immaterial. That a fee may well be granted with reservation of the usufruct for life, see Cribb v. Rogers, 12 S. C. 564, 32 Am. Rep. 511; Waugh v. Waugh, 84 Pa. 350, 24 Am. Rep. 191; Doe, Smith, v. Grady, 2 Dev. L. 395; Hatch v. Thompson, 3 Dev. L. 411; Hodges v. Spicer, 79 N. C. 223. Bearing on the question involved, we have, among others, the cases of Findlay v. Smith (1818) 6 Munf. 143, 8 Am. Dec. 783; Crouch v. Puryear (1822) 1 Rand. (Va.) 258, 10 Am. Dec. 528; Macaulay v. Dismal Swamp Land Co. (1843), 2 Rob. (Va.) 507, 525; and Williamson v. Jones (1894) 39 W. Va. 231, 25 L. R. A. 222.

Upon the strength of these cases, it is conceded by both parties that mines of oil and of gas in place are land, and, as such, go with the inheritance; and it must be conceded that the life tenant is vested with the ownership thereof as land, as being seised of the immediate freehold in his possession, which possession extends from top to bottom, to the subsurface as much as to the surface, — in other words, to the land as a whole, — or the tenant for life has a freehold, as well as tenant in fee (Co. Litt. 43b; 4 Comyns. Dig. 62); and that the owners of the inheritance, have no more right to approach by a tunnel and break and enter his superficial close, than they have to break and enter his close on the surface. Their estate of inheritance is vested in right of interest, but not in right of enjoyment. Their estate is expectant on the determination of the life estate. It is the duty of the life tenant to spare and preserve the corpus of the inheritance, and of the owners of the fee in expectancy to wait, for they have no present right of use and enjoyment, and cannot exercise any right by anticipation; and their respective duties point out their respective rights. It is further conceded, on the strength of these cases and of the books generally, that if these mines of oil and gas had been open when Kerns, by cutting down his fee, came in as tenant for life of the immediate freehold, then he would have a right to work them during the continuance of his estate, and take the issues and profits thence produced; for these two are derivative parts of one estate: each, in quantity of ownership and order of enjoyment, is measured and determined by time; and, though both are vested in right, the life tenant has the hither segment, — the immediate freehold, — and therefore the sole right to hold, use, and enjoy. And, if the mine is "open" when he comes in, then we conclude that the one who had the right to say has, by his actions, which speak louder than words, manifested his intention that it may be worked. Hence the life tenant may lawfully mine, sever, and convert the mineral from land into personally; and this is something in which the owner of the expectant estate of inheritance has no right. He has a vested right in it as land, — nothing more, — and, if the severance is unlawful, may sue at law, enjoin in equity, and have an account. University v. Tucker, 31 W. Va. 621. But when, by lawful severance, it ceases to be land, his right ceases, and the owner of the immediate freehold takes the issues and profits; for, under the law, he has a right to the full enjoyment and use of the land and all its profits during his estate therein. 2 Bl. Com. 122; Williams v. Pearson (1862) 38 Ala. 299, 309; Crouch v. Puryear, 1 Rand. (Va.) 258, 10 Am. Dec. 528; 1 Minor, Inst. 54b; Wms. Real Prop. 17th ed. 127; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. § 100; Tiedeman, Real Prop. §§ 2-75; Kerr, Real Prop. § 682; Jackson, Murphy, v. Van Hoesen, 1 Sharswood & B. Lead. Cas. Real Prop. 191, 206; MacSwinney, Mines, pp. 46, 47; 2 Minor, Inst. 602; Eley's Appeal (1833) 103 Pa. 307. The rule is well settled that a tenant for life, when not precluded by restraining words, may not only work open mines, but may work them to exhaustion; and it is settled law that the rents of an open mine are income and go to the tenant for life. Rankin's Appeal (Pa.) 2 L. R. A. 429. Lawfulness of severance and conversion into personally seem to be the reason of the doctrine of the life tenant's right to the rents and profits produced from open mines. A mine lawfully leased to be opened is an "open mine." within the reason of the rule as laid down in these cases; and when lawfully opened and worked, as in this case, during the time that the freehold estate of the life tenant continues, the profits issuing therefrom, thus lawfully severed and produced, belong of right to him; for the term "profit" in law, comprehends the produce of the soil, whether it arise above or below the surface, including product of mines, as well as the herbage growing on the surface.

In the latter part of the clause of general warranty the grantor, Elijah Kerns, in the deeds to his children, makes an exception requiring the grantees to take subject to the lease for oil and gas and his sale of royalty; and it is said that inasmuch as the grantor stops there, not excepting the unsold part of the royalty, therefore he meant it to go with the estate in fee in expectancy, granted to his children. But the answer is, that was the place to except what he had parted with, and what he reserved and retained found its proper place in the clause of reservation, retaining a life estate, and as an incident thereof.

This, in my view, decides the case in favor of Bartlett and Brand, and requires the two decrees they complain of to be reversed, for they are the grantees of the life tenant, and, as to the one sixteenth of the oil, have succeeded, by purchase to his rights.

Rehearing denied.

Joseph HAIGH

v.

John BELL, Plff. in Err.

(.....W. Va.....)

- *1. An act making it unlawful for the owner of hogs to permit them to run at large is an exercise of the police power.
- 2. The county court is the police court of the county, and to it the legislature may specially delegate the exercise of such power in specified cases.
- 3. The act of the legislature approved April 1, 1873 (see Acts 1872-73, p. 175), does not violate any constitutional right of the citizen, or contravene any requirement of such organic law.

(November 13, 1885.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Monongalia County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by hogs belonging to defendant which were unlawfully permitted to run at large. Writ dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Measrs. George C. Sturgiss and Joseph Moreland for plaintiff in error.

Mr. L. V. Keck for defendant in error.

Holt, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

An action of trespass before a justice of Monongalia County, taken by certiorari to the circuit court, judgment of the justice set aside, cause retained and tried, de novo, and brought here by defendant, Bell, on the ground of involving the constitutionality of the law on which the action is founded. Chapter 77 of the Acts of 1872-73, p. 175, provides (sec. 1) that it shall be unlawful for owners to permit their hogs to run at large in the county of Harrison; giving the owner of the property injured by hogs running at large double damages, and a lien on the hogs for the payment thereof, and the right to distrain, and, after notice, to sell, etc., as could be done at common law. The clause here brought in question is the following: "The provisions of this act shall extend to all the counties in the state, provided, that the county court may upon the petition of 100 voters of the county direct to have the same enforced in their said county or in any district or districts thereof." On the 11th day of November, 1881, the county court of Monongalia county, upon the petition of 100 voters of the county, by order entered of record, directed that the provisions of chapter 77 of the act of April 1, 1873, should be enforced in Clinton district, of said county. On the 27th day of February, 1885, taking effect March 2, the general law on the subject was passed as we now find it in Code 1891, p. 593, chap. 60, §§ 3a et seq. Is this law unconstitutional? That is the only question.

*Headnotes by HOLT, P.

NOTE.—For owner's liability for trespassing animals in general, see note to Bulpet v. Matthews (Ill.) 22 L. R. A. 55.

For delegation of legislative power to county boards, see note to Dougherty v. Austin (Cal.) 18 L. R. A. 161.

31 L. R. A.

In every case where one man has a right to exclude another from his land, the common law encircles it, if not inclosed already, with an imaginary fence. Doct. & Stud. dialogue 1, p. 80, chap. 8. And to break such imaginary fence, and enter the close of another, is a trespass, giving rise to the action of trespass quare clausum fregit. And the man is answerable for not only his own trespass, but for that of his cattle also; for if, by his negligent keeping, they stray upon the land of another,—and much more if he permits or drives them,—and they then tread down his neighbor's herbage and spoil his corn or trees, this is a trespass for which the owner must answer in damages. And the law gives the party injured a double remedy in this case, by permitting him to distrain the cattle thus damage feasant (or doing damage) till the owner shall make him satisfaction, or else, by leaving him to the common remedy in foro contentioso, by action. 3 Bl. Com. 211. See Holladay v. Marsh (1829), 3 Wend. 142, 20 Am. Dec. 678. All chattels trespassing on land may be distrained damage feasant. 3 Comyns' Dig. 478. Blackstone uses the term "cattle" as a general one, comprehending sheep, oxen, swine, and horses. 1 Bl. Com. 298. It may comprehend any livestock kept for use or profit; animals useful for food or labor. Anderson, Law Dict. p. 155. The rule does not apply to damage done by cattle straying off a highway on which they are being lawfully driven. In such case the owner is liable only on proof of negligence. See Pollock, Torts, 405. Cattle trespass is an old and well settled head,—perhaps the oldest. It is the nature of cattle and other livestock to stray, if not kept in, and to do damage if they stray; and the owner is bound to keep them from straying, at his peril. Id. 404. In brief, the common-law doctrine is that the owner of cattle must fence them in. He is not compelled to fence the cattle of others out. His imaginary close does that. Owing to change of circumstances, and the inadaptability due in part to the settling of a new country, in this state a different rule prevails. The owner of land must fence out the cattle of others. He need not fence in his own. He takes the risk of loss of them, or injury to them, from their running at large and wandering into danger. Blaine v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1876) 9 W. Va. 252; Baylor v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. Id. 270. The common-law doctrine rests on public expediency, and was anciently guarded by strict rules. The converse rule in this state rests on the same foundation, and is now regulated by statute. The right of the possessor of land to distrain cattle doing damage there is placed by Blackstone among the class of private injuries redressed by the mere act of the parties: (1) Defense of oneself; (2) recapture or reprisal; (3) entry on lands and tenements; (4) abatement of nuisances; (5) the law allows a man to be his own avenger, or to administer redress to himself by distraining another's cattle doing damage or trespassing upon his land. 3 Bl. Com. p. 9, § 2; Pol. & M. Hist. Eng. Law, 572. The object of the common law was threefold: (1) To put a stop to further damage without injury to the cattle damage feasant, for the thing distrained must not be used, injured, or destroyed; (2) to enable the owner of the land to identify the cattle, and ascertain the owner of them, for they must be taken in the very act; (8) to give a lien upon the cattle for the damage done, and the expenses incurred in putting a stop to its continuance, which is confined to the damage done at one time.

The law in question was introduced by the late Judge G. D. Camden, then the member of the state Senate from the county of Harrison,—a thickly settled farming county, which desired the passage of such a law. The object was to restore, by way of police regulation, the common-law doctrine of the close, and of distress damage feasant, so far as it related to the one species of livestock mentioned,—so annoying, destructive, and difficult to fence out,—especially while young and small. The propriety and necessity of a certain class of police regulations depend upon time, place, and circumstances. What is required in one district or town may not be in another. Here the court is given the power to exercise their discretion. They may or may not, as in their wisdom they may see fit, by order entered of record on petition of 100 voters of the county, direct this police regulation to apply to and be enforced in their respective counties, or in any district thereof. In this case it was made to apply to the thickly settled farming district of Clinton, and where it was needed, as we are to presume.

It is said that this law is unconstitutional, and therefore void, because it seeks to deprive the owner of the hogs of his property without due process of law. W. Va. Const. art. 3, § 10: "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law and the judgment of his peers." In Jelly v. Dils, 27 W. Va. 267, 275, it is said the word "and," as here used, must be interpreted to mean "or," as to the reading of Magna Charta. See 1 Pol. & M. Hist. Eng. Law, p. 15; 2 Bl. Law Tracts, p. 42. (2) It is said that this act is unconstitutional in two ways: First, it assumes or seeks to confer power not legislative; second, because it violates this specific provision of both state and Federal Constitutions; citing Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28, 1 Am. Rep. 215. See also Stewart v. Polk County Supers. 30 Iowa, 9, 1 Am. Rep. 238, and cases cited.

The first volume of Blackstone's Commentaries was published November 2, 1765,—at a time when the thirteen American colonies were just beginning to have a sense of their essential unity and of the need of a common law. 1 Bl. Com. (Pref. of ed. by Dr. Hammond) p. 7. An American edition was published at Philadelphia in 1771-72. So that at the time they were drawing up and adopting the state Constitutions and the Federal Constitution, with their bills of rights, Blackstone's Commentaries was received and read as the one great book of the common law on all questions of private right. Coming as it did at such a conjuncture of affairs,—such a combination of legal and political circumstances,—it was received then, and for that reason, apart from its intrinsic merits, has continued to be received since, in a general way, as the common law of 1776, and has, as such, been cited and quoted in American decisions to be numbered by the thousands. See Dr. Hammond's edition of Blackstone, 31 L. R. A.

passim. From that day to this, so far as I know, it has not been held that the doctrine of self-help in preventing wrong to persons or property, as Blackstone lays it down, contravenes any of the constitutional guaranties of those fundamental private rights which are all contained in Magna Charta. So held by this court in Burdett v. Allen, 35 W. Va. 347, 14 L. R. A. 337. The common law of self-defense, defense of family, and of house and home, stands as it did 600 years ago, when this enactment is assailed on the ground that it deprives the owner of his property without due process of law. These constitutional guaranties, state and Federal, must be considered in connection with the police power of the state; for it is settled beyond further judicial controversy that these inhibitions do not limit, and were not designed to limit, the subjects upon which the police power of the state may be exerted. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 29, 32 L. ed. 586; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 663, 31 L. ed. 211. On the other hand, it is equally certain that the legislature cannot, by assuming to exercise the police power, act upon subjects which do not and cannot fall within its dominion, nor impose restrictions or create or enforce discriminations which are not in the legitimate exercise of that power, and that, while the judgment of the legislature is accepted upon doubtful subjects, yet the courts must in others overrule it, and refuse to sustain, as exercises of the police power, enactments not sanctioned by it. See State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863, note p. 862; Com. v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 25 L. R. A. 250; Black. Const. Lim. § 64. For full discussion, see 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5470. However, it is much easier to perceive and realize the existence and sources (and necessity) of this power, than to mark its boundaries or prescribe a limit to its exercise. See Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 87; Cooley, Const. Lim. 572. Still it is universally recognized that its exercise may result as a necessary inference from the existence and due protection of these rights themselves; for, if they are the inviolable rights of the one, so they are of the other. Hence each must so use his own as not to injure those of the other. This law does not take away or limit any such right beyond what is necessary for the public welfare, and for the protection of the same rights of others. It only imposes such restraint in the given case as prevents their exercise from being injurious to the similar, equal rights of his neighbors. Such restraint is just. The public welfare may require it, the legislature has power to impose it, and the county court power to exercise it, when thus delegated to it. There are some police regulations which the public welfare may require in one town or district or county which would be ill-timed, out of place, and therefore inconvenient, in another. Hence, this law provides that the county court may or may not, as they, in their judgment, may think best and see fit, upon the petition of 100 voters of the county (the annoyance of three or more may constitute a public nuisance), by order entered of record (as was done here), direct that the law against permitting hogs to run at large shall apply to, and be of force in, their respective counties, or in any district or districts thereof; and, as we must presume, the thickly settled district of Clinton needed such a regulation. Notwithstanding this, the law was general, and applied to every county and district in the state,—as much so as to the county of Harrison. It is said that in every state the keeping of livestock is under police regulation. Tiedeman, Lim. p. 506, § 141. I have never heard it questioned that towns can exercise such police power delegated by the legislature. Why not the county court, which has been the police court of the county, continuously, for more than 100 years? On this subject, see Hellen v. Noe, 3 Ired. L. 493; Whitfield v. Longest, 6 Ired. L. 271; Tourne v. Lee, 8 Mart. N. S. 548, 20 Am. Dec. 280; Roberts v. Ogle, 80 Ill. 459, 88 Am. Dec. 201; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (New ed.) pp. 90, 91, note.

The institution of the county court originated as early as 1623-24; and as it is the most ancient, so it has ever been one of the most important, of our institutions,—for a long time, in respect to the administration of justice, and always in matters of county police and economy. As early as 1645 they had matured into courts of general jurisdiction in law and in equity, and the most important duties in matters of police and economy were confided to them. Prior to 1661-62 the judges of the county courts were styled “commissioners of the monthly courts,” and afterwards “commissioners of the county courts;” but by that act they were required to take the oath of a justice of the peace, and be called “justices of the peace.” These tribunals now assumed a perfectly regular form, and their functions have ever since been so important that their institution was considered as a part of the Constitution both of the colonial and state governments. No material change was introduced by the Revolution in their jurisdiction, or in their general powers or duties, of any kind. Now, the members who compose it are no longer justices, but have come back to their old name of “commissioners of the county courts,” which, though shorn of general judicial power, still have the superintendence and administration of the internal and fiscal affairs of their counties. See Code 1819, p. 244, note; W. Va. Const. art. 8, § 24; Code 1891, pp. 41, 42.

The county here in question (one of the successors of the memorable district and county of West Augusta, one of the oldest in time of formation, and one of the largest in territory comprehended) was created in October, 1776, holding its first county court, we may suppose, on the second Monday in December, 1776, extended by subsequent act to include part of the county of Augusta, and, thus extended, reached from the Pennsylvania state line, southward forty miles or more, into the watershed of the Great Kanawha river; and its county court has exercised police power from that day to this without question. The successive formation of new counties has very much curtailed the territorial jurisdiction of the court, but its power in matters of police remains the same,—without any material modification. See Wiley, Hist. Monongalia Co. p. 47 et passim; Lewis, Hist. W. Va. 506; 9 Hen. Stat. pp. 262, 420; 10 Hen. Stat. pp. 114, 351; 11 Hen. Stat. p. 366.

It may be that the legislature, by the act of 1885, now found in the Code of 1891, intending to review the legislation on this subject, covered the whole ground, making a full and complete provision touching the subject common to both, and thereby superseded this one by absorption. See State v. Mines, 38 W. Va. 125-130. But, so far as that question has any bearing, it is, in such a case as this, a question, not for this court, but for the circuit court, to decide, without the right of appeal.

We have endeavored to show that the statute complained of is not unconstitutional, and therefore the writ of error must be dismissed as improvidently awarded.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

GRAND LODGE OF THE ANCIENT ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN of the State of Iowa

v.

W. R. GRAHAM et al., Appls.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. The right to use the name “Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Iowa” cannot be claimed by a seceding body merely because it has become incorporated, to the exclusion of the body from which it seceded, which previously had used the name, and continued to do so without incorporation.

2. The certificate of the auditor as to the right of a corporation to a name is not binding upon another body claiming the right to the name.

3. The right of a corporation to the exclusive use of a name as against another organization using the same name does not follow from the fact that the latter is doing an unlawful business.

4. After an insurance organization has been allowed to proceed in its business with full knowledge and acquiescence of the insurance authorities of the state for a series of years, during which many of its members have by age and disability become unable to procure any other insurance, a rival organiza-

NOTE.—Some interesting questions decided in the above case are believed to be without direct precedent, but of great importance in the law of mutual benefit societies.

For tradename as part of good will of business, 31 L. R. A.

see note to Vonderbank v. Schmitt (La.) 15 L. R. A. 462.

See also, as to corporate name, the case of International Trust Co. v. International Loan & T. Co. (Mass.) 10 L. R. A. 758.

tion, which has all the time had knowledge of the facts and failed to take action, is estopped from contesting the legality of such business.

5. Delay in procuring a certificate of the right to a corporate name will not enlarge the time for bringing an action to establish an exclusive right to it which accrued at the time of incorporation, when the certificate was not required.

6. Litigation as to the right to offices in an association will not suspend the running of the statute against a right of action by one rival body against the other to establish the exclusive right to a name.

(January 22, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the District Court for Dubuque County in favor of complainant in a suit brought to enjoin defendants from using or attempting to do business under the name which complainant claimed to own. Reversed.

Statement by Deemer, J. :

This is a suit in equity to enjoin the defendants, who are officers of an alleged unincorporated society or voluntary association, from using the name of the "Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Iowa," usually written and known as the "G. L. A. O. U. W. of Iowa;" to restrain them from transacting business, and from conducting a life insurance business upon the mutual assessment plan under that name; and for such other relief as may be equitable. The defendants demurred to the petition, and the demurrer was sustained. Thereupon the petition was amended, and a demurrer to the petition as amended was overruled. Thereafter defendants filed an answer to the petition, containing three counts and twenty-five divisions or paragraphs, and afterwards filed an amendment consisting of two divisions. Plaintiff moved to strike out certain parts of the answer as amended, and demurred to the remainder. The motion and demurrer were sustained, and defendants electing to stand on their pleadings, a decree was rendered against them as prayed. Defendants appeal.

Messrs. C. C. Nourse and C. L. Nourse, with Messrs. W. H. Berry, Alphons Matthews, and J. W. Warrington, for appellants;

As to the rights of third parties the certificate of the auditor could have no effect.

Where no appeal or writ of error lies from the determination of such tribunal or officer, the judgment is not conclusive upon third persons, and the same may be shown to be illegal or fraudulent whenever brought in question.

Birby v. Adams County, 49 Iowa, 507; Vose v. Morton, 4 Cush. 81, 50 Am. Dec. 750; Leonard v. Bryant, 11 Met. 870; Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 458; Kaiser v. Lawrence Sav. Bank, 56 Iowa, 104, 41 Am. Rep. 85; Re National Indemnity Endowment Co. 142 Pa. 450.

Plaintiff's right to maintain this suit must be made to depend upon its exclusive right to the name, for otherwise the plaintiff has no more right to be heard in this court than any other insurance company whose business may 31 L. R. A.

be incidentally affected by the operations of the defendant organization.

Beach, Inj. § 13; McDonald v. English, 85 Ill. 232; Springer v. Walters, 139 Ill. 419; Statten v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. 29 Iowa, 143, 4 Am. Rep. 205.

To entitle the plaintiff to this protection it must affirmatively appear: (1) that plaintiff originated the name, or (2) acquired the exclusive right to the use of the name from some one who might legally transfer such a right; and (3) that the name was such that a special property might be acquired in it by appropriation or purchase.

Ottoman Cakvey Co. v. Dane, 95 Ill. 205; Corbin v. Gould, 133 U. S. 308, 33 L. ed. 611; Van Beil v. Prescott, 82 N. Y. 630; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf. 599; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, 50 U. S. 13 Wall. 311, 20 L. ed. 581; Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. La Belle Wagon Works, 82 Wis. 546, 16 L. R. A. 458; Black Rabbit Asso. v. Munday, 21 Abb. N. C. 99; Nebraska Loan & T. Co. v. Nine, 27 Neb. 507; Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co. 128 U. S. 598, 32 L. ed. 535; Koehler v. Sanders, 122 N. Y. 65, 9 L. R. A. 578; Leclanche Battery Co. v. Western Electric Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 276.

The name "Iowa" being a geographical name is common property, and cannot be appropriated to trade or business by any one to the exclusion of others.

Columbia Mill Co. v. Alcorn, 150 U. S. 460, 37 L. ed. 1144; Nebraska Loan & T. Co. v. Nine, supra.

There never was any transfer by the supreme lodge of the order to the plaintiff in the nature of a contract by which plaintiff can claim an exclusive right to the use of the name "Ancient Order of United Workmen."

The sale or transfer of the good will of a business does not entitle the assignee to the exclusive use of the name.

Iowa Seed Co. v. Dorr, 70 Iowa, 482, 59 Am. Rep. 446; Vonderbank v. Schmidt, 44 La. Ann. 264, 15 L. R. A. 462.

Our legislature has recognized the fact that such fraternal and benevolent associations are not insurance companies, and can with safety and greater benefit to the public continue their fraternal and benevolent work without the supervision of the state.

Dickinson v. Ancient Order of U. W. 159 Pa. 263; Com. v. Equitable Ben. Asso. 137 Pa. 419; Gorman v. O'Connor, 155 Pa. 239; Northwestern Masonic Aid Asso. v. Jones, 154 Pa. 104; Johnson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 133; State v. Taylor, 56 N. J. L. 49.

Plaintiff cannot, as against the statute of limitations, indefinitely prolong the time in which he may sue by voluntarily failing to do the things required by law to be done before an action may be brought.

Hintrager v. Traut, 69 Iowa, 746; Baker v. Johnson County, 33 Iowa, 151; Kirby v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 120 U. S. 131, 30 L. ed. 569; Palmer v. Palmer, 36 Mich. 487, 24 Am. Rep. 605.

Even in law actions for damages on account of a continuing nuisance, this court has held that when the act of the defendant was complete before the period of limitation, and the result only was within the statute, even a suit for damages was barred.

Powers v. Council Bluffs, 45 Iowa, 652, 24 Am. Rep. 792; Baldwin v. Oskaloosa Gaslight Co. 57 Iowa, 51; Williams v. Mills County, 71 Iowa, 367.

Reasonable diligence must be used in making application for relief against piracy of a trademark, and proceedings should be instituted promptly upon the discovery of the fact.

High, Inj. § 1100; Estes v. Worthington, 22 Fed. Rep. 822; Gallisher v. Cadwell, 145 U. S. 369, 38 L. ed. 798; Harwood v. Chicago & C. Air Line R. Co. 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 78, 21 L. ed. 558; Ticin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. ed. 823; Brown v. Buena Vista County, 95 U. S. 157, 24 L. ed. 423; Hayward v. Eliot Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 611, 24 L. ed. 856; Holgate v. Euton, 116 U. S. 33, 29 L. ed. 538; Davison v. Davis, 125 U. S. 90, 31 L. ed. 635; Société Foncière et Agricole v. Milliken, 135 U. S. 804, 34 L. ed. 208.

Plaintiff claims that it has been organized only under the statute for the organization of charitable institutions, and yet it is here complaining to a court of equity that another organization is doing a charitable work. Such a proceeding as this is, certainly an anomaly, and finds a precedent only in the ancient case reported by St. Luke, in which one of the apostles complained to the Master that he had found certain persons performing miracles and doing good in His name, and that he forbade them.

Luke ix., 49. See also Coffeen v. Brunton, 5 McLean, 256; Filley v. Child, 16 Blatchf. 876.

Messrs. Longueville & McCarthy and Lyon & Lenehan, for appellee:

When the plaintiff was incorporated it obtained from the state of Iowa its franchises, the first and most important of which is its name.

The name of a corporation is a part of its franchise and therefore property, and will be protected in equity no matter what its objects or purposes are, as long as they are legal.

Waterman, Corp. § 31, High, Inj. § 1081; Newby v. Oregon Cent. R. Co. 1 Deady, 609; Paulino v. Portuguese Ben. Asso. 18 R. I. —, 20 L. R. A. 272; Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1358; International Trust Co. v. International Loan & T. Co. 153 Mass. 271, 10 L. R. A. 758; United States Mercantile Rep. Co. v. United States Reporting & C. Asso. 21 Abb. N. C. 115; Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 402, 27 L. R. A. 42.

The natural consequence of the wrongful appropriation of a corporate name must be to injure business and rights of the corporation in some degree by destroying or confusing its identity. The act is an illegal one and must be presumed to have been done with an intent to cause results which naturally flow from it.

Waterman, Corp. § 31; Paulino v. Portuguese Ben. Asso. supra.

Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. supra, fully discusses the question, and denies the right of persons who allow the use of their names in forming the original corporation to use the same in another corporate name, and puts it on the ground of an estoppel.

31 L. R. A.

A corporation may by injunction prevent other persons from using its name to the injury of its trade.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 184.

The case is analogous to, if not stronger than, that of a piracy upon an established trademark.

Bell v. Locke, 8 Paige, 75, 34 Am. Dec. 371; Taylor v. Carpenter, 11 Paige, 292, 42 Am. Dec. 114; Partridge v. Menck, 2 Barb. Ch. 102, 47 Am. Dec. 281; Williams, Eq. 402, 403.

A corporate name is regarded as a trademark, and as such it is entitled to the protection of a court of equity.

High, Inj. 3d ed. § 1081; Paulino v. Portuguese Ben. Asso. 18 R. I. —, 20 L. R. A. 272.

It is one of the duties of the supreme lodge to organize and establish grand lodges, and there can be but one grand lodge in a state.

Supreme Lodge Const. § 25.

Within this power the supreme lodge chartered the plaintiff in 1873 as the Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Iowa. That was the only name that it could have under section 26 of the Constitution of the Supreme Lodge. (Abst. 108.) That was the name given to it, and when it gave that name to plaintiff the supreme lodge had exhausted its power in this respect, and had devoted itself of all power to organize any other grand lodge in Iowa, as long, at least, as plaintiff existed.

District Grand Lodge No. 5, I. O. of B. B. v. Jedidjah Lodge No. 7, I. O. of B. B. 65 Md. 236; Goodman v. Jedidjah Lodge No. 7, I. O. of B. B. 67 Md. 117; State v. Miller, 66 Iowa, 26; State v. Nichols, 78 Iowa, 747.

The unlawful business of the defendants specially injures the plaintiff because the defendants use its names and methods. In fact, they claim to be the plaintiff. If the name used and business transacted are a colorable imitation or may cause confusion, injury to the plaintiff will be presumed and an injunction will lie.

Re United States Mercantile Reporting & C. Agency, 115 N. Y. 176; Drummond Tobacco Co. v. Randle, 114 Ill. 412; United States Mercantile Rep. Co. v. United States Reporting & C. Co. 21 Abb. N. C. 115.

The acts of the defendants are in the nature of a continuing trespass.

Pom. Eq. Jur. 1st ed. § 1358.

The party injured has the right to maintain an action in a case of continuing injury.

Wood, Lim. Act. § 180, notes; United States Mercantile Rep. Co. v. United States Mercantile & C. Co. supra.

If the matter in dispute between the parties has, during the time when the delay occurred, been the subject of litigation, the plaintiff's delay is sufficiently excused.

Pacific R. Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 111 U. S. 505, 28 L. ed. 498; Comins v. Culver, 35 N. J. Eq. 94; Galloway v. Barr, 12 Ohio, 354; Cox v. Montgomery, 43 Ill. 110; Cotton v. Wood, 25 Iowa, 43; Denham v. Watson, 24 Neb. 779; Sanders v. Jacob, 20 Mo. App. 96.

Mere lapse of time upon the part of the plaintiff after learning of the infringement of its rights will not deprive it of relief in equity.

High, Inj. 3d ed. § 1101.

Deemer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The pleadings in this case are very voluminous, covering more than 160 closely printed pages of the abstract. We cannot do more than set out the substance of the allegation which we deem material to a proper determination of the case, and must, of necessity, avoid even a reference to many matters which are pleaded and argued by the counsel, for the reason that they would obscure the real points at issue as we understand them. The plaintiff claims: That it is a mutual benefit association doing a life insurance business in this state under the name in which it brings this suit, under authority from the auditor of state. That it was originally incorporated under its present name in Scott county, in June, 1875; afterwards reincorporated in Blackhawk county in February, 1884, and received its certificate to do business from the auditor of state in July, 1898. That it does business through subordinate lodges organized in different parts of the state, and now consists of 217 lodges, with a membership of over 9,000. That the defendants are an unincorporated society, doing the same business as plaintiff, and under the same name, within the state of Iowa, and that it has lodges in different localities, with the same name and numbers as those organized by plaintiff. That it has heretofore been determined by this court, in the cases of State v. Miller, 66 Iowa, 26, and State v. Nichols, 78 Iowa, 747, that plaintiff is the Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of Iowa, and that defendants are now falsely and fraudulently claiming to be the lawful grand lodge, and entitled to do business as such, and are unlawfully using and doing business under plaintiff's corporate name, in fraud of the rights of plaintiff, and to its great damage and detriment. The defendants, in answer, admitted that plaintiff's predecessors adopted articles of incorporation as alleged, but averred that they were not in accordance with chapter 65 of the Acts of the 21st General Assembly. Admitted that plaintiff received a certificate from the auditor of state, authorizing it to do business as a mutual benefit society; but averred that it was wrongfully issued, and that the articles of incorporation were never submitted to the attorney general as required by law. Alleged that the only question determined in the cases referred to by plaintiff was as to the right of certain persons to hold office in the association, and that no other question was adjudicated. Denied that the original corporation organized in Scott county is the same as plaintiff. Defendants averred that they are members of an unincorporated society doing business under the name of the Grand Lodge Ancient Order of United Workmen of Iowa, but denied that they are doing a life insurance business on the mutual assessment plan. Admitted that some of the defendants are officers of this unincorporated society. Admitted that it had subordinate lodges instituted at different places where plaintiff also had lodges; but averred that its lodges were first instituted, and existed at these places before those organized by plaintiff came into existence. And defendants denied each and every other claim of the plaintiff. Defendants further averred that the fraternal organization known as the "Ancient Order of United Workmen" was organized in the year 1868, in the state of Pennsylvania, under the same plan as the association of which defendants are members; that afterwards, in the year 1870, an organization was perfected in the same state, known as the "Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W. of Pennsylvania," and afterwards by authority of this grand lodge, subordinate lodges were instituted in Ohio, Kentucky, Iowa, and other states; and afterwards by authority of the grand lodge of Pennsylvania the subordinate lodges in the other states organized grand lodges in their respective states; and afterwards, on February 11, 1878, there was organized at Cincinnati, Ohio, by delegates from the several grand lodges, a supreme lodge, with supreme legislative power in all matters pertaining to the order throughout the United States and Canada; that said supreme lodge was authorized to institute new lodges within the several states, and in pursuance thereof, in the month of November, 1878, did charter and institute a number of lodges, and on the 27th day of November, 1878, issued a charter authorizing the Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Iowa; that said organization was instituted and chartered upon the express condition that it should be subordinate to, and recognize the authority of, and abide by the rules and decisions of, the supreme lodge. And defendants further averred that the name "Ancient Order of United Workmen," and the name "Grand Lodge Ancient Order of United Workmen of Iowa," originated and first became known to the public in the manner and by the means above set forth. They further averred that the Ancient Order of United Workmen was a fraternal organization, having for its objects the union into a fraternal brotherhood of male persons over twenty-one and under fifty years of age, regardless of nationality, political preferences, or denominational distinctions; the adoption of such steady work as would enable the members to make themselves known; to enhance and give equal consideration to all classes and kinds of labor; to improve the moral, intellectual, and social condition of its members; to hold lectures, read essays, discuss inventions and improvements, encourage research in art, science, and literature, and to establish and maintain libraries where practicable; to create funds in aid of the sick or disabled members, and to pledge to members the payment of a stipulated sum to such beneficiary as a deceased member may designate; to improve the moral, mental, and social condition of the members, and to create, hold, and manage and disburse a beneficiary fund for the relief of members of said organization and their families under such rules as are prescribed by the Supreme Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of the United States. Defendants further averred that the fraternal features of the organization are fully carried out by the supreme lodge and by the grand lodge to which defendants belong, and that the payment of stated sums to the families of deceased members is only an incidental feature of the objects of the organization, and that the amount paid is solely by and out of the funds of the grand lodge of the state of Iowa from contributions made by members within its jurisdiction. Defendants further averred that the association with which they are connected is not an association for pecuniary profit; that it declares no dividends, employs no agents, and pays no commission for procuring its business; that only those who are actually employed in clerical work and in the work of organization of new lodges receive any compensation. The defendants further pleaded that prior to the time of the adoption of the articles of incorporation under and by virtue of which plaintiffs are exercising corporate powers, the persons adopting the same and those co-operating with them had revoked their connection with and subordination to the supreme lodge, and adopted certain resolutions of secession from the supreme lodge, and on account thereof the charter of the grand lodge was declared forfeited by the supreme lodge; and that ever since said time plaintiffs have falsely and without authority pretended to act as members of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and as a grand lodge, for the purpose of carrying on life insurance only, and as a corporation for pecuniary profit. Defendants further alleged that a number of lodges in this state at the time of the secession continued to recognize their submission to the supreme lodge, and at the time plaintiffs adopted their articles of incorporation and renounced allegiance to the supreme lodge these aforesaid subordinate lodges recognized their subordination to the supreme lodge, and are still acting under, and still retain the original charters granted them by authority of, the supreme lodge; and that at the time plaintiffs organized as an independent organization and renounced their subordination to and connection with the supreme lodge, the charter of the grand lodge was restored to those who recognized the authority of the supreme body; and the grand lodge constituted by delegates duly elected and chosen by those subordinate lodges was recognized by the supreme lodge as the rightful grand lodge of the order in the state of Iowa, and has ever since used and enjoyed the name and title of the "Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of the United Workmen of Iowa."

31 L. R. A.

In the third count of the answer defendants pleaded that they and their predecessors in office have used the name in controversy for ten years next before the commencement of this suit, to the knowledge and with the acquiescence of plaintiff during the entire time. They also averred that in the month of May, 1882, the organization of which they are members had subordinate lodges in the state, recognizing their allegiance to the supreme lodge, with only about 320 members, but that since that time and up to the date of the commencement of this suit the number has increased to about 9,500 members, belonging to 112 lodges, loyal to the supreme lodge. That the loyal grand lodge has endeared itself to the people by reason of the integrity and ability of its management, and that plaintiff is now seeking to take advantage of, appropriate, and monopolize the same; that plaintiff failed and neglected to assert any exclusive right to the name until the same became of value; and that it is now estopped, by reason of its laches, from instituting or prosecuting this suit. Defendants further averred that the method of doing business adopted by them has been officially recognized by the attorney general and auditor of state with full knowledge of all facts, and upon the faith of such recognition its members have increased, and thousands of persons have been paying money and contributing to death losses relying upon the loyal grand lodge paying $2,000 to their beneficiaries in case of death; and that to now enjoin defendants from meeting their obligations and making assessments would be inequitable, and operate as a hardship and fraud upon these members. They further aver that many persons have become members of their organization during the past ten years who have during this lapse of time arrived at that age, and suffered such disabilities, as to render it impossible for them to procure benefits for their families in case of death, and many others cannot procure these benefits without large additional expense. In an amendment to the answer the defendants averred that the association to which they belong does not issue any contract of indemnity or insurance in the name of the grand lodge, nor issue any obligation on which an action can be maintained; that the fund provided to be paid on the death of a member, and known as the "Beneficiary Fund," is the proceeds of a voluntary payment made by each member of the order; that the grand lodge makes no call for contributions for the purpose of paying any particular beneficiary, nor can any such call be made; that, while it issues a benefit certificate, it contains no promise to pay, and no contract or obligation whatever, and the same is only issued for the purpose of identifying the members and their designated beneficiaries.

The plaintiff's motion was to strike out certain matters stated in the answer, because (1) they were legal conclusions, and the demurrer was for the reason that the matters stated in the answer constituted no defense to plaintiff's cause of action; (2) because it appears from the answer that plaintiff is entitled to the exclusive use of the name in question, and that defendants are using the same illegally; (3) because the answer shows that defendants are carrying on life insurance on the assessment plan, under plaintiff's name, in violation of its corporate rights. Plaintiff also demurred to the counts or divisions of the answer pleading the statute of limitations and laches on the part of the plaintiff. The lower court sustained plaintiff's motion and demurrer, and the appeal is from these rulings.

It is apparent that the principal question for determination is the right of the plaintiff to the exclusive use of the name "Grand Lodge Ancient Order of United Workmen of Iowa," and of the letters more commonly used, "G. L. A. O. U. W. of Iowa." It is argued that by reason of the fact that it incorporated under this name, and was given a certificate by the auditor of state to do business thereunder, it became entitled to the exclusive use of the name; that its corporate name is property, which may be protected by injunction. It also insists that defendants are doing a life insurance business upon the mutual assessment plan, without authority and illegally, and that in so doing it is damaging the business and good will of the plaintiff. It is no doubt true that, except as limited by section 1768 of McClain's Code (Acts 21st Gen. Assem. chap. 65, § 3), a corporation may organize for the purpose of conducting a life insurance business under whatever name it may choose to adopt, provided it does not infringe on the established rights of some other organization or association already in existence under the same or a similar name. And it seems to be well settled that the name of a corporation, while not a part of its franchise, is, to a certain extent, property, and that it will be protected in a proper case on principles somewhat analogous to those applied to trademarks. Holmes, B. & II. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; High, Inf. § 1081; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 3d ed. § 699, and cases cited; 1 Thomp. Corp. §§ 284-296. The name of a corporation is not, in this state, a franchise, for the selection may be made at the pleasure of the incorporators, or it may be acquired by usage; and its right to the use of the name, it seems to us, can be no greater or different in principle than that of an individual. An individual may use his own name in his business, even though he may thereby interfere with or injure the business of another person bearing the same name, provided he does not resort to any artifice or contrivance for the purpose of producing the impression that the establishments are identical, or do anything calculated to mislead. Meneely v. Meneely, 62 N. Y. 429, 20 Am. Rep. 489; Ottoman Cakery Co. v. Dane, 95 Ill. 203; Upton, Trademarks, 104, 105 et seq.; Gilman v. Hunnewell, 122 Mass. 139; Rogers v. Taintor, 97 Mass. 291; Adams, Trademarks, pp. 115, 116. The rule seems to be clearly stated in Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 462, 27 L. R. A. 42, where Andrews, Ch. J., speaking for the court, among other things, said: "In respect to corporate names the same rule applies as to the names of firms or individuals, and an injunction lies to restrain the simulation and use by one corporation of the name of a prior corporation which tends to create confusion and to enable the later corporation to obtain, by reason of the similarity of names, the business of the prior one. The courts interfere in these cases, not on the ground that the state may not affix such corporate names as it may elect to the entities it creates, but to prevent fraud, actual or constructive." From the allegations of the defendants' answer it will be seen that the Ancient Order of United Workmen originated in the state of Pennsylvania in the year 1868; that a grand lodge was organized in that state in the year 1870, and soon after grand lodges were organized in other states; that in February, 1873, these grand lodges organized a supreme lodge, and that this supreme lodge was authorized to institute lodges in any state, subordinate to its jurisdiction; and that when any ten lodges existed in a state it was the duty of the supreme lodge to charter a grand lodge in such state. Pursuant to these regulations a grand lodge was chartered in Iowa in 1873, and the officers of this grand lodge adopted articles of incorporation as a benevolent society in November, 1873, for the purpose of creating, holding, managing, and disbursing a beneficiary fund for the relief of members of the corporation and their families under such laws and rules and regulations as are now and shall hereafter be prescribed by the Supreme Lodge A. O. U. W. of the United States. In 1893 the schism took place, and plaintiff adopted certain resolutions of secession, and in 1884 it adopted the articles of incorporation under and by virtue of which it is now transacting business as a mutual benefit association. Those who remained loyal to the supreme lodge were recognized by it, and to this day have used and enjoyed the name of the "Grand Lodge Ancient Order of United Workmen of Iowa." From this it appears that the name was conferred by the supreme lodge of the United States upon an organization which was subordinate to and recognized its authority, and that the name is still used by the defendants under the original authority conferred upon the organization to which they retain allegiance. The question arises, What right, if any, has the plaintiff, a seceding body, by reason of its incorporation, to the exclusive use of the name? It seems to us it has no such right. The defendants have the prior right to the use of the name, as they had been using it by permission of the supreme lodge continuously from the time of the organization of the original grand lodge up to the present. The fact that they are not incorporated is wholly immaterial, for they have been doing business under this name with the implied assent of the state authorities during all these years. They have not adopted a name selected by the plaintiff for the purpose of defrauding, or to create the impression that they are identical with the plaintiff, nor have they done anything calculated to mislead or deceive the public. The facts appear to be that the plaintiffs, in amending their articles of incorporation and in procuring their certificate from the state auditor, have taken a name which was theretofore in use by the defendants, and of which they cannot be deprived simply because the plaintiff sees fit to use it as its corporate name. The question here is not whether defendant is doing an unlawful business, but whether it has the right to the use of the name, be its business lawful or unlawful; and this distinction should not be lost sight of. We do not think that a corporation can, under the statutes of this state, select a name which is then in use by some other person or persons, and, after recording its articles, insist that this person or persons must abandon the use of the name they have previously selected and under which they are operating. If any damage results to a corporation which selects its name in this manner, it is due to its own folly and indiscretion in selecting a name which is already in existence, and which is used by another body, upon which the name was originally conferred.

In the case of Ottoman Cahvey Co. v. Dane, supra, defendant Dane had in 1875 organized a corporation under the laws of the state of Michigan known as the Ottoman Cahvey Company, and had carried on business as such corporation in the city of Chicago, Ill., from and after that date. On September 24, 1876, the plaintiff organized a corporation under the same name under the laws of the state of Illinois, and thereupon brought suit against the Michigan corporation to restrain it from doing business under the name by which it was organized, averring that the Michigan corporation had been dissolved by the supreme court of Michigan, and no longer had authority to act in the capacity of an incorporated company. The supreme court of Illinois held that, though the defendants had no right to act in their capacity as an incorporated company, yet they had a clear right to continue in business under the name Ottoman Cahvey Company, either as partners or otherwise; and that the plaintiff corporation had no right to assume a name under which defendants were carrying on their business, and invoke the aid of a court of equity to restrain defendants from the use of the same name. The court, among other things, said: "So far as the complainant was concerned, the defendants had the prior right to the use of the name, as they had conducted their business under the name assumed continuously from the date of the organization of the Michigan corporation; and that the defendants might use the name Ottoman Cahvey Company as well without a legal organization as they could had they been legally organized under the laws of Michigan." The case of Black Rabbit Assn. v. Munday, 21 Abb. N. C. 99, is also closely in point. The plaintiff was incorporated under the name of the Black Rabbit Association. Defendants were unincorporated, but used the same name. It appears that prior to the incorporation of plaintiff an unincorporated organization existed by the name in controversy, and that there had been a schism and division, and that the persons adhering to plaintiff had incorporated under the state laws. The court, in its opinion, among other things, said: "The organization sought to be enjoined is one that was in existence and known prior to the formation of plaintiff, and plaintiff, by incorporating itself by a name already in existence, and used prior to its organization, seeks to restrain the other party from its use." It refused the injunction asked by plaintiff, and held that plaintiff had not acquired the exclusive right to the name by the fact of incorporating under the statute. See also Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. La Belle Wagon Works, 82 Wis. 546, 16 L. R. A. 453; Corbin v. Gould, 133 U. S. 308, 33 L. ed. 611; Van Beil v. Prescott, 82 N. Y. 630; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 311, 20 L. ed. 581. This is the doctrine applied to trademarks. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf. 599; Taylor v. Carpenter, 11 Paige, 297, 42 Am. Dec. 114; Meriden Britannia Co. v. Parker, 39 Conn. 450, 12 Am. Rep. 401; Rogers v. Rogers, 53 Conn. 121, 55 Am. Rep. 78. The right to protection of a trademark depends upon priority of selection or appropriation. Gilloit v. Esterbrook, 47 Barb. 463; Beach, Inj. §§ 748, 749; Columbia Mill Co. v. Alcorn, 150 U. S. 460, 37 L. ed. 1144.

It is pertinent to inquire how plaintiff obtained the right to the exclusive use of the name. Surely not by reason of having coined or invented it. The terms "Grand Lodge" and "of Iowa" could not be exclusively appropriated, either as a firm name or as a trademark. One is merely geographical, and the other descriptive; and either could be used by any person without infringement upon the rights of others. The term "Ancient Order of United Workmen" did not originate with the plaintiff. It had a well-defined and recognized meaning long before plaintiff adopted it, and was applied, not only in this state, but in others, both to corporations and unincorporated societies, either fraternal or beneficial or both, from the time of the organization of the society in Pennsylvania, in the year 1868, up to the present. Plaintiff had no right, for the same reason, to exclusively appropriate a name which, prior to the time of its incorporation, had a well-defined meaning, and which was properly applied to societies already in existence. It did not obtain the right to use the word by assignment or transfer. In fact, it has renounced its allegiance to the body which originated the name, and which assumes to control and confer it. It is claimed, however, that the auditor of state gave plaintiff the right to use it under the provisions of McClain's Code, before cited, which are as follows:

Sec. 1763: "No corporation or association organized under this act shall take any name in use by any other organization, or so closely resembling such name as to mislead the public."

It is sufficient to say in answer to this claim that as to the defendants the determination of the auditor is not conclusive, even if it be conceded that he acted judicially in granting plaintiffs a certificate, and found that plaintiffs were entitled to use the name. Defendants were not advised of any attempt to wrest their name from them, and could not appeal from the judgment of the auditor; nor could they sue out a writ of error to test the legality of his conclusion. See Birby v. Adams County, 49 Iowa, 507; Vose v. Morton, 4 Cusin. 27, 50 Am. Dec. 750; Griswold v. Stewart, 4 Cow. 458. They are therefore not bound by the certificate of the auditor.

Further claim is made that plaintiff has exclusive right to its name under the decisions of this court in the cases referred to in plaintiff's petition. It is sufficient answer to this to say that no such question was made in either of these cases. Moreover, the corporation was not a party to either of these suits, and, if there had been a determination of this question, it would not be binding upon the parties to this litigation. Newby v. Oregon Cent. R. Co. 1 Dedy, 610, Fed. Cas. No. 10,144; People v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 535; Geekie v. Kirby Carpenter Co. 106 U. S. 886, 27 L. ed. 160; Smith v. State, 21 Ark. 294. We think the defendants' answer pleads facts which clearly show that plaintiff was not entitled to the exclusive right to the use of the name, and that the demurrer to the second count of the defendants' answer should have been overruled.

It is argued on behalf of appellee, however, that the defendants are and were unlawfully engaged in business as a life insurance company under the mutual assessment plan without complying with the laws of the state, and that for this reason it is not entitled to the use of the name. The question as to the character and legality of the defendant's organization is argued with much skill and learning by counsel on either side of this controversy, but we do not find it necessary to determine whether defendant is an insurance company, or an insurance company and a secret society combined, or a fraternal society pure and simple; for, if it be conceded that it is an insurance company, and that it is doing business without complying with the laws of the state, it is doubtful, to say the least, whether plaintiff may bring a suit to wind it up, and enjoin it from doing business under a certain name. As a general rule, such an action must be brought by the state. Beach, Inj. § 13; McDonald v. English, 85 Ill. 232; Springer v. Walters, 139 Ill. 419. By the provisions of McClain's Code (sec. 1776) it seems to be made the duty of the auditor of state and attorney general to institute such suit. But let it be assumed that the plaintiff may bring such an action, it does not follow that this gives it the exclusive right to the use of the name. This depends upon other principles, which we have heretofore attempted to elucidate. Concede, however, that plaintiff may bring its suit to enjoin defendants from using the name and conducting their business because it is unlawful, yet it does not follow that plaintiff is entitled to relief. The plaintiff came into being as a separate organization at the time it seceded from the loyal body and adopted amended articles of incorporation, in the year 1884. Defendants were at that time doing business under the name originally conferred upon them by the supreme lodge, and they continued to carry on this same business up to the time of the institution of this suit, which was in December, 1893. They had a large increase of membership, paid many death claims to the families of their members, and have, under the allegations of their answer, been allowed to proceed with full knowledge and acquiescence of the insurance authorities of the state. Many of the members of the defendant, according to the allegations of the answer, would now be unable, on account of age or disability, to procure membership in any other association, and many others could not procure it without large additional expense. Plaintiff has had knowledge of these facts during all of these years, and yet has taken no action until the commencement of this suit. It seems to us that it is clearly barred and estopped by its laches from maintaining this suit. And we are inclined to the view, although it is not necessary to determine the question, that the suit is barred by the five-years statute of limitations.

31 L. R. A.

Plaintiff's cause of action to enjoin the use of the name accrued at the time it was legally incorporated in the year 1884. It was not then required to have a certificate from the auditor of state authorizing it to do business, for the Acts of the 21st General Assembly did not take effect until the year 1886. It could have obtained its certificate from the auditor, if it were necessary to do so to authorize it to bring suit, in the year 1886, and thereupon could have immediately commenced its suit against the defendants. It could not, by delay in procuring its certificate, prolong the operation of the statute. Baker v. Johnson County, 33 Iowa, 151; Hintrager v. Traut, 69 Iowa, 746.

The fact that damage done to plaintiff is continuing—which must be conceded—is not controlling, for this is not an action to recover damages at law, but a suit in equity to enjoin and restrain the defendants from the use of a name. The cause fully accrued when the defendants proceeded with their business in violation of the plaintiff's rights. We have held in law actions for damages that when the act of the defendant was complete before the period of limitation, and the result only was within the statute, a suit for damages was barred. Powers v. Council Bluffs, 45 Iowa, 652, 24 Am. Rep. 792. See also Baldrin v. Oskaloosa Gaslight Co. 57 Iowa, 51; Williams v. Mills County, 71 Iowa, 367. But, aside from all this, it would be most inequitable to allow plaintiff at this late day to destroy the business built up by the defendants. Many innocent persons would be compelled to suffer, and much confusion and inconvenience would result to all concerned.

If it should be conceded that the plaintiff had at one time the exclusive right to the use of its name, we think that it has, by its acquiescence and laches, closed the door to relief in equity. It is an undoubted rule with reference to trademarks that reasonable diligence must be used in making application for relief against piracy and proceedings should be instituted promptly upon discovery. High, Inj. § 1100; Filley v. Child, 16 Blatchf. 376, Fed. Cas. No. 4,787; Galliter v. Cadwell, 145 U. S. 368, 36 L. ed. 738; Coffeen v. Bruntun, 5 McLean, 256, Fed. Cas. No. 2,947; Browne, Trademarks, § 479; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 258, 24 L. ed. 833; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Garner, 55 Barb. 151. Plaintiffs say, however, that the former litigation with reference to this association is a sufficient excuse for not bringing this suit promptly upon discovery of defendants' acts. We do not think this is true. The actions referred to were to determine who were entitled to the offices in the association. The first case was decided in the year 1885, and plaintiff could have then commenced its suit, if not before. But neither of these cases, in our judgment, operated to suspend the running of the statute. See McClain's

Code, § 3742. We are very clearly of the opinion that the demurrer to the third division of count of the defendants' answer, at least as to that part pleading laches, acquiescence, and estoppel, should have been overruled.

A great many other questions are discussed by counsel, but, as they are not regarded as controlling, we must decline to consider them.

Our conclusions are that under the allegations of the answer—First, plaintiff had no right to the exclusive use of the name; second, that, if it had such right, it has lost it by acquiescence and laches; third, that if it be conceded that defendant is doing business without authority, plaintiff is in no position to complain. For these reasons the demurrer to the second and third count of the defendants' answer should have been overruled.

Reversed.

Kinne, J., took no part.

R. J. PARK et al., Appts.,
v.

Hiram CHAMPLIN et al.

(.....Iowa.....)

The majority of the members of a Free Will Baptist society cannot against the will of the minority transfer property obtained for the use and benefit of that denomination, which holds the doctrines of Arminius, to the Baptist denomination, which is Calvinistic, notwithstanding a provision in the manual of church government of the Free Baptist denomination to the effect that a church in good standing may have a letter of dismission and recommendation to another evangelical denomination, as this appears to refer to the church as an ecclesiastical, rather than as a purely legal, body.

(October 19, 1895.)

APPEAL by complainants from a decree of the District Court for Black Hawk County dissolving an injunction which had been granted to restrain defendants from withdrawing from the Free Baptist denomination and joining the Baptist denomination in such a way as to take certain church property with them. Reversed.

Statement by Robinson, J. :

Action in equity to enjoin the defendants from withdrawing the First Free Baptist Church of Waterloo, Iowa, from the Free Baptist, and uniting it with the Baptist, denomination. The plaintiffs filed a petition in which an injunction was asked. A temporary injunction was granted, and thereafter an answer was filed, and also a motion, NOTE.—In connection with the above case, see also Mt. Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore (Iowa) 13 L. R. A. 198, and note.

As to change of doctrine, see also Krecker v. Shirey (Pa.) 29 L. R. A. 476; Philomath College v. Wyatt (Or.) 26 L. R. A. 68, and footnote thereto.

31 L. R. A.

supported by affidavits, to dissolve the injunction. Affidavits in resistance were filed, and the cause was submitted on the motion, which was sustained. From that order the plaintiffs appeal.

Mr. F. C. Platt, for appellants:

Where a conveyance is merely to a religious corporation by its name, the corporate or denominational name, in connection with the contemporaneous acts of the corporators, will be a sufficient guide as to the nature and objects of the trust.

2 Potter, Corp. § 572; Bear v. Heasley, 98 Mich. 279, 24 L. R. A. 615; Roshi's Appeal, 69 Pa. 465, 8 Am. Rep. 275; Harrison v. Hoyle, 24 Ohio St. 263; Wiswell v. First Cong. Church, 14 Ohio St. 44; App v. United Lutheran & G. Ref. Cong. 6 Pa. 201; Strong, Relations of Civil Law to Church Polity, pp. 45-59; Mannix v. Purcell, 46 Ohio St. 102, 2 L. R. A. 758; Curd v. Wallace, 7 Dana, 190, 32 Am. Dec. 85.

The persons by whom this church was built solemnly covenanted before God to labor together for the building up of the Free Baptist Church and denomination.

The covenant is a part of the by-laws of the church and as such it is binding upon the corporators and the members as a part of the organic law of the corporation, as though a part of the certificate of incorporation.

Bear v. Heasley, 98 Mich. 279, 24 L. R. A. 615; Dressen v. Brameier, 56 Iowa, 756.

Property acquired by a church society or corporation while in connection with, or in subordination to, some ecclesiastical organization, denomination, or form of government, cannot be transferred to another denomination, even though a majority of the members of the society favor such transfer, nor may a religious society so endowed unite with some other denominational organization, or become literally independent, or renounce its faith and doctrine, and adopt others.

McGinnis v. Watson, 41 Pa. 14; Schnorr's Appeal, 67 Pa. 146, 5 Am. Rep. 415; Roshi's Appeal, 69 Pa. 466, 8 Am. Rep. 275; 2 Potter, Corp. §§ 566-578; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 781, 783, 797-799; Avery v. Baker, 27 Neb. 388; Hendrickson v. Shotwell, 2 N. J. Eq. 577; Baker v. Ducker, 79 Cal. 365; Beach, Priv. Corp. p. 583, § 358; High, Inj. § 314; First Cong. Church v. Stewart, 43 Ill. 81; Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 16 Am. Rep. 82; Hackney v. Vauter, 39 Kan. 615; Whitecar v. Michenor, 37 N. J. Eq. 6; Dressen v. Brameier, 56 Iowa, 756; Bear v. Heasley, 98 Mich. 279, 24 L. R. A. 615; Bird v. St. Mark's Church, 62 Iowa, 567; Rottmann v. Bartling, 22 Neb. 376; Mt. Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83 Iowa, 138, 13 L. R. A. 198.

Not only profession of the faith of the church, but submission to its government and discipline, is necessary to membership therein.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 779.

Proof that the property is in an unprosperous condition is immaterial. The court will not decree a dissolution of the corporation against the will of the minority.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 827.

And it is immaterial what amounts of money have been paid for church purposes by the minority. Their rights do not depend upon that question.

Draesen v. Brameier, 56 Iowa, 761.

A fund given for the benefit of a voluntary religious society accrues to the use of the same society after incorporation.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 802, 804, note, 3; Miller v. Chittenden, 4 Iowa, 252.

The fact that defendants withdrew from the church and formed a new congregation amounted to a relinquishment of all their rights in regard to the church from which they withdrew.

Bouldin v. Alexander, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 131, 21 L. ed. 69; Methodist Episcopal Church v. Wood, 5 Ohio, 288; Harper v. Straus, 14 B. Mon. 48; Venable v. Coffman, 2 W. Va. 310; Atty. Gen. v. Dublin, 38 N. H. 459; Hadden v. Chorn, 8 B. Mon. 70; Beach, Priv. Corp. p. 183, ¶ 99; 2 Potter, Corp. § 567.

On an attempt to divert the church property the parties cease to be trustees, and may be enjoined accordingly.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 825; Rottmann v. Bartling, 22 Neb. 375.

The First Free Baptist Church of Waterloo, by its articles of incorporation, its by-laws, its membership in Cedar Valley Quarterly Meeting, and its connection through that with the Iowa Yearly Meeting, and the General Conference of Free Baptists, acknowledged the authority, doctrines, and practice of the Free Baptist denomination and became amenable thereto.

Bird v. St. Mark's Church, 62 Iowa, 567.

Where property interests are threatened or affected, a court of equity will extend its strongest arm in protection.

Beach, Priv. Corp. p. 124, ¶ 60, note, p. 183, ¶¶ 99, 100, p. 588, ¶ 358; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 795, 797, notes 3, 4, pp. 800, 825; 2 Potter, Corp. §§ 565, 569, 572, 581, 582, 591; Mt. Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83 Iowa, 188, 13 L. R. A. 198; 1 High, Inj. § 314. Messrs. Alford & Gates for appellees.

Robinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petition alleges and the answer admits the following facts: On the 27th day of April, 1868, the "Waterloo Free Will Baptist Society" was duly incorporated under the laws of this state as a religious association. The object of the association, as declared in the certificate of incorporation, was "the building and erection of a church or house of worship, and the diffusion of the gospel." In December, 1892, the certificate was so amended by a unanimous vote of the society as to change its name to the "First Free Baptist Church of Waterloo," and provide for five instead of three trustees. On the 4th of January, 1894, at a meeting held by members of the church, a resolution was adopted, a copy of which is as follows: "We, the members of the First Free Will Baptist Church of Waterloo, Iowa, resolve that the name of the said church be changed from the one by which it has formerly been known to the 'Free Baptist Church of Waterloo, Iowa,' by which name it shall hereafter be known, and that article 1st of its certificate of incorporation be amended accordingly." The 31 L. R. A.

article referred to was the one which gave the church its name. The petition also contains averments, some of which are not admitted by the answer, to the following effect: The amendment adopted in December, 1892, did not change the articles of faith or belief of the church. The church is under the patronage of the General Free Baptist Conference, and it is particularly under the patronage and is a member of the Cedar Valley Quarterly Meeting, a regularly constituted body, comprised of nine churches. The vote on the adoption of the resolution of January 4, 1894, was twenty-five for, and five against, it. At the same meeting the following was adopted: "Resolved, that we, the members of the Second Baptist Church, of Waterloo, Iowa, appoint the trustees of said church a committee to inform the Baptist denomination that we, as a church, desire membership in their denomination, measures having been adopted by us which we trust will bring about such a union." This was voted against by the same persons who opposed the other resolution. The religious belief and the articles of faith of the Baptist Church or denomination are radically different from those of the Free Baptist Church, and each has a separate and distinct organization, and is governed by its own officers, laws, and rules. The petition further alleges that, by the adoption of the two resolutions set out, the persons voting therefor declared their secession from the First Free Baptist Church of Waterloo, and from the General Free Baptist Conference, and from the Cedar Valley Quarterly Meeting, and thereby abandoned the religious belief and creed of the First Free Baptist Church of Waterloo, and then and there withdrew from that church; that the property of the church was acquired for the purpose of advancing Christianity according to the religious belief, principles, and creed of the Free Baptist Church, to which the plaintiffs still adhere; that the property has been dedicated to the uses and purposes consistent with the religious belief and creed of that body; that the defendants are attempting to alienate the property of the Free Baptist Church of Waterloo, and to prevent the plaintiffs and others from enjoying those rights which have been assured them by the acquisition and dedication of that property to the purposes and uses of that church; that neither the General Free Baptist Conference nor the Cedar Valley Quarterly Meeting has, by vote or otherwise, expressed their consent to the proposed change in the certificate of incorporation of the First Free Baptist Church of Waterloo, and has not been applied to for such consent; that, if the instructions contained in the resolutions are carried out, a cloud will be cast upon the title of that church as to its real property in Waterloo, which is particularly described, and that the plaintiff and other members of the church who adhere to its religious belief will be threatened with the loss of the rights and privileges to which they are entitled as members of the church, if they are not actually deprived of them; that, if the proposed amendment is adopted, the rights of the said persons will be unlawfully infringed and invaded, and the standing of the church as a Free Baptist organization and its influence in the community for the promotion of the doctrines of the Free Baptist Church will be irreparably injured; and that the defendant trustees threaten to carry the resolutions into effect, and will do so unless restrained. The plaintiffs are two of the members of the First Free Baptist Church of Waterloo, and as such, are in good standing. That church and its trustees are made parties defendant.

The defendants contend that the First Free Baptist Church of Waterloo is an independent body, not subject to the control of any superior body; that it is at liberty to form its own creed, and does now and has always regulated its own affairs without any right of interference or control on the part of any superior or other body; that there is now no radical difference between the belief and articles of faith of that church and the Baptist Church; "that several years ago there was a very substantial difference in the articles of faith and religious beliefs of the two churches, but that for many years the two denominations have been gradually drawing nearer to each other in creed, belief, and articles of faith, the regular Baptist denomination having dropped from its creed, belief, and articles of faith the portions thereof, or the most of the portions thereof, which were repugnant to the early founders of the denomination of Free Will Baptists or Free Baptists, with which denomination the defendant church was heretofore affiliated, and at the same time the latter denomination has dropped from its creed, belief, and articles of faith, or modified, some of the tenets thereof which were originally repugnant to or materially different from the religious faith and belief of the regular Baptist denomination; that the tenets of belief of said denominations have changed, and can but change; that any attempt to anchor the beliefs of denominations immovably in the stream of time is beyond human power, opposed to progress and advancement, and an effort to halt on the great onward march of thought." The defendants further allege that the defendant church is weak in numbers; that few of them are possessed of large means; that in consequence it is impossible for the church to employ a regular or permanent pastor; that it has been without a pastor a portion of the time for several years; that in consequence many of its members have gone away, and now affiliate with other churches and that, if the resolutions are not carried into effect, other members will also attach themselves to other churches; that if the resolutions are carried out, and the Baptist denomination receives the church, its membership and revenue will be greatly increased, it will be enabled to employ a pastor permanently, and members will be prevented thereby from going to and affiliating with other churches; that it will not be necessary for any members to subscribe to the articles of faith of the Baptist denomination, because the articles of faith of the two churches are substantially the same; that, if then unable to employ a pastor, assistance will be received from the Baptist denomination, which is the larger and stronger of the two; that the only effect of carrying out the resolutions will be to change the name of the church, and place it in the Baptist denomination; that the property of the church described in the petition was conveyed to it without qualification or limitation, and without dedication to any particular use or purpose; that it is held subject to the will of a majority of the church members, and that the cause of Christianity will be advanced by the making of the proposed change; that, if it is made, the church, if received into the Baptist denomination, will continue to be a separate and independent body, with a perfect right to formulate and change its own creed or religious belief. The defendants further aver that the property of the defendant church is held without dedication to any special use; that no trust is expressed in its deed or results from its ownership; and that this court has no jurisdiction in equity of the case, the relief, if any, to which the plaintiffs are entitled, being within the defendant church.

In addition to the facts admitted by the pleadings, the evidence shows the following: The terms "Free Baptists" and "Free Will Baptists" are identical in meaning, and are used to designate persons of the same religious belief who are members of the same denomination; and the change in name adopted by the defendant church in December, 1892, had no effect upon its creed or declaration of principles, nor upon its relation to other churches. The title to the church edifice and the lot upon which it stands is vested in the defendant corporation, the First Free Baptist Church of Waterloo; and unless the defendants are prevented from carrying the resolutions of January, 1894, into effect, that organization will be withdrawn from the Free Baptist denomination, and, if received by the Baptist denomination, will become a part of it.

The change proposed, if accomplished, will transfer, not only the organization, but the property of the defendant church, to the Baptist denomination, and that will have the benefit of both the organization and its property, including that in controversy. We do not understand that any party to the action questions the fact that the property would go with the corporation; but it is claimed by the appellees that the defendant church is a civil corporation, in which a majority rule, and that each church, in both the Free Baptist and Baptist denominations, has the right to fix and adopt its articles of faith and covenant; that the only effect of the proposed change would be to place the defendant church in the Baptist denomination; and that it would there continue to be independent, without any change in its articles of faith or covenant.

The appellants claim: (1) That the church edifice, and the lot on which it is situated, have been dedicated to the use of the Free Baptist denomination, for the advancement of Christianity according to the religious beliefs of that denomination, and that therefore they cannot be transferred to any other denomination; (2) that the attempt to carry out the resolution in question is an effort to alienate the church property, and place it beyond the control of those who are adhering to the doctrine professed by the congregation and the form of worship in practice at the time of the dedication of the property and the creation of the trust; (3) that the appellees have not pursued the statutory provisions in regard to the changing of articles of incorporation of religious societies; (4) that a court of equity has jurisdiction to determine the questions affecting the property interests of the defendant church.

The questions we are required to determine are only those which relate to the property rights of the parties to this action. "Civil courts will not revise the decisions of churches or religious associations upon ecclesiastical matters, but they will interfere with such associations when rights of property or civil rights are involved." Bird v. St. Mark's Church, 62 Iowa, 573; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 799. And, when controversies of which the civil courts have jurisdiction arise in such bodies, the courts will inquire as to the purpose for which they were instituted and the rule by which they are governed, and, so far as practicable, they will be given effect. Rottmann v. Bartling, 22 Neb. 375; Atty. Gen. v. Pearson, 3 Meriv. 409; Harrison v. Hoyle, 24 Ohio St. 234.

It was said in Mt. Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83 Iowa, 147, 13 L. R. A. 198, that, "upon authority so general as to be beyond question, it is held that property given or set apart to a church or religious association for its use in the enjoyment and promulgation of its adopted faith and teachings is by said church or association held in trust for that purpose, and any number of the church or association less than the whole may not divert it therefrom." This leads us to inquire whether the property in question is held in trust. On the day on which the articles of incorporation of the defendant church were adopted and its organization perfected, the lot on which the church edifice was afterwards erected was conveyed to the society by warranty deed, which recited the payment of a consideration, but did not contain any declaration of trust. Whether the property in controversy is to be regarded as held in trust does not wholly depend upon the terms of that instrument. In determining its character, we may properly examine the articles of incorporation of the defendant church, its declaration of faith and practice when the funds for the purchase of the lot and for the erection of the building thereon were obtained, and the purpose which the funds were provided to aid. The church record book shows that persons who desired to be organized into a Free Will Baptist Church met in Waterloo in January, 1867; a council previously authorized by the Waterloo Quarterly Meeting, having been chosen, was organized: church letters were read; the church covenant was read and adopted; and a resolution to organize a church to be known as the "Free Will Baptist Church" was adopted; and the church appears to have been organized. The church covenant bound the members to labor together for the building up of the church and the denomination, to contribute for the support of the ministry and for other church expenses, to be benevolent to the needy, especially to the poor of their own church, and to sustain the benevolent enterprises of their own denomination and church, as mission, education, Sabbath schools, and moral reform. At a later day, application was made to the Waterloo Quarterly Meeting for admission to that body, and afterwards to the Cedar Valley Quarterly Meeting, to which it appears to have been admitted. In April, 1868, steps were taken to erect a church building, money was subscribed for that purpose, and the building was constructed. All that was done in the organization of the church and in procuring the property in question was in the name of the Free Will Baptist Society, and at all times until January, 1894, it appears to have acted with and as a part of the Free Baptist denomination.

We have no doubt that the property was obtained for the use and benefit of that denomination. It is said, however, that there is no practical difference between that and the Baptist denomination. They are similar in many respects, especially in matters of organization and government, and both recognized the Bible as the only infallible rule of faith and practice. But there are important differences of belief which have thus far prevented a union of the two denominations, and recent agitations for a union have shown that they will continue separate for an indefinite period of time. The evidence before us shows that the faith of the Baptist denomination is Calvinistic, and it is briefly stated as follows: "The belief in original sin or total depravity; predestination; particular redemption; effectual calling and perseverance of the saints." The Free Baptist faith is based upon the doctrines of Arminius, and is stated to be: "(1) Conditional election and reprobation, in opposition to absolute predestination. (2) Universal redemption, or that the atonement was made by Christ for all mankind, though none but believers can be partakers of the benefit. (3) That man, in order to exercise true faith, must be regenerated and renewed by the operation of the Holy Spirit, which is the gift of God. (4) That the grace which confers this is not irresistible. (5) That men may relapse from a state of grace, and die in their sins." Differences not disclosed by these statements of faith also exist. It is not any part of our duty to decide whether the difference between the respective articles of faith, covenants, and practice of the two denominations is substantial. It may be true that changes in such matters are constantly going on, and that it is beyond human power to prevent them; that in those things which make for worldly prosperity, as popularity, wealth, and numbers, the defendant church would be greatly benefited by its union with the Baptist denomination as proposed; but considerations of that kind have nothing to do with the legal rights of the parties to this action, and cannot be given weight in determining the questions of which we have jurisdiction. It is enough for the purposes of this case that the two denominations are now separate and distinct; that the property in controversy was acquired by the defendant church for the special benefit of one of them; and that the plaintiffs, being members of that church and of that denomination, object to the proposed change and insist that it shall not be made.

According to the usages of the Free Baptist denomination, it is the duty of each of its churches to unite with some Quarterly Meeting. That is composed of two or more churches of the denomination, and has a constitution for its government. The functions of the Quarterly Meeting appear to be chiefly advisory. It cannot deprive a church of its independent form of government, nor its right to discipline its own members, nor labor with individual members of the churches as such, but it has the right to labor with the church as a body, in case of unscriptural or disorderly walk, and may determine whether a church is worthy of its fellowship. Some importance is attached to a provision in the "Manual of Church Government" in regard to the business of the Quarterly Meeting, which reads as follows: "When a church in good standing requests a dismission to unite with another Quarterly Meeting, or with another Evangelical denomination, a letter of dismission and recommendation is given." It is urged that this recognizes the right of a church to unite with another Evangelical denomination, but it does not purport to authorize the majority of any church to transfer the property of the church, and appears to refer to the church as an ecclesiastical, rather than as a purely legal, body. We find nothing in the record before us to show that the Quarterly Meeting has any authority in matters of property, and nothing to show that the defendant church was so organized that a majority of its members may dispose of its property for the benefit of another denomination, either directly or indirectly, in the manner attempted in this case. The property was acquired, as stated, for the use and benefit of the Free Baptist denomination, without any condition, expressed or implied, that it might be transferred against the objections of members of the church, however few in number.

We are aware that our conclusion is not in harmony with the decisions in some of the states, especially those of New York; but it is according to the doctrine heretofore announced by this court, and appears to us to be supported by the weight of authority, and to be founded on principles of equity. It must be understood that what we have said has special reference to the rights of the defendants to transfer the property in controversy to the Baptist denomination. Since the resolutions in question cannot be carried out without affecting prejudicially the interests of the plaintiffs in that property, the defendants are enjoined from carrying them into effect. Nothing we have said is to be construed to affect any right the defendant church has to withdraw, as a church, from the Free Baptist and to unite with the Baptist denomination; but the withdrawal, if carried out, must be so effected as not to change or cloud the title to the property in controversy.

The decree of the District Court is reversed.

Given, Ch. J., dissenting:

I do not concur in the foregoing opinion. It seems clear to me that under the "Manual of Church Government," quoted in the opinion, this church, as a body, has the right to unite with any other Evangelical denomination, and to take its property with it. It is in this provision that this case differs from those cited. I do not question the doctrine that, when a church property is held exclusively for the promulgation of the faith and teachings of a particular denomination, it cannot be diverted to any other use by any number of the members less than the whole. To permit such a diversion would be a breach of the trust under which the property is held. Such is not this case. The opinion recognizes the right of this body to unite with the Baptist denomination, or, at least, declines to say that it may not. That is just what it was proceeding to do, and in the way provided, when this suit was commenced, and that is what the district court held it might do. The opinion does not prevent this church from consummating the union, but holds that it must be in such way as not to change or cloud the title to its property. If this property was held exclusively for the promulgation of the faith and teaching of the Free Baptist denomination, this would be correct, but it was not acquired nor is it held for that exclusive purpose. It was acquired by this body, and is owned and held by it for the promulgation of the faith and teachings of whatever Evangelical denomination it may see fit to unite with. It is therefore no breach of the trust under which this property was acquired and is being held to allow the owner to use it in promulgating the faith and teachings of any Evangelical denomination with which it may see fit to unite. To say otherwise is to deny to the defendant church the right to hold and use its own for the purpose for which it was acquired and is held. Whether such a union may be effected by a bare majority need not be considered, as the record shows that, of a membership of about sixty, fifty-four are in favor of the body uniting with the Baptist denomination. I think the decree of the district court should be affirmed.

Rothrock, J., concurs in this dissent.

Rehearing denied.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

William F. DE WOLF et al.

v.

Annie E. MIDDLETON et al.,

(..... R. I.)

1. Testator's intent that the heirs are to be ascertained by the statute in force when the executory devise takes effect appears where a devise giving the fee to daughters provides that if they leave no surviving issue the estate "on their decease" shall be divided among his heirs at law according to the statute of descents, their heirs and assigns forever,—especially where there would be at his death but one heir recognized by law besides the daughters, because of the alienage of a son who was nevertheless recognized by the will as a beneficiary.

2. The alienage of a son which would

NOTE.—Effect of state statutes and Constitutions upon inheritance through an alien.

- I. The English doctrine.
II. The effect of state legislation.

Upon the question of an alien's right to inherit, see note to Easton v. Huott (Ill.) post, —, (1895).

As to the effect of state Constitutions and statutes upon the question of inheritance by or from an alien, see note to Beaven v. Went (Ill.) ante, 85 (1895).

The effect of treaties upon the right of aliens to inherit will form a separate note.

As to treaty guaranties to aliens, see note to Gandolfo v. Hartman (C. C. S. D. Cal.) 16 L. R. A. 277 (1892).

Upon the question of the disability of aliens and the escheat of property, see note to American Mortg. Co. v. Tennille (Ga.) 12 L. R. A. 529 (1891), and brief in Toole v. Toole (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 465 (1899).

I. The English doctrine.

The common-law doctrine prevailed in England, until by statute, 11 & 12 Wm. III. chap. 6, all the King's natural-born subjects were enabled to trace their descent through their alien ancestors. This act was amended and explained by the statute 25 Geo. II. chap. 30, and the whole law upon the subject was subsequently re-enacted and amended by the naturalization act of 1870 (38 Vict. chap. 14), as amended by the statute 33 & 34 Vict. chap. 102, and by the act 35 & 36 Vict. chap. 30, under the provisions of which real and personal property of every description may be taken, acquired, held, and disposed of by an alien in the same manner in all respects as by a natural-born British subject; and a title to real and personal property of every description may be derived through, from, or in succession to an alien in the same manner in all respects as through, from, or in succession to a natural-born British subject.

But it has been held that the above statutes have no retrospective effect. Sharp v. St. Sauveur, L. R. 7 Ch. 343, 26 L. T. N. S. 142, 41 L. J. Ch. 578, 20 Week. Rep. 269 (1871); DeGeer v. Stone, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 243, 52 L. J. Ch. N. S. 57, 47 L. T. N. S. 424, 31 W. R. 241 (1882).

In Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 413, 1 Lev. 59, 1 Keb. 671 (1664), an alien father had two sons born in England, and the question was whether the one son could inherit from the other for the reason that he must deduce his title through his alien father, but the court held that the one could inherit from the other, though neither could inherit from the father, for the reason that the inheritance between them was immediate, and the one should make his title in a mort d'ancestor, and as heir to the brother, without mentioning the father.

With regard to the rules of descent in such cases, the court in that case stated that it must not govern itself therein by the general notions of law or proximity of nature, but by the principal laws of the country where the question arose, as the various countries had variously disposed of the manner of descents, even in the same law or degree of proximity.

L. R. A.

With regard to the distinction of descents or relations between ancestor and heir, and hereditary succession, the court in that case stated that in immediate descents there could no impediment, but what arises in the parties themselves. Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 413, 415, 1 Keb. 671 (1664).

Also that in immediate descents a disability on account of alienage in a medius ancestor would disable a person to take by descent, though he himself had no such disability. Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 413, 415, 1 Keb. 671 (1664).

And that in lineal descents, if the father was an alien, and had issue, a denizen born, who died in the lifetime of the grandfather, the grandfather died seised; the son should not take but the land escheated. Ibid.

That in collateral descents, if there were two brothers, and one was an alien or attainted and had issue, a denizen born, and the other purchased land and died without issue, the issue of the other should not inherit, for the reason that the father of such issue being the medius ancestor or medium differens of such descent, was incapable of taking. Ibid. The same was held in Grey's Case, 3 Dyer, 274a (1543).

So it was further held that, "if there were two brothers and one was an alien and had issue and died, and such issue purchased land and died without issue, his uncle would not inherit for the reason that his brother was a medius and unable to take." Collingwood v. Pace, supra.

That "in any descents the impediment of an ancestor that [was] not medius ancestor, between the persons from whom and to whom, will not impede the descent." Ibid.

That in the case of "a grandfather and grandmother, both aliens . . . [having] issue, the father a denizen, who [had] issue a son a denizen, the son [was] heir to the father notwithstanding the disability of the grandfather, for the reason that they [were] not medii antecessores between the father and the son, but paramount; and yet all the blood the father [had was] derived from his disabled parents." Ibid.

That if the descent between brothers was an immediate descent and the father was not medius antecessor between them, then the disability of one would not impede the descent of his brother, or his brother's son; but if it was a mediate descent, and the father was a medius antecessor between them, then the disability in the father might impede the descent. Ibid.

And the court further stated that the law doth not hinder, but that an alien is the same degree and relation of consanguinity as in the like cases of a denizen born; the son, father, and brother, though aliens, were yet son, father, and brother as natural-born subjects, and so taken notice of in the law. Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 413, 417, 1 Keb. 671 (1664).

Though an alien might take by purchase by his own contract that which he could not retain against the King, yet the law would not enable him, by act of his own, to transfer by hereditary descent; the alien dying, having since a denizen born, the land will not descend, nor can he take by the act prevent his inheritance at the time of the death of the testator, who made an executory devise to his heirs at law according to the statute of descents, will not exclude a descendant of the son from this class, where a statute passed before the time of determining the heirs has removed the disability of alienage.

3. It seems that one who becomes a domiciled resident of a foreign country becomes an alien within the operation of the law which excludes aliens from inheritance.

4. The status as legitimate heir of an alien born before the marriage of his parents is to be determined by the law of their domicile.

(February 25, 1895.)

BILL for the construction of certain clauses in the will of William De Wolf, deceased. By the second clause of the will, testator devised his Poppasquash farm to his widow for life, "and after her decease, I do give and devise the same real estate to my two daughters Charlotte and Maria; their heirs and of the law, for the law quæ nihil frustra will not give him an inheritance or freehold by act of the law for he cannot keep it. Ibid.

If the eldest son is an alien, the law takes no notice of him; and therefore he cannot take by descent, so he cannot impede the descent to his youngest brother. Ibid.

And "a consequential consecutive disability, that reflects to an alien from one who must derive by or through him, though he perchance be a natural-born subject, has the same effect." Ibid.

That though a son was a natural-born subject, yet if his father was an alien there was a consecutive impediment "derived upon" such son, whereby he was consequently disabled to inherit from his uncle; and this consecutive disability was parallel to that which was called a corruption of blood. Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 418, 418, 1 Keb. 671 (1864).

In lineal degrees or descents, if there was a grandfather a natural-born subject, a father an alien, and a son a natural-born subject, and the father was made denizen, he could not inherit from the grandfather, and if the father died in the lifetime of the grandfather, the birth of the grandchild after the denization did not remove either the personal or the consequential impediment or incapacity of the father. Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 418, 419, 1 Keb. 671 (1864).

And in collateral descents, if the father, a natural-born subject, had two sons, aliens, who were both made denizens, and one died without issue, the other should not inherit. Ibid.

Where an Englishman by birth came to the United States after the Declaration of Independence, took the oath of allegiance, married an American woman, and had a son by such marriage born in the United States, and also a grandson the son of such son, also born in the United States,—it was held that such grandson was capable of inheriting real estate as a British subject, within the statute 13 Geo. III. chap. 21, and 4 Geo. II. chap. 21. Fitch v. Weber, 6 Hare, 51, 17 L. J. Ch. 73, 12 Jur. 76 (1847).

The privileges which the statutes, 4 Geo. II. chap. 21, and 13 Geo. III. chap. 21, confer, are the privileges of the children, and not of the father, and therefore acts intended by a British-born subject to have the effect of abandonment or abjuration of his rights in that character do not deprive his children of the benefit of those statutes, unless such acts bring them within their disqualifying provisions. Ibid.

In DeGeer v. Stone, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 243, 52 L. J. Ch. N. S. 67, 47 L. T. N. S. 434, 81 Week. Rep. 241 (1882), real property was devised by a testator domiciled in England at the time of his decease but born in Holland, where his parents were married. His mother was a Dutch subject born in Holland in 1696, his father was also born in that country in 1744, but his paternal great-grandfather was a natural-born British subject who went to Holland in 1691, in charge of a British regiment, and was married while in service to a Dutch woman, the testator's grandfather being the eldest son of the 31 L. R. A.

marriage. The testator's grandfather also served in his father's regiment, which had then ceased to be in the pay of the British, the testator's father also joining the regiment. It was held that the English statute of 7 Anne, chap. 5, gave the testator's grandfather the status of a natural-born British subject, and that the statutes of 4 Geo. II. chap. 21, and 13 Geo. III. chap. 21, gave also to the testator's father the rights belonging to that status; and further, that the testator himself was an alien, and that, as the statute 33 Vict. chap. 14, was not retrospective, the real estate escheated to the Crown.

II. Effect of state legislation.

The general doctrine of the common-law prohibiting the taking of real estate by inheritance through an alien has been very much modified by state legislation.

Alabama.

In Bartlett v. Morris, 9 Port. (Ala.) 206 (1833), title was claimed under the provisions of an act of the general assembly of Alabama, which authorized an alien to inherit the estate of her late uncle in the same manner as she would have inherited at law had she not been an alien. The evidence showed that the uncle was an alien, and died seized, that the lessor of the plaintiff was also an alien, as were her father and mother, the latter being a sister of the deceased uncle. The jury, in the court below, were instructed that, although the uncle was an alien, and the lessor of the plaintiff was also an alien, yet, by virtue of the special act, such alienage did not preclude the niece from inheriting and recovering the land in question, but upon appeal the decision was reversed the court holding that the act did not cause a transmission of the title held by the uncle at his death to the lessor of the plaintiff.

In the above case the court further stated that if the uncle, when he died, was a citizen possessed of inheritable estates, and if the lessor of the plaintiff was the alien daughter of a citizen mother, and the latter was a sister of the uncle, born since 1832, whom he had survived, there being no remote heirs to him on whom the law casts the descent, then every word of the act would have had effect.

California.

In People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373 (1855), the question was whether the mother and heir of a naturalized citizen of Mexico, who was not at the time of his death a citizen of Mexico or of the United States, but a subject of Denmark never a resident in the United States or in Mexico, was competent, under the laws as they then existed, to take by inheritance, and if not whether the state had an interest. The facts showed that the deceased died twelve days before the ratification of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. The court held that in order to give the United States any interest in the land it was necessary to prove the forfeiture either by the United States or by Mexico, and that the mother was entitled to undisturbed possession until office found, and that her title became absolute by reason that no inquest of office was found under the Mexican laws until after a change of gov-assigns forever, provided, however, that in case my said daughters Charlotte and Maria should die leaving no surviving issue, then it is my will that the estate, on their decease, be divided among my heirs at law, according to the statute of descents, their heirs and assigns forever, and I do devise the same accordingly."

The fifth clause of the will was in practically the same terms and devised testator's Hopestreet estate.

At the time of testator's decease there were four children, William, Henry, Charlotte, and Maria. Neither daughter left issue and the court having decided (18 R. I. —) that the estate was to be divided as of the time of the death of the surviving daughter, the question in this case was as to the mode of enment, no disability existing under the laws and Constitution of the United States; the court further stating that the common-law rule excluding from inheritance all who traced their descent through uninheritable blood was never in force in that state, and that there was no error in the decree of distribution to the first cousins, notwithstanding their relationship to him through alien ancestors.

In State v. Smith, 70 Cal. 153 (1886), a naturalized citizen died intestate leaving no resident heirs, but a nephew and three nieces nonresident aliens, his only next of kin. The nephew, after declaring his intention to become a citizen of the United States, obtained letters of administration in California, and, on behalf of himself and the other next of kin, "appeared and claimed the estate," which was distributed equally to the next of kin. Subsequently the estate brought escheat proceedings suggesting that inasmuch as laws could have no extra-territorial operation, the legislature had no power to provide for succession by foreigners who had never been residents. The court held that § 671 of the Civil Code of that state provided a rule with respect to property within the state, and conferred a right to be enjoyed within the jurisdiction, and that therefore the defendant's claim was valid.

In the above case the court also held that art. 1, § 17, of the Constitution of California, which prohibits the legislature from depriving resident foreigners of any of the rights enjoyed by native-born citizens with respect to the acquisition, possession, enjoyment, transmission, or inheritance of property, did not prohibit the legislature from conferring the same rights upon those born in foreign countries who had never been resident in that state. Ibid.

And with regard to § 672 of the Civil Code of that state, it has been held that the words "nonresident aliens" were to be interpreted as indicating those who were neither citizens of the United States nor residents of the state. Ibid.

With respect to the appearance and claim of such nonresident alien, as required by that section of the Code, it has been stated that the clause was a limitation applicable, not only to the commencement of an action in the courts, but to any appearance within the state, and the assertion of a claim, whether by such action or otherwise, and that the claim might be in pais, as by taking possession, or conveying or contracting with respect to it; the time for such alien to make his claim being fixed at five years from the time of the succession, the proceedings taken within such time on behalf of the state being premature and therefore void. Ibid.

Connecticut.

Where a naturalized citizen died intestate leaving no lineal descendants, nor wife, sisters, father, mother, uncles nor aunts, but one brother an alien, five first cousins, and a number of children of first cousins, among whom was the appellant, such first cousins being naturalized citizens, the probate court found that the alien brother was entitled to all the personal estate, and that the first cousins were entitled to share equally all the real estate. Upon appeal, however, it was claimed that, according to the principles of the common law, the blood of an alien ancestor would impede the descend of the title to land, where the title was required to be traced through such alien, and that this principle was a part of the laws of Connecticut; that the English act of 11 & 12 Wm. III., which removed this disability in favor of natural-born citizens of the realm, was also the law in Connecticut; and further, that the disability was never removed in favor of naturalized citizens, who, if compelled to trace their connection with the decedent through alien blood were disabled from taking, whereas the appellant, who was a natural-born citizen, was relieved from the disability caused by the alien blood of his ancestors, and therefore, together with the other natural-born children of decedent's cousins, was entitled to the real estate. Campbell's Appeal, 64 Conn. 277, 24 L. R. A. 667 (1894).

The court held that the common-law rule of the exclusion from inheritance of all tracing their descent through uninheritable blood was never in force in that state, and that there was no error in the decree of the probate court.

Indiana.

In Eldon v. Doe, Wynn, 6 Blackf. 341 (1842), a father, a naturalized citizen, who made no mention of his wife and daughter at the time of his naturalization, devised real estate to his daughter, who, herself an alien, subsequently married an alien, and died leaving her husband and a son, who subsequently died, her surviving. The property was claimed by two brothers of the testator's daughter, who became naturalized citizens after her death, and by a nephew and niece, born in the United States, children of a deceased sister, who was herself an alien. In 1840, and after the death of testator's daughter, a special act of the legislature was passed for the relief of one of her brothers and others by which the lands of which she "died seised" were to "descend to, and vest in, such of her heirs as were, by the laws of this state, capable of acquiring real estate by descent at the time of her death, in the same manner as though the said [daughter] had been a citizen of the United States." The court held that neither the brothers nor the nephew and niece were entitled, the latter on the ground that they claimed by representation, their title coming through their alien mother, they being on that account incapable of acquiring real estate by descent at the time of the death of the testator's daughter under the Indiana laws.

In Doe, Huddleston v. Lazenby, 1 Ind. 234 (1843), Smith, 238, both parties claimed title from the state, and the facts showed that an alien died seised, leaving surviving him no wife, nor children, nor parents, but three brothers and a sister, two of the brothers residing in the state, the other brother and the sister being nonresident aliens. One of the resident brothers also died an alien without having taken steps toward naturalization, and the other also died an alien, but had declared his intention to become a citizen. The first-mentioned brother left no children, and was not shown to have been in possession jointly with his brother or severally; the other brother died in possession and left three sons and a daughter, all infants, who were the lessors of the plaintiff. These lessors were subsequently naturalized. The nonresident alien brother and sister upon petition distribution. William, one of testator's sons, went to Cuba in 1818, and died there in 1830. He left, by a Cuban wife, one son, who always lived in Cuba and died there in 1852, leaving two children, one a daughter Carlota DeWolf, who became the widow Campillo. The other a son Enrique who always lived in Cuba and died there in 1890, leaving four children.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. James Tillinghast, for complainants:

Under a general devise to the testator's heirs, whether immediate in possession, or in remainder, vested or contingent, after an intervening estate, the class to take is to be ascertained and traced as of and from the date of his death.

Re Kenyon, 17 R. I. 149.

obtained an order for partition, the lessors of the plaintiff being made defendant. The petitioners sold the share set off to them thereby to the defendant. In an action brought by the infants, who were advised of the sale and made no objection, to recover such property, the court held that, in order to entitle the plaintiff to recover, he must show title in his lessors, which he could not do, as he could show no title by descent, as such title must have been deduced through the intestate, the original purchaser, who died an alien without having taken steps toward naturalization, and being a foreigner could not transmit by descent; and the court further held that the Indiana act of 1842 did not reach the case but applied only to aliens dying after it took effect.

In the above case a special act of the legislature of the state was passed in the year 1899, for the relief of the heirs of the intestate and his two brothers, who were residents of the state, which released and vested all the estate and interest of the state in any lands situated in that state, of which the intestate and his two brothers died seised, in such persons, being inhabitants of the United States, as could take the same by demise, descent, or in right of dower, as if the deceased person, and the persons thereby authorized to take, had been native citizens of the state, the persons taking thereunder, holding estates of the same nature and extent as they would have taken had they and the parties therein mentioned been native citizens of the state. Later the legislature passed another act, for the relief of the defendant, which provided that the proceedings in the partition action, and in the probate court relative to the partition of the real estate of the deceased, were declared sufficient to vest in the persons therein mentioned, and those holding or claiming by, through, or under them, the several portions of the real estate set apart to them, and releasing all claims of the state acquired by escheat, to the persons to whom such portions were set apart.

Under the Indiana statute of 1852 (1 Gavin & Hord Stat. § 1, p. 255), which provided that no person except a citizen of the United States, or an alien who was a bona fide resident thereof, should take, hold, convey, devise, or pass lands by descent, except in such cases of descent or devise as were provided for by law,—the court in the case of Murray v. Kelly, 27 Ind. 42 (1866), held that the act removed the common-law disability of an alien to inherit, the statute being as broad in favor of a bona fide resident alien as a native-born citizen.

In the above case it was claimed that the Indiana statute was unconstitutional by reason of a defect in its title, which was, "An Act Concerning Real Property and the Alienation thereof," but the court held that real estate being the subject of the act it was sufficiently expressed in the title.

In that case the court also held that the next of kin of an intestate, who were native-born citizens, children of resident aliens, were entitled to take by descent lands which had descended from a resident alien, the brother of their mother, to his son, who was also a resident alien, where such son had died without issue or nearer relatives, such next of kin claiming ex parte paterna, as against the next of kin of the son ex parte materna.

31 L. R. A.

A claim was also made in that case on behalf of two alien bona fide residents, who were also related in the same degree as the native-born citizens, ex parte paterna, but although the court held that the statute was as broad in favor of a bona fide resident alien as a native-born citizen, yet it stated that it had not inquired into the question as to whether they could inherit, as it clearly appeared that the native-born citizens could, the latter's claim being fatal to the claim of the next of kin ex parte materna.

Iowa.

Where a person died intestate without issue, leaving a naturalized brother, and a nephew who had been naturalized, but whose father died an alien, it was held that the brother succeeded to the whole estate for the reason that the nephew was not permitted by the common law to trace his descent through his alien father. Stemple v. Herminghouser, 3 G. Greene, 408 (1852).

Chapter 85 of the Iowa act July 4, 1888, § 1, prohibits nonresident aliens from acquiring title to or taking or holding any lands or real estate in that state by descent, devise, purchase, or otherwise, except as thereafter provided, but gives the widows, and heirs of aliens who have theretofore acquired lands in that state under its laws power to hold such lands by devise or descent for a period of ten years, and no longer.

And § 2 of the same permits nonresident aliens to acquire by purchase, and hold, real property for a limited time, but has no application to the acquiring of title by descent. Other provisions of the act are designed to protect nonresident aliens who owned land in the state when the act took effect, and the owners of liens upon or interests in real estate and judgments.

And § 7 provided that the act should not apply to aliens who were residents of the state who should have the same right to acquire, hold, and dispose of property as natural-born citizens of the United States, and repealed §§ 1908, 1909, of the Code.

In construing the above act the court, in Furenes v. Mickelson, 86 Iowa, 508, 511 (1892), stated that the above section gave to aliens who were residents of the state the same right to acquire, hold, and dispose of property as natural-born citizens of the United States had, but nothing more, and that such a citizen could not inherit mediately through a nonresident alien ancestor.

In the above case a naturalized resident of the state sought to inherit from his deceased resident great uncle, who was a naturalized citizen of the state, through his father, who was a nonresident alien, but the court held he could not so inherit as he did not take mediately from his uncle.

Kentucky.

In Beard v. Rowan, 1 McLean, 135 (1831), some of the claimants, children of deceased alien brothers and sisters, claimed, through alien ancestors, to be entitled to real estate, devised to the intestate by a will which showed it to be the clear intention of the testator that if, during the intestate's lifetime, he became a naturalized citizen, or the state law enabled him to take and hold real estate, such estate should vest absolutely in him in fee simple.

In the above case it was claimed that as the intestate, who came to the state of Kentucky in the

The same principle applies to contingent remainders.

Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. Jr. 399; Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613; Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1; Mortimer v. Slater, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 322; Mortimore v. Mortimore, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 448; Minot v. Tappan, 122 Mass. 535; Buzby's Appeal, 61 Pa. 111; Stewart's Estate, 147 Pa. 383; Hawkins, Wills, p. 39; Inglby v. Amcotts, 21 Beav. 585.

The same rule equally applies to executory devises.

Pinkham v. Blair, 57 N. H. 226.

To give any effect to the word "assigns," the rights must be held to have vested at the testator's death, and the persons among whom they are to be divided at Mrs. Roger's death year 1790, had not resided in the state two years prior to the passing of the act in 1800, he could not transmit lands by descent, but it was held that the statute of 1800 applied to both future and past residence.

The Kentucky statute above referred to enabled any alien, other than an alien enemy, who had actually resided within that commonwealth two years, during the continuance of his residence therein after the said period, to hold, receive, and pass any right, title, or interest to any lands or other estate within the commonwealth in the same manner, and under the same regulations, as the citizens of the state. Beard v. Rowan, 1 McLean, 136, 141 (1831).

Maryland.

Where the deceased died seised of real estate in Maryland, leaving no heirs, except an alien brother, who was never naturalized, and three nieces, the daughters of such brother, who were naturalized citizens of the United States, it was held that they could not claim title by inheritance through their father, for the reason that he was an alien and still living. McCreery v. Somerville, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 354, 6 L. ed. 109 (1824).

In the above case the court also stated that the English statute of 11 & 12 Wm. III. chap. 6, which was in force in Maryland, removed the common-law disability of claiming title through an alien ancestor, but did not apply to a living alien ancestor, so as to create a title by heirship, where none would exist by the common law if the ancestor were a natural-born subject or citizen. Ibid.

In Matthew v. Rae, 3 Cranch, C. C. 699 (1829), aliens claimed as heirs at law of a decedent who came to the United States in 1796, and conformed to the naturalization laws of Pennsylvania of 1780, and of Maryland of 1779, which laws were annulled by Congress by the general naturalization law of 1790. The court held that the decedent was not a naturalized citizen, but that, as an alien had under the Maryland act of December, 1791, § 6, the right to purchase and hold lands in the District of Columbia, and transmit the same to his alien heirs, the plaintiffs were entitled.

Massachusetts.

Where the facts show that the father of the defendant and grandfather of the wife of the plaintiff died intestate seised in fee, in the year 1778, leaving five children, among whom was the father of the plaintiff's wife, and of two other children; that the father of the plaintiff's wife was, in 1775, a citizen of Massachusetts, but was captured by the British, and held by them until the close of the war, when he went to Nova Scotia and continued to reside there until his death in 1790; and the questions being, whether such party was an alien at the time of his father's death in 1778, and if an alien, whether the statute of 11 & 12 Wm. III. chap. 6, was adopted before the establishment of the Constitution of the commonwealth,—the court held that such party was an alien at the time of his father's death; and further, that the statute in question was adopted and in full force in that state at the time, and therefore found in favor of the plaintiffs. Palmer v. Downer, 2 Mass. 179, note (1801).

The statute in question in the above case enacted that all persons being natural-born subjects of the King, might inherit, and make their titles, by descend, from any of their ancestors, lineal or collateral, although their father, mother, or other ancestor, by, from, through, or under whom they derived their pedigree, were born out of the King's allegiance, as fully as if such father, mother, or other ancestor, had been naturalized, or natural-born subjects.

In Com. v. Andre, 3 Pick. 224 (1825), a committee of the legislature by deed granted to the defendant and his heirs real estate which had been confiscated, the grantees being at the time an alien resident of the state never naturalized, the purchase being made for the benefit of another party a nonresident alien. Both parties dying intestate, an information to recover seisin and possession was subsequently filed, the heirs who were nonresident aliens appearing and answering, alleging that the lands had descended to them. The court held that the commonwealth having conveyed the land for valuable consideration could not reclaim it from either the grantee or his heirs for the cause of alienage in either of them.

Missouri.

In Greenia v. Greenia, 14 Mo. 526 (1851), the next of kin of a citizen were brothers and nephews nonresident aliens, and two nephews citizens of the state, and the question was whether the slaves should be given to the two nephews to the exclusion of the alien brothers and nephews, or whether the property should be equally distributed among them according to the statute of descents and distributions without regard to alienage. The court held they were equally entitled, the 7th section of the Missouri statute concerning descents and distributions providing that in making title by descent it should be no bar to a descendant that any ancestor through whom he derived his descent from the intestate was or had been an alien, the section being designed to remove the bar of alienage or restrict it in certain cases.

The Missouri act of 1820 permitted resident aliens in any part of the United States or territories, who had declared their intention to become citizens of the United States or territories, to inherit, and to transmit the inheritance of real estate within the state, and to acquire and hold the same by descent or purchase, and to alienate the same and to have the same rights and incur the like duties, in relation thereto as if they were citizens of the United States, the intention to become citizens and the preparatory oath being necessary to the enjoyment of the privilege. Farrar v. Dean, 24 Mo. 16, 17 (1856).

The rigors of the common law with respect to the rights of aliens to take and inherit real estate were modified by the legislation of the state of Missouri, and the disabilities consequent upon alienage, which extended to acquiring and holding real estate by purchase, devise, or descent were nearly swept away. By the laws of the territory, of 1820 (vol. 1, p. 697), the disability of an alien in that respect was removed as to foreigners residing in any of the United States or territories, who had declared their intention to become citizens, and such was the law until the Revised Statutes of 1836, by which, not only aliens residing in the United States who had made such declarations of intention, but aliens resident in the state, were made capable of acquiring real estate by purchase or descent, and to be ascertained by tracing, "according to the statute of descents" and intermediate alienations, from those in whom the right thus vested at the testator's death.

People v. Conklin, 2 Hill, 67; Ives v. Harris, 7 R. I. 424.

All contingent interests in ascertained persons, whether by way of contingent remainder or executory devise, are descendible.

Cummings v. Stearns, 161 Mass. 506.

of alienating the same, and such provision was carried forward into the statute of 1845, with the additional right of "holding" real estate, and the same was re-enacted in the statutes of 1855 which gave the additional privilege to a nonresident alien to convey the land of his ancestor or deviser, provided it was conveyed within three years after the final settlement, and such act was re-enacted in the revision of 1865. In the year 1872 the legislature swept away every impediment, and declared that aliens should be capable of acquiring by purchase, devise, or descent real estate in that state, and of holding, devising, or alienating the same, and should incur the like duties and liabilities in relation thereto, as if they were citizens of the United States and residents of that state.

In Burke v. Adams, 80 Mo. 504, 510 (1888), where both the ancestor, and the heir were residents of the state when the father acquired the real estate in question by purchase, and both lived until the father's death in 1874, the heir having remained in the state ever since, the court held that the fact that the ancestor was an alien could make no difference as he resided in the state when the property was acquired and when he died, and that therefore under the statute an alien could take by descent from an alien.

New Jersey.

In Colgan v. Pellens, 48 N. J. L. 27 (1886), plaintiff claimed under a purchaser of lands who died seised, without issue, leaving his widow and three brothers and one sister, all aliens, him surviving. At the time of the purchaser's death one of the brothers was married and had two sons born in the state, both of whom died without issue. Another son was subsequently born, and the lands in question were conveyed to the plaintiff by the last-mentioned son, the widow of his deceased brother releasing her right to dower. The facts showed that the widow, as a means of procuring a grant of all the right of the state in such real estate to her heirs and assigns had stated that her deceased husband left no lawful heirs who could inherit. The case involved the construction of the 12th section of the New Jersey act "directing the descent of real estates" (Rev. Stat. 296), which provided that in making title by descent it should be no bar to a party that any ancestor through whom he or she derived his or her descent from the intestate was or had been an alien, and plaintiff's contention was that by force of this act the real estate descended to the two nephews the children of the purchaser's alien brother, and that upon the death of such two nephews the latter passed to their brother who was born after the death of such purchaser. The court, however, reserved the question so presented and the case was determined upon the question of adverse possession, the widow of the purchaser and her second husband and the issue of such second marriage having been in possession a sufficient length of time to give them title as adverse owners.

New York.

In Jackson, Fitz Simmons, v. Fitz Simmons, 10 Wend. 9, 24 Am. Dec. 106 (1832), a naturalized citizen died in the year 1828, intestate and without issue, leaving several brothers and sisters all of whom were aliens, except the defendant, who claimed the

The law in force at the time of the descent cast must govern.

People v. Conklin, supra; Orser v. Hoag, 8 Hill, 79; Pilla v. German Schol. Assn. 23 Fed. Rep. 700; Hausenleins v. Lynham, 28 Gratt. 62.

Where a person dies leaving issue who are aliens, the latter are not deemed his heirs at law, for they have no inheritable blood, and the estate descends to the next of kin, who have real estate of the decedent as the sole heir at law capable of inheriting. The decedent also left several nephews and nieces, children of a deceased brother, none of whom were naturalized except the lessor of the plaintiff, and the question presented was, whether the lessor of the plaintiff could inherit any part of the real estate, he being obliged to trace his relationship through his own father, who was never naturalized. The court held that the language of the 5th clause of the New York statute of descents, as prescribed by the New York act of February 23, 1786 (1 Rev. Laws 1813, p. 58), did not help the lessor of the plaintiff, for the reason that the children of the deceased brother, according to the section, were only to have such share of the estate of their uncle or aunt as their own father or mother would have inherited if living, and that the father in that case being an alien no share would have descended to him if living, because the law never casts the estate upon a person who cannot legally hold it, except in the case of an attainder for the benefit of the Crown; and further, that the true answer to all claims under the New York statute contrary to the rules of the common law was, that the statute was only intended to change the common-law canons of descent, the statute not being an enabling one to give capacity to persons to take by descent in cases where, by the common law, they were incapable of inheriting by reason of alienage or other disability; and for the further reason that if a literal interpretation were given to the 4th canon of descent, as prescribed by such statute, it would cast the greatest portion of the premises in question upon the alien brothers and sisters of the person last seised, and the lessor of the plaintiff, under the 5th canon, would share equally with his alien brothers and sisters, as tenants in common of his deceased father's share; and for the further reason that it never was the intention of the legislature to give such interpretation to the statute.

In the above case it was also stated that in order to entitle a person to take under the above statute the claimant must show his own capacity to take (if the plea of alienage was interposed); he must show that he was naturalized, which established his capacity to take; and secondly, he must show his consanguinity in the relation to the intestate prescribed by the act; and further, that he was a child of a brother or sister who would, if living, have inherited by that law.

And it was further stated that the act was intended to operate on natural-born or duly naturalized citizens only. Ibid.

The provision of the New York statute referred to in the above case is as follows: "Fifthly. In case any such brother or sister, who would have inherited by this law if living, shall die before the said person so seised, and leave a lawful child or children, such child or children surviving the said person so seised shall inherit, if a child, solely, and if children, as tenants in common in equal parts, such share as would have descended to his, her, or their father or mother, if such father or mother had survived the person so seised. Ibid."

In Levy v. McCartee, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 102, 108, 8 L. ed. 324, 337 (1832), decided under the laws of the an inheritable blood, in the same manner as if no such alien issue were in existence.

Orr v. Hodgson, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 453, 4 L. ed. 613; Blight v. Rochester, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 535, 5 L. ed. 516; Jackson, Fitz Simmons, v. Fitz Simmons, 10 Wend. 9, 24 Am. Dec. 198; Orser v. Hoag, 8 Hill, 79; Luhra v. Eimer, 80 N. Y. 171; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24, 4 Am. Rep. 490; Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84.

state of New York, the court held that one citizen of that state could not inherit in the collateral line to the other, when he took his pedigree or title through a deceased alien ancestor.

The facts in that case showed that a citizen died seised in 1818, intestate as to the land in question, and that two of the heirs, citizens of the state of South Carolina, children of an alien uncle on the maternal side of the testator, whose mother was also an alien, claimed as heirs of the testator, and also as heirs of his posthumous child, who died in infancy, and the question was, whether the claimants, notwithstanding the alienage of the intermediate ancestor through whom they made their pedigree, were capable of inheriting from the testator or his posthumous child.

In the above case the court stated that the English case of Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 714 (1664), was conclusive evidence that by the common law, in all cases of mediate descents, if any mediate ancestor through whom the party made his pedigree as heir was an alien, the heir's title was barred.

In Jackson, Doran, v. Green, 7 Wend. 333 (1831), it was held that no one who was obliged to trace his descent through an alien could inherit real estate, if the death of the owner happened prior to January, 1830, as until that time the statute 11 & 12 Wm. III. chap. 6, was not incorporated into the New York law of descent. In that case the children of a naturalized citizen claimed through their father, who was the heir of a naturalized citizen, and were obliged to trace their descent through the grandmother, who was an alien.

And in People v. Irvin, 21 Wend. 128 (1839), it was held that the nephew of a person dying intestate of an estate by inheritance, although a naturalized citizen, was not capable of inheriting if his father was an alien and living at the time of the decease of the person last seised, notwithstanding the provision of the statute of descents that no person capable of inheriting, etc., shall be precluded from such inheritance by reason of the alienism of any ancestor of such person, the statute in question, being substantially the same as the English act of 11 & 12 Wm. III., chap. 6, not enabling a person to deduce title through an alien ancestor still living.

So, in People v. Conklin, 2 Hill, 67 (1841), the facts showed that an American citizen died seised, in 1799, leaving no lawful issue and no blood relatives except such as were aliens and natives of Germany. By his will he devised his real estate to his wife for life and after her death to his two sisters and seven nephews and nieces, and their respective heirs and assigns forever, equally, share and share alike, and empowered his executor, after the death of his wife, to sell and divide the proceeds among the nine devisees; and further provided that if any of the sisters or nephews or nieces should die before a division, leaving lawful issue, such issue should stand in the place of the parent so dying. The widow of the testator was a native citizen of the United States and died in 1832, but all the nine devisees were aliens at the death of the testator, and all died aliens prior to 1823. One nephew, however, left a son, grandnephew of the testator, who was then living, who became a naturalized citizen in 1823. The court held that such grandnephew took

The law of inheritance of this state at the death of the testator in 1829, and of his son William in 1830, was the common law.

At common law "the character of a natural-born subject was incident to birth only; whatever were the situations of the parents the being born in the allegiance of the King constituted a natural-born subject.

Doe, Duroure, v. Jones, 4 T. R. 300; Lery v. M'Cartee, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 102, 8 L. ed. 334; no interest in the estate either as a devisee under the will, or as heir at law to his granduncle.

In the above case the grandnephew was obliged to trace the descent through his father, and his grandmother, who was a sister of the testator, both of whom were aliens, and therefore the common-law rule which prohibits descent through an alien ancestor applied, the New York statute of 1830 not helping the case, inasmuch as it was passed subsequent to the death of the testator.

In Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. 583, 637 (1844), a niece claimed as heir to her uncle, during whose lifetime her father died an alien, and the court held that provided she was a citizen of the United States she inherited all the real estate of which her uncle was seised, the descent to her, although the relations of such uncle were aliens, not being immediate, § 22 of the Revised Statutes of New York, 754, re-enacting so much of the act of 11 & 12 Wm. III. chap. 6, as provided that no person capable of inheriting under out statutes regulating descents should be precluded from such inheritance by reason of the alienism of the ancestor of such person, applying directly to the case, provided the niece was a citizen at the death of her uncle.

By the common law a natural-born subject or citizen could not transmit land by descent to another mediately through the blood of an alien; therefore in the case of a grandfather, father and son, if the father was an alien, whether he was or was not living at the time of the descent cast, the grandfather could not transmit lands by descent to the grandson, although both of them were natural-born subjects or citizens or had been duly naturalized, but if the person dying seised had inheritable blood, his real estate would descend to his next heir who had such inheritable blood, even though the person who would otherwise have been the heir of the decedent was an alien, as in the case of a decedent leaving two sons the eldest an alien and the youngest a natural-born subject or citizen, the alienage of the eldest son, who would otherwise have been heir at law of the father, not preventing the real estate from descending to the youngest son as heir at law. Banks v. Walker, 3 Barb. Ch. 448 (1848).

In the above case of Banks v. Walker it was held that the 22d section of the New York Revised Statutes relating to the descent of real property, which provides that no person capable of inheriting under the provisions of that chapter, shall be precluded from such inheritance by reason of the alienism of any ancestor of such person, was broad enough to remove the disability arising from the alienism of the father and grandfather of the person claiming the inheritance, but did not remove the disability of the person who, in tracing his pedigree and consanguinity as collateral heir of the person dying seised, must trace it mediately through the blood of the father of the latter, an alien, and who was not an ancestor of the claimant.

In that case it was stated that the English statute of 11 & 12 Wm. III., chap. 6, which removed the disability of natural-born or naturalized subjects to inherit from each other where they were obliged to trace their pedigree or relationship through the Dawson v. Godfrey, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 321, 2 L. ed. 634.

The result, therefore, is that Henry, Charlotte, and Maria took $\frac{1}{3}$ each.

Kenyon v. Kenyon, 17 R. I. 539; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, §§ 40 et seq.; Jones v. Roe, 3 T. R. 93.

Mr. B. M. Bosworth, for respondent Annie E. Middleton:

The words "heirs at law," unless a contrary intent appears by the will, mean the heirs at law at the time of the decease of the testator.

Minot v. Tappan, 122 Mass. 535; Buzby's Appeal, 61 Pa. 111; Abbott v. Bradstreet, 3 Allen, 587.

As William De Wolf, testator, died in 1829, and those who claim under his son, William De Wolf, known as the Cuban heirs, were aliens, and in existence previous to 1863, previous to which aliens, by the law of Rhode blood of an alien, was never in force in the state of New York.

In Redpath v. Rich, 8 Sandf. 79 (1849), the heir at law sought an account of the rents and profits, the defendants demurring to the claim denying plaintiff's title as heir. The facts showed that the intestate became seised of the premises in question in 1817, and died in the year 1823, without issue, and that the plaintiff, a nephew of deceased, was an alien born, but came to the United States in 1830, and was naturalized in 1840. The court held that such nephew, even though duly naturalized, was not entitled, as he was obliged to trace his descent through his alien mother, his uncle dying before the Revised Statutes of 1843 took effect.

With regard to the New York statute of April 10, 1843, § 1, which declares that every naturalized citizen of the United States who may have purchased and taken a conveyance of any lands or real estate within that state or to whom any such lands or real estate may have been devised, or to whom they would have descended, if he had been a citizen at the time of the death of the person last seised, before he was qualified to hold them by existing laws, might continue to hold the same in like manner as if he had been a citizen at the time of such purchase, devise, or descent cast,—the court held that such statute did not enable such an alien to inherit where his inability to do so arose by reason of the alienage of his ancestor. Redpath v. Rich, supra.

The same construction was put upon the New York act of 1843 in the case of Smith v. Smith, 33 Barb. 371, note (1860), in which case a naturalized citizen died in the year 1848, without issue, leaving three brothers, the plaintiff, and one of the defendants naturalized citizens at the time of his death, and two sisters one an alien who died intestate leaving children her surviving, and the other sister a naturalized citizen. The court held that the children of the alien sister of the deceased were incapable of inheriting for the reason that such sister was an alien and living at the death of the deceased, the statute of 1836 (2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. § 22, p. 38), which provides that no person capable of inheriting shall be precluded by reason of the alienism of any ancestor of such person not applying, and that therefore, such alien sister being incapable of taking at the time of the deceased's death, and the lands having descended to other persons, her children could take no interest, the three brothers alone being entitled.

The following cases are to the same effect: McLean v. Swanton, 13 N. Y. 535 (1860); Heeney v. Brooklyn Benev. Soc. 33 Barb. 360 (1861); Larreau v. Davignon, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. 367 (1868); Renner v. Muller, 12 Jones & S. 535, 57 How. Pr. 229 (1879).

Where the question was whether, under the common-law rule of descents, the alienism of the common grandfather impeded the descent to cousins, whose immediate ancestors were brothers and capable of transmitting by descent,—the court held that such alienism did not impede the descent of such an estate between cousins who were children of two brothers, citizens of the United States, the descent between brothers being immediate and 31 L. R. A.

not impeded by the alienage of their father. McGregor v. Comstock, 3 N. Y. 409 (1850).

In the above case a naturalized citizen of the United States became seised of real estate and died in the year 1802, leaving a son who went to England in 1807, leaving there for the East Indies in 1818, after which he was not heard of. A brother of the intestate became a naturalized citizen in 1813, and died in 1833, leaving the plaintiffs his heirs at law who claimed as heirs of their cousin, the intestate's son. The court below nonsuited the plaintiffs on the ground that their grandfather, the father of the intestate and of their father, died an alien, and as they were compelled to trace their pedigree and relationship to the intestate through the grandfather, his alienism impeded the descent to them, but the court upon appeal, as above stated, reversed the decision. Ibid.

Where a naturalized citizen died intestate and without issue in the year 1835, possessed of real estate, leaving a widow, but no children, him surviving, it was held that the lands descended to the great-great-grandson of the common ancestor, even though such common ancestor was an alien, the deceased himself being a great grandson of such common ancestor. McCarthy v. Marsh, 5 N. Y. 253, 274 (1851).

With regard to the New York statute (1 Rev. Stat. 754, § 22), which provides that no person capable of inheriting under the provisions of this chapter shall be precluded from such inheritance by reason of the alienism of any ancestor of such person, the court in McCarthy v. Marsh, supra, held that the statute enabled naturalized, as well as natural-born, citizens to inherit through alien ancestors, and that if there was any such thing known in the law as collateral ancestors, they were embraced within its operation, for the reason that the claimant was not to be precluded by the alienism "of any ancestor," which meant ancestors of any kind or description, the word being used in an unqualified and unlimited sense, and therefore in its most comprehensive sense.

In Parish v. Ward, 28 Barb. 328 (1855), an alien, empowered by act of legislature to take and convey real estate the same as a natural-born citizen, purchased real estate in the year 1809, and in 1823 sold a portion to defendant, excepting thereout the mines and minerals. In the same year the alien died intestate and without issue, leaving surviving him his father and four brothers, all nonresident aliens, except one who came to the United States in 1815. In 1817, an act of the legislature enabled such last-mentioned brother to take real estate by purchase or descent, the same as a natural-born citizen. Such brother died in 1838, having devised his estate in trust, and directed its conversion into personal estate. The father died after the decease of the first-mentioned alien and before the death of the latter. In 1840 the plaintiff, a nephew of deceased and an alien, was also authorized to take and hold real-estate the same as a natural-born citizen. Under the will the trustee conveyed the property to the plaintiff, together with the mines and minerals reserved in the deeds, and the action was brought to recover damages and to restrain Island, were incapable of inheriting and holding lands, they cannot take under the second and fifth clauses of said will.

Mr. John C. Pogram, for respondent Carlota De Wolf Campello:

The entire estate in the lands in suit passed to Charlotte and Maria, under the will of their father. There remained nothing to pass to his heirs at the time of his death. This fee simple was qualified by a proviso that in a possible contingency—namely, the death of both devisees without leaving issue—a new estate should be created or spring into being in the uncertain future, by way of executory devise, in favor of those persons who should then, “according to the statute of descents,” be the “heirs at law” of the testator.

Brown v. Williams, 5 R. I. 309, and cases cited; Comyns' Digest, Estates by Devise, note 16; Watson v. Woods, 8 R. I. 226.

defendant, who was the purchaser from the first-named alien and the other defendants, from digging and carrying away the minerals. The court held that under the first-mentioned act of 1807 the alien resident was entitled to acquire, hold, and alienate the real estate, and was capable of transmitting such estate to his next of kin, the act investing him with inheritable blood, and that therefore such estate descended as that of a citizen by birth, but that such act did not qualify or change the general law of descent which existed against alien heirs, and that therefore the father of the deceased could not inherit from him, but that his estate descended to his brother, the later acts of 1817 conferring upon him a right to take by inheritance, and also the right to dispose of such property by will, and that therefore the action was maintainable, the fact of alienage of a common father not impeding the inheritance between brothers, the inheritance between them being immediate, the maxim of the law being that as between brothers, a father, although a medium sanguinis is not a medium hereditatis.

In that case it was stated that if the New York act of 1807 had authorized the taking and holding of real estate by an alien and his heirs, the father of such alien might have inherited on the ground of the presumed intent on the part of the legislature to extend the inheritance to such heirs as an alien was capable of having, such seeming to be the doctrine in cases of patents, or special grants, or property acquired by an alien, under a special law authorizing lands to be taken and held by an alien grantee, to himself and his heirs, in which cases it has been held that an alien heir might take. To the same effect are the cases of Goodell v. Jackson, Smith, 20 Johns. 707 (1823); Jackson, People v. Etz, 5 Cow. 314 (1826); Jackson, Smith v. Adams, 7 Wend. 387 (1831).

In McLean v. Swanton, 13 N. Y. 535 (1856), a citizen of the United States died in 1840, having devised land in fee with a contingent limitation over, in case a devisee died without issue, in favor of four persons. The devisee died without issue in 1846, and the four executory devisees were all non-resident aliens, the plaintiff and her sister being the nearest descendants and relatives of the testator who were citizens of the United States at the time of his death, their mother, through whom the plaintiff deduced title by inheritance, being alive at the time of the testator's death, and an alien. The court held that by the common law the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover, being obliged to deduce her title through her mother who was an alien without heritable blood; and further, that in order for the plaintiff to avail herself of the 22d section of the New York Revised Statutes (1 Rev. Stat. 754), she must, at the time of the death of the person last seized, have been capable of inheriting the premises, or, unless she was heir to such person, the statute had no application to the case, as it did not profess to change any of the rules of descent, or make one an heir who would not be such by the general law of inheritance, its object being really to abrogate a very artificial principle by which it was held that where the descent, whether lineal or collateral, was medi-ate, the kindred through whom the claimant made title as heir must be either natural-born or naturalized subjects, the statute simply removing an impediment to the free operation of the existing law regulating successions to real estate.

In Larreau v. Davignon, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. 267 (1866), both parties claimed under an alien by birth, who acquired the property in question by purchase in the year 1845, and in 1847 declared his intention to become a citizen, being afterwards duly naturalized. The defendant, his sister, was an alien and with her husband resided in the state, but subsequently removed into Canada, where they resided until the decedent's death in 1865, when they returned to the United States with their children, and took possession. Two of their children were born in the United States. The decedent had a second cousin who became a naturalized citizen prior to the decedent's death, such cousin and the two nephews and nieces of the decedent were the only relatives of decedent who were citizens of the United States, but he had a large number of alien relatives residing out of the states. The court held that the second cousin was entitled to inherit to the exclusion of the children of the sister, who were debarred by reason of the alienism of their mother through whom they traced descent, the New York act of 1845, which authorized resident aliens to transmit lands to alien heirs, not authorizing citizens to do so, the decedent in the case being a deceased citizen, and not a deceased alien.

The New York statutes (4 Stat. at L. 294-304), which enabled resident aliens to take and hold real estate in that state, apply only to such as have purchased the lands claimed by them, or have taken a conveyance thereof, or to whom the lands have descended or been devised. Ettenheimer v. Heffernan, 66 Barb. 374, 377 (1873).

In Luhns v. Eimer, 15 Hun, 399 (1878). Affirmed in 80 N. Y. 171 (1890), the parties had entered into an agreement whereby the defendant was to sell and the plaintiff to purchase certain real estate, the plaintiff subsequently refusing to accept the title on the ground that the defendant's title was defective. The facts showed that a native of Germany came to the United States in 1847, and was naturalized in 1852, and in 1866 died intestate seized of real estate, leaving him surviving his widow, since deceased, his father, a nonresident alien who died in the same year, the defendant, his sister, who, previous to the death of her brother, married a citizen of the United States and became naturalized subsequent to the death of her brother and after the death of her husband married again. The deceased also left surviving him a nephew who came to the states in 1864 and was naturalized in 1870, also a resident alien niece who came to the states in 1865, the last-named nephew and niece being the children of a nonresident alien sister of the deceased. The court held that the defendant by her marriage with a citizen of the United States became herself a citizen before the death of her brother, and was therefore capable of taking title to real estate by descent at the time of his death becoming seized by descent directly from her brother, and not from or through her father who was an alien, the father of the intestate being at the time of his

If William, Jr., could himself have taken under this executory devise had he been alive, his lineal descendants, he being dead, stand in his place as one of the "heirs at law" of his father the testator, and as such are entitled to take as purchasers—not by descent—in his stead.

Co. Litt. lib. 1, § 1; 2 Bl. Com. 217; 3 Washb. Real Prop. 11.

Since the estate passed by devise, and not by descent, one-fourth interest in the contingent remainder vested in William, Jr., the testator's son, notwithstanding his status as an alien.

An alien is capable of taking land by devise or grant, although not by descent, and of exercising complete dominion until office found and seizure by the sovereign, for whose benefit the alien holds.

Comyns' Digest, title Alien (C.); Sheaffe v. O'Neil, 1 Mass. 256; For v. Southack, 12 Mass.

son's death a nonresident alien incapable of taking any estate or interest in the land; and that the nephew and niece took no interest in the land, as they were both aliens at the death of the deceased, the New York act of 1845 not applying to their case.

So, in Renner v. Müller, 12 Jones & S. 535, 57 How. Pr. 229, 242 (1879), it was held that the collateral descent from a brother to the representatives of a deceased sister, in cases where the alien mother survived, was immediate, but that such mother did not prevent the descent of the estate, the pedigree which was deduced from the brother last seized passing by the alien mother, for the reason that she was not a medium hereditatis, and that under N. Y. Rev. Stat. chap. 2, § 22, even though the mother of the deceased, through whom the estate was claimed, was an alien and alive, the inheritance was not barred to brothers and sisters and their representatives who were otherwise capable of taking and inheriting.

In the above case an injunction was sought to restrain the defendant from paying over the rents of real estate to the alien next of kin of a decedent, and the action was to recover possession, and the rents and profits from the defendant and his tenants, the plaintiff asserting title as the sole heir of the decedent capable of taking by inheritance. The facts showed that a citizen of the United States died in January, 1874, seized of the property in question, leaving as blood relatives, residents of the United States, a niece the daughter of a deceased sister, a niece the wife of the defendant, and the daughter of another sister who was then living, and a nonresident alien, a nephew the brother of the last-named niece, and also another nephew the son of a deceased brother, the latter nephew residing in the United States since 1873. The deceased also left surviving him a mother, since deceased, two sisters, a brother, two nephews, and five nieces, all nonresident aliens. The court held that at the time of the intestate's death the law was that none but a citizen could inherit the fee by descent from a citizen ancestor, and that to that extent the common law still prevailed.

In the above case the court also held that the New York acts of 1868, 1874, 1875, and 1877 did not apply, for the reason that they were not in existence at the time of the intestate's death, neither did the Revised Statutes of 1880, 1843, 1845, and 1857 apply, for the reason that their operation was confined to lands of a resident alien, although section 1 of the act of 1845 was confined to lands purchased and conveyed, or devised or inherited prior to its enactment.

Under the laws of New York sisters stand upon the same footing as brothers, and the descent is immediate between brothers and sisters; therefore if an alien father cannot impede the descent between them or their representatives, the same rule as between them must apply in the case of an alien mother. Renner v. Müller, 57 How. Pr. 229, 242, 12 Jones & S. 535 (1879).

It has been held that the New York statute of 1845, as amended by the act of 1874, chap. 261, and by the laws of 1875, chap. 38, gives resident aliens, holding title to real estate, the power possessed by citizens to transmit such title by descent to their heirs, and infuses an inheritable quality into the blood of the alien. Maynard v. Maynard, 36 Hun, 227, 231 (1885).

In Branagh v. Smith, 46 Fed. Rep. 517, 518 (1891), it was stated that the New York act of 1845, as amended by that of 1874, enabled those aliens "who, according to the statutes of this state [New York], would answer to the description of heirs," to take by descent from any alien resident, or any naturalized or native citizens of the United States, who had purchased and taken, or should thereafter purchase and take, a conveyance of real estate within the state; the act of 1875 permitting aliens to take as devisees; and that therefore such legislation did not, in terms, enlarge the capacity of aliens to take by descent from nonresident aliens, or to take by descent from resident aliens or naturalized or native citizens who had not acquired lands by purchase, there being a clear distinction recognized in law between titles acquired by purchase and titles acquired by descent, the latter vesting by operation of law.

In that case a nonresident alien brought action to recover real estate of which a decedent died seized in the year 1876, claiming title through her mother, who was a first cousin of the decedent, and a nonresident alien at the time of the deceased's death. The question was whether the claim of the plaintiff, as a nonresident alien, claiming by descent a title to property which had previously vested by descent in a nonresident alien ancestor was embraced within the provisions of the state statutes. The court held that the statutory law of that state, New York, gave the right of transmission by descent only to resident aliens and naturalized or native citizens, the mother of the plaintiff being none of these, and, secondly, that the right attached only to land acquired by purchase, the mother of the plaintiff in that case acquiring it by descent, and thirdly, that the statutes contemplated only one step of transmission to alien heirs, and that when that step was taken, by transmission from the decedent to the mother of the plaintiff, the operation of the statutes ceased.

Upon the question whether nonresident aliens took, by force of the New York statutes, lands acquired by descent, it was stated in Callahan v. O'Brien, 72 Hun, 216 (1893), that the statute applied only to lands acquired by purchase, and was not applicable to lands acquired by descent, the court relying upon the case of Branagh v. Smith, 46 Fed. Rep. 517 (1891).

In Callahan v. O'Brien, supra, a citizen and resident of the state acquired, in the year 1869, real estate by purchase, and in the same year another citizen and resident of the state also acquired title by purchase, the parties at the date of the last mentioned deed being husband and wife. In 1873 the plaintiff died seized, leaving a son an only heir a citizen and a resident of the state, and his widow him surviving. In 1888 the son died intestate seized, leaving his mother his sole heir, who then took the fee. In 1890 the mother died seized of both properties, leaving surviving her no ancestors nor descendants, but collateral relatives, namely a sister and a nephew, the son of a deceased brother, two nieces, the only surviving 148; Fairfax v. Hunter, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 619, 8 L. ed. 458; Cross v. De Valle, 1 Cliff. 282.

This one fourth therefore passed to the state of Rhode Island upon the death of William, Jr., in 1830.

Co. Litt. 2b; 1 Leon, 47; 4 Leon, 82.

The state by its act of 1868 has already cut off all claim on its part as against persons who in the absence of the disabilities thereby removed would theretofore as well as thereafter take as heirs at law.

Wainwright v. Low, 132 N. Y. 313.

The law of the domicile determines the qualifications necessary to constitute heirship, and if an illegitimate child is once legitimated by the subsequent marriage of the parents in a state whose laws attach such effect to such children of a deceased sister, and a grandnephew, and nephews and nieces, the surviving children of another deceased sister. The plaintiff, a sister of the deceased, and two of the defendants, one a nephew and the other a grandnephew, were resident citizens, but all the other litigants and their husbands and wives were nonresident citizens of the United States. The court held that such property as the intestate acquired by purchase descended to the resident citizen, and the nonresident aliens, collateral relatives of the deceased, as if they all were resident citizens, but that the real estate acquired by the deceased by descent from her husband vested in such of the heirs as were resident citizens to the exclusion of the nonresident aliens, and that the fact that such heir was compelled to trace his title through nonresident alien ancestors did not affect his right to take under the New York statutes, he himself being a resident citizen.

North Carolina.

The courts have held that at common law, if an alien was naturalized and died, leaving a kinsman who was also naturalized or native born, such kinsman could inherit, if near enough to take immediately, although there was a kinsman an alien who would have excluded him but for that fact, in which respect an alien differed from one attainted, the distinction being placed upon the ground that an alien was never capable of taking by descent, whereas a person attainted was, at one time, capable; but if a citizen kinsman was not near enough to take immediately, and was forced to claim by representation, through an alien, he could not inherit, for, if the alien was living, the right of representation did not apply, and if he was dead, representation would be of no avail, as the party could only take that to which the ancestor, if living, would have been entitled. Campbell v. Campbell, 5 Jones, Eq. 246 (1859).

And in immediate descents a disability by alienism, not only in the parties, but in any intermediate ancestor, through and by whom the descent was made, would prevent it taking effect, and for that reason, if the son or an alien was a citizen, he could not inherit to his grandfather nor to his uncle, because he must claim through his father, who was not inheritable: but, where a person did not so claim, by right of representation, through an alien, it was no obstacle to the descent to him that the nearest heir was an alien; as, where there were three brothers, all aliens, and the two youngest were naturalized, and the eldest had issue, and then one of the naturalized brothers died, the land could not descend to the eldest brother or to his issue, for the reason that he was incapable himself, and his issue could not claim to take by representation, and for that reason it descended to the second brother. Rutherford v. Wolfe, 3 Hawks, 272, 276 (1824).

In that case the lessors of the plaintiff were the grandnephews and nieces of the person last seized, and, in claiming as heirs to him, derived their title through their father, who was an alien, the defendant being in possession as tenant under the trustees of the University of North Carolina, who claimed the land as escheated property. The court below found for the defendants, but upon appeal the judgment was reversed, the court holding that the North Carolina act of 1801, chap. 575, applied and was not repealed by the subsequent act of 1808.

The 2d section of the North Carolina statute of 1801, chap. 575, provides that where any person shall die seized of real estate by inheritance in that state, leaving descendants or other relations citizens of the United States, who would, according to law, inherit were all the nearer descendants or relations extinct, but who, according to the then existing laws, could not inherit because there might be others who, if citizens, would be entitled to inherit, but being aliens could not hold land in that state, whereby such estate would escheat, in such a case the nearest descendants or relations of the deceased, being citizens of the United States, shall inherit.

In Harman v. Ferrall, 64 N. C. 474, 477 (1870), intestate died without lineal descendants, leaving surviving him a sister, a nonresident alien, and the plaintiffs and defendants, collateral relations, naturalized citizens, nieces of the intestate living in the United States, the daughters of his deceased brother who died without being naturalized, the infant plaintiffs also being natives, the children of another daughter of the deceased brother, who was a naturalized citizen and died before the intestate. The defendant was also a naturalized citizen and a child of a sister of the intestate, who died a nonresident alien, another defendant being a son of the intestate's brother, who had filed his intention to become a citizen but did not take the final oath of naturalization until after the death of the intestate, and was therefore not a citizen until afterwards. The court held that such last-named person, not being fully naturalized until after the intestate's death, could not inherit; but with respect to the rights of the other parties the court stated that the brother and sister of the intestate were to be considered as if they never existed, except for the purpose of counting relationship, and that their children took in their own right as they derived no inheritable blood from their ancestors, such ancestors at the time of their death not being capable of taking the inheritance, the doctrine of representation not arising as to the two nieces, who were naturalized citizens and daughters of the intestate's brother, and the niece who was a naturalized citizen and a child of the intestate's sister, who died an alien, such persons taking per capita each a fourth; the other fourth going to the children of the other daughter of the intestate's brother, who was a naturalized citizen and died before the intestate, who took per stirpes as representing their mother, who, if living, would have taken such fourth share.

Pennsylvania.

In Rubeck v. Gardner, 7 Watts, 455, 458 (1838), the question was whether the Pennsylvania act of February 23, 1791, authorized a citizen or subject of a foreign state to take lands in Pennsylvania by devise or descent from an alien who had purchased them without having complied with the conditions imposed by law, the act being passed for the encouragement of persons purchasing land in that state. The court held that the act referred to persons purchasing lawfully, and not to persons acquiring land contrary to law; and that it enabled marriage, the legitimacy follows the child everywhere and entitles him to the right of inheritance.

1 Wörner, American Law of Administration, 157; Story, Conf. L. chap. 4; Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 243, 37 Am. Rep. 821; Miller v. Miller, 91 N. Y. 315, 43 Am. Rep. 669; Dayton v. Adkisson, 45 N. J. Eq. 603, 4 L. R. A. 488.

every person, being a citizen or subject of any foreign state, to acquire and take, by devise or descent, lands and other real property in that commonwealth, and that a title by devise or descent, being a derivative one, could rise no higher than its source, and that the devisee or heir could only take what the ancestor had; and that if the ancestor was an alien, and as such incompetent to take, there was nothing to descend or to pass by will. And the court further stated that if the act were to give the plaintiff the right to inherit, the heir or devisee of an alien would enjoy a greater and more entire estate than the alien himself had; and that to enable the alien heir to hold what his ancestor was prohibited by law from holding would be giving a boom to an illegal act.

South Carolina.

In Richards v. McDaniel, 2 Mill, Const. 18 (1818), a naturalized citizen died intestate in 1800, possessed of real estate acquired by him prior to his naturalization, his title thereto being legalized by a special act of the legislature of December 20, 1806. Plaintiff, a naturalized citizen, claimed as a second cousin of the intestate, and contended that as her naturalization dated prior to the death of the intestate, she was capable of inheriting. The defendants, also aliens by birth, were the brother and sister of the intestate, and if capable of inheriting, were so entitled to the exclusion of the plaintiff.

The brother, a lunatic, was never naturalized, and the sister was not naturalized until a year after the intestate's death. The question was whether she was capable of taking by descent. The court below found verdict for the plaintiff, but a motion for a new trial was granted, the court stating that the act of 1806, being a private act, was intended for the individual benefit of the persons therein named, among whom was the intestate, and that therefore, if he or those claiming under him, had a better title than that claimed under that act, a stranger could not say that the inferior titles should supersede the better,—especially as relating to those claiming under him; and that as the act of 1807 gave a certain, and therefore a better, title to the sister, she ought therefore not to be driven to that which was less so, and that for the reason that the act of 1806 did not profess to give the sister a right to inherit, while the act of 1807 did so expressly; and further that if the act of 1806 was conclusive as to the rights of the intestate, it ought not to be so considered as to the sister.

In McDaniel v. Richards, 1 McCord L. 123 (1821), it was held that a husband, whose alien wife had given notice of her intention to become a citizen, but died before naturalization, could not inherit through her.

In Dupont v. Pepper, 1 Harp. Eq. 5 (1824), the question was whether the defendants, the children and heirs of a decedent, who was a native-born citizen but married a British subject and resided abroad until the time of her decease in the year 1801, were capable of taking and holding real estate in South Carolina, either at common law, or under any statute, or under the protection of the treaty with Great Britain, the contention being that the mother of such children being a native citizen of that state, her children, though born abroad, were entitled to hold real estate by descent from her; but the court held that such children born of the alien father could not inherit either at common law or under the treaty of 1794, or by the act of Congress of January 29, 1795, or by the act of April 14, 1802, which gave the rights of citizenship to the children of citizens born in a foreign country, such children not coming within the provisions of the acts, for the reason that their father was not a resident of the United States.

Mr. Darius Baker, for respondents, children of Enrique De Wolf:

An illegitimate child made legitimate by the laws of the state in which his parents are domiciled is forever after legitimate everywhere.

Miller v. Miller, 91 N. Y. 315, 43 Am. Rep. 669; Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 243, 37 Am. Rep.

But this decision was reversed upon appeal to the United States Supreme Court, where it was held that such children could inherit. Shanks v. Dupont, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 242, 7 L. ed. 666 (1830).

Tennessee.

In Starks v. Traynor, 11 Humph. 292 (1850), a naturalized citizen left several relations residents of the state, namely a brother then since deceased leaving issue, and the complainants the children of another brother who died in the lifetime of the intestate, and the defendant, the son of a sister of the intestate, such sister and her husband both nonresident aliens dying in the testator's lifetime leaving two other children, one a nonresident alien then living. The facts showed that the defendant was a naturalized citizen previous to the intestate's death and that the complainants though born abroad immigrated to the United States during their minority with their father, and the contention was that they were entitled to the entire estate in exclusion of the defendant, for the reason that he traced his descent through the mother who was an alien and therefore incapable of inheriting, the common law providing that the inheritance could not be traced through an alien. The court held that at common law such contention was correct, but that the rule in that state was modified by the act of 1800, chap. 53, which, though repealed by the act of 1848, chap. 161, § 1, furnished the rule for the decision of that case, the rights of the parties arising and becoming vested under that act, and that therefore under its provisions the course of descent was not broken by the alienage of the ancestor of the next resident of kin who inherited under the act as if such alien ancestor had been a resident or naturalized citizen and died.

The defendant in the above case was therefore held to take equally with the surviving brother and children of the deceased brother who died in the state in the testator's lifetime, the complainants being entitled to represent the deceased father.

The first section of the Tennessee statute of 1800, referred to in the above case, provided that in all cases where any person within that state should die intestate, without issue, and possessed of any estate, real or personal, the said estate, and every part thereof, should descend to such persons or person who were next of kin to the decedent, and resident within the United States, to the perpetual exclusion of aliens who might be related to the said decedent in a nearer degree. In considering such statute the court stated that the persons on whom this capacity was bestowed were the next of kin resident within the United States, without regard as to whether they were naturalized citizens or aliens; and also irrespective of the degree of consanguinity in which they stood to the intestate; that was the resident next of kin, though related in a more remote degree, inherited in exclusion of the non-resident next of kin related in a nearer degree. Starks v. Traynor, 11 Humph. 292, 293 (1850).

321; Dayton v. Adkisson, 45 N. J. Eq. 608, 4 L. R. A. 489; Story, Conf. L. §§ 98 et seq.

The intention of the testator always controls, and so the words "heirs" and "heirs at law" will be construed to mean children, grandchildren, or descendants.

Waddell v. Waddell, 95 Mo. 388.

If he had made the executory devise over "to my children William and Henry or their descendants," would not these claimants have taken through aliens? They are descendants, and at common law an alien could take land by devise.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 458, 460, and note.

The words "heirs at law" mean, not those who stood in that relationship at the death of the testator, but those persons who, on the happening of the event which caused the executory devise to take effect, were heirs at law of the testator, that is, were William De Wolf's heirs at the death of Maria Rogers in 1890.

Doe, King, v. Frost, 3 Barn. & Ald. 546; 2 Fearnle, Contingent Remainders, 585, 586.

The law existing at the time of decision governs the rights of aliens to inherit realty.

Pilla v. German School Assn. 23 Fed. Rep. 700.

All English statutes passed before the emigration of our ancestors and applicable to our situation, and in amendment of the law, constitute a part of the common law of this country.

1 Kent, Com. *478; Bishop v. Tripp, 16 R. I. 198; Martin v. Clarke, 8 R. I. 389, 5 Am. Rep. 586.

The statute of 11 & 12 Wm. III. being in its terms and purpose applicable to all "natural-born subjects within any of the King's realms or dominions," and taking into consideration the origin of the settlers here, the alien ancestry of many of the then inhabitants, their ownership of land, and the necessity of descent under law in many cases, what is more reasonable to presume than that this statute was put in force in the colony?

East Greenwich v. Warwick, 4 R. I. 140; Palmer v. Donovan, 2 Mass. 179, note; McCreery v. Somerville, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 354, 6 L. ed. 109.

Messrs. Francis Colwell and Walter H. Barnes also for respondents.

Stiness, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon a previous hearing in this case, 18 R. I. —, it was held that the second and fifth clauses of the will of William DeWolf gave to his two daughters, Charlotte and Maria, defeasible estates in fee, which, upon their deaths without issue, passed to the heirs of said William by way of executory devise. The question now arises whether the heirs are to be ascertained as of the date of the death of the testator in 1829, or of the death of the surviving daughter in 1890.

Three claims are made: First, by the complainants, that the estate is to be treated as vested in the heirs of the testator at his death, as in the case of a contingent remainder; second, by the respondent Annie E. Middleton, that the estate vested upon the happening of the contingency in 1890, but that the heirs are to be ascertained under the statute of descent in force at his death; and third, by the other respondents, that the heirs are to be ascertained by the statute in force in 1890, when the devise took effect.

In most, if not all, of the cases cited by the complainants, there was a precedent estate supporting a remainder, created from the death of the testator, but contingent upon an event. It would follow from this that the heirs must be ascertained as of the testator's death, because the interest in the remainder began then, e. g.: Bullock v. Downs, 9 H. L. Cas. 1; Mortimore v. Mortimore, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 448; Stewart's Estate, 147 Pa. 883; Re Kenyon, 17 R. I. 149.

With respect to the supposition that the above-mentioned act of 1890 was designed to apply exclusively to cases where there were no next of kin within the jurisdiction of the United States, qualified to inherit by the common-law rules of descent and distribution, and that if in fact there were any resident next of kin so qualified, they would be entitled to take the estate to the exclusion of other next of kin, who, though resident in the United States at the death of the intestate, were not so qualified, the court stated that such was not the proper construction of the act, as the new inheritable capacity which the statute conferred, placed persons who, previous to its passage, were disabled, to take by descent, on the same footing with those who were capable of inheriting, and that the words "next of kin" as used in the statute were not to be taken as meaning nearest of kin. Ibid.

Texas.

An alien who has declared his intention to become a citizen, has under the laws of Texas the rights of a citizen except that of the elective franchise, and can therefore possess real estate and transmit it by descent. Settegast v. Schrimpf, 35 Tex. 323 (1872).

Virginia.

In Jackson v. Sanders, 2 Leigh, 119 (1830), a citizen died seized leaving a brother a citizen, an alien sister and children of the alien sister who were citizens. 81 L. R. A.

zens, and grandchildren of the alien sister also citizens, but whose fathers as well as their grandmothers were aliens. The court held that under the Virginia statute (1 Rev. Code, chap. 96, § 18), which provided that in making title by descent it should be no bar to a party that any ancestor through whom he derives his descent from the intestate was or had been an alien, the descendants of such alien sister were entitled to take by descent per stirpes, and that the brother of the intestate took the other portion of the estate, the section being full and complete to remove out of the way the bar of alienage in both lineal and collateral descents, and also to remove any impediment from the life of an ancestor through whom the descent might be derived, the words "any ancestor" including both lineal and collateral, and that the words "is or hath been an alien" showed that the law contemplated a claim through a living as well as a dead alien ancestor.

By the Virginia statute, children born in that state can inherit through living alien ancestors, and therefore children born of alien parents residing in that state can inherit real estate there, and for the same reason such children born in another state may do the same in Virginia. Hannon v. Hounihan, 85 Va. 429 (1888), Code of 1878, chap. 109, § 4. E. W.

But a marked distinction between a contingent remainder and an executory devise is that estates of the latter kind arise when their time comes, and do not depend for support upon a prior estate. Wms. Real Prop. 289. They may be limited upon a fee, as in this case. An executory devise is the devise of a future estate, and if the executory devisee dies before the event happens the estate goes to the heir at the time of the event, and not to the heir at the time of the death of such devisee. Goodright v. Searle, 2 Wils. 29; Cain v. Teare, 7 Jur. 567; Fearne, Contingent Remainders, 560, and cases cited.

The happening of the contingency determines who is to take the estate, and until that time no one has an interest to transmit. Brown v. Williams, 5 R. I. 309.

In Doe, King, v. Frost, 3 Barn. & Ald. 546, where a testator gave an estate to his son in fee and if he should die without issue to the heir at law of the testator, subject to legacies for the younger branches of the family, it was held that the son took an estate in fee with an executory devise over to the person who, on the happening of the event contemplated by the will, should become the heir of the testator. This case was referred to as a correct decision by Denman, Ch. J., in Doe, Pilkington, v. Spratt, 5 Barn. & Ad. 781, upon the intention of the will. Doe, King, v. Frost, is also cited as an authority in Cottmann v. Cottmann, L. R. 3 H. L. 121 (1868). While the general rule is that the heirs of a testator are to be taken from the time of his death, yet the rule gives way to a contrary intent to be found in the will. Assuming, then, that the cases referred to go no further than this, we think that the will in this case shows such an intent. The property given to Charlotte or Marie is to go, "on their decease," in the second clause, and "on both their decease," in the fifth clause, to the heirs at law of the testator. In making such a gift his mind would naturally look forward to the time when the estate might vest in possession, and so the words used comport with an intent to point out the time and mode of ascertaining who the heirs will be, by designating a class to take as executory devisees. The agreed facts also point to such an intent. When the will was made the son William was a domiciled resident of Cuba, who, as an alien, was incapable, as our law then stood, of taking by descent. But that there can be no inference of an intent to exclude him on this account appears by the fact of a devise of real estate to him, and the fact that he, with the other children, was one of the residuary legatees in the will. Of course the testator could not foresee changes in our law in regard to alienage, but it is not impossible that he looked forward to a return of his son, or his family, to citizenship in this country, when he or they could stand as legatees in the class which he designated. Moreover, the words are that the estate, "on their decease be divided among my heirs at law." The division was to be prospective, and we see no reason why the class should not also be taken to be so. For these reasons, as well as those given in the previous opinion, we think that these were intended to fix the time for the vesting of the estate and for the ascertainment of the persons to take in possession. They are not substantially different from cases where the devise is to those who shall then answer the description. 2 Jarman, Wills, 6th ed. 992, and cases cited; Re Swinburne, 16 R. I. 208; Pinkham v. Blair, 57 N. H. 226.
31 L. R. A.

In Sears v. Russell, 8 Gray, 86, the words "in case of the death of any child of a daughter, without issue, after its mother, and before its father, the share of such child not to go to its father, but to the testator's heirs at law," were construed to mean the testator's heirs then living, and under such construction the devise was held to be void for remoteness.

But it is argued that the words, "according to the statute of descents," import a class to be ascertained and traced from testator's death. We do not think this is so. In Re Sturge and Great Western R. Co. L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 444, it was held that a devise to persons "who shall by virtue of the statutes for the distribution of the estates of persons dying intestate be my next of kin," describes a class to be ascertained on the hypothesis that the testator lives up to and dies at the period of distribution. See also Wharton v. Barker, 4 Kay & J. 483.

It must be admitted that in some of the cases cited the language has been clearer than in the will before us, but, understanding, as we do, that the testator pointed out a time when his devise was to take effect and the class to whom it was then to be given, this case does not fall within the numerous cases of a remainder, which is to be traced from the testator's death. It is a gift to persons who shall be his heirs when the contingency arises, and not to those who were his heirs at the time of his decease.

We therefore decide that the heirs of William DeWolf, senior, are to be ascertained as of the date of the death of Mrs. Rogers, December 14, 1890, "according to the statute of descents" as it then was. By Pub. Stat. chap. 172, § 6, aliens are admitted to take and transmit title to real estate. It is admitted that by the law of Cuba the marriage of William DeWolf, Jr., to Susanna Du Coudray, in 1822, had the effect to render legitimate the son called Jerome DeWolf, born in Cuba in 1819. He was therefore an heir of this father according to the law of the father's domicile, and this determines his status here. Melvin v. Martin, 18 R. I. —.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Jonathan L. CLUTTON
v.
Annie J. CLUTTON, Appt.

(.....Mich.....)

1. The omission of the noncollusion clause from a cross bill in a divorce suit is not fatal on appeal, but the court may allow it to be supplied.

2. A nonresident defendant of a divorce suit brought by a resident of the state may be granted a divorce on a cross bill, although the marriage and cause of divorce took place out of the state and the general provisions in How. Anno. Stat. (Mich.) § 6681, say that in such cases a divorce shall not be granted unless the party exhibiting the petition or bill therefor has resided in the state one year.

(February 7, 1886.)

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Wayne County dismissing her cross bill in a proceeding for divorce. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John Ward, for appellant:

The domicil of either party gives the courts of the domicil jurisdiction to grant a divorce, as a matter in rem, that is valid within its territorial limits and binding on both parties.

1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 837; People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 247, 12 Am. Rep. 260; Wright v. Wright, 24 Mich. 180.

If the court, by reason of the nonresidence or otherwise has no jurisdiction over one of the parties, but has jurisdiction over the status of the other party, it can proceed to affirm, annul, or modify such status, this being a matter in rem.

1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 27.

Jurisdiction in divorce cases is strictly statutory.

Baugh v. Baugh, 37 Mich. 59, 26 Am. Rep. 495.

The complainant by filing his bill brought the marital relation between himself and the defendant under the jurisdiction of the court.

Under our statute she might have instituted the original suit herself in the court below, the residence of the complainant giving the court the jurisdiction required.

1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 27.

If a wife is sued in her husband's domicil, she may file a cross bill as answer, though she is in fact domiciled in another state.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 756, 757; Sterl v. Sterl, 2 Ill. App. 223; Jenness v. Jenness, 24 Ind. 355, 87 Am. Dec. 335.

Mr. Franklin L. Lord, for appellee:

The statutes of Michigan forbid the court from granting a divorce, unless the applicant alleges and proves a residence of two years in the state before filing the bill. Under this heading we shall consider the following questions:

NOTE.—For effect of appearance to authorize judgment in divorce cases, see note to Ellis's Appeal (Minn.) 23 L. R. A. 287.

31 L. R. A.

The jurisdiction of a court in chancery to grant a divorce is purely statutory.

Wright v. Wright, 2 Md. 429, 56 Am. Dec. 733; Carson v. Carson, 40 Miss. 349; Stokes v. Stokes, 1 Mo. 228; Perry v. Perry, 2 Paige, 501; Burtis v. Burtis, Hopk. Ch. 557, 14 Am. Dec. 563; Mix v. Mix, 1 Johns. Ch. 204; Williamson v. Parisien, Id. 389; Grant v. Grant, 12 S. C. 29, 32 Am. Rep. 506; Wright v. Wright, 6 Tex. 3.

Courts in this country possess no power in actions for divorces except such as are conferred by statute.

Barker v. Dayton, 28 Wis. 367; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 39 Wis. 167; Bacon v. Bacon, 43 Wis. 197; Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 208, 43 Am. Rep. 706.

Therefore the court below could have no jurisdiction over the cross bill, except such as is given by statute.

Le Barron v. Le Barron, 35 Vt. 365; Hopkins v. Hopkins, supra; Bauman v. Bauman, 18 Ark. 320, 68 Am. Dec. 171; Steele v. Steele, 35 Conn. 48; Jeans v. Jeans, 2 Harr. (Del.) 38; McGee v. McGee, 10 Ga. 477; Carson v. Carson, 40 Miss. 349; Perry v. Perry, 2 Paige, 501; Burtis v. Burtis, Hopk. Ch. 557, 14 Am. Dec. 563; Jarvis v. Jarvis, 8 Edw. Ch. 462; Klein v. Klein, 42 How. Pr. 166; Olin v. Hungerford, 10 Ohio, 268; Grant v. Grant, 12 S. C. 29, 32 Am. Rep. 506; Cast v. Cast, 1 Utah, 112.

The state may provide by statute for granting divorces to nonresidents, but divorces so granted will be regarded as invalid in any other state.

State v. Armington, 25 Minn. 29; Van Fossen v. State, 37 Ohio. St. 320, 41 Am. Rep. 507; 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. 5th ed. § 136; Wright v. Wright, 24 Mich. 180; Payson v. Payson, 34 N. H. 518; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 35 N. H. 474; Yates v. Yates, 18 N. J. Eq. 280.

Only that country may grant a divorce in which the complainant is domiciled.

Harvey v. Farnie, L. R. 5 Prob. Div. p. 153; Briggs v. Briggs, Id. 163; Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263, 26 Am. Rep. 21; Richards v. Richards, 8 Mackey, 481; People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 257, 12 Am. Rep. 260.

Jurisdiction to grant a divorce to dissolve a marriage of any person is vested in the state which has control of the status of the person in question. Divorce jurisdiction depends upon domicil.

Cheever v. Wilson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604; Turner v. Turner, 44 Ala. 437; Thompson v. State, 28 Ala. 12; House v. House, 25 Ga. 478; Roth v. Roth, 104 Ill. 35, 44 Am. Rep. 81; Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263, 26 Am. Rep. 21; Litowich v. Litowich, 19 Kan. 451, 37 Am. Rep. 145; Harding v. Alden, 9 Me. 140, 23 Am. Dec. 549; Sewall v. Sewall, 123 Mass. 156, 23 Am. Rep. 299; Ross v. Ross, 103 Mass. 575; People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 247, 12 Am. Rep. 260; State v. Armington, 25 Minn. 29; Leith v. Leith, 39 N. H. 20; Flower v. Flower, 43 N. J. Eq. 152; Doughty v. Doughty, 28 N. J. Eq. 581; Mellen v. Mellen, 10 Abb. N. C. 329; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Colein v. Reed, 55 Pa. 375; Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. I. 87; Hare v. Hare, 10 Tex. 355;

Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 195, 43 Am. Rep. 706; Shaffer v. Bushnell, 24 Wis. 372; Steele v. Steele, 35 Conn. 48.

Courts may be given authority by statute to grant a divorce, where either of the parties is a resident.

The residence of the wife ordinarily follows that of the husband upon the legal fiction that his domicile is hers; but in an action for divorce upon the ground of desertion the wife is entitled to maintain a separate residence from that of her husband.

Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 205, 43 Am. Rep. 706; Hanberry v. Hanberry, 29 Ala. 719; Turner v. Turner, 44 Ala. 437; Jenness v. Jenness, 24 Ind. 357, 87 Am. Dec. 335; Harding v. Alden, 9 Me. 140, 23 Am. Dec. 549; Harteau v. Harteau, 14 Pick. 181, 25 Am. Dec. 372; Mellen v. Mellen, supra; Ashbaugh v. Ashbaugh, 17 Ill. 476; Schonwald v. Schonwald, 2 Jones, Eq. 369; Ditson v. Ditson, supra; Craven v. Craven, 27 Wis. 418; Dutcher v. Dutcher, 39 Wis. 651; Burten v. Shannon, 115 Mass. 439.

If she is not in fault but has a cause for divorce against him and is actually domiciled in another state, she cannot, by virtue of a legal fiction that his domicile is hers, sue him in the courts of his domicile as though she were residing in the same state as he.

Toney v. Lindsay, 1 Dow, P. C. 117; Burten v. Shannon, 115 Mass. 439; Dutcher v. Dutcher, 39 Wis. 651; Pate v. Pate, 6 Mo. App. 49; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 35 N. H. 474; Schonwald v. Schonwald, 2 Jones, Eq. 367; Cheever v. Wilson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Masten v. Masten, 15 N. H. 159; Kashaw v. Kashaw, 3 Cal. 312; Harrison v. Harrison, 20 Ala. 629, 56 Am. Dec. 227; Coltin v. Reed, 55 Pa. 375.

A husband and wife may and often do have distinct and separate domiciles, so far as divorce jurisdiction is concerned.

Hanberry v. Hanberry, 29 Ala. 719; Turner v. Turner, 44 Ala. 437; Moffatt v. Moffatt, 5 Cal. 280; Jenness v. Jenness, 24 Ind. 355, 87 Am. Dec. 335; Sawtell v. Sawtell, 17 Conn. 284; Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa, 36; Harding v. Alden, 9 Me. 140, 23 Am. Dec. 549; Harteau v. Harteau, 14 Pick. 181, 25 Am. Dec. 372; Wright v. Wright, 24 Mich. 180; Hopkins v. Hopkins, supra; Payson v. Payson, 34 N. H. 518; Frary v. Frary, 10 N. H. 61, 32 Am. Dec. 395; Yates v. Yates, 13 N. J. Eq. 280; Mellen v. Mellen, 10 Abb. N. C. 329; Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. I. 87; Dutcher v. Dutcher, supra; Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 195, 43 Am. Rep. 706; Schonwald v. Schonwald, supra.

The complainant in a cross bill can have no greater rights than he would have in an original bill, and any jurisdictional fact which must be alleged to entitle complainant to relief on filing an original bill will be equally necessary for the complainant in a cross bill asking for the same relief.

Pate v. Pate, supra; Wright v. Wright, 6 Tex. 13; Crossman v. Crossman, 33 Ala. 486; Bennett v. Bennett, 28 Cal. 599; Coulthurst v. Coulthurst, 58 Cal. 239; Phelan v. Phelan, 12 Fla. 449; Burns v. Burns, 13 Fla. 369; Powell v. Powell, 53 Ind. 518; 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 41, 61, 166; Story, Eq. Pl. § 229; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 86, 215; Calverley v. Williams, 1 Ves. 31 L. R. A.

Jr. 218; Hackley v. Mack, 60 Mich. 604; Tobey v. Foreman, 79 Ill. 489; Lamon v. McKee, 7 Mackey, 446.

The oath to a cross bill praying for a divorce must contain the statutory noncollusion clause. Ayres v. Gartner, 90 Mich. 380.

Moore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainant, Jonathan L. Clutton, a resident of the city of Detroit since June, 1886, brought his suit for divorce against the defendant, Anna J. Clutton, a resident of Ontario, alleging the marriage of the parties in Ontario, and charging, as causes for divorce, desertion and denial of marital privileges. The defendant, Anna J. Clutton, appeared in the suit and filed her answer, admitting the marriage between the parties, as stated in the original bill, but denying all of the causes for divorce stated therein by complainant; and in her answer charged complainant with having deserted her in 1886, and with having failed to support her. She further charges "that complainant, being of sufficient ability, and worth $20,000 or more, as she is informed and believes, has grossly refused and neglected to provide a suitable, or any, maintenance for herself or their said children, and that she claims the benefit of this answer, and the facts and charges set forth therein, as a cross bill, and prays that she may be granted a divorce from the bonds of matrimony with the complainant, and that she may be released from the obligations thereof, and that she may have such other and further relief," etc. This answer and cross bill were sworn to, but the verification did not contain the statutory noncollusion clause. The complainant filed a general replication to the answer, and a general demurrer to it as a cross bill. The court below sustained the demurrer, dismissed the cross bill, and the defendant appeals to this court. The only questions necessary to discuss here are: First. Was it essential, in order to sustain the cross bill, that the noncollusion clause should have been stated in said bill? Second. Can a decree of divorce be granted a nonresident of the state, who is brought in by the complainant, who is and has been a resident of the state for the statutory period required to give the court jurisdiction?

As to the first question, it was held, in the case of Ayres v. Gartner, 90 Mich. 380, that the oath or affirmation administered to the complainant, in swearing to a bill for divorce, shall negative the existence of any collusion, understanding, or agreement whatever between the affiant and the defendant in relation to the application for divorce, is mandatory, and its absence cannot be waived by any act of the defendant. In Tackaberry v. Tackaberry, 101 Mich. 102, a different rule is stated in relation to a cross bill. It was there held that the objection, made for the first time on appeal, that the answer to a cross bill in a divorce case is not sworn to, comes too late. In the case of Daly v. Hosmer, 102 Mich. 392, it was held that it was a proper exercise of the court's discretion to permit the amendment of the verification of a cross bill by adding the noncollusion clause, and the filing of a replication, after decree; and it was further stated that, had the question arisen upon the hearing, the power to do so would probably not have been questioned, and that the questions were not raised then, but, when raised, were no more meritorious than they would have been upon the hearing. We think the case before us is one where it would be very proper to admit the verification of the cross bill, if the facts would warrant it, so as to show noncollusion.

As to the other question, it is urged that the statute forbids the granting of a decree of divorce in favor of a nonresident of the state, citing, How. Anno Stat. § 6231, which reads: "No divorce shall be granted unless the party exhibiting the petition or bill of complaint therefor shall have resided in this state one year immediately preceding the time of exhibiting such petition or bill, or unless the marriage was solemnized in this state, and the complainant shall have resided in this state from the time of such marriage to the time of exhibiting the petition or bill, and when the cause for divorce occurred out of this state, no divorce shall be granted unless the complainant or defendant shall have resided within this state two years next preceding the filing of the petition or bill, and no proofs or testimony shall be taken in any cause until four months after the filing of such petition or bill for divorce, except where the cause for divorce is desertion, or when the testimony is taken conditionally for the purpose of perpetuating such testimony." Prior to the enactment of this statute, it had been repeatedly held, in this state, that a decree of divorce could be granted where one of the parties was a resident of the state. Is it not true that the complainant's filing his bill brought the marital relations existing between him and the defendant, and the parties thereto, under the jurisdiction of the court? The defendant, having appeared in said proceeding, was equally interested with the complainant in the subject-matter of the suit as a proceeding in rem, and, having submitted herself to the jurisdiction of the court, its jurisdiction having been first invoked by the complainant, ought she not to be entitled to a final hearing of the case, and to such relief as is equitably hers? Is it not probable that, in enacting the latter portion of the statute, contained in these words, "when the cause for divorce occurred out of this state, no divorce shall be granted unless the complainant or defendant shall have resided within this state two years next preceding the filing of the petition or bill," the legislature had just such a condition as exists in this proceeding in mind? Section 6231, as an entirety, has not been construed by this court, but portions of it have been. It has been contended that, under that portion of the statute reading, "no proofs or testimony shall be taken in any cause until four months after the filing of such petition or bill of divorce," where relief was sought by way of answer in the nature of a cross bill in a divorce proceeding, no testimony could be taken until four months had elapsed after the filing of the cross bill. It is possible that a literal interpretation of the statute would sustain that contention, but it was held, in the case, already cited, of Daly v. Hoerner, that a proper construction of this provision would allow testimony to be taken before four months had elapsed after the filing of the answer in the nature of a cross bill, if four months had intervened after the filing of the original bill. It was stated "that this provision of the statute was to prevent hasty divorces, and that the object is attained in four months from the filing of the petition or bill, as well where a cross bill is filed as where it is not." The question now under discussion has never been determined by the Michigan court.

A similar statute was construed in the case of Jenness v. Jenness, 24 Ind. 359, 87 Am. Dec. 335. The statute of that state provides that "divorces may be decreed, etc., 'on petition filed by any person who, at the time,' etc., 'shall have been a bona fide resident of the state one year previous to the filing of the same, and a bona fide resident of the county at the time of filing such petition.'" Another section provides the method of notifying the defendant when not a resident of the state, and another section of the statute provides that "in addition to an answer, the defendant may file a cross-petition for divorce, and when filed, the court shall decree the divorce to the party legally entitled to the same." In that case the defendant was a nonresident of the state, and it was urged, as it is here, that the court could not grant her a divorce. The court discussed the question at length, and granted a decree to the nonresident defendant, making use of this language: "That to give the statute any other construction would be to say that in two cases precisely alike in their facts, the defendant in one being a resident, and in the other a nonresident, the former might result in a decree for divorce on cross-petition, with such alimony as ought to be given where the plaintiff is in fault; while in the latter, that vindication of character which can often be secured only by a decree, could not be had by the defendant, nor could the alimony be adjusted upon the basis of the fact that the defendant was the party aggrieved. Such a discrimination against nonresident defendants finds no place within the letter of the statute, still less in its spirit, and a construction which would allow it, would invite, in the class of cases in which they could be most successfully perpetrated, the very worst abuses." It was further added: "While our statute is intended to prevent nonresidents from making use of our courts to perpetrate frauds upon their unsuspecting wives or husbands, by coming here to petition for divorces, it, at the same time, arms them with every weapon of defense which is afforded to our own people, when brought into court at the suit of those whose bona fide residence here gives us jurisdiction."

In Illinois the statute provides as follows: "No person shall be entitled to a divorce in pursuance of the provisions of this act, who has not resided in the state one whole year next before filing his or her bill or petition, unless the offense or injury complained of was committed within this state, or whilst one or both of the parties resided in this state." That statute was construed in the case of Sterl v. Sterl, 2 Ill. App. 223. In that case the complainant filed his bill for divorce against his wife, who was a resident of the city of New York. She filed her cross bill in the cause.

charging the appellee with desertion, and also adultery, committed in the state of Illinois. In discussing the case the court says: "It is insisted by the appellee that under the provisions of the above section of the statute the appellant had no right to file her cross bill, praying, amongst other things, for a divorce, for the reason that she was not a resident of this state, and that fact appearing on the face of her cross bill, he could avail himself of such fact of nonresidence by way of demurrer. . . . It is a familiar principle of law that a court of equity having acquired jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter of the suit will retain and exercise such jurisdiction, until the equities of all the parties are meted out to them. In this case the jurisdiction of the court is invoked by the appellee, he having, as he had a legal right to do, filed his bill against appellant praying relief and summoning the appellant into the court. When she is thus brought in, and having responded to the claims of the appellee by answering his bill of complaint, being, as it were, then forced into the court, submits herself to its jurisdiction, and asks the court to grant to her certain equitable rights, to which she claims to be entitled, then it is that the appellee challenges the jurisdiction of the court to grant her any equitable rights, but continues to clamor for his. This position is unconscionable and indefensible upon the principles of equity. But we are told, and it is urged by the appellee, that by reason of the arbitrary provisions of the statute, there is no escape from this dilemma, and that, as a consequence, the appellant is in the court for the purpose of receiving its mandate, and yielding obedience to its orders, but without any equitable rights which the appellee is bound to respect, for the reason, as he claims, that she resided in New York, and not in Illinois, and notwithstanding she is dragged into the court, at the suit of appellee, and, as may be presumed, against her will. We think that by the plainest principles of equity the appellee is, under such circumstances, precluded from questioning the jurisdiction of a court which he has himself invoked; and that the court having acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the parties to the suit, at the instance and by the prayer of the appellee, he cannot be heard to question the jurisdiction of the court to hear, consider, and determine all the equities of the parties, to the end that complete justice may be done to all in the same case." The court held that the nonresident wife, upon her showing, was entitled to relief.

We think it follows that it would be a reasonable construction of the Michigan statute to say that, where the complainant in a divorce proceeding has resided in the state the full statutory period, and the defendant has appeared in the cause, the court has jurisdiction over the parties, and the right to dispose of the issue between them upon its merits and according to equity, even if, in order to do so, it is necessary to grant a decree of divorce to the defendant for the reasons stated in her answer, filed in the nature of a cross bill. In the case at issue the verification of the cross bill should have been amended as we have indicated, and the demurrer should have been overruled.

81 L. R. A.

The cause is remanded for hearing in the court below, with costs to appellant.

The other Justices concur.

Helen H. NEWBERRY

v.

William L. CARPENTER, Circuit Judge.

(.....Mich.....)

The constitutional protection against unreasonable seizures is violated by entering a private enclosure and taking away from the possession of the owner under order of court a wrecked boiler, engine, and other materials for use as exhibits on a prosecution of another person for criminal negligence in causing the explosion of the boiler.

(McGrath, Ch. J., dissents.)

(December 24, 1895.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to vacate an order depriving complainant of the possession and power of control over a certain boiler and some machinery owned by her but in possession of the public authorities for the purpose of use in connection with a criminal prosecution. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Otto Kirchner, with Messrs. Wells, Angell, Boynton, & McMillan for relator.

Messrs. Allan H. Frazer and Ormond F. Hunt for respondent.

Grant, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts in this case are as follows: The relator was the owner of a large building in the city of Detroit, occupied by a printing establishment and other business enterprises. A large number of persons were employed in it. A steam engine and boilers were used in heating the building, and situated in the basement. On November 6, 1895, one or both of the boilers exploded, completely wrecking the building, causing the death of thirty-seven persons, and injury to others. It was claimed by the prosecutor of the county that one Thompson, the engineer, caused the explosion by his criminal negligence in the management of the engine and boilers, and is therefore guilty of manslaughter. An indictment was promptly returned by the grand jury against him, charging him with that crime. Immediately after the explosion the police department of the city of Detroit took possession of the building, and removed the débris and the bodies of those killed. On November 16 the prosecuting attorney appeared before one of the circuit judges of the county of Wayne, and upon his verbal statement, without any sworn petition or affidavit, the following order was made:

NOTE.—The above decision, while of great importance and applicable to a multitude of cases, is believed to be upon a substantially new question.

For constitutional protection against unreasonable searches and seizures as affecting the use of books and papers in actions for forfeiture or penalty, see division II. of note to Levy v. San Francisco Super. Ct. (Cal.) 29 L. R. A. 818.

For a question somewhat similar, see Martin v. Ellicott (Mich.) post, 160, also State v. Dupaquier (La.) 26 L. R. A. 162.

"On motion of O. F. Hunt, assistant prosecuting attorney, and after hearing argument of H. E. Boynton and Otto Kirchner, friends of the court therein, it is ordered that the steam engine, boiler or boilers, and materials surrounding the same, and now upon the premises known as '45 and 47 Larned street, West,' be and the same are ordered into the custody of the police department of the city of Detroit, as exhibits in said cause; the same, however, not to be removed from said premises. This order to remain in force only until the decision of a motion for injunction now pending before Judge Lillibridge, and subject to the terms of an order this day made by him."

The relator moved to vacate this order, which the court refused, and the object of this proceeding is to set aside that order. Upon the hearing of this motion the prosecutor filed an affidavit from which it appears that, after the police department took possession of the débris, an arrangement was made between him and Mr. Thompson, through his attorney, and the relator, that certain persons (expert engineers) should, on behalf of the respective parties, have free access to the engines, boilers, machines, and the premises, for the purposes of examination. The learned prosecutor further states in his affidavit that this property is essential to be used as exhibits upon the trial of Mr. Thompson, as well as for the further investigation into the causes of the disaster by the grand jury, and claims the right of the prosecution to hold them until all criminal trials connected with the disaster are tried. It thus appears that the prosecution had the entire control and charge of this property for a period of ten days prior to the making of this order, and have had ample opportunity for an examination thereof by the officers and experts to determine the cause of the disaster, so far as it can be determined from these articles.

The importance of this case to the relator is apparent from the statement of her counsel in their brief that she is threatened with civil suits for damages upon the ground that she was guilty of negligence. Not only, therefore, is she by this order deprived of her private property, which she may desire to use in her business, but may be deprived of the evidence which may establish her innocence of any fault. She is charged with no crime. The broad claim of the learned prosecutor is that the courts possess the power, upon his motion, to enter upon the premises of private persons, and seize any property which may, in his judgment, have any bearing upon a crime with which another is charged. If the order in this case be sustained, it results in holding that a citizen's team, with which he earns a livelihood, may be seized by the police authorities because he believes that such team was used by an alleged criminal in the commission of a crime. If A be arrested, charged with arson in the burning of B's house, and there be some evidence in the house believed to connect A with the crime, the police authorities may seize and hold possession of the house for 31 L. R. A.

months, and until the trial, and prevent the owner from rebuilding. So, under like circumstances, a manufacturer might be deprived of the possession of his property necessary for the successful carrying on of his business. Other illustrations will readily suggest themselves. The power is certainly an extraordinary one, and those who assert it ought to be able to find some common or statute law authorizing it. The exercise of power no more arbitrary than this has caused revolutions. The learned prosecutor cites the following authorities in support of his contention: Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 60; Bishop, New Crim. Proc. §§ 210, 211; Ex parte Hurn, 92 Ala. 102, 13 L. R. A. 120; Woolfolk v. State, 81 Ga. 551; Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 68; O'Connor v. Bucklin, 59 N. H. 589. These authorities do not even hint at such an arbitrary and broad power. The citation in Wharton says only that "those arresting a defendant are bound to take from his person any articles which may be of use as proof in the trial of the offense with which the defendant is charged." The citation from Bishop goes no further. In Ex parte Hurn money was taken from the possession of the prisoner, and delivered to the sheriff, who was afterwards served with a writ of garnishment at the suit of an attaching creditor of the prisoner. The sheriff paid the money into court, and asked instructions as to what he should do with it, while the prisoner asked an order for its restoration to himself. It was held that the case could not be reviewed upon mandamus. Many cases are cited and reviewed in that decision, none of which sustain the present case. That court quotes with approval the case of Boyd v. United States, hereinafter referred to. The conclusion of the court in that case is that "it is the duty of an officer, having no other authority than the right to make the arrest, to search the party arrested, and seize and remove from him the dangerous weapons found upon his person." That authority is confined by the decision to the seizure of articles found upon his person and connected with the offense. In Woolfolk v. State the respondent was charged with murder. During the progress of the inquest he was required to remove his clothing, and while so doing he made statements which were introduced upon the trial. It was objected that the circumstances surrounding the defendant amounted to force and compulsion, but the testimony was held proper. In deciding that case the court discusses the right of seizure, and speaks only of seizure from the person.

In Spalding v. Preston a large number of pieces of German silver, of the precise size and thickness of Mexican dollars, and made in that form for the purpose of being stamped and milled into counterfeit coin of that description, were taken by a sheriff from the person who was carrying them at the time to a place of manufacture, for the purpose of having them finished, so that he could put them in circulation as genuine coin, and were detained by the sheriff to be used as evidence against the person from whom they were taken, and also for the purpose of preventing their circulation. These were material to be used in counterfeiting. It was held that "the owner of them, in the absence of evidence that they were put in that form without his knowledge, or against his consent, could not sustain trover against the sheriff therefor." O'Connor v. Bucklin is another case of taking property found upon the person of the party accused.

In my judgment, no case cited in the opinion of my brother, the chief justice, sustains the power here asserted. In Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 482, 93 Am. Dec. 459, the property was taken from the person of the respondent, and was levied upon by attaching creditors while in the hands of the sheriff. The decision quotes the statute of that state authorizing search and seizure, and maintains the right of the officer to take weapons from the prisoner, and also money or other articles of value found upon him, by means of which, if left in his possession, he might procure his escape. Commercial Erch. Bank v. McLeod, 65 Iowa, 665, 54 Am. Rep. 36, is a similar case, where the property of the prisoner, taken from his person upon arrest, was attached in the hands of the officer. In Langdon v. People, 133 Ill. 382, the property seized was a forged official certificate. It was held not to be private property, and was seized upon a search warrant made upon due complaint. In the case of Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746, Mr. Justice Bradley, in delivering the opinion of the court, quotes with approval the language of Lord Camden in Entick v. Carrington, 19 How. St. Tr. 1029: "No man can set his foot upon my ground without my license, but he is liable to an action, though the damage be nothing; which is proved by every declaration in trespass, where the defendant is called upon to answer for bruising the grass, and even treading upon the soil. If he admits the fact, he is bound to show by way of justification that some positive law has empowered or excused him. The justification is submitted to the judges, who are to look into the books; and if such a justification can be maintained by the text of the statute law, or by the principles of common law. If no such excuse can be found or produced, the silence of the books is an authority against the defendant, and the plaintiff must have judgment." The right of search and seizure is very fully and ably discussed in the Boyd Case, at pages 622 et seq., 116 U. S., and page 748, 29 L. ed. In Hibbard v. People, 4 Mich. 125, an act to authorize the issue of a warrant to seize liquor and retain it to abide the order of the court, and to be used in evidence upon a trial, was held to be unconstitutional. This decision was approved in Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 557.

The people of this state, through their legislature, have made ample provisions for the seizure of property in criminal cases, and they are summarized as follows: (1) Personal property stolen, embezzled, or obtained by false pretenses; (2) counterfeit or spurious coin, forged bank notes, or other forged instruments, or any tools, machines, or other materials provided or prepared for making them; (3) obscene matter; (4) lottery tickets; (5) gaming apparatus. Section 9619, How. Anno. Stat., provides what shall be done with the articles so seized. The statutes are declaratory of the legislative will upon the subject of search and seizure, and cannot be extended by 31 L. R. A.

the courts to include the right to enter the inclosures of private citizens, and seize their lawful property, to be held as evidence against alleged criminals. No intimation is found in any statute of this state, or in any decision of this court, that a prosecutor may cause to be seized the property of third parties, the possession, ownership, and use of which are not prohibited by law, and which are useful and required in the legitimate prosecution of their businesses, and their private inclosures to be entered for that purpose. Such seizures are unwarranted, unreasonable, and prohibited by the Constitution of the United States and of this state. Important as is the proper administration of the criminal law, the power to administer must be exercised with due regard to the constitutional rights of the citizen, among which is the right to the possession and control of his lawful property. Justice Cooley says: "The only lawful mode of making search upon one's premises is under the command of search warrants; and these are allowed to discover stolen or smuggled goods, or implements of gaming and in a few other cases for which provision must be found in the statutes. The authority to issue them is liable to great abuses, and the law is justly strict regarding their requirements." Cooley, Torts, 295. See also Cooley, Const. Lim. 364-370; 2 Hare, Const. L. 880; Potter v. Beal, 49 Fed. Rep. 798.

The order of the circuit judge was without authority of law, and must be set aside.

The writ will issue.

Long, Montgomery, and Hooker, JJ., concurred with Grant, J.

McGrath, Ch. J. dissenting:

On the 6th day of November, 1895, a boiler situate upon relator's premises in the city of Detroit exploded, killing thirty-seven persons. At the time of the explosion a grand jury was in session, and after the explosion said grand jury brought into the circuit court for the county of Wayne an indictment against one Thompson, who was the engineer employed by relator, and in charge of the boiler in question at the time of the explosion, charging said Thompson with manslaughter. The circuit judge, upon application of the prosecuting officers, after hearing counsel for said Thompson, and also counsel for relator, directed the police department to take the said boiler and attachments into custody, as exhibits in said matter. Relator afterwards moved to set aside the order. Affidavits were presented on behalf of the people, setting forth that certain parts of the boiler attachments had been taken away, that the grand jury were considering the matter of further indictments relating to said matter, and that the said boiler and attachments were necessary exhibits in the prosecution of said cause. The circuit judge declined to set aside the order, and relator applies for a mandamus to compel such vacation.

It is contended on behalf of relator that there is no warrant in law for the order of the circuit judge, and that the order violates section 26 of article 6 of the Constitution, which protects persons, houses, papers, and possessions of every person from unreasonable searches and seizures. A "search warrant" is defined as an examination or inspection by authority of law of one's premises or person, with a view to the discovery of stolen, contraband, or illicit property, or some evidence of guilt to be used in the prosecution of a criminal action for some crime or offense with which he is charged. How. Anno. Stat. §§ 9615 et seq., authorizes the issuance by a magistrate of search warrants in certain cases. Section 9619 provides that when any officer, in the execution of a search warrant, shall find any stolen or embezzled property, or shall seize any of the other things for which such warrant is allowed, the property and things so seized shall be safely kept, by the direction of the court or magistrate, so long as shall be necessary for the purpose of being produced or used in evidence on any trial, and afterwards the stolen or embezzled property may be restored to the owner, and other things shall be destroyed. Section 9396 provides that when complaint is made on oath to any magistrate that complainant believes that any of the provisions of that act are being violated, or are about to be violated, a search warrant may issue, and under the warrant such officer may arrest the person complained against, and seize and bring in every article or instrument designed or adapted to torture or inflict wounds upon any animal, etc. Section 9290 authorizes indecent books and pictures to be seized and taken. Section 9598 authorizes the disinterment of bodies for the purpose of inquests and post mortem examinations. Sections 9472 and 9475 provide that a magistrate may require a recognizance from witnesses in criminal cases, with sureties, and upon failure to recognize or to give sureties, if ordered, that the witness may be committed to prison.

It is contended that none of these statutes cover the present case, and insisted that there is an absence of authority for the order here made, but these statutes relate to preliminary or initiatory proceedings, and are designed to confer authority upon inferior tribunals, having no general powers. The statute confers upon circuit courts power to make all orders in any cause pending therein which may be necessary or proper for carrying into effect the jurisdiction vested in such courts by law. Suppose that the attendance of a witness in the trial of a criminal case has been with difficulty procured, and there is danger that he will abscond; has the circuit court no power to secure the attendance of such witness beyond the day? Yet there is no statutory provision conferring such authority, unless it be found in the statute conferring general authority. Suppose that in the trial of a murder case the court deemed it material, in order that the ends of justice be subserved, that the body be exhumed, has the court no power in the premises? Can it be true that a magistrate may commit the relator to prison, and that the circuit court, upon an indictment presented to it, has no authority respecting an article which has been before the grand jury, and which is, in and of itself, criminating evidence? Is an exploded boiler, or the right of property therein, more sacred than the person? The right of an officer to pursue a fleeing criminal in and upon my premises, and into my dwelling, does not depend upon the statute. There is no statute which authorizes an officer to take from a prisoner such evidence of guilt as may be found on the person,—the bloody knife, the revolver with an empty chamber, garments stained with blood, the shoe or boot which fits the track, the coat with the missing button, the knife with the broken blade, the hat found at the scene of the crime. Such taking and use do not violate the rule that the prisoner shall not be compelled to furnish evidence against himself. It is not only the right, but the duty, of an officer making an arrest to take from the prisoner, not only stolen goods, but any articles which may be of use as proof in the trial of the offense with which the prisoner is charged. Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. 9th ed. §§ 60, 61. He may take from the prisoner any articles of property which it is presumable may furnish evidence against him. 1 Bishop. Crim. Proc. 3d ed. 210; Rex v. O'Donnell, 7 Car. & P. 138. This right of sequestration is plain, notwithstanding the property may be claimed by a third party; and stolen goods may be held as against the owner, if necessary for use as evidence, however clear the title of the claimant may be. Ex parte Hurn, 92 Ala. 102, 18 L. R. A. 120; Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 483, 93 Am. Dec. 459; Commercial Exch. Bank v. McLeod, 65 Iowa, 665, 54 Am. Rep. 36; Woolfolk v. State, 81 Ga. 551.

The right to impound exhibits, even in a civil case, has been generally exercised by the courts, and the right to hold articles found in possession of a person charged with crime is not limited to such as are supposed to be stolen, but extends to evidentiary articles. It is not the fact that there is a contest over the ownership of stolen goods that gives the people the right to retain them, but rather that they are of the res geste and evidential. The prisoner's consent does not give the owner the right of possession as against the people. The right to the possession and enjoyment of property must be subordinated to the law of overruling necessity. It is subject to the necessary burdens and restrictions imposed by the general police power of the state, in order to secure the general comfort, health, security, and protection of the citizen. The limitations upon the police power and its execution do not embrace such reasonable judicial orders as may be found necessary, in the course of the administration of the criminal law, for the detention of witnesses and the preservation of evidence. Police officers must be given a reasonable latitude in the pursuit of offenders, the detection of crime, and the collection of evidence; and the courts vested with jurisdiction to try such offenders must be allowed to exercise a reasonable discretion respecting the preservation of the evidence of crime in matters before them. The principle of the rule that permits the traveler upon the highway to go upon the abutting land when the highway is impassable; that permits entry upon my premises in case of fire, and the destruction of my property, if deemed necessary to stay the conflagration; that permits the inspector to enter my close,—extends to measures necessary for the prevention of crime, the detection, pursuit, and arrest of offenders, and the preservation of criminating evidence. All are matters, not alone of individual interest, but of public concern.

The cases of Entick v. Carrington, 2 Wils. 275; Boyd v. United States, 115 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746; and Potter v. Beal, 49 Fed. Rep. 793,—are cases of paper searches and seizure and involve the right of the government to invade private premises and search among private papers for evidences of crime, and the right to compel the production of one's own private papers in a criminal prosecution as evidence against himself. Entick v. Carrington was one of a series of cases of trespass, in which defendants attempted to justify under a warrant issued by the Earl of Halifax. The court held that the warrants were wholly without authority and void. The cases are fully discussed in Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 364, note. Boyd v. United States was an information in a case of seizure and forfeiture of property against thirty-five cases of merchandise seized as forfeited under the revenue laws. At the trial it became important to show the value of a previous invoice of twenty-nine cases of the same class of merchandise. The district judge made an order requiring the production of the invoice of the twenty-nine cases. The claimants, in obedience to the order, produced the invoice, under objection. When the invoice was offered in evidence, claimants objected to its reception on the ground that in a suit for forfeiture no evidence could be compelled from the claimants themselves, and that the statute, so far as it compelled the production of such evidence, was unconstitutional. The question which addressed itself to the court, as stated by Mr. Justice Bradley, was whether "a search and seizure, or, what is equivalent thereto, a compulsory production of a man's private papers, to be used in evidence against him in a proceeding to forfeit his property for alleged fraud against the revenue laws,—is such a proceeding for such a purpose an 'unreasonable search and seizure' within the meaning of the 4th Amendment of the Constitution, or, is it a legitimate proceeding?" Potter v. Beal was a proceeding in equity against a bank receiver to recover the possession of certain private and personal books, papers, and other documents, in a certain trunk, which was in the bank vault when the bank was closed by order of the controller. The relief sought was an order that the books, papers, and other documents be delivered to plaintiff, and that defendant be enjoined from using the same before the grand jury. Defendant answered that the trunk came into his possession as assets of the bank; that it is his duty to examine the contents thereof, and ascertain whether it contains property of the bank, or memoranda, books, papers, or accounts concerning its affairs. The district attorney, appearing, was permitted to intervene and make a motion asking for such an order as would lay the papers before the grand jury. The court held that plaintiff was entitled to speedy possession of his private and confidential papers, but that the bank was entitled to know what was taken from its vaults, and referred it to a master, with directions "to open the trunk, and, after examination, to deliver to defendant such papers, documents, and other things as are the property of the bank, and are not material to the issue; to deliver to plaintiff such as are private, and are not the property of the bank, together with such as so relate to the bank transactions, and are necessary and material to be introduced by Mr. Potter in his own behalf; and such as are not included in the two classes named, as relate to bank transactions, and, in the judgment of the master, are or may be material to the issue suggested in the motion of the district attorney, and the government's case, shall be sealed and returned to the trunk and the safe custody of the clerk, who should relock the trunk, return the key to the counsel for plaintiff, but hold the trunk and contents." These cases do not hold that all searches and seizures are unreasonable. They do hold that the invasion of the privacy of one's home, and the seizure of private papers and documents, are an unreasonable search and seizure, and are within not only the article of the Constitution prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures, but also the article that no person shall be compelled to give evidence against himself. The rule is, however, that forged documents, or such as are unlawfully held or unlawfully used, are subject to seizure. In Langdon v. People, 133 Ill. 382, a complaint was made by the state's attorney that one R. R. Langdon had forged an official certificate, and that complainant verily believed that such certificate was concealed in the office lately occupied by said Langdon. Thereupon a search warrant was issued, and the forged certificate brought before the justice who issued the warrant. The court held that the certificate was not a private paper, within the rule of Boyd v. United States; that it was a forged paper; and that it was unlawful for plaintiff in error to have it in his possession. In Con. v. Dana, 2 Met. 329, the court, speaking of the constitutional provision relating to searches and seizures, says: "This article does not prohibit all searches and seizures of a man's person, his papers, and possessions; but such only as are 'unreasonable,' and the foundation of which is 'not previously supported by oath or affirmation.' The legislature were not deprived of the power to authorize search warrants for probable causes, supported by oath or affirmation, and for the punishment or suppression of any violation of law. The law, therefore, authorizing search warrants in certain cases, is in no respect inconsistent with the declaration of rights." Mr. Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed. p. 370, says that the warrant is not allowed for the purpose of obtaining evidence of an intended crime, but only after lawful evidence of an offense actually committed. Nor even then is it allowable to invade one's privacy for the sole purpose of obtaining evidence against him, except in a few special cases, when that which is the subject of the crime is supposed to be concealed, and the public or the complainant has an interest in it or in its destruction. In a note the author says: "We do not say that it would be incompetent to authorize, by statute, the issue of search warrants for the prevention of offenses in some cases; but it is difficult to state any case in which it might be proper, except in such cases of attempts, or of preparations to commit crime, as are in themselves criminal."

The present case is not one where it is sought to compel relator to produce evidence against herself, for she is not the person charged; and, even if she were, the use of the boiler as evidence cannot be distinguished from any case where the instrument causing the death is produced, although taken from the prisoner, or found in defendant's apartments. Nor is this a case where any attempt has been made to invade private premises for the discovery of evidence of crime. An explosion had occurred, and thirty seven persons had lost their lives in consequence. The matter was submitted to the grand jury, and they have brought in, and presented to the court making the order complained of, an indictment against the person in charge of the boiler at the time of the explosion, charging him with criminal carelessness with respect to the care and management of the boiler. It is insisted that the boiler, in and of itself, is evidence of the causes which led to the explosion, and of the carelessness of the management. It is true that in counsel's brief it is said that the relator "may be subjected to suits by persons who received injuries by the destruction of the building;" but there is no good reason why the police authorities, whose mission is in part the protection of property, cannot in this particular case be intrusted with the preservation of the status quo of this property, especially as the same is held under an order of the court, and subject to its direction. It frequently happens that animals affected with infectious diseases are killed by the public authorities to prevent the spread of the disease; and, if the poor man's team had been stolen and taken from the thief, the necessity for its use would not necessarily determine the owner's right to its possession. If, in a partially burned building, was found a package of combustible material saturated with kerosene, would there be any question of the right of the authorities to take and preserve the package for use as evidence? Illustrations of what might readily be held to be unreasonable seizures could be multiplied without effort, but they would be without force. The prohibition is against unreasonable seizures, and all seizures are not regarded as unreasonable. The question here is whether this is an unreasonable seizure. Relator's contention is that any impounding of any of her property for the purpose named is unwarranted. Because a man may not be put out of his own house, it does not follow that a revolver or a steel drill or a knife may not be sequestered for use as evidence in a criminal proceeding. Because a man's team, with which he earns a livelihood, which has been used by another to convey away stolen goods, may not be impounded, it does not follow that the status quo of an exploded boiler, the negligent use of which, resulting in the death of thirty-seven persons, is charged as manslaughter, and concerning which no claim is made of a desire for its use, nor does it appear but what it is useless, except for scrap iron, may not be preserved for use as evidence upon the trial of the offense charged, especially as it is claimed by the record here that the police authorities have, since the explosion, been endeavoring to exercise a certain surveillance over it, and in that endeavor a conflict between police officers, counsel for the accused, and the owner had arisen, and certain of the connections of the boiler had been spirited away.

31 L. R. A.

It is urged that some common or statute law authorizing such a seizure should be pointed out. The cases referred to sustain the right to hold evidentiary articles, irrespective of the question of ownership, and as against the owner; and no case can be found which disputes this right, or intimates that such articles cannot be seized and impounded, where the rules referred to in the Entick and Boyd Cases are not infringed. Those cases do not intimate that a search warrant may not issue in a proper case for the discovery and seizure of evidences of crime. The officers of the law, to whom is committed the prevention and detection of crime and the collection of criminating evidence, are daily committing acts for which there is no express authority in the statutes, or elsewhere in the books. In the recent notorious case of Com. v. Mudgett (Holmes) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 739, the officers of the law, in their efforts to secure criminating evidence, entered upon private property, and excavated under cellar floors and elsewhere, and no one raised any question as to the right so to do. Such acts are generally regarded as demanded by public necessity, in the interest of good morals, and the detection and punishment of crime,—matters of public concern, to which the right of the owner to immediate possession of property must at times be subordinated. The police authorities certainly had the undoubted right to make an investigation under the direction of the prosecuting officers. Upon the presentation of the indictment, the court making the order obtained jurisdiction of the matter. It cannot be said that the court would not have the power, had it been found necessary, to compel witnesses to give sureties for their appearance, or to commit them on refusal so to do. If this be true, can it be seriously contended that this exploded boiler cannot be impounded? The court might in such case order the witness into custody, although not before the court. While the order here was not technically a search warrant, yet it was in the nature of one, omitting the direction to search, and directing the officer to take into custody an article which was fully identified, and admitted to be the one with respect to which the criminal carelessness is charged, and the explosion of which is conceded to have been the cause of the loss of life. It was its unlawful use that is alleged to have produced the result. The possession is that of the court, and is but temporary. If it be claimed that the deprivation of the use is a serious inconvenience, the court may be appealed to, and possibly some means may be devised to preserve the evidence and release the property; but that is a matter which should be addressed to the judgment and discretion of the court making the order. The writ must be denied.

Joseph MARTIN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Marcus D. ELLIOTT.

(.....Mich.....)

An order of court that a veterinary surgeon may be sent on the premises of a party against his will to examine a horse whose condition is in dispute, provided the owner or any person he may select shall accompany such surgeon, is in excess of the power of the court.

(July 2, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Shiawassee County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for breach of warranty in the sale of a horse. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Albert L. Chandler, for plaintiff in error:

Inspection has never been compelled in Michigan except in civil damage cases for personal injuries.

Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 19 L. R. A. 641; Shinn, Pr. § 1068.

If a view is permitted, the statute (How. Anno. Stat. § 7620) gives the only remedy.

This order is a new feature.

Hunter v. Allen, 35 Barb. 42.

It has no precedent nor law to support it.

Cooke v. Lalance Grojean Mfg. Co. 29 Hun, 641.

There was no necessity for it and the court had no power to make it.

Thompson, Trials, § 865.

Mr. John T. McCurdy for defendant in error.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought to recover damages for breach of warranty in the sale of a mare. On the trial the plaintiff contended that in the purchase the defendant warranted the mare sound and all right, whereas in fact she was not sound, but sick and disordered, and had been so overdriven and heated that she broke out in blotches and continued so up to the time of the trial. The plaintiff testified that these blotches were as large as a kernel of wheat, and feasted; that he used a wash which drove them away, but that they would come back again. One of plaintiff's witnesses testified that the horse had these blotches at the time plaintiff purchased her, but that the defendant said she had scratches, and her hair looked rough from want of care. This witness testified that she was now no better than when purchased, as he had seen her a week before, and that she did not have scratches, but something else which would injure her value. Plaintiff paid $200 for her, and gave testimony that she was in fact of little or no value. At the time of the trial the mare was in the plaintiff's barn. The defendant claimed that, in view of this testimony, he had the right to have an examination made of the mare by a veterinary surgeon. The court then made the following order: "On motion of John T. McCurdy, attorney for said defendant, and it also appearing to the court that the plaintiff in this case claims the horse about which this action is brought is now in practically the same condition that she was at the time she was purchased from defendant, and that since said purchase the horse had been in possession of plaintiff in this case; therefore after hearing Odell Chapman and A. L. Chandler, attorneys for said plaintiff, in opposition thereto, it is ordered that the defendant have the privilege of sending a veterinary surgeon to examine the mare in question, provided he shall be accompanied by the plaintiff or some person whom plaintiff may select. The court further orders that the plaintiff give such veterinary surgeon access to the premises and stable where said mare is located to make such examination. This order is made upon the authority of the case of Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 19 L. R. A. 641, such examination to take place any time between the hours of 6 o'clock and 10 o'clock P. M. of this day." The defendant sent Mr. Van Sickles, a veterinary surgeon, to make the examination. Plaintiff objected to the making of the order and to the veterinary surgeon's going to make the examination. Mr. Van Sickles, after the examination, was called as a witness, and testified that the mare was in perfect health, but had a slight irritation under the fetlock, and also a few pimples, but no pustules. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff contends that the court was in error making this order.

It appeared in the case of Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 19 L. R. A. 641, upon which the court below relied in making the order, that the plaintiff was seeking to recover for personal injuries. She appeared as a witness, and the jury observed her use of the injured arm and wrist. A physician testified in her behalf to its condition and the prospect of recovery. He was asked: "Is the fact that the plaintiff is able to use her arm in the ordinary ways, as it has appeared here, as she used it in this room, as you have seen her when she was in the witness chair,—is that proof that the injury to the arm has subsided, and that there is no pain there; that is, is there any surgical proof?" This question was permitted to be answered. The defense then requested the court to direct that plaintiff remove her glove from the injured hand and exhibit the hand to the jury; also that she submit the injured hand to a physician to be examined in the presence of the jury. This was refused. It was held by this court that the direction should have been given. It was said: "The rule is well recognized by substantially all the courts of the country that the injured party may exhibit his wounds to the jury, in order to show their nature or extent, and that rule has been followed in this state. Testimony which is open to one party ought logically to be open to his opponent, if it can be obtained with due regard to decency, and in the orderly conduct of the trial." The fact was recognized in the above case that a wide discretion vested in the trial court, which justifies a refusal to require the examination when the necessities of the case are not such as to call for it, or where the sense of delicacy of the plaintiff may be offended by the exhibition, or where the testimony would be merely cumulative. The rule thus laid down did not, however, justify the order made in the present case. The mare in question was in possession of the plaintiff and upon his premises. The order compelled the plaintiff to permit the parties to enter upon his premises to make the examination, and by a party whom the plaintiff objected to as coming there. The court had no power to compel the plaintiff to submit to such an invasion of his premises. If the plaintiff refused to let the mare be examined at that time, or to have his premises visited for that purpose, it was his right. The testimony also was merely cumulative. Several witnesses had seen the horse only the day before, and gave testimony as to her condition.

NOTE.—For discovery by bill, see note to Cargill v. Kountze Bros. (Tex.) 24 L. R. A. 183.

See also the preceding case of Newberry v. Carpenter (Mich.) ante, 163.

31 L. R. A.

For this error the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial ordered. We need not discuss the other questions raised.

Hooker, J., did not sit; the other Justices concurred.

Alexander JEFFREY, Plff. in Err.,

DETROIT, LANSING, & NORTHERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

(.....Mich.....)

1. The liability of a railroad company for failure to keep a sidewalk across its track in fit and safe condition as required by law is not affected by the fact that a right of action might possibly exist for the same defect against a municipality.
2. A man injured while driving a span of horses with a snowplow across a railroad track in cleaning a sidewalk is not precluded by his unusual use of the walk from maintaining an action against the railroad company for a defect in the walk caused by missing planks, if the accident was due to failure to keep the crossing in a reasonably safe and suitable condition for ordinary use.

(January 16, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ingham County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence in permitting its crossing of a public highway to become unsafe and out of repair. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Black & Dodge, for plaintiff in error:

This statute permits a railroad corporation to cross a highway but upon condition that it restores the highway to its former state as near as may be.

The legislature plainly intended by this statute to authorize the railroad company to cross highways with their tracks subject to the duty to put and maintain the crossing in such condition as not to impair the use of such street by the public.

State v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 35 Minn. 131, 59 Am. Rep. 313; People v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 67 Ill. 119.

The duty to restore a highway to its former condition implies the duty to maintain it in such a condition.

Farley v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 42 Iowa, 234; State v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. supra; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 411; 1 Redf. Railways, § 132, p. 577; Mann v. Central Vermont R. Co. 55 Vt. 484, 45 Am. Rep. 628; Roberts v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 679; Judson v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 29 Conn. 434; Gillett v. Western R. Co. 8 Allen, 560; People v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 67 Ill. 118; Delzell v. Indianapolis & C. R. Co. 32 Ind. 45; Little Miami R. Co. v. Greene County Comrs. 31 Ohio St. 338; Kelley v. Southern Minnesota R. Co. 28 Minn. 98; State v. Dayton & S. E. R. Co. 36 Ohio St. 436; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Greenlee, 62 Tex. 344; Mulby v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 52 Mich. 108.

The defendant was in duty bound, both by the statute as well as by the common law, to maintain the street within the rails, at least so that it should be reasonably safe for travel.

Messrs. M. V. Montgomery & R. A. Montgomery for defendant in error.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant owns and operates a railroad which crosses Larch street, in the city of Lansing, upon a curve, one rail being some inches higher than the other. A sidewalk has crossed said track for many years, and the defendant has been accustomed to keep it in repair. Between the rails, planks, laid upon the ties and flush with the top of the rails, constituted a portion of the walk built and maintained by defendant shortly before the accident complained of. The defendant's servants removed from between the rails the two planks lying nearest to the higher rail. The ground was soon after covered with snow, and the plaintiff while engaged in cleaning the snow from the walk with a team and snowplow, as usual, attempted to cross the track, when the point of the plow struck the rail, by reason of the absence of the two planks, and he was injured. The court directed a verdict for the defendant upon the ground that the defendant owed no duty to the public to keep the sidewalk within the rails of its track in such repair as to enable the plaintiff to draw a snowplow with a span of horses over said walk across its track, and therefore was not guilty of negligence in removing the planks from said walk.

The safety of the public requires that the maintenance of the railroad track be exclusively within the control of the railroad company, and crossings are by our law required to be constructed by them. This, we think, is not merely to relieve the city from the expense, but is to insure the safety of the public, as well those who ride upon the trains as travelers upon the highway. It is the uniform practice of railroads to attend to these crossings, both of the wagon road and sidewalk, to the exclusion of the municipal authorities, so far as the track itself is concerned. This is recognized by the law, and is one of the reasons for holding that the statute which requires a proper restoration of the highway at the time of the building of the railroad by implication imposes the duty of maintaining it in proper condition. This is but declaratory of the common law. See Maltby v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 52 Mich. 110. The right of the plaintiff to recover is not given by the statute authorizing actions against municipalities who fail to keep highways in a condition reasonably fit and safe for travel, though it is possible that such statute may have a bearing on the extent of the defendant's duty. We think that railroads must maintain crossings between tracks and rails reasonably fit and safe for the usual and ordinary purposes of the public, and the fact that a right of action might possibly exist against the cities does not affect their liability. In case of a failure, the railroad would be liable, whether the city were or not. Maltby v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 52 Mich. 111.

NOTE.—As to safety of highway crossings, see also Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Clem (Ind.); 1 L. R. A. 588.

31 L. R. A.

In this case a sidewalk had long been provided. If removed, and the street left in a dangerous condition, as measured by the gauge of the ordinary uses and purposes of the highway, it was negligent, and a cause of action would lie upon behalf of any person injured while making a proper, reasonable, and common use of the way. It is claimed that this was the usual way of cleaning walks, and had been for years, and was a proper use of the highway. While we do not intimate that such practice imposed any additional or greater duty upon defendant, a question not before us, if it appears that the accident was caused by reason of a failure to keep the crossing in a reasonably safe and suitable condition for ordinary uses, the plaintiff should not be denied redress because it was an unusual or hazardous use of the walk, it being, as already said, a proper and necessary use.

The judgment must be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

McGrath, Ch. J., did not sit; the other Justices concurred.

Frank A. TANNER

c.

Thomas MERRILL et al., Plffs. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

A receipt in full, given without protest on payment of the undisputed part of a claim after refusal to pay another part which is disputed, when the money is apparently accepted in full satisfaction, constitutes an accord and satisfaction.

(December 30, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Saginaw County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the unpaid portion of certain wages for work and labor performed. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Dan. P. Foote, for plaintiffs in error: In the absence of fraud, mistake, or advantage a receipt in full is conclusive when given with a knowledge of all the circumstances and when the party giving it cannot complain of any misapprehension as to the compromise he was making.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1122; Pratt v. Cattle, 91 Mich. 484; Acerill v. Wood, 78 Mich. 342; Nash v. Manistee Lumber Co. 75 Mich. 346; Prichard v. Sharp, 51 Mich. 432; Houghton v. Ross, 54 Mich. 335.

A receipt given by a party on a settlement of a disputed claim cannot be questioned except upon the ground of fraud, duress, oppression, mistake, or undue advantage.

Dowling v. Eggemann, 47 Mich. 171; Gates v. Shutts, 7 Mich. 127; Davis v. Hammond, 75 Mich. 1; Dailey v. King, 79 Mich. 568; Galvin v. O'Brien, 96 Mich. 433; Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109, 90 Am. Dec. 230; Hull v. Swarthout, 29 Mich. 249; Hart v. Gould, 62 Mich. 262.

Mr. Rowland Connor, for defendant in error:

A receipt in full, given without valid consideration, is not binding, does not preclude recovery of the amount actually due, and is subject to parol explanation and contradiction.

A receipt may be explained, and what it was intended to cover shown.

Hart v. Gould, 62 Mich. 269; Rowe v. Wright, 12 Mich. 289; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Dunham, 30 Mich. 128; Lawrence v. Griswold, Id. 410; Roberts v. Field, 27 Mich. 337; Hicks v. Leaton, 67 Mich. 371.

Acceptance of less than claimed will operate as a settlement only by express agreement to that effect.

St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. v. Davis, 35 Kan. 464; Hayes v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 125 Ill. 626, 1 L. R. A. 303; Kenny v. Kane, 50 N. J. L. 562; Husted v. Dodge (Iowa) 35 N. W. 462; Day v. Gardner, 42 N. J. Eq. 199; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1115, 1116.

A receipt is never conclusive where undue influence can be alleged against it.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1121; Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald & M. Constr. Co. 44 Neb. 463; McAllister v. Engle, 52 Mich. 56; Vyne v. Glenn, 41 Mich. 112; Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569.

At the time of the giving of the receipt in question the parties were not dealing on equal terms. A woodsman in the woods is in much the same situation as a seaman at sea.

Any contract made or any receipt given under such circumstances should be closely scanned. Courts always look with suspicion upon business transactions between wards and guardians. And a very little matter is sufficient to void a contract or receipt given by a ward to a guardian.

Powell v. Powell, 52 Mich. 432; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1121; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Wilson, 132 Ind. 517, 18 L. R. A. 105; Nash v. Manistee Lumber Co. 75 Mich. 352.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants appeal from a judgment recovered against them at circuit. They are lumbermen, and the plaintiff worked for them

NOTE.—For part payment in full satisfaction, see also note to Fuller v. Kemp (N. Y.) 20 L. R. A. 735.
31 L. R. A.

at Georgian bay, his transportation from Saginaw to that place having been paid by them. When he quit work, a question arose as to who should pay this, under the contract of employment, and defendant's superintendent declined to pay any transportation. The plaintiff needed the money due him to get home, and showed a telegram announcing the illness or death of his mother, and said that he must go home, to which the superintendent replied that "he did not pay any man's fare;" whereupon a receipt in full was signed, and the money due, after deducting transportation was paid. The plaintiff testified that they had no dispute, only he claimed the fare and the superintendent refused to allow it.

The most important question arises over a request to charge upon the part of the defendants, which reads as follows: "The testimony of the plaintiff is that, at the time the receipt put in evidence in this case was signed by him, he claimed that his railroad fare should not be deducted from his wages; that this was denied by the agents and superintendents of defendants, and it was taken out of his wages; that he then signed the receipt with full knowledge of its contents; and that his railroad fare had been taken out of his wages. This being so, the receipt in this case, upon the plaintiff's own testimony, cannot be contradicted. While a receipt, in certain cases, may be contradicted, it must be in a case of mistake, ignorance of fact, fraud, or when some unconscionable advantage had been taken of one by the other party. Therefore, the receipt in this case shows a full settlement of all claims plaintiff had against the defendants." The only theory upon which it can be contended that this request should have been given is that the plaintiff accepted less than he claimed (but no more than defendants admitted to be due), and gave a receipt in full when the defendants' superintendent refused to pay more. We do not discover any testimony tending to show an agreement to accept as payment either in full or by way of compromise, except the receipt; and the question resolves itself into this, whether a receipt in full is conclusive of the question of defendants' liability, when it is given upon payment of a portion of a claim admittedly due, accompanied by a refusal to pay more, in the absence of mistake, fraud, duress, or undue influence. It is urged upon behalf of the plaintiff that receipts are always open to explanation, and that there is no consideration to support the acceptance of a portion of a valid claim as full payment. The cases which counsel cite do not support the broad contention of plaintiff's counsel, which would seriously derange business affairs if it should be sustained. The doctrine that the receipt of part payment must rest upon a valid consideration to be effective in discharge of the entire debt is carefully limited to cases where the debt is liquidated, by agreement of the parties or otherwise, which was not the case here. It was in dispute in the case of St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. v. Davis, 35 Kan. 464, the opinion says that "it is a well-settled principle of law that the payment of a part of an ascertained, overdue, and undisputed debt, although accepted in full satisfaction, and a receipt in full is given, does not estop the creditor from recovering the balance. In such case the agreement is without consideration." The case of Day v. Gardner, 42 N. J. Eq. 199, was one where the agreement was to forgive a debt, implying its existence. In Hasted v. Dodge (Iowa) 35 N. W. 462, the opinion of Mr. Justice Rothrock shows the debt not to have been in dispute. Moreover, the doctrine was not applicable to the case for reasons shown. See also American Bridge Co. v. Murphy, 13 Kan. 35. In Bailey v. Day, 26 Me. 88, the claim was liquidated by judgment. In Hayes v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 125 Ill. 626, 1 L. R. A. 303, the supreme court of Illinois applies the doctrine relied upon, but expressly states "that it has no application where property other than money is taken, or where there is an honest compromise of unliquidated or disputed demands. See also Bishop, Cont. § 50; 2 Parsons, Cont. 618. In Marion v. Heinbach (Minn.) 64 N. W. 386, the supreme court of Minnesota says: "But where the claim is unliquidated it would seem to be true that if the creditor is tendered a sum less than his claim, upon the condition that, if it is accepted it must be in full satisfaction of his whole claim, his acceptance is an accord and satisfaction." See also Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 234, 20 L. R. A. 785, where the same doctrine is held; Fire Ins. Asso. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 577, 35 L. ed. 866.

L. R. A.

The important fact to ascertain is whether the plaintiff's claim was a liquidated claim or not. If it was, there was no consideration for the discharge. If not, the authorities are in substantial accord that part payment of the claim may discharge the debt, if it is so received. Upon the undisputed facts, the claim of the plaintiff, as made, was not liquidated. It was not even admitted, but on the contrary, was denied, because the defendant claimed that it had been partially paid by a valid offset. While the controversy was over the offset, it is plain that the amount due the plaintiff was in dispute. If so, it is difficult to understand how it could be treated as a liquidated claim, unless it is to be said that a claim may be liquidated piecemeal, and that, so far as the items are agreed upon, it is liquidated, and to that extent is not subject to adjustment on a basis of part payment. Cases are not numerous in which just this phase of the question appears. This would seem remarkable, unless we are to assume that, in calling a claim unliquidated, the courts have alluded to the whole claim, and considered that, where the amount is not agreed upon, the claim as a whole is unliquidated, and therefore subject to adjustment. If this is not true, no man can pay an amount that he admits to be due without being subject to action whenever and so often as his creditor may choose to claim that he was not fully paid, no matter how solemn may have been his acknowledgment of satisfaction so long as it is not a release under seal. The general rule is a technical one, and there are many exceptions. It has been said that it "often fosters bad faith, and that the history of the judicial decisions will be found to show a constant effort to escape from its absurdity and injustice." Harper v. Graham, 20 Ohio, 105; Kellogg v. Richards, 14 Wend. 116; Brooks v. White, 2 Met. 283, 37 Am. Dec. 95. Again it is said to be "rigid and unreasonable," and defeats the expressed intentions of the parties, and therefore "should not be extended to embrace cases not within the letter of it." Westcott v. Waller, 47 Ala. 492; Johnson v. Brannan, 5 Johns. 268; Simmons v. Almy, 103 Mass. 35. See Milliken v. Brown, 1 Rawle, 891, where the rule is vigorously denounced. It has no application in cases of claims against the government. If one accepts the amount allowed, it is a discharge of the whole claim. United States v. Adams, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 463, 19 L. ed. 249; United States v. Child, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 232, 20 L. ed. 860. See also Wapello County Comrs. v. Sinnaman, 1 G. Greene, 418; Brick v. Plymouth County, 63 Iowa, 462; Perry v. Chebogan, 55 Mich. 250; Calkins v. State, 18 Wis. 389. Again it has been repeatedly held that part payment is a bar to a claim for interest. Another exception is found in composition with creditors.

It is believed that we may safely treat this claim as one claim, not as two, and that it was unliquidated, inasmuch as it was not admitted. In McGlynn v. Billings, 16 Vt. 329, the defendant, after an examination of accounts, claimed that he owed the plaintiff $82, and drew a check for that sum, and tendered it as payment in full. It was refused and it was delivered to a third person with directions to deliver it whenever the plaintiff would receive it as payment in full. This was done and it was held to discharge the debt. In Hills v. Sommer, 53 Hun, 392, the plaintiffs shipped lemons to dealers in St. Joseph, Mo., and were notified that some were defective, with a claim of a specific rebate, which plaintiffs refused to allow. A draft was subsequently sent for the amount which the defendants had previously expressed their willingness to allow, with a letter stating that it was in payment of the invoice. The draft was cashed, and action brought for the remainder of the claim. Verdict was directed for the defendants. Pierce v. Pierce, 25 Barb. 253, seems to be a similar case. In Potter v. Douglass, 44 Conn. 546, a plaintiff refused $45, which was tendered in full payment of a claim. He took it, however, on account, as he said, and wrote a receipt to that effect, which defendant refused, for the reason that it stated that the money was received on account. The plaintiff, however, kept the money. It does not appear that this amount of $45 was disputed. Apparently, it was not. Yet the court called the claim an unliquidated demand, and held it to have been discharged. In Perkins v. Headley, 49 Mo. App. 562, it is said: "But if there is a controversy between him [the creditor] and his debtor as to the amount which is due, and if the debtor tenders the amount which he claims to be due, but on the condition that the creditor accept it in discharge of his whole demand, and the creditor does accept it, that will be an accord and satisfaction as a conclusion of law." While no Michigan case decisive of this question is cited, and we recall none, it was held in Houghton v. Ross, 54 Mich. 385, that "a receipt which states its purpose to be for a complete settlement, and which covers the whole period of dealing, is equivalent to an account stated; and though it is open to explanation as to errors or omissions, it cannot be treated as if it had not been meant to cover everything." And in Pratt v. Cistle, 91 Mich. 484, it was said that: "(1) Settlements are favored by the law, and will not be set aside except for fraud, mistake, or duress. (2) A settlement evidenced by the execution of mutual receipts of '$1, in full for all debts, dues, and demands to this date,' except as to certain specified items, is conclusive in the absence of fraud or mistake, as to all prior dealings between the parties not covered by the excepted items." See also Donling v. Eggemann, 47 Mich. 171.

It therefore appears that such settlements should have weight, and it seems reasonable to hold that the rule contended for does not apply, for the reason that this was an unliquidated demand, although a certain portion of it was not questioned. Clearly, the claim was disputed, and, so far as this record shows, the defendants' superintendent was given to understand that the money paid was accepted in full satisfaction, as plaintiff's own evidence shows that he gave it without protest, and without stating to defendants' superintendent that he said, aside, to his fellow laborers, that it would make no difference if they did give the receipts. To hold otherwise would be a recognition of the "mental reservation" more effective than just. Upon the plaintiff's own testimony, he accepted the money, with the knowledge that the defendants claimed that the amount paid was all that was his due, and gave a receipt in full. There is nothing in the case to negative the inference, naturally to be drawn from this testimony, that there was an accord and satisfaction of an unliquidated demand.

The judgment must be reversed. No new trial should be ordered.

Long and Grant, JJ., concurred with Hooker, J.

Montgomery, J.: I think that the payment of an admitted indebtedness is no consideration for a discharge of a further claim by the creditor.

McGrath, Ch. J., concurred with Montgomery, J.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Ellen McMANUS
v.
INHABITANTS OF THE TOWN OF WESTON.

Patrick McMANUS
v.
SAME.

(164 Mass. 263.)

1. Road commissioners who under the Massachusetts statute have in respect to roads the powers formerly possessed by selectmen and surveyors of highways are, while acting within the scope of their powers and duties, public officers, and not servants of the town for whose acts the town is liable.

2. Acts in the nature of repairs to or improvement of an existing way are within the terms "making and repairing," in the statute conferring power on road commissioners, so that in performing them they will act as public officers although the work is ordered by the county commissioners, is unusual and extensive in character, and provided for by a special appropriation by the town, and a statute requires towns to complete roads according to the lay out or order of the county commissioners.

(September 9, 1895.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiffs to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County directing verdicts for defendant in actions brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Overruled.

Plaintiffs were driving along a road in defendant town and persons in charge of a steam drill engaged in work upon the road neglected to give warning or to so control the steam as to prevent the frightening of plaintiffs' horse. As a result the horse became frightened and caused the injuries for which the suit was brought.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Elder, Wait, & Whitman, for plaintiffs:

The town by paying the bills and receiving the money from the county ratified the proceedings of the men who were doing the work, and by voting, March, 1891, to continue the work, authorized what was being done at the time plaintiffs were injured.

Gilkey v. Watertown, 141 Mass. 317.

"Road making" does not necessarily mean building a new or altering an old road. In common speech in the country it means working on the highway for any purpose,—repairs or construction. Making a road safe and convenient for travel calls, many times, as often for repairs as for new construction.

The title of chapter 52 is, Of the Repairs of Ways and Bridges, and repairs are all this chapter deals with.

The provisions for carrying out orders of county commissioners are contained in chap.

NOTE.—As to personal liability of highway officers for negligence, see note to Bates v. Horner (Vt.) 22 L. R. A. 824.

31 L. R. A.

49, Pub. Stat., and impose the duty upon the town alone.

Towns are parties to the proceedings and may apply for a jury.

Gloucester v. Essex County Comrs. 3 Met. 375.

The county commissioners at no time lose control of the work.

The penalty for nonperformance is upon the town and not upon any of its officers.

Chap. 52, § 61.

It would result in endless confusion to say that the duty was imposed both upon the town and upon the road commissioners.

Bean v. Hyde Park, 143 Mass. 245; Blanchard v. Ayer, 148 Mass. 174; Todd v. Rowley, 8 Allen, 51; Denniston v. Clark, 125 Mass. 22; Pratt v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 245; Waldron v. Haverhill, 143 Mass. 582.

The town by proceeding with this work relieved itself from statute liability under chapter 49, and received partial compensation for what it did from the county. It was acting in furtherance of its own pecuniary interest as well as for the benefit of the public.

Tindley v. Salem, 187 Mass. 173, 50 Am. Rep. 289.

Receiving partial compensation by a town is a ground of liability, and persons acting for it in the work are its agents.

Neff v. Welleley, 143 Mass. 487, 2 L. R. A. 500.

Messrs. Allin & Mayberry, for defendant:

Road commissioners, being vested with all the powers and duties of surveyors of highways, are to be regarded as public officers so long as they act within the lines of their statutory duties.

Pub. Stat. chap. 27, § 75; Walcott v. Swampscott, 1 Allen, 101; Clark v. Easton, 146 Mass. 43; Prince v. Lynn, 149 Mass. 198.

They were acting within the scope of their duties, as defined by statute, at the time this accident happened. The statutes imposed upon them the duty of carefully and judiciously expending the money appropriated by the town, for making as well as repairing highways and townways.

Pub. Stat. chap. 52, § 3; Acts 1871, chap. 298, § 2; Acts 1877, chap. 58.

When the town appropriated money to carry out the work on Central avenue as ordered by the county commissioners, and made no special provision for its expenditure, it became the duty of the road commissioners to expend it.

Hennessy v. New Bedford, 153 Mass. 260; Pratt v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 245; Bean v. Hyde Park, 143 Mass. 245.

If the road commissioners had no authority to construct the road, they and all their employees would be acting without authority of the town, and the town could not be held liable for their acts.

Cushing v. Bedford, 125 Mass. 526; Bean v. Hyde Park, supra.

The statute includes "making and repairing highways and town ways." It would be straining the language out of its natural meaning to give it any other interpretation than that which includes the duty of spending money for the construction of highways laid out by the county commissioners and ordered to be built by the town.

Pub. Stat. chap. 52, § 3.

The exemption from liability arises from the public character of the officer whose duty it is to do it.

Tindley v. Salem, 187 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289; Howard v. Worcester, 153 Mass. 426, 12 L. R. A. 160; Doherty v. Braintree, 148 Mass. 495.

In some of the cases it is said that the town voluntarily assumed to do the work; but as this expression is used indiscriminately in reference to cases of construction and cases of repairs, it evidently means that the act of selecting agents whom they could direct and control to do the work was a voluntary act, and not that the doing of the work itself, independent of the persons employed, was voluntary, either in the case where the statute compels them to keep the ways in repair or where the county commissioners rightfully order them to build a road.

Sullivan v. Holyoke, 185 Mass. 273; Tindley v. Salem, and Doherty v. Braintree, supra; Pratt v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 245; Prince v. Lynn, 149 Mass. 198; Waldron v. Haverhill, 143 Mass. 582; Howard v. Worcester, 153 Mass. 426, 12 L. R. A. 160.

That the money was appropriated for a particular work makes no difference.

Pratt v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 245; Hennessey v. New Bedford, 153 Mass. 260.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These two cases were tried together, and both depend on the same facts; and the principal question in each is whether the road commissioners acted as public officers, or as servants of the town. We think that they acted in the former capacity, and not in the latter. The office of road commissioner is of recent origin. It was first established by chapter 158, Stat. 1871. By the second section of that statute it was provided that "said road commissioners shall have and perform exclusively all the powers and duties now vested by law in selectmen and surveyors of highways, concerning the laying out, altering, making, repairing, or discontinuing streets, ways, sidewalks, sewers, and drains." This was amended by chapter 51, § 1, Stat. 1873, which substituted therefor a new section, as follows: "Said road commissioners, in matters concerning streets, ways, bridges, monuments at the termini and angles of roads, guide posts, sidewalks, shade-trees, sewers, and drains, shall exclusively have the powers and be subject to the duties, liabilities, and penalties of selectmen and surveyors of highways." This section, with an added provision about the moving of buildings in public streets, forms section 75, chap. 27, Pub. Stat., and that, in turn, forms section 23 of chapter 428, Stat. 1893, in regard to the powers and duties of town officers. It is evident that the object of the amendment was, not to restrict the powers and duties of the road commissioners, but rather to enlarge them, or, perhaps, to make it clearer what they were originally intended to include. The purpose of the statute was to enable towns to unite in one board for the sake of greater efficiency powers, and duties which, speaking generally, were exercised by the selectmen and surveyors of highways, in regard to streets and ways, and to give them the exclusive control over such matters. And it is apparent that a board, so constituted, and acting within the scope of its powers and duties, would act as a board of public officers, and not as servants of the town. Walcott v. Swampscott, 1 Allen, 101; Tindley v. Salem, 187 Mass. 173, 50 Am. Rep. 289, et seq., and cases cited; Blanchard v. Ayer, 148 Mass. 174. The plaintiffs contend, however, that the work in which the road commissioners were engaged upon Central avenue did not come within their powers and duties as public officers. But we think that what they were doing fairly may be called a "making and repairing," within the meaning of section 3, chap. 52, Pub. Stat. Although ordered by the county commissioners, the work did not relate to the construction of a new way, or the building of one that had been materially widened or lengthened or changed from its original layout, but was in the nature of repairs to and improvement of an existing way, and for the purpose of rendering it safer and more convenient to travelers. The petition under which the county commissioners acted was for the relocation of an existing way. What was to be done was spoken of in the first appropriation by the town as "repairs on Central avenue," and the exceptions expressly state that the ledge where the work was being done at the time of the injury complained of was wholly within the old lines, and that the location by the county commissioners did not differ much from the old line of fences; meaning, as we infer, that the old road and the road as located by the county commissioners were substantially the same. There is nothing to show that the removal of the ledge would not have been within the ordinary scope of the powers and duties of surveyors of highways. From the absence of any testimony as to the previous condition of the road, it is not easy to say that the repairs, though extensive, were not such as would not have come within the province of the road commissioners after the town had appropriated the money for them. Proctor v. Stone, 158 Mass. 564. The fact that they were unusual, or permanent, or expensive, or authorized by a special vote and appropriation, would not prevent them from being of such a character. Hennessey v. New Bedford, 153 Mass. 260; Pratt v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 245; Denniston v. Clark, 125 Mass. 216; Mitchell v. Bridgewater, 10 Cush. 411. In Cragie v. Mellen, 6 Mass. 7, it was assumed without question that it was the duty of the highway surveyors to make safe and passable a town way which had been laid out for the inhabitants of Cambridge, and approved by them. See also Cyr v. Dufour, 68 Me. 492. In Callender v. Murah, 1 Pick. 417, 426, which has never been questioned as an authority (Burr v. Leicester, 121 Mass. 242), it is said that the authority of highway surveyors "would seem to include everything which may be needed towards making the ways perfect and complete, either by leveling them where they are uneven and difficult of ascent and descent, or raising them where they should be sunken and miry." In consequence of this decision, and of the suggestions contained in it, a statute was passed giving a remedy to land owners who sustained damages by any act done in raising, lowering, or otherwise for the purpose of repairing a highway or town way. Rev. Stat. chap. 25, § 6; Pub. Stat. chap. 52, § 15. But as was said in Denniston v. Clark, 125 Mass. 225, "this statute does not affect the extent of the authority of the public and its officers, or the principle upon which that authority rests." It is true that it has been held that the powers and duties of highway surveyors were confined to repairs, and that neither they nor selectmen had authority, by virtue of their respective offices, to build or contract for the building of new ways, or of ways that were so widened or altered that what was to be done would amount to the substitution of a new way for an old one, either within the same or other lines. Todd v. Rowley, 8 Allen, 51; Denniston v. Clark, 125 Mass. 220; Bean v. Hyde Park, 143 Mass. 245; Blanchard v. Ayer, 148 Mass. 174; Bemis v. Springfield, 122 Mass. 110. There is no general rule defining what are repairs, and what are changes or alterations so radical that they fairly cannot be called such. Proctor v. Stone, supra. The original statute creating the office of highway surveyors gave them power to amend as well as to repair (Stat. 1786, chap. 81, § 1); and the law seems to have been liberally applied in favor of repairs. Though the word "amend" was omitted in the Revised Statutes and the later revisions, there is nothing to show that there was any intention to restrict the powers of the surveyors within narrower limits than those established by the original act. By Stat. 1877, chap. 58, amending section 2, chap. 298, Stat. 1871, which abolished the payment of highway and town way taxes in labor and materials, and provided that towns should raise by assessment on the polls and estates by residents and nonresidents such sums of money as were necessary for making and repairing highways and town ways, it was provided that the sums so voted should be expended by the surveyors of highways and the road commissioners in making and repairing the ways; the difference between the highway surveyors and road commissioners being that, in the case of the former, the expenditures were to be under the direction of the selectmen, but, in the latter, not. Section 2 of chapter 298, Stat. 1871, with the amendment of chapter 58, Stat. 1877, was incorporated into and forms section 31, chap. 52, Pub. Stat., on which the defendant relies. The meaning of the word "making" in this connection does not appear to have been considered, or to have received any construction. In the act establishing the road commissioners it evidently meant something more than "repairing." Stat. 1871, chap. 158, § 2. In the present and earlier statutes it seems to have been used, in some instances, in a sense which would include building or constructing. Pub. Stat. chap. 52, § 13; Id. chap. 49, §§ 9, 75; Rev. Stat. chap. 24, §§ 10, 44, 47, 64; Id. chap. 25, §§ 9, 15; Stat. 1796, chap. 58, § 1; Stat. 1818, chap. 121, § 1. It is so used in the sewer acts. Pub. Stat. chap. 50, §§ 1, 3, 4. But we do not think that it can be construed, in the section on which the defendant relies, as authorizing the road commissioners, whenever a new way is laid out in a town, to go on and build it. Cragie v. Mellen, and Cyr v. Dufour, supra. The road commissioners are not given power generally over the laying out, making, discontinuing, and repairing of ways, but only such powers as the selectmen and highway surveyors have, and such as are bestowed by the section under consideration. It is clear that neither the selectmen nor highway commissioners have authority to build new ways. We think that the jurisdiction of road commissioners is confined to existing ways, within lines corresponding substantially to existing lines, and possibly to making passable ways newly laid out (Cragie v. Mellen, supra); and that, as applied to them, the word "making" means more than repairing, and may properly include work of the general character of that which they were doing in this case upon Central avenue; and that, after the town had made the appropriation, it was for the commissioners in the absence of any further action on its part to do the work with such instrumentalities and in such manner as seemed to them best. Pratt v. Weymouth, and Hennessey v. New Bedford, supra. Although the duty of completing the road according to the layout and order of the county commissioners is imposed by statute upon the town, there can, we think, be no question that the town fulfills the duty thus imposed upon it if the money necessary to carry out the order of the county commissioners is appropriated by it, and the work is done by public officers duly chosen by it, and within whose jurisdiction it comes. Whether the work is done by public officers, or by persons specially appointed by the town, it is equally within the power of the county commissioners to see that their order is complied with. The fact that the town voluntarily adopted the statute providing for the election of road commissioners can make no difference as to whether the commissioners were or were not acting as public officers. Tindley v. Salem, supra. A majority of the court think that the exceptions should be overruled, and it is so ordered.

81 L. R. A.

Exceptions overruled.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

Charles EASTON et al., Appts.,
v.

Josephene HUOTT, Defendant, and Pelagie HUOTT et al., Interveners, Appellees.

(.....Iowa.....)

Nonresident aliens may inherit from an alien resident land situated in a state whose statutes prohibit nonresident aliens from acquiring title to land in the state, except that the widow and heirs of aliens who have acquired lands in the state may hold such lands by devise or descent for a period of ten years.

(October 5, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the District Court for Jefferson County in NOTE.—Alien's right to inherit.

I. The common-law doctrine.

II. Upon what the right depends.

III. Power of the states to regulate.

IV. In lands granted for military services and colonization.

V. Inheritance of patent lands.

VI. Effect of annexation of territory or division of an empire.

VII. The effect of naturalization.

VIII. Effect of marriage with an alien and residing abroad.

As to the effect of state Constitutions and statutes upon the question of inheritance by or from an alien, see note to DeWolf v. Middleton (R. L.) ante, 148.

Upon the question of the effect of state statutes and Constitutions upon inheritance through an alien, see note to Beaven v. Went (Ill.) ante, 85.

The effect of treaties upon the right of aliens to inherit will form a separate note.

As to treaty guaranties to aliens, see note to Gandolfo v. Hartman (Cal.) 16 L. R. A. 277.

Upon the question of disability of aliens and the escheat of property, see note to American Mortg. Co. v. Tennessee (Ga.) 12 L. R. A. 529, and brief in Toole v. Toole (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 465.

I. The common-law doctrine.

Where the title to real estate is created by operation of law, as in the case of a title by descent, the common law prohibits an alien from inheriting, and therefore, under such law, there can be no descent by, from, or through an alien, for the reason that an alien has no inheritable blood, and the law, que nihil frustra, will never cast descent upon any one who cannot hold the estate, no notice being taken of an alien heir on whom the inheritance cannot be cast.

At common law inheritance is understood to descend through the channel of blood or consanguinity, and when that blood is corrupted by alienage or infamy the inheritance is altogether obstructed or diverted into a different channel. Jackson, Fitz Simmons, v. Fitz Simmons, 10 Wend. 9, 24 Am. Dec. 198 (1832).

The above propositions of law are supported by the following authorities: Jenkins v. Noel, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 79 (1830); Smith v. Zaner, 4 Ala. 99, 106 (1842); Harley v. State, 40 Ala. 689, 695 (1867); Norris v. Hoyt, 18 Cal. 217 (1851); Farrell v. Enright, 12 Cal. 450 (1859); Walker v. Potomac Ferry Co., 3 MacArth. 440 (1879); Jost v. Jost, 1 Mackey, 487 (1882); Wunderlie v. Wunderlie, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84 (1893); Eldon v. Doe, Wynn, 6 Blackf. 341 (1842); Doe, Huddleston, v. Lazenby, 1 Ind. 234 (1848); Smith (Ind.) 205 (1850); Furenes v. Mickelson, 86 Iowa, 508 (1892); Stemple v. Herminghouser, 3 G. Greene, 408 (1852); Fry, Vaughan, v. Smith, 2 Dana, 38 (1834); Hunt v. Warrnicke, Hardin (Ky.) 61 (1806); Elmondorff v. Carmichael, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 472, 14 Am. Dec. 86 (1823); Stevenson v. Dunlap, 7 T. B. Mon. 134 (1824); Trimble v. Harrison, 1 B. Mon. 140 (1840); White v. White, 2 Met. (Ky.) 185 (1859); Yeaker v. Yeaker, 4 Met. (Ky.) 33, 81 Am. Dec. 530 (1862); Guyer v. Smith, 22 Md. 31 L. R. A.

239, 247, 85 Am. Dec. 650 (1864); Buchanan v. Deshon, 1 Harr. & G. 280 (1827); Slater v. Nason, 15 Pick. 345, 349 (1834); Piper v. Richardson, 9 Met. 157 (1845); Wilbur v. Tobey, 16 Pick. 177 (1854); Foss v. Crisp, 20 Pick. 124 (1838); Wacker v. Wacker, 26 Mo. 426 (1858); Farrar v. Dean, 24 Mo. 16 (1856); Utassy v. Gleding-hagen (Mo.) 33 S. W. 444 (1896); Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 475 (1855); Ettenheimer v. Heffernan, 66 Barb. 374, 377 (1873); Kilfoy v. Powers, 3 Dem. 198 (1884); Re Beck, 81 N. Y. S. R. 965 (1900); Mick v. Mick, 10 Wend. 379 (1833); Jackson, Fitz Simmons, v. Fitz Simmons, 10 Wend. 9, 24 Am. Dec. 198 (1832); Englishbee v. Helmuth, 7 N. Y. Legal Obs. 188, 189 (1849); Overing v. Russell, 82 Barb. 263, 265 (1860); Beck v. McGillis, 9 Barb. 35 (1850); Jackson, Ganevoort, v. Lunn, 3 Johns. Cas. 109 (1802); Re Leefe, 4 Edw. Ch. 385, 407 (1844); People v. Conklin, 2 Hill, 67 (1841); Heeney v. Brooklyn Benev. Soc. 33 Barb. 360 (1861); Larreau v. Davignon, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. 367 (1866); Mooers v. White, 6 Johns. Ch. 390 (1822); Renner v. Muller, 12 Jones & S. 535 (1879); Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. 583 (1844); Banks v. Walker, 8 Barb. Ch. 446 (1848); McCarthy v. Marsh, 5 N. Y. 263, 274 (1851); Parish v. Ward, 28 Barb. 328 (1856); Redpath v. Rich, 3 Sandf. 79 (1849); People v. Irvin, 21 Wend. 128 (1839); McGregor v. Comstock, 3 N. Y. 409 (1850); Jackson, Doran, v. Green, 7 Wend. 333 (1831); Wadsworth v. Wadsworth, 12 N. Y. 376 (1855); Munro v. Merchant, 28 N. Y. 9 (1863); Atkins v. Kron, 5 Ired. Eq. 207, 210 (1848); Copeland v. Sauls, 1 Jones, L. 70 (1853); Campbell v. Campbell, 5 Jones, Eq. 246 (1859); Den, Paul, v. Ward, 4 Dev. L. 247 (1853); Rutherford v. Wolfe, 3 Hawks, 272 (1824); Jackson v. Burns, 3 Binn. 75 (1810); Haigh v. Haigh, 9 R. I. 26 (1868); Laurens v. Jenney, 1 Speers, L. 356, 365 (1843); McCaw v. Galbraith, 7 Rich. L. 74, 84 (1853); Richards v. M'Daniel, 2 Mill, Const. 18 (1818); Ennas v. Franklin, 2 Brev. 398 (1810); McClenaghan v. McClenaghan, 1 Strobh. Eq. 295, 321, 47 Am. Dec. 532 (1847); Trezevant v. Osborn, 3 Brev. 29 (1812); Scott v. Cohen, 2 Nott & M'C. 293, 297 (1820); Dupont v. Pepper, Harp. Eq. 5 (1824); Baker v. Shy, 9 Heisk. 85, 89 (1871); Hinkle v. Shadden, 2 Swan, 46, 49 (1852); Emmett v. Emmett, 14 Lea, 369, 371 (1884); Blythe v. Easterling, 20 Tex. 565 (1867); Barclay v. Cameron, 25 Tex. 233 (1860); Andrews v. Spear, 48 Tex. 567 (1878); Hubbard v. Goodwin, Kennedy v. Goodwin, 3 Leigh, 492, 509 (1878); Com. v. Bristow, 6 Call (Va.) 60 (1809); Read v. Read, 5 Call (Va.) 160 (1804); Sands v. Lynham, 27 Gratt. 291, 21 Am. Rep. 348 (1876); Fairfax v. Hunter, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 603, 3 L. ed. 453 (1813); McCreery v. Somerville, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 354, 6 L. ed. 109 (1824); Levy v. McCartee, 31 U. S. 1 Pet. 102, 8 L. ed. 334 (1832); Blight v. Rochester, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 535, 5 L. ed. 516 (1822); Cross v. De Valle, 1 Cliff. 282 (1859); Branagh v. Smith, 46 Fed. Rep. 517 (1891); Spratt v. Spratt, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 343, 7 L. ed. 171 (1823); 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 393, 7 L. ed. 897 (1830); Orr v. Hodgden, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 453, 4 L. ed. 613 (1819); Dumonceil v. Dumonceil, 13 Ir. Eq. Rep. 92 (1848); Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 413 (1664); 1 Keb. 671 (1645).

The common-law rule prevails in equity, for the reason that equitable estates are subject to the same modes and conditions as corresponding legal estates. Cross v. De Valle, supra.

Alienage in any mediate ancestor will interrupt favor of interveners in an equity proceeding to determine the ownership of certain real estate of which Xavier Huott died seised, which recognized the claims of interveners, who were alien heirs of decedent. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jones & Fullen, for appellants:

The common-law doctrine that an alien had no inheritable blood had been adopted as the law of the land before the adoption of our Constitution.

Stemple v. Herminghouser, 3 G. Greene, 408.

the descent between persons who are capable of taking and transmitting land by descent. Murray v. Kelly, 27 Ind. 42 (1866).

So that children of a parent still alive cannot derive an inheritance when such parent is incapable of acquiring that inheritance on account of alienage. Walker v. Potomac Ferry Co. 3 MacArth. 440 (1879).

Even a natural-born subject cannot take by representation from an alien, because an alien has no inheritable blood through which a title can be deduced. Jenkins v. Noel, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 79 (1830); Stemple v. Herminghouser, 3 G. Greene, 408 (1852); Campbell v. Campbell, 5 Jones, Eq. 246 (1859); McClenaghan v. McClenaghan, 1 Strobb. Eq. 295, 321, 47 Am. Dec. 532 (1847).

In Lambert v. Paine, 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 97, 2 L. ed. 377 (1805), it was said to be questionable whether a British subject, born in England in the year 1750, and who always resided there, could, in the year 1786, take and hold lands in Virginia by descent or by devise.

In a later case, the circuit court held that a British subject could not, in the year 1793, inherit lands in the United States from a citizen of such state. Contee v. Godfrey, 1 Cranch, C. C. 479 (1808).

So, in Read v. Read, 5 Call (Va.) 160 (1804), it was held that a British subject who was born before the Revolution could not, prior to the treaty of 1794 between the United States and Great Britain, inherit lands in the United States.

Upon the signing of the Declaration of Independence all British subjects became aliens to the United States, and therefore incapable of taking by descent. Com. v. Bristow, 6 Call (Va.) 60 (1806).

And as an alien cannot inherit at common law, so he cannot interrupt the descent of others, and therefore the next of kin will in such a case inherit. Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84 (1893); Englishbee v. Helmuth, 7 N. Y. Legal Obs. 188, 189 (1849); Vaux v. Neebit, 1 McCord, Eq. 352, 372 (1826); Jackson, Fitz Simmons, v. Fitz Simmons, 10 Wend. 9, 24 Am. Dec. 198 (1823); Smith v. Zaner, 4 Ala. 99, 106 (1842); Stemple v. Herminghouser, and McClenaghan v. McClenaghan, supra; Scott v. Cohen, 2 Nott & M'C. 293, 297 (1820).

And in such a case a more distant relative, who is a citizen, is entitled to inherit. Halyburton v. Kershaw, 3 Desaus. Eq. 105 (1810).

So, where lands descended to four coparceners, one of whom was an alien, it was held that the other three were entitled. Contee v. Godfrey, 1 Cranch, C. C. 479 (1808).

And nothing less than a plain and express statutory provision in relation to land can change the rule of the common law. Stemple v. Herminghouser, 3 G. Greene, 408 (1852).

Nonresident aliens therefore cannot claim through an intestate prior to the passing of the California statute. Norris v. Hoyt, 18 Cal. 217 (1861).

If one who has been naturalized dies leaving his eldest son an alien, and a younger son a citizen, the younger son inherits taking immediately from his father. Campbell v. Campbell, 5 Jones, Eq. 246 (1859).

But if one who has been naturalized dies leaving a nephew, a citizen, the son of an alien brother, such nephew cannot inherit to his uncle whether his father be dead or living, if he cannot take immediately, and representation would of no value, father was an alien. Ibid.

R. A.

So, if one who has been naturalized dies leaving a grandson, a citizen, the child of a son who was an alien, such grandson cannot inherit, for he cannot take immediately, and although his father be dead representing him will be unavailing. Ibid.

If the land descended to the next heir immediately, as from brother to brother, and not mediately, or by representation, it was no objection to the vesting of the title in the immediate heir by descent that such heir, and the person from whom the estate descended, had no common or inheritable blood, except such as was derived from a common ancestor who was an alien. But if the first immediate heir was an alien, so that he could not have inherited the estate if living, those who could only claim through him by representation, and not as the next immediate heirs to the deceased owner of the estate, were also passed by, and they could not inherit by representation through the blood of such alien. Jackson, Fitz Simmons, v. Fitz Simmons, 10 Wend. 9, 11, 24 Am. Dec. 199 (1823).

Therefore, if an alien had children born within the King's dominion, or such children were naturalized, they might inherit from each other. Ibid.

Children born abroad, of alien parents who subsequently became residents, and whose parents became naturalized citizens before such children arrived at the age of twenty-one, were held entitled to inherit. Renner v. Muller, 12 Jones & S. 535 (1879).

And it has been held necessary to cite a nonresident alien brother and sister of a decedent upon application for the probate of a will. Kilfoy v. Powers, 3 Dem. 198 (1884).

But the disability does not extend to personal property. Beck v. McGillis, 9 Barb. 35 (1850); Meakings v. Cromwell, 5 N. Y. 136 (1851); Megrath v. Robertson, 1 Desaus. Eq. 445, 449 (1795).

The common-law rule excluding all tracing their descent through uninheritable blood was never in force in the state of Connecticut, and therefore first cousins of the deceased, notwithstanding their relationship to him through alien ancestors, were held entitled to inherit. Campbell's Appeal, 64 Conn. 277, 24 L. R. A. 667 (1894).

It is a settled principle in the common law that the descent between brothers, or between a brother and sister, is immediate, and the alienage of the father does not impede the descent between children. The father is medium differens sanguinis, but not medium differens hereditatis. Lubrs v. Elmer, 80 N. Y. 179 (1880); Smith v. Mulligan, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. 438, 441 (1871); Bradley v. Dwight, 62 How. Pr. 300 (1881); Banks v. Walker, 3 Barb. Ch. 446 (1848); Jackson, Doran, v. Green, 7 Wend. 333 (1831); McGregor v. Comstock, 3 N. Y. 409 (1850); Renner v. Muller, 57 How. Pr. 229, 232 (1879); Campbell v. Campbell, 5 Jones, Eq. 246 (1859).

And this is so for the reason that brothers and sisters inherit from each other, and therefore a parent, if living and an alien, is passed by. Renner v. Muller, 12 Jones & S. 535 (1879).

And for the further reason that they are respective stocks of descent, and alienism is an impediment only where it comes between the stock of descent and the person claiming to take. Lubrs v. Elmer, 80 N. Y. 179 (1880).

If some of the persons answering the description of heirs are incapable of taking by reason of alienage, they are disregarded and the whole title vests in those heirs competent to take, provided

The question was fully settled in King v. Ware, 53 Iowa, 97, that the nonresident alien heirs could not inherit any share, but the whole would pass to the heirs who were residents of this state.

The intention of the saving clause of the statute was to fix the rights of nonresident widows and heirs of nonresident aliens who had heretofore acquired lands under the laws of Iowa.

If a nonresident alien had acquired property in this state under our laws heretofore in force, they are not compelled to trace the inheritance through an alien. Ibid.

In such a case the inheritance will not pass through him, but will pass by him to the next one who is competent. Renner v. Muller, supra.

The above rule was held not to be changed by the New York statute of 1786, which changed the order of descent so as to allow brothers and sisters to take where there was no father living, or, if living, he was incapable of taking by reason of alienage, not, however, through the father, but immediate from the decedent as at common law. Ibid.

The rule which enables brothers, sons of an alien father, to inherit of each other for the reason that the descent between them is immediate, applies between one of the brothers and the representatives of the other, and also between the representatives of both. Renner v. Muller, supra.

But it is otherwise in the case of a descent from cousin to cousin. Jackson, Doran, v. Green, 7 Wend. 333 (1831).

The common-law rule by which aliens were precluded from inheriting lands prevailed in the state of New York, but was modified by the laws of 1845, chap. 115. Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. 583 (1844).

And it has been stated that the question as to the right of a nonresident alien to hold property at common law and under the civil law is a matter between the alien and the government, and cannot be called in question in a collateral proceeding between individuals. Racouillat v. Sansevain, 32 Cal. 376, 386 (1867).

So, it has been held that the proof of alienage in a collateral proceeding will not deprive an alien of real estate. Ramirez v. Kent, 2 Cal. 558 (1862).

Where a native of New York, who resided and owned land in the state at the time of the Revolutionary war, at which time he joined the British and so continued until after the Declaration of Independence, leaving in the year 1783 with his family, except his eldest son, for Nova Scotia, but dying on the passage, his family subsequently settling in that country, except such eldest son, who remained in the state in possession of the property until 1838, when he died leaving children,—it was held that the children of such eldest son were entitled to the estate as against their alien uncles and aunts, who were children of the original owner, who by his electing to continue his allegiance to the British government became an alien. Orser v. Hoag, 3 Hill, 79 (1842).

Although in the cases of Blythe v. Easterling, 20 Tex. 585 (1857), and Barclay v. Cameron, 25 Tex. 233 (1860), the court found that the common-law rule precluding an alien from taking by descent was in force in Texas, yet the more recent cases would seem to doubt the correctness of such holding, and to decide that such rule did not exist in that state.

So, it has been held that prior to March, 1836, the laws of Mexico, which were based upon the civil law, were in force in Texas, the state Constitution of that year and the act of 1840, together with the old Mexican laws, forming the Code. Barrett v. Kelly, 31 Tex. 476, 481 (1868).

Again in the same case, it was stated that the Texas act of 1840, which repealed all laws in force prior to September 1, 1836, and adopted the common law of England as a rule of decision, so far as it was not inconsistent with the Constitution or the act of Congress then in force, abolished all the laws relating to alienage so far as they were of Mexican or Spanish origin.

31 L. R. A.

In that case the court also said that upon the annexation of the republic to the United States in 1845 none of the citizens of the United States were aliens to Texas and vice versa, and all causes for invoking the common law of England or the Constitution or statute laws of the state on the subject, in suits between citizens of Texas and those in other parts of the United States, were swept away.

The court, however, in that case held that an alien could defend his title against any one but the government, and based its decision upon the principles of the common law, as laid down in the New York case of Jackson, Smith, v. Adams, 7 Wend. 368 (1831).

These holdings would, however, appear to be contrary to the case of Sabrigio v. White, 30 Tex. 576, 588 (1868), wherein the court held that art. 44 of Pasch. Dig. (Tex.) p. 238, note, showed beyond all controversy that the common-law rule that an alien cannot cast descent upon an alien was wholly inapplicable to the republic of Texas, and that the decision in McKinney v. Saviego, 59 U. S. 18 How. 235, 15 L. ed. 365, was pronounced under a total misapprehension of the state law at the time the plaintiff's rights accrued.

They are also contrary to the opinion of the court in Settegast v. Schrimpf, 35 Tex. 323, 342 (1872), and to the case of Andrews v. Spear, 48 Tex. 567, 580 (1878); and to the still later case of Hanrick v. Hanrick, 64 Tex. 112 (1880), 61 Tex. 596, 602 (1884), 63 Tex. 623 (1885), wherein the court expressly held that the Texas statute of 1840, regulating descent and distribution, was not repealed by the adoption of the Constitution of 1845, but continued in force until re-enacted in 1848, and that therefore the common-law rule was never in force in that state.

II. Upon what the right depends.

It is a general rule of the common law that the title to real property must be acquired and pass according to the lex rei sitæ, and the rule not only applies to the alienations and acquisitions made by the acts of the parties, but also to the estates and rights acquired by operation of law, the principle originally applicable as between countries entirely foreign to each other prevailing among the states of the American Union. From such a rule the doctrine results that the title of aliens to land within the limits of the several states is matter of state regulation. Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R. A. 84 (1893).

The right to inherit depends upon the existing state of allegiance at the time of the descent cast. Orser v. Hoag, 3 Hill, 79 (1842); Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 99, 7 L. ed. 617 (1830).

And the capacity to take must then exist. Sample v. Herminghouse, 3 G. Greene, 408 (1852).

The laws of descent in the state of New York embrace and make no distinction between a native-born and a naturalized citizen, and the question, Who are entitled to inherit? must be determined by the law and the facts existing at the time of the death of the intestate. Larreau v. Davignon, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. 367 (1876).

III. Power of the states to regulate.

Each state has the undoubted right to enact laws regulating the descent of a succession to property within its limits, and to permit inheritance by or from an alien. Harley v. State, 40 Ala. 689, 695, (1867); Re Gill's Estate, 79 Iowa, 296, 9 L. R. A. 126 (1890); McClenaghan v. McClenaghan, 1 Strobb. Eq. 295, 321, 47 Am. Dec. 532 (1847).

justice and good faith required our legislature to enact the saving clause to protect the widow and heirs of such nonresident aliens and the true construction of said section undoubtedly means nonresident aliens. This act does not apply to resident aliens.

King v. Ware, supra.

Messrs. Wilson & Hinkle for appellees.

But when a state makes aliens capable of taking lands by descent within its own territory, it by no means makes them citizens of the United States, nor does it give them any capacity to take by descent, or in any other capacity whatever in any other state, each state having the undoubted right to regulate the law of descents within its own limits. Montgomery v. Dorian, 7 N. H. 435 (1836).

In Englishbee v. Helmuth, 7 N. Y. Legal Obs. 186, 180 (1849), the court stated that the legislature might remove the disability of an alien heir and authorize him to take as by descent, but that the state could not by special act authorize an alien or nearer kin to take to the exclusion of a citizen of kin more remote, as it would be divesting an heir who had acquired a title under the general law of inheritance, but that where there were no heirs who could be affected, and the property was in or must go to the people, the legislature had the power to authorize the party to take as by descent, or in any other manner.

IV. In lands granted for military services and colonization.

In Jackson, People, v. Etz, 5 Cow. 314 (1828), it was held that a grant of lands to an alien soldier for military services during the Revolutionary war enabled the heirs of such soldier who died during the war to inherit even though they were aliens.

So, in the case of Warnell v. Finch, 15 Tex. 163 (1855), it was held that the alien heir of one who had fallen with either of certain persons specially named therein could hold under a grant of land from the government directly to the heir, and that where the grant from the government was to the heir, if not in contravention of law nor obtained through fraud, such heir could take and hold under the grant as well as if he had been a citizen, but such was not the case if the alien heir claimed by descent cast from the father; and that if the father was the grantee the alien heir could neither take nor hold lands by such title.

Where a patent was granted in the year 1846, "to the heirs of an intestate" dying in 1835, it was held that such patent inured only to the benefit of those who were his heirs at the time of his death, and did not include those who became his heirs before the patent by reason of the removal of their alienage, but that with respect to the grants of the legislature to the heirs of those who fell while serving under a certain-named person in the war, it was otherwise. Hornaby v. Bacon, 20 Tex. 556 (1857).

In Holliman v. Peebles, 1 Tex. 673 (1848), the question was, whether a foreign colonist who, under the colonization laws of 1823 had received a league of land as the head of a family from the government of Mexico, but never at any time had a permanent domicile nor introduced his property into the country, and finally abandoned the same, was entitled to hold the lands so received by him under the laws of the colonization, and whether the plaintiffs, as aliens, were disabled from continuing the action to recover the property. The court held that he had no power to hold such lands, and that under the laws of Mexico, his heirs, being aliens, could not maintain the action as they had no title by inheritance.

So, in Yates v. Iams, 10 Tex. 168 (1853), it was held that under the general principles which, pervaded 31 L. R. A.

Robinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts admitted by the demurrer are substantially as follows: Xavier Huott was an alien, but a resident of Jefferson county, in this state. In March, 1870, he acquired the absolute title to 140 acres of land in that county; and in September, 1893, he died in-the law in 1823, and under which the grant in question was made, and upon the general policy of the government in relation to the right of property in lands granted for colonization, the heir of an intestate, domiciled out of the republic of Mexico, could not acquire title by inheritance to lands of the intestate who died in the province of Texas.

V. Inheritance of patent lands.

In King v. Ware, 53 Iowa, 97 (1880), the defendant averred that the intestate was a nonresident alien, and that eight of his children were foreign aliens; that two of his sons, residents and citizens of that state, inherited the whole; that subsequently one of such sons died leaving his share to his widow, who with the survivor of such two sons sold to the defendant. The plaintiff claimed title to an undivided interest by virtue of a purchase from one of the nonresident alien children of the intestate. The court held that, the title of the intestate having been acquired by him by patent from the United States, he took an estate of inheritance, the act of Congress of March 3, 1845, and the act supplementary thereto approved on the same day, which provided for the admission of the states of Iowa and Florida, into the union of states, containing an express condition that such states should provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that such states should never "interfere with the primary disposal of the soil within the same by the United States, or with any regulations Congress might find necessary for securing the title in such soil to the bona fide purchasers thereof," the proviso being accepted and approved by an act and ordinance of the general assembly of that state, January 15, 1849.

In Blakeley v. Caywood, 4 Or. 279 (1872), the question was as to the power of the heirs to inherit land which had been patented under the donation act to an alien who had declared his intention to become a naturalized citizen of the United States but had died prior to naturalization. The court held that his death did not render the grant void, and that the United States had no title.

The section in question in the above case (§ 4 of the donation act of 1850) provides that no alien shall be entitled to a patent for lands granted by this act until he shall produce to a surveyor general of Oregon record evidence that his naturalization as a citizen of the United States has been completed, but if any alien having made his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States after the passage of this act shall die before his naturalization shall be completed, the possessory right acquired by him under the provisions of this act shall descend to his heirs at law, or pass to his devisees, to whom, as the case may be, the patent shall issue.

In Ware v. Wisner, 4 McCrary, 66, 60 (1853), the land was originally entered upon by a nonresident alien to whom patents were issued, who died in July, 1861, leaving eleven children, two of whom resided in, and were citizens of, the United States, the remaining children, except two, being nonresident aliens. The question was raised as to the rights of two of the daughters who married two brothers born in Canada, of parents who were native-born citizens of the United States, who had emigrated to that country, but had never formally testate, leaving a widow, but no children. Among his surviving relatives were a nephew, Charles Easton, and two nieces, Mary Fox and Jane Miller (all of whom are citizens of the United States and children of his sisters, now deceased), and three sisters, and a nephew (who is the only surviving son and heir of a deceased brother, all of whom are nonresident aliens and citizens of France).

This action was brought by the nephew and nieces who are residents of the United States and the husbands of those nieces. They admit that the widow, who is made a party defendant, is entitled to an undivided one-half of the land, and claim that Easton is entitled renounced their allegiance to the American government, and it was not shown that the sons had ever renounced their allegiance. Both the father and the sons were engaged in business in Canada, and voted there upon their property qualifications, but the father always refused to take the oath of allegiance to the British government. The complainant was the owner of the premises by purchase of the interest of the two children of the deceased, who resided in the state and were citizens, and the defendant was the owner by purchase of the interest of five of the remaining heirs, including the two daughters who married American citizens. In 1854 the deceased by will directed his Canadian and other property, real and personal, to be sold, the money arising from such sale together with his other personal estate to be collected and divided between his children share and share alike. The court held that neither the father nor sons ever ceased to be citizens of the United States within the doctrine of expatriation, and that the title to the land in controversy vested in the two children who were resident citizens, and in the two daughters who married American citizens, each being entitled to one fourth, and made a decree quieting the title of such purchasers. See also Warnell v. Finch, 15 Tex. 163 (1855), and Hornsby v. Bacon, 20 Tex. 556 (1857), supra, IV.

VI. Effect of annexation of territory or division of an empire.

In Jones v. Mc Masters, 61 U. S. 20 How. 8, 15 L. ed. 805 (1857), it was held that in Texas, until an act of the legislature was passed upon the subject of alienage, or some other proceeding was taken on behalf of the government divesting the estate for alienage, effect could not be given to a plea of alienage, the division of an empire working no forfeiture of a right of property previously acquired.

In Cryer v. Andrews, 11 Tex. 170 (1853), descent was cast upon an alien, a citizen of the United States, after the Constitution of the republic was adopted, and the court held that annexation had the effect of making him a citizen of the state, so as to fall within the provisions of the Texas statute of 1840, regulating descent, the very act of union making the citizens of each government citizens of the other, the rules controlling the rights of other citizens from that time operating upon their rights, the doctrines and rules in relation to the rights of aliens ceasing.

By the Constitution of the republic of Texas aliens were allowed to hold land by title emanating directly from the government, and so, upon the ground that the division of the empire works no forfeiture of a right of property previously acquired, they were held entitled to hold lands acquired by descent or purchase before the change of government. White v. Sabariego, 23 Tex. 243 (1859).

In Wardrup v. Jones, 23 Tex. 489 (1859), it was contended that the plaintiff could not assert her claim as heir of her deceased husband, for the reason that she was an alien at the time of his death, and had remained such ever since, the republic of Texas being annexed to the Federal Union in 1846, and the nine years within which the Texas statute required an alien to become a citizen not having elapsed prior to the consummation of the annexation. The court held that she was entitled to the estate upon becoming a citizen of the United States.

In Barrett v. Kelly, 31 Tex. 476, 481 (1868), it was held that in the year 1840 the laws of the republic of Texas relative to alienage, so far as the same were of Mexican or Spanish origin, were abolished, and that all causes for invoking the common law of England or the constitutional or statute laws of the state on the same subject in suits between citizens of Texas and those residing in other parts of the United States, were swept away by the union of the two governments, or rather by the merger of Texas in the United States.

So, it has been held that a citizen of Mexico was not divested of his title to lands in Texas by the Revolution, nor by the Constitution or laws subsequently adopted, but that such citizen retained the right to alienate the same and transmit to his heirs, who were also citizens of Mexico, for the reason that the division of an empire did not destroy the rights of property. Airhart v. Massieu, 98 U. S. 491, 25 L. ed. 218 (1878).

In Pettus v. Dawson, 82 Tex. 18, 21 (1891), at the time of the death of a son, his mother was an alien residing in Kentucky, and before the nine years given to her by the Constitution of the republic of Texas and the act of 1840, which was passed for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the Constitution, the republic became a part of the United States by its admission into the Union. It was therefore held that the mother became a citizen by reason of such admission, and was capable of inheriting, the question of alienage being eliminated.

VII. The effect of naturalization.

An alien may take and hold, dispose of, or transmit, by descent, any real estate, as an individual citizen, when he has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States pursuant to the provisions of the naturalization laws, and when fully naturalized he becomes invested with all the rights of a native citizen except as restricted by the Constitution from holding certain offices. Baker v. Shy, 9 Heisk. 85, 89 (1871).

But the land must be acquired after the filing of such declaration, and therefore the common law will remain in force as to lands previously acquired, as it will also apply to aliens who have not taken advantage of the terms of the act. Wright v. Sadler, 20 N. Y. 320 (1859).

Though an alien be naturalized after descent cast, he cannot secure the estate, for the reason that the fee will not rest in abeyance, and that the capacity to take must exist at the time the descent happens, as naturalization may confirm a defective title, but will not confer an estate. Stemple v. Herminghouser, 3 G. Greene, 408 (1852).

Where a naturalized citizen of the United States devised his estate in Ireland to his brothers and sisters, and by a residuary clause devised all his other property to his brothers and sisters and their children, and appointed trustees who were aliens, giving them power to sell, and one of the legatees, who was a naturalized citizen of the United States, claimed the whole of the property situated in the States as the only legatee who could take by descent, the rest being aliens,—the court held (it having been previously determined that the real estate to an undivided one-fourth, and Mrs. Fox and Mrs. Miller each to an undivided one-eighth, of the land; or, in other words, that the three are entitled to all of it which does not belong to the widow of the decedent. The sisters and nephew who reside in France filed a petition of intervention, in which they allege their relationship to the decedent, and aver that each is entitled to an undivided one-twelfth of the land. The demurrer is founded upon the theory that, as the interveners are nonresident aliens, they cannot inherit any part of the land in question.

The correctness of the ruling upon the demurrer depends upon the force and effect to be given to chapter 85 of the acts of the 22d General Assembly. Section 1 of that act provides that "nonresident aliens are hereby prohibited from owning by the testator and situated in the United States did not pass under the will) that the whole of such property vested in such naturalized citizen. Scott v. Cohen, 2 Nott & M'C. 293, 297 (1820).

In Leary v. Leary, 50 How. Pr. 122 (1874), the owner of real estate died, leaving a widow and two infant children, all of whom died shortly after his decease. At the time of the death of the youngest child, its heirs at law were two brothers and a sister of its father, all, except one brother, being naturalized prior to the death of the owner, and a sister, nonresident aliens. The court held that the estate vested absolutely and wholly in the naturalized brother to the exclusion of the other brother and sister, and that their subsequent naturalization did not divest his title.

The retroactive effect of naturalization refers to titles acquired by purchase, and not to a title or estate which passes to an alien by operation of law. Heeney v. Brooklyn Benev. Soc. 33 Barb. 360, 368 (1861).

In Keenan v. Keenan, 7 Rich. L. 345 (1854), intestate, a naturalized citizen, left a widow a resident alien, and a brother a naturalized citizen, him surviving, and it was held that the latter was entitled to his real estate, to the exclusion of the widow, whose subsequent naturalization had no retroactive effect.

Naturalization has no retrospective effect. Vaux v. Nesbit, 1 McCord, Eq. 352, 372 (1826).

So, it has been held that the English naturalization act (Stat. 33 Vict. chap. 14, § 2), is not retrospective. Sharp v. St. Sauveur, L. R. 7 Ch. 343, 26 L. T. N. S. 142, 41 L. J. Ch. 576, 20 Week. Rep. 209 (1871).

VIII. Effect of marriage with an alien and residing abroad.

It has been stated that the marriage of a daughter, even under age, is an immediate emancipation from the control of her father, and by such marriage she has the power of changing her domicile to that of her husband, which she could not otherwise have changed by her own election during her minority. Peck v. Young, 26 Wend. 613, 625 (1841).

Where, however, the daughter was not of a proper age to contract matrimony until after her status in respect to her allegiance to this country was fixed by the close of the Revolution, it was held that her marriage subsequent to that event could not deprive her of the right to inherit real estate in the United States. Ibid.

In Shanks v. Dupont, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 242, 7 L. ed. 606 (1830), a native of South Carolina left two daughters, both born in that state before the Declaration of Independence. One of the daughters married a citizen of that state, and died in 1802, entitled to one half of the property in question which formed part of James Island taken possession of by the British in 1780. In the year 1781, the other daughter married a British subject, and went to reside in England, where she died in 1801, leaving five children, all aliens, who claimed the other half of such estate in right of their mother, under the 9th article of the treaty of peace. The court held that they were entitled to recover for son that if the mother was of full age previously to the time she left the country her birth and residence constituted her a citizen of the state while she remained in the state, and that, even if she were not of full age then, yet she was deemed to hold the citizenship of her father, as children born in a country continuing while under age in the family of the father, partake of his natural character as a citizen of that country, and for the further reason that her marriage with a British subject did not destroy her allegiance to the state.

Where the child of a British subject was itself born a British subject, but the father became entitled to citizenship of the United States by force of the treaty of 1794, and such child removed to England and married a British subject and permanently settled there, it was held, on the death of the father, that such child could not take the lands by descent from the father, as, by the laws of Kentucky, it was held that the son had elected to adhere to Britain and was therefore an alien, and no title passed by the deed of an alien claiming by descent through the father, who was a citizen, to lands situated in Kentucky. Trimble v. Harrison, 1 B. Mon. 140 (1840).

In De Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 33 L. ed. 642 (1890), a citizen of the United States, a resident of the District of Columbia, died intestate in 1888, the complainants, his nephews, being nonresident aliens, children of a deceased sister of the intestate, who, a resident citizen of the United States, married an alien, and resided and died abroad. The defendants were, with one exception, the brothers and sisters of the mother of the complainants, and were all resident citizens of the United States, except one sister who married a British subject and resided abroad with him. The complainants' claim for a sale of the property and a division of the proceeds among the intestate's heirs, resident citizens of France, was demurred to, on the ground that they were incapable of taking from their uncle, the supreme court of the District of Columbia sustaining the demurrer. This decision was, however, overruled, the court holding the complainants entitled to inherit under the existing laws of Maryland, there being a plain implication that property in the District of Columbia and in the territories might be acquired by aliens by inheritance under existing laws; and no property could be acquired by those in the District by inheritance except by virtue of the law of Maryland as it existed when adopted by the United States during the existence of the convention of 1800, between France and the United States, or under the 7th article of the convention of 1853, between the same governments.

In Ludlam v. Ludlam, 31 Barb. 488 (1860), affirmed 26 N. Y. 356, 84 Am. Dec. 193 (1863), it was held that a son of an American citizen born in a foreign country of an alien mother, of which country his father was only a temporary resident, was a United States citizen and therefore entitled to inherit, the duration of the father's residence in such foreign country not being material so long as it was not perpetual.

See also De Wolf v. Middleton (R. I.) ante, 146 (1895), from which case it would seem a person by becoming a domiciled resident of a foreign country becomes an alien within the operation of the law excluding aliens from inheritance.

hibited from acquiring title to or taking or holding any lands or real estate in this state by descent, devise, purchase, or otherwise only as hereinafter provided, except that the widow and heirs of aliens who have heretofore acquired lands in this state under the laws thereof may hold such lands by devise or descent for a period of ten years and no longer, and if at the end of such time herein limited such lands so acquired have not been sold to a bona fide purchaser for value or such alien heirs have not become residents of this state, such lands shall escheat and revert to the state of Iowa. . . . The appellants contend that this act does not apply to resident aliens, and that the determination of this case is governed by the law as announced in King v. Ware, 53 Iowa, 97. Some stress is also placed upon section 22 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state. That provides that "foreigners who are or who may hereafter become residents of this state shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and descent of property as native-born citizens." We do not think that provision has any application to the controversy in this case. It applies only to foreigners who were at the time of its adoption, or who thereafter became, residents of this state. It is conceded by the parties to this action that the decedent acquired a perfect title to the land in question, and the controversy is solely over the right of nonresident aliens to inherit land situated in this state. In the case of King v. Ware, supra, the rule was recognized that in the absence of license, by statute or otherwise, an alien cannot acquire or hold realty, and it was held that the nonresident alien children of a deceased alien, who was also a nonresident, could not inherit an interest in land in this state of which he died seised. But that decision was based upon sections 2498-2493 of the Revision of 1860, which have been held in several cases not to confer upon alien non-residents of the United States the capacity to inherit real estate.

The claim of the appellants that chapter 85 of the Acts of the 22d General Assembly does not apply to resident aliens cannot be sustained to the extent claimed. It is true it refers to the right of nonresident aliens to acquire and hold real estate, but the clause, "except that the widow and heirs of aliens who have heretofore acquired lands in this state under the laws thereof may hold such lands by devise or descent for a period of ten years," refers to widows and heirs of aliens, without restriction as to the place of residence of the widows, the heirs, or the aliens. It is not material to the acquirement of title under that provision whether the widow and heirs are aliens or are nonresidents, or whether the deceased alien was a resident. If an alien, whether living here or in a foreign country, die seised of land situated in this state, his widow and heirs, wherever they may reside, and whether aliens or not, may take title to the land by devise or descent. The words "who have heretofore acquired land in this state" refer, not to the "widows and heirs," but to "aliens." The right is given to the widow and heirs of aliens to take title after the act took effect when the alien from whom they claim had acquired the title before the act took effect.

We conclude that the demurrer was properly overruled. The decree gave to each of the interveners an undivided one-twelfth of the land of which the intestate died seised for the period of ten years only, and provided for a supplemental decree in case the land was not sold or the interveners did not become residents of this state within that time.

The decree thus rendered appears to have been authorized by the admitted facts of the case and the law applicable thereto, and it is affirmed.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

c.

F. STARKWEATHER et al.

(.....Iowa.....)

A street may be opened across depot grounds of a railroad company, under general authority conferred on cities and towns for opening streets and condemning lands for such purposes without any express provision as to crossing railroads, where the inconvenience to the company will be inconsiderable as compared with the benefit to the public.

(February 1, 1896.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the District Court of Sioux County in favor of defendant in a proceeding brought to set aside the opening of a street across complainant's depot grounds. Affirmed.

Statement by Robinson, J. :

This is a certiorari proceeding for the review of the action of the council of the incorporated town of Boyden in extending a street across the depot grounds of the plaintiff. There was a trial on the merits, and a judgment dismissing the petition. The plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. Milt. H. Allen and George E. Clarke, for appellant:

The state cannot take away the right of the individual and grant it to another individual for his good, but it must be taken for the benefit of the entire public.

Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Iowa, 540.

The use may be a public one though it be for private gain.

Stewart v. Polk County Supers. 30 Iowa, 9; Noll v. Dubuque, B. & M. R. Co. 32 Iowa, 66; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 780.

Where property has once been subjected to the right of eminent domain and is in public use for the purposes for which it was so taken, the right of eminent domain cannot be again exercised over it and the property taken from the purpose for which it was taken and is being used, and subjected to another public use, without express authority from the legislature in the form of a special statute empowering such second taking and use.

NOTE.—As to right to lay out highway across railroad, see State, St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. (Minn.) 7 L. R. A. 121; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago (Ill.) 17 L. R. A. 530; Fort Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 18 L. R. A. 387.

Housatonic R. Co. v. Lee & H. R. Co. 118 Mass. 391; Re Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 577; Re Buffalo, 68 N. Y. 167; Prospect Park & I. R. Co. v. Williamson, 91 N. Y. 552; Valparaiso v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 123 Ind. 467; Seymour v. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. 126 Ind. 466; Baltimore & O. & C. R. Co. v. North, 103 Ind. 486; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Fairbault, 23 Minn. 167; St. Paul Union Depot Co. v. St. Paul, 30 Minn. 359; Little Miami & C. & X. R. Cos. v. Dayton, 23 Ohio St. 510; Hickok v. Hine, 23 Ohio St. 523, 18 Am. Rep. 255; Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Watertown, 4 S. D. 323; Mills, Em. Dom. chap. 5, §§ 45, 46; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 240; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 167.

Statutes conferring the right of eminent domain must receive a strict construction.

Field v. Des Moines, 39 Iowa, 575, 28 Am. Rep. 46; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 254; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 388.

Messrs. Boles & Roth, for appellees:

While the construction of a street or other public highway across a railroad track is generally attended with some inconvenience to the company, yet it is not ordinarily inconsistent with the use of the railroad for the purposes for which it was constructed.

Sharon R. Co.'s Appeal, 122 Pa. 533; Fort Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 132 Ind. 558, 18 L. R. A. 367.

Every railroad corporation takes its right of way subject to the right of the public to have other roads, both common highways and railways, constructed across its tracks whenever the public exigency demands it; and it has been held that it is not necessary that any express power be given.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 537.

Though, as regards its rights of eminent domain, a railroad company is to be considered a quasi public corporation, yet in all its other powers, functions, and capacities it is essentially a private corporation not distinguishable from any other of that name or character.

Whiting v. Sheboygan & F. du L. R. Co. 25 Wis. 167, 3 Am. Rep. 30; Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Anne Arundel County Comrs. 103 U. S. 1, 26 L. ed. 359; Sloan v. Pacific Railroad, 61 Mo. 24, 21 Am. Rep. 397; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Sreutt v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co. 3 Cliff. 339.

Robinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff owns and operates a railway which extends from the city of Milwaukee, in the state of Wisconsin, westward, through Iowa to Chamberlain, in South Dakota. The incorporated town of Boyden is on that line, in Sioux county; and the defendants are the mayor, trustees, and street commissioner of that town. The railway extends from east to west through the town, and separates that part which contains most of the inhabitants, which is north of the depot grounds, the part which is south of it. Main R. A.

street extends from north to south on each side of the depot grounds, but prior to September, 1892, was not opened through them. In that month the council passed an ordinance which, in terms, extended the street through the grounds; appropriating for that purpose a strip of land 80 feet wide, which connected the two parts of the street, and, when opened, will make it continuous. Proceedings were then had, under section 1244 of the Code, for the assessment of the damages to the plaintiff which the opening of the street would cause. They were assessed at $50. That sum was paid to the sheriff for the use of the plaintiff, and in December, 1892, a resolution was adopted by the council opening the street. In November, 1893, the plaintiff filed its petition in this case; alleging that the proceedings which had then been taken were illegal and void, for several reasons, and asking that they be annulled. A writ of certiorari was issued. A return thereto was made, and amendments to the petition, and an answer, were filed. A demurrer to the answer was overruled, and a trial was had, with the result already stated.

1. The plaintiff discusses the right of the defendant in a proceeding by certiorari to set out in an answer matters which do not relate to the jurisdiction to take the action of which complaint is made in the petition. We do not find it necessary to determine the question thus presented, for the reason that nothing material was set out in the answer in this case, of the character suggested, which could have prejudiced the plaintiff. We therefore express no opinion in regard to issues which may be presented by answer in certiorari proceedings. The important questions involved in this case were presented by the petition, the return, and the evidence.

2. It is claimed by the appellant that depot grounds are essentially public property; that they may be acquired by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, when they cannot be otherwise obtained; and that for these reasons they cannot be taken by means of that right. It is undoubtedly true that the railway and station grounds are operated and used in part for public purposes. The right of eminent domain rests upon the theory that property taken by virtue of it is to be used for the benefit of the public, and it cannot be exercised for any other than a public object. Stewart v. Polk County Supers. 30 Iowa, 19; 1 Redf. Railways, 228; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 515. But it is not true that property devoted to one public use cannot be subjected to any other. It is within the power of the general assembly to make the same property subservient to different public uses, or even to take it from one public use and devote it to another. Thus, the streets of a town or city may be used for the purposes to which streets are ordinarily devoted, and also for railway purposes. Milburn v. Cedar Rapids, 12 Iowa, 256; Cook v. Burlington, 30 Iowa, 105, 6 Am. Rep. 649. It was said in Evergreen Cemetery Assn. v. New Haven, 43 Conn. 284, 21 Am. Rep. 643, to be unquestionable "that the legislature has the power to authorize the taking of land already applied to one public use, and devote it to another." That doctrine is sustained by numerous authorities, among which are the following: Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 36 Conn. 255, 4 Am. Rep. 63; Springfield v. Connecticut River R. Co. 4 Cush. 71; Boston Water Power Co. v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 360; Re Buffalo, 68 N. Y. 170; Re Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 576; Hickok v. Hine, 23 Ohio St. 523, 13 Am. Rep. 255; Chicago W. D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan W. S. Elev. R. Co. 152 Ill. 519; St. Louis, H. & K. C. R. Co. v. Hannibal Union Depot Co. 125 Mo. 82; Re New York, 185 N. Y. 253; Old Colony R. Co. v. Framingham Water Co. 153 Mass. 561, 18 L. R. A. 332; Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Belle Centre, 48 Ohio St. 273; Seymour v. Jeffersonville. M. & I. R. Co. 126 Ind. 466; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 533; Fort Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 132 Ind. 565, 18 L. R. A. 367.

The doctrine is subject to the modification, however, that the power to take the property for the second public use, when such an appropriation would supersede or defeat the first one, must be given expressly or by necessary implication; and stress is placed on that modification by most of the authorities to which we have referred. The use of the strip of ground in question for railway-depot purposes is in part for the public benefit, and therefore public. The use for which the town of Boyden appropriated it is also public; but the plaintiff has occupied and used it for railway purposes for many years, and its rights are prior, in point of time, to any which the town has acquired. It is true, the grounds were not obtained for the plaintiff through the exercise of the right of eminent domain, but by a conveyance from its owner; but it may be conceded, for the purposes of this case, that the method by which title was acquired is immaterial, so long as the use made of the land is a public one. The question remains to be determined whether, under the statutes of this state, the town was authorized to extend its street in the manner attempted, against the will of the plaintiff. It is said in Sutherland on Statutory Construction, § 888, that "there is a broad distinction between acts which subvert or essentially impair a prior franchise or appropriation to a public use and acts which permit a taking for a new public use, not involving an entire deprivation or diversion from the first use, but a joint use, so that after the second taking the same property serves still the original purpose as well as the new,—and the two uses are consistent. Under a general power to lay out and establish a railroad or highway, other railroads or highways may be crossed." Cities and incorporated towns of this state "have power to lay off, open, widen, . . . extend, establish, and light streets, . . . and to provide for the condemnation of such real estate as may be necessary for such purposes." Code, § 464. They also have power to "purchase or condemn, and pay for out of the general fund, and enter upon and take any lands within or without the territorial limits of such city or town for the use of public squares, streets," and certain other purposes. Code, § 470. Section 1244 of the 31 L. R. A.

Code provides a method by which railroad corporations may take and hold real estate necessary for their use; and section 1270 permits cities and incorporated towns to proceed in the same manner to take "private property for streets, alleys, and market-house sites." The town of Boyden proceeded, under the two sections last cited, to appropriate the land in question; but it is said that no rights were acquired by so doing, for the reason that section 1270 permits the taking of "private" property for the purposes stated, and it is insisted the property in question is not private, but public. This is not correct. It is true that the railway property is held for the public use, and, for many purposes, is subjected to legislative control; but the title thereto is vested in a private corporation, for the benefit of its stockholders and other private persons. To that extent the property is private (Whiting v. Sheboygan & F. du L. R. Co. 25 Wis. 167, 3 Am. Rep. 30; Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Anne Arundel County Comrs. 103 U. S. 4, 26 L. ed. 360), and its use for the benefit of the public will not be materially affected by the taking in question. The extension of the street as proposed will cause some inconvenience to the plaintiff, in the operation of its trains, and will interfere with a platform of cinders which was constructed across the strip of land in question after the ordinance appropriating it was passed. But the inconvenience thus caused will be inconsiderable, as compared with the benefit to the public which will result from the opening of the street. The depot grounds are 1,400 feet in length by 300 feet in width. They are traversed by the main railway track and two side tracks of the plaintiff. The depot is near the middle of the grounds, measuring from east to west, and the proposed street will cross the grounds near the west end of the depot. No established street now crosses the right of way and the track of the plaintiff within the territorial limits of the town, although a crossing at the point in controversy was maintained and used for several years before the action in question was taken, and there is no ground for holding that the action of the council in deciding that the public interest requires the opening of the street is not conclusive. (Cherokee v. Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot & L. Co. 52 Iowa, 280. We are of the opinion that the statutes of this state to which we have referred authorized the opening of the street as proposed. They do not in terms provide for the taking of property already devoted to public uses, but the taking sought by the defendants would not exclude the plaintiff from its property, nor interfere materially with its use, the operation of its trains, and the transaction of its business. The exclusive right to use the railway as such will remain in the plaintiff, and the public will have the right to cross it at proper times, and by suitable means.

Our conclusion has support in the authorities. In St. Paul Union Depot Co. v. St. Paul, 30 Minn. 359, it was held that the city could not take for a street real estate which the depot company had acquired for its use, where that use was necessarily exclusive, and it would be practically subverted by the proposed taking and use for the street. But it was said that "the power to extend streets and highways across railway tracks at suitable and convenient places is necessarily implied in the general authority conferred on cities and towns for such purposes, without express provisions on the subject. In like manner, railroads necessarily cross streets and highways on their routes. An adjustment of the two public uses is thus demanded by public convenience and necessity, wherever practicable, and may well be presumed to be contemplated in the legislation authorizing such improvements, and by corporations in accepting or acting under such legislation." See also Little Miami & C. & X. R. Cos. v. Dayton, 23 Ohio St. 510; Morris & E. R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 31 N. J. L. 213; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 112 Ill. 589; Bradley v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 21 Conn. 294.

The views we have expressed dispose of the controlling questions in the case. There does not appear to be any substantial ground for disturbing the judgment of the district court, and it is affirmed.

STATE of Iowa, ex rel. A. G. WEST, Appt.,
v.

City of DES MOINES.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. Leave to a taxpayer to prosecute an action of quo warranto to contest annexation to a city, given under Code, § 3348, is conclusive against an attack made in the quo warranto proceedings on the ground that his interest was trivial.
2. A statute for the annexation of territory to all cities having more than a specified population is within a constitutional provision against local legislation when there can be but one city in the state to which it can apply.
3. An act providing for annexation to a city is one for the incorporation of a city within the meaning of a constitutional provision against local or special laws for this purpose.
4. The equitable claim of a city to jurisdiction over territory which a void statute has declared to be annexed to it will not be disturbed at the instance of the state without any suggestion of anticipated benefits by so doing, where for more than four years the city has exercised authority over such territory of prior incorporations which the void statute purported to abolish.

(January 21, 1896.)

A PPEAL by relator from a judgment of the District Court for Polk County in favor of defendant in a quo warranto proceeding to test defendant's right to exercise corporate authority over certain territory. Affirmed.

NOTE.—For legislative power to annex territory to cities, see note to State, Richards, v. Cincinnati (Ohio) 27 L. R. A. 737; also Kuhn v. Port Townsend (Wash.) 29 L. R. A. 445.

31 L. R. A.

Statement by Granger, J. :

Quo warranto to test the right of the defendant city to exercise corporate authority over certain territory added to said city by legislative enactment. Prior to 1890 the corporate limits of the city of Des Moines embraced 8 square miles. By an act of the 23d general assembly approved March 3, 1890, it is provided "that the boundaries of all cities in this state, which had by the state census of 1885 a population of 30,000 or more, are hereby extended 2½ miles in each direction from the present boundaries of said cities,—such extension being so made as to leave the boundaries hereby created in a perfect rectangle; that all territory embraced within said extended boundaries, whether the same is contained in cities, incorporated towns, or otherwise, shall be and become a part of the city and subject to its jurisdiction and authority; and the corporate character of any annexed territory within the extended boundaries herein specified shall cease and determine." Other sections of the act provide for the payment of the indebtedness of the cities so enlarged, and of the indebtedness of the cities within the annexed territory; for the exemption from taxation of lands used in good faith for agricultural or horticultural purposes; for the reorganization of the wards of said cities, and for elections therein. By the census of 1885, only the city of Des Moines was affected by the act, and, with the territory thus annexed, it embraces 54 square miles. In the added territory were only one city and seven incorporated towns. These eight corporations embraced, including 1½ square miles of platted land not incorporated, 13 square miles, which, with 33 square miles of unplatted and unincorporated land, make the added territory to the city 46 square miles. The provisions of the act by which the municipal governments other than that of the city of Des Moines were to become extinct, and the entire territory become one corporation or municipality, were observed, so that in April, 1890, the change was complete, since which time the city of Des Moines has been thus constituted, and has exercised throughout said territory the rights and functions of a city government, including the levy and collection of taxes; establishing, opening, vacating, changing, and improving streets; the making of contracts; and the creating and payment of debts. In March, 1894, the state of Iowa, on the relation of A. G. West, filed in the district court of Polk county its information, in the nature of a quo warranto, reciting the provisions of the act of the 23d general assembly; that it has application alone to the city of Des Moines; that the act is unconstitutional and void, as being repugnant to the Constitution of the state, in that it is a local or special law amending the charter of the city of Des Moines; that it, in effect, creates a corporation by the enactment of special laws; and that, if it is to be deemed a general law, it has not had, and cannot have, uniform operation. It is alleged in the information that, because of the invalidity of the act by which the city limits were enlarged, the acts of the city, as to the added territory, are without authority of law; and it is asked that they be so adjudged, and that the city be ousted from the exercise of such authority. To the information there was a demurrer, and the parties stipulated the facts; and the case, in that condition, was submitted to the court, which sustained the demurrer as to some parts, and overruled it as to others. By the ruling, the facts as stated in the information, together with those stipulated, were held insufficient to justify a decree for plaintiff, and from a judgment dismissing the petition the plaintiff appealed.

Messrs. Gatch, Connor, & Weaver, for appellant:

If the statute is unconstitutional, it is void, and no valid act can be based thereon.

Fleming v. Hull, 73 Iowa, 598; Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. ed. 178; Kraft v. Keokuk, 14 Iowa, 86.

Acquiescence for no length of time can legalize a clear usurpation of power, where the people have plainly expressed their will in the Constitution, and appointed judicial tribunals to enforce it.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 8d ed. p. 70.

Treating this as an action brought in the interest as well as in the name of the state, the statute of limitations would not bar the action at all.

Des Moines County v. Harker, 34 Iowa, 84; United States v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 118 U. S. 120, 30 L. ed. 81.

Such an action is not barred by lapse of time unless the statute so expressly provides.

State v. Pwotuzet Turnp. Co. 8 R. I. 521, 94 Am. Dec. 123; Catlett v. People, 151 Ill. 16 (1894).

As this is an action at law, if the statute of limitations applies at all, the state has the full five years within which to bring its action, and no laches or estoppel will be imputed to it or its officers within that period.

2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1520; Bispham, Eq. p. 347, § 280; People, Atty. Gen., v. Stanford, 77 Cal. 360, 2 L. R. A. 92.

Laches, acquiescence, and estoppel are not grounds for upholding an unconstitutional statute.

United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 338, 32 L. ed. 121; United States v. Inoley, 130 U. S. 263, 32 L. ed. 968; State, Morris, v. Wrightson, 56 N. J. L. 126, 22 L. R. A. 548; Giddings v. Blacker, 93 Mich. 1, 16 L. R. A. 402; Parker v. State, Powell, 133 Ind. 178, 18 L. R. A. 567; State, Richards, v. Hammer, 42 N. J. L. 435; Mathews v. State, 82 Tex. 577; Oakley v. Aspinwall, 3 N. Y. 547; People v. Allen, 42 N. Y. 378.

Mere lapse of time alone, and acquiescence by the people in their enforcement, have not been deemed a reason why laws should not be declared unconstitutional when they clearly contravert the terms of the fundamental law.

Hoicard v. Bugbee, 65 U. S. 24 How. 461, 16 L. ed. 753; Horn v. Lockhart, 34 U. S. 17 Wall. 570, 21 L. ed. 657; McGehee v. Mathis, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 143, 18 L. ed. 314; Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162; Webster v. Reid, 52 U. S. 11 How. 437, 13 L. ed. 761; Green v. Biddle, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 1, 5 L. ed. 547; Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. S. 110, 27 L. ed. 354; Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens' 31 L. R. A.

Gaslight Co. 115 U. S. 683, 29 L. ed. 510; McMillan v. McNeill, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 209, 4 L. ed. 552; Southern S. S. Co. v. New Orleans Port Wardens, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 31, 18 L. ed. 749; Cannon v. New Orleans, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 577, 22 L. ed. 417; Norris v. Boston, 48 U. S. 7 How. 283, 12 L. ed. 702; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691; Craig v. Missouri, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 410, 7 L. ed. 908; Bagnell v. Broderick, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 436, 10 L. ed. 235; Cole v. LaGrange, 118 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. ed. 606; Chenango Bridge Co. v. Binghamton Bridge Co. ("The Binghamton Bridge"), 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 51, 18 L. ed. 137; Henderson v. Wickham, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543; Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566, 24 L. ed. 1015; Peris v. Higley, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 875, 22 L. ed. 383; Society for Prop. of Gospel v. New Haven, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 464, 5 L. ed. 662; Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 27 L. ed. 238.

If the officers of the city of Des Moines had violated the Constitution by issuing bonds in excess of the constitutional limit, with the approbation or the unanimous vote of every elector in the city, and had used every dollar realized for some proper city purpose, the lawyer who would claim, in favor of an innocent purchaser of such bonds, that the city and its taxpayers were estopped to deny the validity of such bonds, would be deemed too ignorant to be listened to.

Doon Dist. Twp. v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 366, 35 L. ed. 1044; Mosher v. Independent School Dist. 44 Iowa, 132.

This court has never refused to enforce the Constitution, as against a statute which violated its provisions.

Kochler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 548; State v. Carman, 63 Iowa, 130, 50 Am. Rep. 741.

Subsequent legislative recognition of the city as extended and reorganized by the annexation act was of no effect.

The legislature could not do indirectly what it did not have the power to do directly.

Mosher v. Independent School Dist. supra; Independent School Dist. v. Burlington, 60 Iowa, 500; Strange v. Dubuque, 62 Iowa, 303.

The annexation of new territory was in law an amendment of the charter of the city.

Morford v. Unger, 8 Iowa, 82; People, Adams, v. Oakland, 92 Cal. 611; State, Atty. Gen., v. Cincinnati, 20 Ohio St. 18; Westport v. Kansas City, 103 Mo. 141 (1891); Gray v. Crockett, 30 Kan. 138; Ford v. North Des Moines, 80 Iowa, 626; Ex parte Pritz, 9 Iowa, 30; McGregor v. Baylies, 19 Iowa, 43; Alexander v. Duluth, 57 Minn. 47 (1894); Denver v. Spokane Falls, 7 Wash. 226; Fleming v. Hull, 73 Iowa, 598; Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. ed. 178.

The annexation act is in effect a local or special law for the incorporation of a particular city.

Morford v. Unger, People, Adams, v. Oakland, State, Atty. Gen., v. Cincinnati, and Westport v. Kansas City, supra; Wyandotte v. Wood, 5 Kan. 603; Ex parte Pritz, supra; Davis v. Woolnough, 9 Iowa, 104; McGregor v. Baylies, 19 Iowa, 43 (1865).

The act is local and special in respect of classification by population.

Kenton v. State, Kelly, 52 Ohio St. 59; State Atty. Gen., v. Anderson, 44 Ohio St. 247; Devine v. Cook County Comrs. 84 Ill. 590; Topeka v. Gillett (Kan.) 4 Pac. 800; Ayars's Appeal, 122 Pa. 266, 2 L. R. A. 577; State Board of Managers v. Jackson County Ct. 89 Mo. 237; Owen v. Sioux City, 91 Iowa, 180; Independent School Dist. v. Burlington, 60 Iowa, 500.

Messrs. J. K. Macomber, A. P. Chamberlain, and Hugh Brennan, for appellee:

The relator has not sufficient interest in the question presented to authorize him to prosecute this action.

A taxpayer has no power to maintain this action.

State v. Lyons, 31 Iowa, 432; State v. Independent School Dist. 44 Iowa, 227; Smith v. Saginaw, 81 Mich. 123; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 900; Com. v. Jones, 12 Pa. 365; People v. Waite, 70 Ill. 25; State, Mitchell, v. Tolan, 93 N. J. L. 195.

West, as a private relator, has so trivial an interest that he ought not to be permitted to proceed.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 676; Com., Ilite, v. Seank, 79 Pa. 154; Yonkey v. State, Cornelison, 27 Ind. 236; People, Crane, v. Ryder, 12 N. Y. 438.

When rights are purely public a private relator cannot proceed when the matters do not specially concern him.

Com., McLaughlin, v. Cluley, 56 Pa. 270.

The state, and not a private relator, is the proper moving party.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 677; Com. v. Allegheny Bridge Co. 20 Pa. 185; Murphy v. Farmers' Bank, 20 Pa. 415; Com., Banning, v. Philadelphia, G. & N. R. Co. 20 Pa. 518; State v. Patterson & H. Turnp. Co. 21 N. J. L. 9; People v. North Chicago R. Co. 88 Ill. 537; Atty. Gen. v. Consumers' Gas Co. 142 Mass. 417; Rice v. National Bank of the Commonwealth, 126 Mass. 300.

The act in question applies to "all cities in this state which had by the state census of 1885 a population of 30,000 or more," and is uniform in its application to all cities which come within this class, be they few or many, although the city of Des Moines in its practical application is the only city affected.

Iowa Railroad Land Co. v. Soper, 89 Iowa, 112; Haskel v. Burlington, 30 Iowa, 232; State v. King, 87 Iowa, 402; Richman v. Muscatine County Supers. 77 Iowa, 513, 4 L. R. A. 445; United States Exp. Co. v. Ellyson, 28 Iowa, 370; Von Phil v. Hammer, 29 Iowa, 222; Re Pittsburgh, 138 Pa. 401; State, Atty. Gen., v. Miller, 100 Mo. 439; Re Ruan Street, 132 Pa. 257; Land, Log & L. Co. v. Brown, 73 Wis. 294, 3 L. R. A. 472; People, Grinnell, v. Hoffmann, 116 Ill. 587, 56 Am. Rep. 793; State, Baltzell, v. Stewart, 74 Wis. 620, 6 L. R. A. 394; State v. Clayton, 53 N. J. L. 277; Lafayette v. Jenners, 10 Ind. 70; Wyandotte v. Wood, 5 Kan. 603; Atchison v. Bartholow, 4 Kan. 124; Thomas v. Ashland, 12 Ohio St. 124; Atkinson v. Marietta & C. R. Co. 15 Ohio St. 21; Clegg v. School Dist. No. 56, 8 Neb. 178; Corington v. East St. Louis, 78 Ill. 548; Welker v. Potter, 18 Ohio St. 83; McCormick v. West Duluth, 47 Minn. 272; Hunzinger v. State, 39 Neb. 653;

1 L. R. A.;

State, Jones, v. Graham, 16 Neb. 74; State, Board of Comrs. v. Cooley, 56 Minn. 540.

It is a question for the legislature to decide whether or not the particular case at bar was such a one as might be made to come under a general law.

State v. Hitchcock, 1 Kan. 178, 81 Am. Dec. 503; Darling v. Rodgers, 7 Kan. 594; Marks v. Purdue University, 37 Ind. 163; Welker v. Potter, supra; Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 866; Gentile v. State, 29 Ind. 409; McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338; Thomas v. Clay County Comrs. 5 Ind. 4; Ilall v. Bray, 51 Mo. 288; St. Louis Comrs. v. Shields, 62 Mo. 247.

Municipal corporations are within the absolute control of the legislature and may be modified at any time.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 80, 37, 398; People v. Morris, 13 Wend. 331; Memphis v. Memphis Water Co. 5 Helsk. 495; The Governor v. McEwen, 5 Humph. 241; McCallie v. Chattanooga, 3 Head, 317; Lynch v. Lafland, 4 Coldw. 96; Luehrman v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 2 Lea, 425; Merchants' Union Barb Wire Co. v. Brown, 64 Iowa, 275; Gloan v. State, 8 Blackf. 361; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. ed. 197; Coffin v. State, Norton, 7 Ind. 157.

In the construction of statutes of doubtful meaning the courts should have due regard to the construction given in long and settled practice.

Earl Buckinghamshire v. Drury, 2 Eden, 60, 74; Rogers v. Goodwin, 2 Mass. 477; Puckard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122, 9 Am. Dec. 123; Bank of United States v. Halstead, 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 51, 6 L. ed. 264; Bank of Union v. Mercereau, 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189; Troup v. Haight, Hopk. Ch. 239; McFerran v. Powers, 1 Serg. & R. 106; Co. Litt. 186a; United States v. Richardson, 28 Fed. Rep. 61; Harriman v. State, 2 G. Greene, 270.

The statute of limitations has no application to an action of this kind.

It would be wrong in principle to permit the relator, after having voluntarily paid taxes on his property annexed during the years since the annexation took effect, to now set aside an act which he has submitted to in the manner indicated; and especially is this true when is considered the slight interest the relator has in this matter compared with the vast interest to all the people of the city.

Rumsey v. People, 19 N. Y. 41; People, Atty. Gen., v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 463; Lanning v. Carpenter, 20 N. Y. 447; Jameson v. People, 16 Ill. 257, 63 Am. Dec. 304; Bank of United States v. Dandridge, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 64, 6 L. ed. 552; Dunning v. New Albany & S. R. Co. 2 Ind. 437; Middlesex Husbandmen & Mfrs. Soc. v. Davis, 3 Met. 133; House v. House, 5 Harr. & J. 125; State, Henderson, v. Boone County Ct. 50 Mo. 317; State v. Leatherman, 38 Ark. 81; Hamilton v. Carthage, 24 Ill. 22; Bird v. Perkins, 33 Mich. 28; People v. Riverside (Cal.) 9 Pac. 662; People, Kingland, v. Clark, 70 N. Y. 518; State, Atty. Gen., v. Cincinnati, 20 Ohio St. 18; State, County Attorney, v. Topeka (Kan.) 3 Pac. 587; State, Brown, v. Westport, 116 Mo. 582; Westport v. Kansas City, 103 Mo. 141; State, Sleeth, v. Gordon, 87 Ind. 171; People, Gridley, v. Farnham, 35 Ill. 562; Atty. Gen. v. Page, 38 Mich. 286; Atty.

Gen. v. Hanchett, 42 Mich. 436; Atty. Gen. v. Detroit, 55 Mich. 181; Atty. Gen. v. Detroit, 26 Mich. 263; State v. Batley, 19 Ind. 454.

The doctrine of estoppel is applicable to cases where particular individuals only are interested; it certainly would be singular to refuse to allow the doctrine to be recognized in cases where entire communities have the greatest interest in the world in having the same doctrine recognized.

The principle of acquiescence or estoppel has been adopted as a part of our common law.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed. 312; People, Atty. Gen., v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 470; Rumsey v. People, 19 N. Y. 41; Lanning v. Carpenter, 20 N. Y. 447.

The property owner who has stood by and without objection observed the outlay of large sums of money for public improvement, and has acquiesced in annexation proceedings in pursuance of which the money was expended, is estopped to afterwards question the legality of the proceedings.

Strosser v. Fort Wayne, 100 Ind. 443; State v. Wertzel, 62 Wis. 184; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 309, and cases cited; Re Cooper, 98 N. Y. 507; Burlington v. Gilbert, 31 Iowa, 356, 7 Am. Rep. 143; Steckert v. East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104; Tone v. Columbus, 39 Ohio St. 281; Patterson v. Baumer, 43 Iowa, 477; Motz v. Detroit, 18 Mich. 495; Kellogg v. Ely, 15 Ohio St. 64.

Granger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. It is first said that the relator, A. G. West, has not sufficient interest to authorize him to invoke the action of the court in behalf of the state. Mr. West is not a citizen of Des Moines as enlarged; but he is the owner of land within the added territory, but not in any of the corporations as they were before the annexation. The assessed valuation of his land is $80, and it is estimated that he pays city taxes thereon to the amount of $1.31. This is thought to be too trifling an interest to permit him to institute the action. The law provides that when the county attorney, on demand, refuses or neglects to commence such an action, any citizen of the state having an interest in the question may apply to the court in which the action is commenced, or to the judge thereof, for leave to do so, and upon obtaining such leave he may prosecute the action to final judgment. Code, § 3348. This provision of the law was complied with, and leave granted by the district court. This action is conclusive upon us. The law does not define what the interest shall be, and, conceding that it must be a substantial one, it was a question for the district court. It was a question to be settled before the suit was commenced. The language of the law is that "upon obtaining such leave he may prosecute the action to final judgment." Certainly the question of fact, as to the extent of the interest, is one confided to the court to which application is made.

2. The constitutional questions as to the validity of the law making the annexation are important. The parties, in argument, concede that the learned judge who tried the case below held the law to be unconstitutional, but denied the relief asked on the ground of laches or estoppel. Appellee, however, in this court, insists that such a holding was erroneous, and the questions are for consideration. Logically, the first question is whether or not the act is general, or local and special, in its application. It will be seen that the act, in terms, is made to apply to all cities which had, by the state census of 1885, a population of 30,000. If the act had specified the city of Des Moines as the one whose boundaries were to be extended, there would be no question that the law is local in its application. The law, as enacted, just as explicitly confines its application to the city of Des Moines as if the city had, in words, been named, for it was the only city in the state having the requisite population. Appellee contends that because of the language of the act, by which it is to apply to "all cities in this state, which had, by the state census of 1885, a population of 30,000 or more," it is a law of general application. The constitutional language is, after stating certain exceptions, "All laws shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state." It is not necessary to an observance of this provision that the law should operate uniformly on all the people of the state, nor, when the legislation pertains to cities, is it important that it should operate uniformly on all cities throughout the state. But if the law is made to operate upon a particular condition as to persons or property, and is operative whenever and wherever the same conditions exist, affixing the same consequences, then it is a general law in its operation, even though it only operates on one of the conditions or classes specified. To illustrate we may instance the laws regulating banking, insurance, agricultural societies, and the like. If the law is so framed that it does and can apply to but one bank, company, or society, in its operation, it is special legislation. General legislation looks not alone to the present, but to the future; and a law which at a given time operates as to only one bank, company, or society, because there is but one such, but is so framed as to operate on the same conditions, when and where they arise in the state, is a general law and of uniform operation. See McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. R. Co., 20 Iowa, 338; United States Exp. Co. v. Ellyson, 28 Iowa, 370; Von Phul v. Hammer, 29 Iowa, 222; Haskel v. Burlington, 30 Iowa, 232. This rule is one of general recognition. As applied to cities, if the act is such that it is operative, because of its terms, to but a single city, it is local legislation. McGregor v. Baylies, 19 Iowa, 43; Owen v. Sioux City, 91 Iowa, 190. Counsel for the defendant city cite the above cases, with many others announcing the same rule, and on them base the claim that the act under consideration is of general application, even though there is but one city to which it can apply. It is true that in many of the cases cited, where the law has been held of general application, there was but one city of the class intended to come within the rule of the legislative act; but it is not true that in any of the cases a law, though general in terms, where it could in tional, but denied the relief asked on the ground of laches or estoppel. Appellee, however, in this court, insists that such a holding was erroneous, and the questions are for consideration. Logically, the first question is whether or not the act is general, or local and special, in its application. It will be seen that the act, in terms, is made to apply to all cities which had, by the state census of 1885, a population of 30,000. If the act had specified the city of Des Moines as the one whose boundaries were to be extended, there would be no question that the law is local in its application. The law, as enacted, just as explicitly confines its application to the city of Des Moines as if the city had, in words, been named, for it was the only city in the state having the requisite population. Appellee contends that because of the language of the act, by which it is to apply to "all cities in this state, which had, by the state census of 1885, a population of 30,000 or more," it is a law of general application. The constitutional language is, after stating certain exceptions, "All laws shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state." It is not necessary to an observance of this provision that the law should operate uniformly on all the people of the state, nor, when the legislation pertains to cities, is it important that it should operate uniformly on all cities throughout the state. But if the law is made to operate upon a particular condition as to persons or property, and is operative whenever and wherever the same conditions exist, affixing the same consequences, then it is a general law in its operation, even though it only operates on one of the conditions or classes specified. To illustrate we may instance the laws regulating banking, insurance, agricultural societies, and the like. If the law is so framed that it does and can apply to but one bank, company, or society, in its operation, it is special legislation. General legislation looks not alone to the present, but to the future; and a law which at a given time operates as to only one bank, company, or society, because there is but one such, but is so framed as to operate on the same conditions, when and where they arise in the state, is a general law and of uniform operation. See McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. R. Co., 20 Iowa, 338; United States Exp. Co. v. Ellyson, 28 Iowa, 370; Von Phul v. Hammer, 29 Iowa, 222; Haskel v. Burlington, 30 Iowa, 232. This rule is one of general recognition. As applied to cities, if the act is such that it is operative, because of its terms, to but a single city, it is local legislation. McGregor v. Baylies, 19 Iowa, 43; Owen v. Sioux City, 91 Iowa, 190. Counsel for the defendant city cite the above cases, with many others announcing the same rule, and on them base the claim that the act under consideration is of general application, even though there is but one city to which it can apply. It is true that in many of the cases cited, where the law has been held of general application, there was but one city of the class intended to come within the rule of the legislative act; but it is not true that in any of the cases a law, though general in terms, where it could in no event become operative on but a single city, has been held to be a general law. Had the act in question been made applicable to all cities of over 30,000 inhabitants, without a qualification that, under known facts, would exclude its operation as to any other such city, the case would be different. But because a law thus arbitrarily extending city limits could not be made of general application, because of the absence of conditions to justify it, it was made to apply only to cities of that number of inhabitants at a particular date in the past, when there was but one such city to which it could apply, so as to avoid the possibility, even, of any other city coming within its provisions. The act is singularly specific in this respect, not even permitting any chances as to what might be the actual population of other cities but making it dependent on the census return of 1885, known at the time the act was passed, which clearly proves that only the city of Des Moines was intended as the subject of such legislation. In such a case, even though the language of the act is general, it is special legislation. In State, Richards v. Hammer, 42 N. J. L. 435, the court, in treating this subject from a constitutional standpoint, said, as to the effect of such general language, where but two cities of the state could be affected by the law: "The result therefore is that the act was intended to apply, and that it does and must ever apply, to these two cities alone, and that the legal effect of this law, as now constituted, is the same as though it had, in express terms, declared that it was not to be operative through the state at large, but in the cities of Elizabeth and Newark only." The law was held to be local in its application, and unconstitutional. The conclusion is, unmistakably, that the act in question is local legislation.

3. With the question settled that the act is local legislation, we are next to determine whether or not it is of the class of legislation prohibited by the Constitution. The question has received extensive consideration in argument by counsel on both sides. The Constitution does not in all cases prohibit special or local legislation. It permits it in some cases. Section 30 of article 3 of the Constitution reads as follows: "The general assembly shall not pass local or special laws in the following cases: . . . For the incorporation of cities and towns: . . . In all cases above enumerated, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general, and of uniform operation throughout the state." There are six of the enumerated cases. It has been thought, and it is appellant's contention here, that the prohibition of the section as to local or special legislation is absolute as to the "cases above enumerated," and as to other cases the prohibition is conditional, depending upon whether or not general laws can be made applicable. It is now urged for the first time, so far as we know, that there is no positive prohibition, but that, as to both cases or classes of laws, as designated in the section, the prohibition is conditional. Appellee, by a transposition of the last sentence, and a grammatical application of the rules of language to it, gives the following as expressive of its meaning: "In all the cases above enumerated where a general law can be made applicable, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general and of a uniform operation throughout the state." This means, stripped of its verbiage, that all laws shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state, where such a law can be made applicable. This renders meaningless more than half the words employed in the section, and nearly half of those in the sentence we are construing. If the sentence could be made clearer by a transposition, ours would be this: "In all the cases above enumerated, all laws shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." By this we preserve and give a meaning to all the language employed, and observe the legal requirements as to construction. The other is a manifest disregard of the rule. To us the section is not open to serious question in the respect suggested. The prohibition as to local and special legislation is absolute, as to the enumerated cases. While this precise question has not been considered, this section has been so applied in a number of cases. Ex parte Pritz, 9 Iowa, 30; Von Phul v. Hammer, McGregor v. Baylies, and Haskel v. Burlington, supra; State v. King, 37 Iowa, 462; Richman v. Muscatine County Supers. 77 Iowa, 513. If the act in question is local or special legislation, and is prohibited by the section of the Constitution considered, it is not contended that the fact that it is an act merely extending the boundaries of the city will give it validity. That the constitutional prohibition extends to acts amending charters and acts creating such corporations, see Ex parte Pritz, McGregor v. Baylies, and Von Phul v. Hammer, supra. Our conclusion is that the act providing for the annexation is against the express provisions of the Constitution prohibiting the passing of local or special laws for the incorporation of cities, and is therefore void.

4. It is next to be determined whether or not, with the law giving rise to the annexation absolutely void, the legality of the present city organization can be sustained under the rule of estoppel or laches. On this branch of the case a large number of authorities have been cited, and the newness of the question, as well as the great interests involved, makes it one of great importance. The foundation for the application of the doctrine of estoppel is the consequence to result from a judgment denying to the city of Des Moines municipal authority over the territory annexed, after the lapse of four years, during which time such authority has been exercised, and the changed conditions involving extensive public and private interests. It will be remembered that the act of annexation resulted in the abandonment of eight municipal governments, which before the annexation were independent, and bringing them under the single government of the city of Des Moines. This involved a vacation of all offices in the city and towns annexed, and the delivery of all public records and property to the officers chosen for the city so enlarged. For four years taxes have been levied, collected, and expended under the new conditions; public improvements have been made, including some miles of street curbing, paving, and sewerage, for which certificates and warrants have been issued, and contracts are now outstanding for such improvements. In brief, with the statement that for the four years the entire machinery of city government has been in operation, the situation may be better imagined than expressed. It is hardly possible to contemplate the situation to result from a judgment dissolving the present city organization, and leaving the territory formerly embraced within corporate lines as it would be left. Of all the cases to which we are cited, involving the validity of municipal organizations, where the consequences to result from a judgment of avoidance are considered, not one presents a case of such uncertainty, nor where there are the same grounds for serious apprehension, because of difficulties in adjusting rights in this case.

There are many cases where the doctrine of laches has been applied to sustain a municipal government where the organization, as attempted, was illegal. Much importance is attached by appellant to the fact that in this case the act serving as a basis for the annexation is absolutely void, and a distinction is drawn between proceedings where they are irregular, merely, and where they are void. The case of State v. Leatherman, 38 Ark. 81, is perhaps as directly in point on the particular question as any we have noticed. It involved a consideration of the legality of the establishment of Arkansas City, in that state. In Arkansas such corporations are established on the order of court, and it was found that the court making the order had no jurisdiction to make it, and as to that branch of the case the court said, "there was no jurisdiction, and the order was void." The court then proceeded to the consideration of the question we are now considering, and, after detailing some of the consequences to result from a judgment avoiding the corporation, it is said in the opinion, speaking of that city, with others, probably organized under similar orders: "To declare them all null, after long acquiescence on the part of the state would open a very Pandora's box of litigation, and produce incalculable hardship and confusion." In the same connection the court further said: "This impels us to the broader fields of inquiry, whether this court, in view of justice, equity, and the security of titles, can find, in recognized principles of law, sufficient warrant for refusing its aid in opening the flood gates of such unmitigable evil." The question was, in that case, presented on a demurrer to the answer; the action being by information in the nature of quo warranto, as in this case. It may also be said that the information was presented by the attorney general in behalf of the public, and not on the relation of a private prosecutor, as in this case. The opinion is concluded in these words: "The case made by the answer shows an acquiescence for nearly nine years, and a recognition by the governor, county court, county clerk, county collector, and the whole of a population now over 1,000. If the answer be true, the corporation of Arkansas City should not now be held null and void." Barring that of time, the same facts are true in this case; the time here being, before the commencement of the suit, a little more than four years. In connection with the thought as to delay on the part of the public, it may be well to say that our law expressly authorizes such actions to be commenced by the county attorney, in the name of the state, and makes it his duty to do so when directed by the governor, the general assembly, or a court of record. The general assembly has twice convened since the annexation, in the city affected by the act, the seat of government being within its limits; and the validity of the corporation has never been, by it, nor by any public officer, questioned. These suggestions bear on the fact of a public recognition of the present corporation. The Arkansas case cites, and we refer to, Jameson v. People, 16 Ill. 257, 63 Am. Dec. 304. That case, also, was quo warranto, in behalf of the state, to oust the officers of the town of Oquaka, because of illegality in the organization of the town. The claimed illegality was an irregularity in the manner of voting on the question of incorporating. The validity of certain bonds issued by the town depended on the existence of the corporation. The question was presented by a demurrer to defendant's pleas, corresponding to our answer, in which it was made to appear that for more than four years the corporation had been recognized by the legislature in its acts; had exercised the powers and franchises conferred on such corporations by law; had levied and collected taxes, made contracts, and incurred liabilities, and passed and enforced ordinances. The supreme court declined to consider the matter of irregularity in voting, and sustained the corporation alone on the grounds of the averments of the answer or pleas; and, while it attached much importance to the subsequent acts of the legislature in recognition of the corporation, it added, after detailing some consequences to result: "Municipal corporations are created for the public good,—are demanded by the wants of the community; and the law, after long-continued use of corporate powers, and the public acquiescence, will indulge in presumptions in favor of their legal existence. . . . It would seem incompatible with good faith, and against public policy, although irregularities may have intervened in the organization of the town, now to hold that it is not a body corporate; and we do not think the law requires us to do so." We realize the dissimilarity of the case, in some respects, from the one under consideration; but at the same time, in its reasoning and conclusion, it sustains the principle that laches may overcome legal defects in such organizations. People, Atty. Gen., v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 463, is quo warranto, and the case involved the validity of a county organization which was held void, as we understand, by a majority of the court, on constitutional grounds. The court in that case says: "Inasmuch as the arrangement there indicated had been acted upon for ten years before the recent legislation, and had been recognized as valid by all parties interested, it cannot now be disturbed. Even in private associations, the acts of parties interested may often estop them from relying on legal objections, which might have availed them if not waived. But in public affairs, where the people have organized themselves, under color of law, into the ordinary municipal bodies, and have gone on year after year raising taxes, making improvements, and exercising their usual franchises, their rights are properly regarded as depending quite as much on the acquiescence as on the regularity of their origin, and no ex post facto inquiry can be permitted to undo their corporate existence. Whatever may be the rights of individuals before such general acquiescence, the corporate standing of the community can be no longer open to question." The case cites Rumsey v. People, 19 N. Y. 41, and Lanning v. Carpenter, 20 N. Y. 447. Mr. Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations (page 312, 4th ed.), says: "In proceedings where the question whether a corporation exists or not arises collaterally, the courts will not permit its corporate character to be questioned, if it appear to be acting under color of law, and recognized by the state as such. . . . And the rule, we apprehend, would be no different if the Constitution itself prescribed the manner of incorporation. Even in such a case, proof that the corporation was acting as such, under legislative action, would be sufficient evidence of right, except as against the state, and private parties could not enter upon any question of regularity. And the state itself may justly be precluded, on principle of estoppel, from raising such objection, where there has been long acquiescence and recognition." This, it is true, is a direct proceeding by the state. And, while the language used is applied in part to collateral proceedings, it seems also to include actions by the state directly. The learned writer sustains this text by a reference to People, Atty. Gen., v. Maynard, Rumsey v. People, and Lanning v. Carpenter, supra. It will be seen that importance is given to the fact that the defective organization takes place under color of law. Nothing less can be said of the annexation in this case than that it was made under color of law. "Color of law" does not mean actual law. "Color," as a modifier, in legal parlance, means "mere semblance of legal right." Kinney, Law Dict. In some of the cases the defects as to organization have been spoken of as irregularities, because of which appellant thinks the cases not applicable, because this is a void proceeding. The term "irregularity" is oftener applied to forms or rules of procedure in practice than to a nonobservance of the law in other ways, but it has application to both. It is defined as a "violation or nonobservance of established rules and practices." The annexation in question was a legal right under the law, independent of the act held void. It was not a void thing, as if prohibited by law. The most that can be said is that the proceeding for annexation was not the one prescribed, but it was a violation or nonobservance of that rule or law. It seems to us that the proceeding is no less an irregularity than in the cases cited.

Importance is attached to the fact that the statute fixes the time in which a suit may be brought in such a case at five years. Notwithstanding the analogy between the law by which a right of action is limited, and that of an estoppel, where time is an ingredient, it has never been held that the time in the two cases is the same. The former goes to the right to maintain or prosecute the action, and the latter to a right of recovery. The one is determined by arbitrary date, without a reference to consequences, while the other is applied only to deny relief when, because of neglect or wrong a party has forfeited a right he might otherwise possess. The application of the rule of estoppel cannot be said to depend on a particular date. In one case a time much shorter than the period of limitation would be sufficient to invoke the rule, while in another it will be much longer. It is not to be denied but that there are very many cases where legislative acts have been adjudged unconstitutional, and hence void, where rights and interests acquired under and because of them have been defeated; and this is true where, between the enactment and the judgment long time has intervened. In United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 338, 32 L. ed. 121, the action was to set aside a patent for land obtained by fraud, and in the opinion it is said: "The principle that the United States are not bound by any statute of limitations, nor barred by any laches of their officers, however gross, in a suit brought by them as a sovereign government to enforce a public right, or to assert a public interest, is established past all controversy or doubt." Appellant cites the case, and also United States v. Insley, 130 U. S. 263, 32 L. ed. 968, to the same effect. It is then said that in this case the state is seeking to assert a public interest, in that it is aimed at a "usurpation by a municipal corporation of powers not conferred by a valid law." If that is the purpose of the suit it will be realized; for we hold, in as explicit terms as we can command, that the act is inoperative to confer upon the defendant corporation any power or rights whatever. Had the act never been passed, and the same method for annexation been adopted, with the same conditions as to recognition, acquiescence, delays, and public and private interests involved, the same conclusion would result; and hence the act is without the least significance, nor have we given it a shadow of bearing, except in so far as it may have served as a color of law inducing the proceeding for annexation. But, aside from this, the record in no way indicates a public interest to be subserved by a judgment avoiding the present corporate existence. Not one of the 60,000 or more inhabitants of the city as now constituted makes a complaint, nor does it appear but that all are entirely satisfied with the change that has been made. The relator, but for whom the cause would not be in court, is not a resident of the city; but he is the owner of land of the assessed valuation of $80, giving him the legal right to institute the proceedings. He in no way claims that he is injured by the change, or is likely to be. The judgment of ouster against the city is claimed as a naked legal right. Had it been exercised with promptness, after the power was assumed by the city, we do not see why he should not have had his judgment. A thought is suggested that the delay was to permit the authorities to act. With the rapid changes made after the passage of the act (the new government being in operation in April, 1890), the tendency, as to results, was manifest; and it was apparent that to avoid great and important changes, involving many and large interests, action should be taken at once. Much less time than was taken was sufficient to apprise the relator that others did not intend to act. The way of inquiry was open to him to know the facts, if he desired to know them, and, in view of the situation, promptness was demanded.

Appellant makes a comparison of the cases as to the time intervening between the adoption of the law and judgment where laches were claimed as an estoppel. One case that we have cited is the same as this one, while in the others the time is longer. The time that will justify an estoppel, as we have said, varies with the cases; depending on what are the facts, and what is to be apprehended. Greater prejudice may result from a delay of one year in some cases than from ten or twenty years in others. In our examination we have not found a case in which, with many more years of delay, the consequences to be apprehended from a judgment of ouster were as great as in this case.

We are not unmindful of the fact that the act in question attempts to extend the limits of the city by its own operation, instead of permitting it to be done, but we do not see that such fact should change the conclusion. The conditions out of which arise the necessity for the rule we apply are not the results of the enactment alone, but of the things done by the people relying upon it. By the act it is said that the limits of such cities "are hereby extended," and that, as to corporations in the outlying territory, it provides in terms that they shall "cease and determine." The people, in making the change, acted upon what purported to be fixed conditions; and these facts strengthen the equitable claim of the city that it should not be disturbed, at the instance of the state simply asserting the invalidity of its authority.

Finally, it may be said that, aside from the necessity of maintaining the integrity of the Constitution against infractions from legislative action, there is not a reason suggested for, or a benefit anticipated from, the judgment sought in this proceeding. Such a judgment would disrupt the present peaceful and satisfactory arrangement of all the people of the city, as to its corporate existence, without a benefit, so far as we know, to any person. The law does not demand such a sacrifice for merely technical reasons. In fact, the constitutional vindication is complete with the declaration that the act is absolutely void.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

SOUTHERN BELL TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

Dora P. FRANCIS.

SAME, Appt.,

v.

Susan J. ALLEN et al.

(.....Ala.....)

The unreasonable cutting or trimming of trees on a sidewalk by employees who have authority to cut or trim trees so far as is necessary in removing telephone wires which they have been lawfully ordered to remove will not sustain an action of trespass by the abutting lot owners against the employer.

(February 14, 1896.)

A PPEALS by defendant from judgments of the City Court of Birmingham in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for trespass in cutting trees in the street in front of plaintiffs' property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—For master's liability on account of servant's torts or negligence to persons with whom he has no contractual relation, see note to Ritchie v. Walker (Conn.) 27 L. R. A. 161.

31 L. R. A.

Messrs. Hewitt, Walker, & Porter for appellant.

Messrs. Talioferro & Houghton for appellee Francis.

Messrs. Altmen & McQueen for appellee Allen.

Thorington, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These two cases arise from substantially the same state of facts, and were submitted together in this court. Appellees, being the owners of property abutting on a public street in the city of Birmingham, brought suit in trespass against appellant to recover damages for injury to their property resulting from the act of appellant's agents or servants in cutting and trimming certain trees growing on the sidewalk in front of appellees' lots, which in one case had been planted by appellee some years ago, and in the other case it does not appear by whom they were planted. Appellant, a corporation invested with the right of eminent domain under the laws of this state, and authorized by law to erect poles and stretch wires thereon through the streets of Birmingham, was required by an ordinance of that city to remove certain of its poles and wires from the street on which appellees' property is situated, and to place them on the sidewalk in front of such property. Appellant claims that, in order to comply with this ordinance, it became necessary to cut and remove many of the limbs of the trees which had entwined themselves about the wires, and also to cut other limbs, in order that the trees should not interfere with the wires after the poles were removed to the sidewalk and the wires suspended over the tops of the trees; that, on ascertaining this to be necessary, it so informed the mayor of the city, who promised to obtain the consent of the property owners; that afterwards, and without having obtained such consent, as appellees were informed at the time, the mayor sent an officer of the city fire department to superintend the trimming of the trees, and under his direction the work was done by appellant's employees. Besides the appellant's wires on the poles, there was also a fire-alarm telegraph wire, which was the property of the city, and used in connection with the fire department. It was also removed with the poles and appellant's wires. Its position on the poles was underneath appellant's wires, and the testimony tends to show it was this wire mainly that necessitated the cutting of the trees. The cases were tried before a judge of the city court, without a jury, and judgments were rendered in both cases for appellees, who were plaintiffs in the court below. The measure of damages adopted by the city court was the difference between the market value of the lots abutting on the street before the trees were mutilated by the alleged reckless cutting and their value after such cutting. The appeal is taken pursuant to the statute creating said court, and brings the whole case before us for review.

The two controlling questions are: First. Whether an action of trespass lies in favor of appellees, as owners of the lots abutting on the street where the trees are standing, against appellant, for the acts of its employees in cutting the trees. Second. If such liability was incurred, what is the measure of damages?

Appellant's counsel have filed an interesting and elaborate argument in support of the proposition that a telephone service does not constitute an additional burden on the public streets of a city, and they cite numerous cases which are ably reasoned; but, in our opinion, the decision of the cases presented by these appeals for our consideration does not turn on that question, and we therefore leave it undecided. Other principles to which we will presently advert must govern our conclusions.

The owner of property abutting on a public street in a city, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary at the time of the dedication, or of a different intention appearing from the instrument or act of dedication, owns the fee in the land to the center of such street subject to the public easement. Western R. Co. v. Alabama G. R. Co. (at present term) 19 So. —; Evans v. Savannah & W. R. Co. 90 Ala. 54; Moore v. Johnston, 87 Ala. 220; Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Withrow, 82 Ala. 190; Perry v. New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. 55 Ala. 418, 28 Am. Rep. 740;

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 405. And, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the presumption of law is that the fee to the center of the street is in the owner of the abutting property. Rice v. Worcester County, 11 Gray, 283; Terre Haute & S. E. R. Co. v. Rodel, 87 Ind. 128, 46 Am. Rep. 164; Weller v. McCormick, 47 N. J. L. 897, 54 Am. Rep. 175; Boston v. Richardson, 13 Allen, 146. When such ownership is of the ultimate fee in land constituting a public country road, it has generally been recognized as retaining with it, subject to the easement of passage and its incidents, and for purposes of repairs, the right to the earth, timber, and grass growing between the center line of the road and the boundary of the owners' lands along the road, as well as all minerals, quarries, and springs below the surface; and such owner may maintain actions against those who interfere with these rights. But, in respect of streets in populous places, it has been said, and we think with obvious reason, that the public convenience requires more than the mere right to pass over and upon them, and that the uses to which they may legitimately be put are greater and more numerous than those which may be applied to ordinary roads or highways in the country. Mr. Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, in speaking of municipal control over public streets, uses the following language: "Whether the municipal corporation holds the fee of the street or not, the true doctrine is that the municipal authorities may, under the usual powers given them, do all acts appropriate or incidental to the beneficial use of the street by the public, of which, when not done in an improper and negligent manner, the adjoining freeholder cannot complain." In this state, however, that doctrine must be accepted as limited and controlled by the constitutional provision requiring municipal and other corporations invested with the right of eminent domain to make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed by the construction or enlargement of its works, highways, or improvements. Ala. Const. art. 14, § 7; Montgomery v. Townsend, 80 Ala. 489, 60 Am. Rep. 112; Id. 84 Ala. 478; Montgomery v. Maddox, 89 Ala. 181. Although it should be conceded that the posts and wires comprising a telegraph and telephone service are an additional burden on the street, for which compensation must be made to the owner of the abutting property, the city, if it have legislative authority for that purpose, may grant the right to such a company to use the public streets for its business in common with, and without obstructing, the use of such street by the public. Concurrent legislative and municipal authority granted to such a company to erect its poles and suspend its wires in and over the streets of a city will protect it from being treated as a trespasser, and its works from being declared a nuisance, if its works are so constructed as not to obstruct or interfere with the use of the streets by the public or the property owners' right of ingress and egress to and from his abutting property. Perry v. New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. 55

Ala. 413, 28 Am. Rep. 740. If the company, under such circumstances, is not a trespasser in its occupancy of the street, it is competent for the city to exercise whatever legislative authority it may possess in the matter of regulation and control over the streets, in order to render effective the right conferred on the company to plant its poles and suspend its wires in and over the public highway; and it therefore becomes necessary to consider the nature of the property owners' claim to the trees, and the extent of the city's authority in respect thereto, in the exercise of the powers and duties imposed on it to maintain safe and convenient highways throughout the entire width thereof. Montgomery v. Wright, 72 Ala. 411, 47 Am. Rep. 422.

Appellees' ownership of the trees, whether the latter were planted by them on the sidewalk, or acquired by devolution of title to the adjacent property, was and is a qualified and limited ownership, subordinate to the public right to safe and convenient passage, and to the rights, powers, and duties of the governing municipal body in the protection, promotion, and establishing of every public use in and upon the streets in a city. Baker v. Normal, 81 Ill. 108. In respect of all such matters, the private right of the owner of the abutting property to maintain the trees must yield to the paramount public right whenever the necessity may arise, although, until such necessity does arise, the owner is clearly entitled to the enjoyment of all the benefits which may result to his property from such trees, and to protection from their destruction or mutilation by others. For instance, if the roots of the trees should cause irregularities or breaks in the pavement upon the sidewalk or street, or if the shade and moisture from the trees should rot or injure a wooden pavement, or if the trees otherwise interfered with vehicles or foot passengers, it would, in our opinion, be clearly within the power and duty of the city to remove such trees, and without liability to the owner. In principle, we can perceive no substantial difference between the exercise of that right by the city in the cases above suggested and where the removal of the trees may become necessary in locating upon a street a public work authorized by law to be placed upon the street, and especially where such public work is employed by the city in so important and vital a matter as the support of wires used by the city in connection with its fire department. The location of telegraph and fire alarm wires and poles upon the streets is, in the nature of the case, necessarily within the sound discretion of the municipal governing body who hold the streets in trust for the use of the public, and who are bound in law to so maintain them as to provide safe and convenient passage to vehicles and pedestrians. It may be said to be matter of common knowledge, as well as the result of experience in such governing bodies, that the appropriate location for such poles is near and inside the sidewalk curb, where they interfere neither with pedestrians passing along the sidewalk, nor with vehicles traveling along the roadway, and where falling or trailing wires can do the least injury. The city ordinance, therefore, shown by the record, requiring the removal of telegraph and telephone poles from that part of the street used by vehicles, and to be placed on the sidewalk within 6 or 12 inches of the curb, was not an unreasonable or unlawful regulation, but a prudent, if not necessary, requirement for a populous city, and in its enforcement, if it became necessary to trim or remove the trees in front of appellees' property, neither the city, nor appellant acting under authority of and in obedience to the ordinance, can be regarded as trespassers. Horst & B. Mun. Ord. § 229; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 688; Bills v. Belknap, 36 Iowa, 588; Weller v. McCormick, 47 N. J. L. 397, 54 Am. Rep. 175.

It is not to be inferred, however, from anything that has been said, that either the city, acting under its police power, or any corporation invested with the right of eminent domain, acting under the city's authority, is absolved from all liability to the owner in such cases; for, if the city or other corporation invested with the right of eminent domain, acting under municipal authority, proceeds to cut or trim trees planted on a sidewalk by the owner of abutting property under lawful authority, when no necessity for such cutting exists, or when the cutting clearly exceeds the necessity, and consequential injury results therefrom to such abutting property, the owner will have his appropriate remedy at law to redress the injury. Bills v. Belknap, supra; Montgomery v. Townsend, 84 Ala. 478. But the remedy for such injury, as we have shown, is not in trespass, but for the consequential damages resulting to the adjacent property; and the liability exists by reason of the constitutional provision hereinabove quoted, which invests the owner not only with the right to damages for property taken, but also where his property is injured or destroyed under such circumstances. The injury to the abutting property of appellees in both cases is shown by the proof not to be the direct and immediate result of the cutting of the trees on the sidewalk, but indirect and consequential, and, furthermore, that appellees, in cutting the trees, were proceeding under lawful authority. If there is any liability, it is in case, and not trespass. Both suits are in trespass, and it results that the city court erred in its judgment in each case. Both judgments are reversed, and, inasmuch as it appears that neither action can be maintained in the form in which it is brought, judgment for appellant will be here rendered in each case.

It is unnecessary to consider on these appeals the question as to the measure of damages, and we will not anticipate it.

Reversed and rendered.

Head, J., concurring:

The defendant lawfully put its servants to removing telephone wires in a street in the city. The service, necessarily and lawfully, required the cutting of some of the branches of certain shade trees in the street, in front of plaintiffs' lots, growing upon those parts of the street of which plaintiffs were, respectively, seised in fee. The servants, to state the case most strongly for the plaintiffs, while performing the defendant's service, went beyond their duty and authority, and wilfully cut the trees beyond any necessity to the proper removal of the wires, doing unnecessary damage to the plaintiffs' property. The only question to be considered is whether the defendant is liable in actions of trespass.

We believe it to be an undeniable proposition that a person cannot be a trespasser vi et armis who neither commits, authorizes, aids, or abets, nor subsequently ratifies, the wrongful act. It is observable, under this rule, that if one expressly commands another to do the wrongful act, and the same is done in pursuance of the command, he is, under familiar principles, guilty as a principal, and liable as such. Nor is it essential to liability in trespass that there be an express command to do the wrongful act. Thus, if an agent or servant, in and about the business of the principal or master, commits a trespass upon the person or property of another, in the immediate presence of the principal or master, it will be presumed that it was done by the direction of the latter, who will be liable for the trespass, unless it is affirmatively shown that he did not coerce or direct the act, but did what he lawfully should to prevent it. Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168. So, also, if a principal or master direct his agent or servant to do an act which is in itself unlawful, and, in its commission, an injury is done to another, or if the act commanded, if done without injury to another, is, in itself, not unlawful, yet is of such a nature that the natural and probable effect or result of its performance is injury to another, and, in its performance, such injury is done, he who gave the command, in either case, is a trespasser. Thus, in Gregory v. Piper, 9 Barn. & C. 591, a master ordered his servant to lay down a quantity of rubbish near his neighbor's wall, but so that it might not touch the same. The servant laid the rubbish, and exercised due care in doing so; yet such was the character of the act that some of the rubbish naturally ran against the wall. Held, that the master was liable in trespass. When the wrong done has benefited another, or was done for that purpose and in his interest, such other, with full knowledge of the facts, may make himself a trespasser by ratification. Lord Coke stated this rule thus: "He that agreeth to a trespass after it is done is no trespasser unless the trespass was done to his use or for his benefit, and then his agreement subsequent amounteth to a commandment." 4 Inst. 317; Cooley, Torts, 127. To the general rule of nonliability in trespass above announced and explained, we are aware of but one exception, which is that, on principles of public policy, a public officer is liable, in that form of action, for the trespasses of his deputy, committed colore officii, whether, under the rules above stated, he would be liable as a principal or not. 1 Chitty, Pl. *82. In an early Massachusetts case it was held that a sheriff who was not present at the service of a writ when his deputy committed a trespass was not jointly liable with the deputy. Campbell v. Phelps, 1 Pick. 62, 11 Am. Dec. 139. But the better rule seems to be that the officer is always constructively present, and jointly responsible for the torts of his deputy committed colore officii. See the cases collated in note to Kirkwood v. Miller, 73 Am. Dec. 134, 141; Cooley, Torts, pp. 182, 185; 1 Chitty, Pl. *82. Since the decision by Lord Kenyon, in the year 1800, in the leading case of McManus v. Crickett, 1 East, 106, until a comparatively recent period, the rule of nonliability of the master for the wilful act of the servant, there laid down, was carried to the extent of securing immunity to the master from all liability to compensate the injury, in any form of action. As late as the case of Cox v. Kealey, 38 Ala. 340, 76 Am. Dec. 325, decided in 1860, the late Chief Justice Stone, delivering the opinion of the court, vigorously maintained and applied the doctrine of McManus v. Crickett. It was an action on the case, for negligence of the defendant's servants in operating a steamboat. There was some evidence tending to show that the injury was wilfully committed by the servants while operating the boat. The trial court was requested to instruct the jury that the defendants were not liable if the collision was wilfully caused by the acts of their agents or servants. The instruction was refused, and the ruling was held error, for which the judgment was reversed. After noticing some other cases, the court remarked: "None of them materially unsettle the great distinction, ruled in McManus v. Crickett, supra, between those injuries which are the direct result of intentional or wilful fault on the part of the servant, and those which result from his mere carelessness or want of skill. It seems to be well settled, that if the servant be in the performance of a duty intrusted to him, and from a want of either skill or diligence injure another, it will not excuse the master or employer, even if the servant, in the matter complained of, was acting contrary to instructions. Trusting the servant in the given case is an assumption by the master of all responsibility which results from negligence or want of skill in the servant. But this rule does not apply when the servant actually wills and intends the injury, or steps aside from the purpose of the agency committed to him and inflicts an independent wrong." The learned judge concluded his opinion with this remark: "Whether some of the principles ruled in the case of McManus v. Crickett, supra, should not be changed so as to accommodate the relation of master and servant to the very useful, yet terrible, motive agent, steam, is a question, not for us, but for the legislature." But, as is well known, the doctrine of that case has been changed, and that without legislation. Now, it must be accepted that, in promulgating this change, the courts did not intend to usurp the functions of the lawmakers, and make new law, but to correct the errors of existing doctrines. The change was made upon a principle; and what is that principle? As we have seen, and as every lawyer knows, it has ever been the rule that the master is liable in damages resulting from the negligence or want of skill of the servant in the performance of the master's service. This is so, not because the master has himself committed a wrong, but upon the well-recognized principle that, in employing a servant to perform a particular duty, he guarantees to the public at large, excepting fellow servants engaged in the common employment, that the servant so employed possesses ordinary skill and carefulness, rendering him fit for the work he is appointed to do, and that he (the servant) will characterize the performance of his duties by bringing to bear upon it the exercise of that degree of skill and carefulness. If the servant does not possess these qualifications, or, possessing, fails to exercise them, in a given case, with resultant injury to another, the master is responsible, as a consequence of the servant's wrong, for failing to make good that which he has assumed, for the servant, to the general public. The change of doctrine to which we have referred (effected, as we have said, without legislation) necessarily rests upon the principle that there is no just distinction, so far as the rights of the public are concerned, between the characterization of the servant's performance of his duties, by careless or unskillful acts or omissions, and the characterization thereof by wilful or intentional acts of wrong. If it be essential to the public safety that the master shall assume, for his servant, the possession and exercise of skill and diligence, for what reason is it not essential thereto that he shall assume for him the possession of that fitness of character and disposition that will deter him from using the master's service and the master's means of executing the service, placed in his hands, for the commission of wilful and intentional wrong? The stupendous modern advance in industry and commerce, operated through the work and agencies of thousands of irresponsible underservants, fraught with frightful dangers to the public safety, through the vicious dispositions of so many of these servants, opened the eyes of the courts to the want, in reason and justice, of such a distinction; and the result is that the rule of respondere superior is applied to the latter, as it has ever been to the former, case. But the master is thus liable not because he himself has, by force and arms, directly committed the wrongful act, but because he has failed to make good to the party injured his assumption, for the servant, that the latter would execute the master's service in a lawful manner. His liability is therefore consequential upon the servant's unauthorized wrongful act. As expressed by Judge Metcalf in Parsons v. Winchell, 5 Cush. 592, 53 Am. Dec. 745: "The act of a servant is not the act of the master, even in legal intentment or effect, unless the master previously directs or subsequently adopts it. In other cases, he is liable for the acts of his servant, when liable at all, not as if the acts were done by himself, but because the law makes him answerable therefor." It would be repugnant to the plainest principles of law and logic to declare that a person has directly, vi et armis, committed an injury when the wrongful act was done by another, without his presence, authority, knowledge, or consent, or subsequent ratification.

31 L. R. A.

We are not without other ample authority for our conclusion. Thus, in 1 Chitty on Pleading, *181, we find it stated that "though a master may be liable under the circumstances to compensate an immediate injury committed by his servant, in the course of his employ, with force, yet the action against the master, in general, must be case, though against the servant it might, for the same act, be trespass." And Mr. Redfield, in annotating his edition of Greenleaf on Evidence, uses this language: "An action on the case is an appropriate remedy for injuries caused by the wrongful acts of the servants of defendants, even though such acts were acts of force, and such that trespass would have been the only proper remedy against the servant," citing Havens v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 28 Conn. 69; 2 Greenl. Ev. p. 203, § 226, note. The above quotation is in the language of the syllabus of that case, and the opinion supports it. He gives also, in a note to section 225, an extract from an English case, wherein the court remarked: "The agent's direct act or trespass is not the direct act of the master. Each blow of the whip, whether skilful and careful or not, is not the blow of the master, it is the voluntary act of the servant." And, in annotating the fifth edition of his admirable work on Railways (vol. 1, top p. 534), he states the principle so clearly that we cannot as well express it as by quoting his language. He says: "It has always seemed to us that the whole class of cases which hold that the master is not liable for the wilful acts of his servant has grown up under a misconception of the case of McManus v. Crickett, 1 East, 106, for they all profess to base themselves upon that case. That case, we apprehend, was never intended to decide more than that the master is not liable, in trespass, for the wilful act of the servant. Lord Kenyon, Ch. J., in delivering his opinion in that case, with which the court concur, expressly says, speaking of actions on the case brought against the master, where the servant negligently did a wrong in the course of his employment for the master: 'The form of these actions shows that where the servant is, in point of law a trespasser, the master is not liable as such, though liable to make compensation for the damage consequential from his employing of an unskillful or negligent servant. The act of the master is the employment of the servant.' This reasoning," continues Judge Redfield, "certainly applies with the same force to that class of cases where the act of the servant is both direct and wilful, as where it is only negligent. The master is not liable in either case perhaps, so much for having impliedly authorized the act, as for having employed an unfaithful servant, who did the injury in the course of his employment. And whether done negligently or wilfully, seems to be of no possible moment, as to the liability of the master, the only inquiry being whether it was done in the course of the servants' employment. And the argument, that when the servant acts wilfully he ipso facto leaves the employment of the master, and if he is driving a coach and six, or a locomotive and train of cars, thereby acquires a special property in the things, and is pro hac vice the owner and doing his own business, may sound plausible enough, perhaps, but we confess it seems to us unsound, although quoted from so ancient a date as Rolle's Abridgment, and adopted by so distinguished a judge as Lord Kenyon. The truth is the whole argument is only a specious fallacy; and whether Lord Kenyon intended really to say that no action will lie against the master in such case, or only to say what the case required, that the master is not liable in trespass, it is very obvious the proper distinction in regard to the master's liability cannot be made to depend upon the question of the intention of the servant. The master has nothing to do, either way, with the purpose and intention of his servants. It is with their acts that he is to be affected, and, if these come within the range of their employment, the master is liable, whether the act be a misfeasance, or a non-feasance, an omission or commission, carelessly or purposely done. It will happen, doubtless, that when the master is under a positive duty to keep or carry things safely, as bailee, or to carry persons safely, . . . while he will be liable for the mere non-feasance of the servant, the servant will not be liable to the same party for such non-feasance, there being no privity between the servant and such party,—no duty owing to such person from the servant. But in such case the servant will be liable for his positive wrong, and wilful acts of injury, and the master is also liable for these latter acts, but not in trespass ordinarily, as the servant is, but in case. . . . This is the view taken of this subject by Judge Reeve (Dom. Rel. 358, 359, 360); and it is, we think, the only consistent and rational one, and the one which must ultimately prevail." Judge Reeve, referring to McManus v. Crickett, says: "The principle adopted in the case in East shows that when a servant does an injury with violence, the very doing of it is an abandonment of his master's service. It is said that there is a difficulty in framing a proper action to remedy the injury, if one exists, or that the injury was immediate, and therefore trespass, vi et armis, was the proper action, if any; and that this action proceeds upon the ground of criminality, which would subject the master to a fine. Certain it is that the master is not liable, criminaliter. It does not follow, because the injury by the servant was an immediate injury, that the action against the master must be trespass. It proves, indeed, if the action had been brought against the servant, it must have been trespass. . . . I take it that when an immediate injury, with force, is done by another, for whom his employer is liable, the action is trespass on the case; and in perfect analogy in this case with that when a man keeps a dog accustomed to bite, and on that account is liable. It is an action of trespass on the case, although the injury is with force, and as immediate as if done by a man. I apprehend that the action on the case reported in [Savignac v. Roome], 6

T. R. 195, was the proper action in which to try the liability of the master." [pp. 461, 462]. In that case the servant had committed a trespass vi et armis in the course of his employment. Wood, in his work on Master and Servant, after discussing the master's liability, says: "Thus, it will be seen that the question as to whether the master is liable in trespass or case for an injury inflicted by a servant merely affects the remedy, and not the cause of action itself, and depends upon the question whether the act is a natural, necessary, or probable incident of doing the act directed. If so, the master is liable in trespass. If not, then he is not liable in trespass, but only in case." Wood, Mast. & S. 596, 597. Judge Thompson, in his excellent discussion of all these questions, both under the old and the new doctrine, and after contending, in his vigorous style, for the correctness of the new, considers (in § 10 of his observations on McManus v. Crickett) the question of the proper form of action against the master. He says: "With respect to the form of the action, whether trespass or case, where the old system of pleading still prevails, the following may be stated as the fair result of the cases: If the command of the master is to do a lawful act, and the servant does it in an unlawful manner, so as to injure another, then case, and not trespass, is the proper remedy." Here when the context is considered it is evident the author meant by the term "unlawful manner" either a wilfully unlawful or a negligent act; for he had just declared the master liable for the wilfully unlawful act of the servant. He proceeds: "But where the act which the master commands the servant to do is unlawful in itself, and the wrong does not result merely from the manner of doing it, trespass will lie. It results that case, and not trespass, is the form of action for all injuries arising from the servant's negligence or unskillfulness, not authorized or commanded by the master. To illustrate: If a railway passenger refuses to pay his fare, and the conductor in ejecting him from the train, which he may lawfully do, puts him off while the train is in motion, or uses excessive force, whereby a cause of action accrues to the passenger, the action against the company will be case. But if the company directs its conductors to collect illegal fares of passengers, and a passenger resists payment, for which cause the conductor puts him off the train, the action against the company will be trespass; and the use of any excessive force beyond what was necessary to execute the unlawful order, or any carelessness on the part of the conductor, whereby the passenger is specially injured, will go in aggravation of damages." 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 890. The learned author's illustration of negligence in the foregoing extract, it seems to us, is subject to the criticism that the acts of the conductor therein stated are acts of direct force or trespass, and not mere negligence. The conclusion, however, that the master, in the case stated, is liable only in case, is, we think, correct. In St. Louis, A. & C. R. Co. v. Dalby, 19 Ill. 353, 375, the court, after an elaborate discussion of a corporation's liability of the wilful trespasses of its servants, and holding to the modern doctrine, says: "Much was said upon the argument of the hardship it would impose upon railroad companies should this action be sustained. It is supposed that it would authorize trespass against the company wherever it could be maintained against the servant, and that the action on the case, which is now the usual remedy, would be superseded for trespass. This apprehension is not well founded. Hereafter, as heretofore, the usual remedy for torts must be case, and not trespass. Wherever the command was to do only a lawful act, and the servant does it in an unlawful way, so as to injure another, there case would still be the proper remedy. . . . But where the act is unlawful in and of itself, and not from the mode of doing it, trespass would lie." And the court illustrated by the case in hand, which was where the conductor was required by the company to collect certain illegal fares, and to eject passengers refusing to pay. The court held the ejected passenger entitled to maintain trespass against the company, for the obvious reason, as we have already laid down, that the company itself commanded the commission of the trespass. Under the principle announced by the court, as above quoted, it is clear that if the conductor had been required by the company to collect only legal fares, and eject those who refused to pay, and the conductor had wilfully demanded an illegal fare, and ejected the passenger for his refusal to pay, or, in endeavoring to collect the legal fare, had wilfully, or even maliciously, inflicted an unnecessary and unlawful injury upon the passenger in ejecting him from the train, the remedy against the company would have been case, while, against the conductor, trespass would lie. If this be sound law, it is decisive of the question before us.

The correctness of the view we take in this opinion may be tested by a consideration of the law in respect of the liability of master and servant to a joint action. It is a familiar rule that there are no accessories in trespass. All who are guilty at all are cotrespassers, and may be jointly sued. See note to Kirkwood v. Miller, 73 Am. Dec. 140, 141; Cooley, Torts, 133. Judge Thompson, in section 11 of his work, supra (page 891), shows clearly that by the weight of authority, where the liability of the master arises from an unauthorized trespass of the servant, committed in the performance of a lawful duty commanded by the master, a joint action against master and servant will not lie, for the reason that the action against the master is case, while that against the servant is trespass, and for the further reason that, the wrong proceeding directly from the servant, and not directly from the master, the latter, if compelled to pay the damages, would have an action over against the former, but he would not, at common law, be entitled to such an action where the judgment went against both as joint tortfeasors.

It is only upon the principle which we here declare that the vast array of decisions in this and other courts can possibly be maintained, where the common law of pleading prevails, which hold that, in actions on the case for negligence of the defendant's servants, the defense of contributory negligence is overcome by showing that the act of the servant causing the injury was wilful or intentional. It is an admitted rule of pleading that an action on the case cannot be maintained if the defendant's act was a trespass only. So that, if the unauthorized wilful act of the servant constitutes the master a trespasser, and suable as such, a replication to the plea of contributory negligence to an action on the case for the negligence of the servant, setting up that the servant wilfully committed the act, would, manifestly, be a complete departure from the declaration. The two remedies are of such different natures that, by common law, they cannot be joined in the same action even in separate counts. Mobile & M. R. Co. v. McKellar, 59 Ala. 458. But, when we consider the master's liability as consequential and in case, the decisions referred to are entirely reconcilable with this rule of pleading. The cases which appear to be adverse to our conclusion are either those in states where code systems have abolished common-law forms of action, or where the considerations we have adverted to were not in mind. Of the latter class is the case, in our own court, of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dancy, 97 Ala. 338 (an opinion delivered by the present writer).

The doctrines in respect of the relations of principal and agent, and master and servant, as applicable to the acts and contracts of corporations, are well established. It is not essential to an act or contract which binds a corporation that it be done or entered into or authorized by the corporate entity itself, as represented by the governing board or stockholders. It is well recognized in the law that corporations, in carrying out corporate functions, may, and of necessity do, create vice principals who, in respect of the departments of corporate business intrusted to their general control and management, partake of the corporate entity, and their acts and contracts, in execution of the functions they represent, are of the same effect and import as if done or entered into or directly authorized by vote of the governing board or stockholders. Thus, to illustrate: Suppose the defendant has confided to a general manager or superintendent the execution of its telephone business, in the city of Birmingham; endowed him with ample powers and means to carry on the business, to employ and discharge subordinate agents and servants, and generally to do what may be necessary to the general performance of its corporate functions in that district. Such a person, with reference to the public, is more than a mere agent acting under orders of a superior. He is pro hac vice a principal. He stands for, and represents, within the sphere of his authority, the corporate entity itself, and his acts are the direct acts of the corporation itself; and if, in his representative character, he commits a trespass, or commands or authorizes its commission by a servant under his orders, the corporation is suable for the wrong in the action of trespass. Many of her illustrations might be given. It is thus, through agencies of this nature, that corporations may commit almost all manner of torts, such as assault and battery, malicious prosecution, libel, etc., and some classes of offenses for which they are indictable. It was never thought that a corporate vote was necessary to bind the corporations to these wrongs. As well might it be said that every contract should receive the express authority or assent of a corporate vote. But it would seem, upon plain principles, that a mere servant, working under the immediate control and orders of a superior, having no power or authority to do anything but perform the work he is employed and directed to do, can in no sense be deemed a vice principal, for whose tortious acts, as such, the corporation is responsible. The liability of the master, as we have endeavored to show, is not for the tortious act in such case, but in consequence of the duty he owes the public, except fellow servants, to have in his employ only servants who will perform the services in a lawful way.

It is not our purpose now to undertake to lay down any general rule to govern all cases as to what circumstances or extent of power conferred are essential to constitute a vice principal, whose acts will be directly visited upon the corporation, within the principle above declared. Each case, as it arises, will be determined according to its peculiar facts.

With these views, we adhere to the opinion formerly delivered in these cases by Justice Thorington, and reverse the judgments of the city court, and order judgment to be entered in this court in favor of the defendant in each case. Reversed and rendered.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

TEXAS MEXICAN RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

J. A. WRIGHT et al.

(.....Tex.....)

1. Although a judgment of a justice of the peace is void because he has no jurisdiction of defendant, yet its execution will not be enjoined if defendant has a right to a writ of certiorari to set the judgment aside.

2. A constable is not precluded from levying on the real estate of a railroad corporation by the fact that a car is pointed out as subject to levy, if the car is not delivered into his possession as required by Rev. Stat. art. 2287.

3. Depot grounds are subject to execution sale under a constitutional provision that "real and personal property" of a railroad cor-

NOTE.—Injunctions against judgments for want of jurisdiction or which are void.

- I. In general.
- II. As to party.
- III. As to time.
- IV. As to venue.
- V. As to amount.
- VI. As to judge or court.
- VII. Matters of process and service.
 - a. Form.
 - b. Time and manner.
 - c. Fraud as to service.
 - d. Acceptance of service.
 - e. Party served.
 - f. Service on corporation.
 - g. Service on partners.
 - h. Service at residence.
 - i. Where there was no service as required by law.
 - j. Where there was no notice.
- VIII. On account of appearance.
- IX. Pleading and practice.
 - X. Where there was no judgment or it was set aside.

I. In general.
Generally injunctions have been granted where judgments were void on account of venue, or in excess of jurisdictional amount, or if there was no service, or defective service, of process on corporations, or a return of service of process at "the residence," where the party did not live at that place, or where it was rendered without the notice required by law. But they have been refused when claimed on account of the form of the writ or summons, or time and manner of service (except when service was made on Sunday), or for enticing into the state, or for misnomer of the defendant. There is some conflict as to granting injunctions against judgments void as to the time of rendition, 31 L. R. A.

or where there was no service of process or an unauthorized appearance.

An injunction was granted where an order of a court was void because in excess of the court's jurisdiction, although the order might have been valid if confined to matters within the jurisdiction of the court. White County Comrs. v. Gwin, 136 Ind. 562, 22 L. R. A. 402.

And in Landrum v. Farmer, 7 Bush, 46, it was said that if a judgment was void and might have been reversed on appeal, the circuit court which rendered the decision had power to adjudge it void, and to enjoin proceedings under it.

And in Eatis v. Patton, 3 Yerg. 322, it was said that an injunction will be granted to restrain proceedings on a judgment that is void for want of jurisdiction in the court.

And in Earl v. Matheny, 80 Ind. 202, it was said that the execution of a void judgment will be enjoined, but the execution of a judgment merely voidable will not be enjoined.

Under Ga. Code, §§ 3319, 4063, providing for a judgment on a replevin bond for the payment of the recovery, and not for the production of the property, a summary judgment without an action upon a bond conditioned alone for the forthcoming of the property was void as to the surety, and was enjoined. Clary v. Haines, 81 Ga. 520.

But in Geraty v. Druiling, 44 Ill. App. 440, it was held that "want of jurisdiction alone was no ground for relief in equity against the judgment, unless there was also disclosed a meritorious defense, which by loss of right to appeal had become lost."

Where a judgment was void for want of jurisdiction, but did not so appear on its face, and a good defense to the action was not shown, the injunction was refused. John V. Farwell Co. v. Hilbert (Wis.) 30 L. R. A. 235; Pilger v. Torrence, 42 Neb. 903.

poration, or "any part thereof, shall be liable to execution and sale in the same manner as the property of individuals."

(June 17, 1895.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals, Fourth Supreme Judicial District, to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court of Duval County in favor of defendants in an action brought to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Dodd & Mullally, and J. O. Luby for plaintiff in error.

So, where the statute in regard to garnishment was not followed, and the judgment was void but complainant did not show that he had not an adequate remedy by appeal, certiorari, or direct application to the court. Wingfield v. McClure, 48 Ark. 510.

In Harrison v. Crumb, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 991, it was said that an injunction will not be granted against a void judgment in Texas. The party will be left to his remedy at law.

In Geers v. Scott (Tex.) 33 S. W. 587, it was said that if a judgment was void and would not support an order of sale, a seizure of property would be such a trespass as would give the complainant an adequate remedy at law; and an injunction was refused.

The Missouri cases are noted here in order to show their conflict, although some of them do not belong to this subdivision.

In Missouri, on the question of granting injunctions against judgments void for want of jurisdiction, there is a conflict of authority, which is noted as irreconcilable in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Lowder, 50 Mo. App. 3.

So, in Jones v. Pharis, 59 Mo. App. 254, an injunction was granted where the judgment was void on account of venue, and there was danger of losing all legal remedy.—distinguishing St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Lowder, supra, on that ground.

So, where the judgment was void because service of process was not made on the proper officer of a corporation. United States Mut. Acc. Ins. Co. v. Reisinger, 48 Mo. App. 571.

But an injunction was refused against a judgment void because rendered in vacation, as there was a remedy at law. Stockton v. Ransom, 60 Mo. 535.

So, where there was no jurisdiction for want of notice, process, or appearance, as there was a remedy by action of trespass. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Lowder, supra; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 59 Mo. 146.

And in Bear v. Youngman, 19 Mo. App. 41, it was said that an injunction will not be granted solely on the ground that the judgment is void.

In the main case of TEXAS MEXICAN R. CO. V. WRIGHT, Affirming 29 S. W. 1134, although a judgment was held void for want of jurisdiction of the defendant where a railway company was sued and the summons was issued against "W. H. V., agent of the Texas Mexican Railway Company at San Diego, Tex.," yet an injunction was refused because there was a remedy of certiorari.

This is in accord with the weight of authority, although there is some conflict. The majority of cases deny injunctions where there is a remedy at law; but some few cases grant injunctions although the remedy at law is clear; and some cases grant injunctions on the ground that there is no remedy at law. The weight of authority is clear that an injunction should be denied unless a valid defense to the action is shown, although some cases have granted injunctions without requiring this to be done, and some cases have allowed injunctions without reference to the question of valid defense.

The following cases in this note denied injunctions on the ground that there was a remedy at law: Armstrong v. Cheshire, 2 Dev. Eq. 234. 34 Am. Dec. 273; Harrison v. Crumb, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 991; Knox County v. Harshman, 31 L. R. A.

133 U. S. 152, 33 L. ed. 536; Stockton v. Ransom, 60 Mo. 535.

By an action against the attorney. Everett v. Warner Bank, 58 N. H. 340; Bunton v. Lyford, 37 N. H. 512, 75 Am. Dec. 144; Piggott v. Addicks, 3 G. Greene, 427, 56 Am. Dec. 547; Harris v. Gwin, 10 Smedes & M. 583.

By action against the marshal. Walker v. Robbins, 55 U. S. 14 How. 584, 14 L. ed. 552.

By action against the sheriff. Taylor v. Lewis, 2 J. J. Marsh. 400, 19 Am. Dec. 135.

By suit for damages. Connery v. Swift, 9 Nev. 89. By affidavit of illegality. Morris v. Morris, 78 Ga. 733.

By affidavit of illegality or motion to set aside. Hart v. Lazaron, 46 Ga. 396.

By appeal. Holman v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex.) 30 S. W. 1120; Herwick v. Koken Barber Supply Co. 61 Mo. App. 454.

By appeal or certiorari. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Ware, 74 Tex. 47.

By appeal, certiorari, or direct application to the court. Wingfield v. McClure, 48 Ark. 510.

By arresting process. Sanchez v. Carriaga, 31 Cal. 170.

By certiorari. Crandall v. Bacon, 20 Wis. 640, 91 Am. Dec. 451; Fleming v. Nunn, 61 Miss. 603; Kanawha & O. R. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364.

On a constable's bond. Williams v. Hitzie, 83 Ind. 303.

By defending a suit to revive. Haynes v. Aultman, 36 Neb. 257.

By habeas corpus. Lance v. McCoy, 34 W. Va. 416.

By motion. Gooley v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 146; Lyon v. Bolliv, 7 Ill. 629; Fullan v. Hooper, 19 N. Y. Week. Dig. 93, Affirming 66 How. Pr. 75; Mason v. Miles, 63 N. C. 584.

By motion or appeal. Whitehurst v. Merchants' & F. Transp. Co. 109 N. C. 344.

By motion to quash. Stockton v. Ransom, 60 Mo. 535.

By motion to recall the execution or motion to set aside, or by action against the plaintiff in the judgment. Wilkinson v. Rewey, 59 Wis. 554.

By motion to set aside. Comstock v. Clemens, 19 Cal. 77; Gates v. Lane, 49 Cal. 286; Lasselle v. Moore, 1 Blackf. 226; Luco v. Brown, 73 Cal. 3; Partin v. Luterloh, 6 Jones, Eq. 341.

By motion to set aside or by appeal. Petalka v. Fitle, 33 Neb. 756.

By motion to set aside or by writ of recordari. Gallop v. Allen, 113 N. C. 24.

By motion to stay the judgment. Critchfield v. Porter, 3 Ohio, 518.

By motion for a new trial. Hamblin v. Knight, 81 Tex. 351; Woodward v. Pike, 43 Neb. 777.

By motion for a new trial or writ of error coram nobis, or suit in equity for relief. Hurlbut v. Thomas, 55 Conn. 181.

By opening the judgment. Hollinger v. Reeme, 138 Ind. 363, 24 L. R. A. 46.

By remedy to correct the same. Gould v. Loughran, 19 Neb. 382.

By defending on a replevin bond. Proctor v. Pettritt, 25 Neb. 96.

By action of trespass. Geers v. Scott (Tex.) 33 S. W. 587; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Lowder, 29 Mo. App. 3; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 80 Mo. 146.

Messrs. C. L. Coyner, S. H. Woods, and George B. Hufford, for defendant in error: A petition for injunction restraining the sale of real estate under a void judgment, which shows on its face that the amount of said judgment was over $20, and that at the time of making the application for injunction ninety days had not elapsed from the date of the rendition of said judgment, and which fails to show any reason why petitioner did not avail

By action of trespass or trover. Davidson v. Floyd, 15 Fla. 667.

By writ of error. Alabama Ins. Co. v. Kingman, 21 Ill. App. 493.

By writ of prohibition, or motion to set aside, or action against the sheriff. Stites v. Knapp, 2 Ga. Dec. 36.

The following cases granted an injunction although there was a remedy at law: Landrum v. Farmer, 7 Bush, 46; Wilson v. Montgomery, 14 Smedes & M. 205; Propst v. Meadows, 13 Ill. 157; Nelson v. Rockwell, 14 Ill. 375; Caruthers v. Hartsfield, 3 Yerg. 366, 24 Am. Dec. 560.

And the following cases granted an injunction on the ground that there was no adequate remedy at law: Jones v. Pharis, 59 Mo. App. 254; Bornschein v. Finck, 13 Mo. App. 120; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rawlins, 80 Tex. 579; Ridgeway v. Bank of Tennessee, 11 Humph. 523; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Ware, 74 Tex. 47.

The following cases held that an injunction will be denied unless a valid defense is shown: Geraty v. Druiding, 44 Ill. App. 440; John V. Farwell Co. v. Hilbert (Wis.), 30 L. R. A. 235; Pilger v. Torrence, 42 Neb. 903; Gould v. Loughran, 19 Neb. 392; Logan v. Hillegase, 16 Cal. 200; Waldrom v. Waldrom, 76 Ala. 285; Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 138, 73 Am. Dec. 639; Williams v. Hitzle, 83 Ind. 303; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Manning, 23 Neb. 552; Wilson v. Shipman, 34 Neb. 573; Stewart v. Brooks, 62 Miss. 492; Jeffery v. Fitch, 46 Conn. 601; Secor v. Woodward, 8 Ala. 500; Sharp v. Schmidt, 62 Tex. 263; Masterson v. Ashcom, 54 Tex. 324; Cromelin v. McCauley, 67 Ala. 542; Colson v. Leitch, 110 Ill. 504; Burch v. West, 134 Ill. 258, Affirming 33 Ill. App. 359; State v. Hill, 50 Ark. 458; James v. Howell, 37 Neb. 320; Langley v. Ashe, 38 Neb. 53; Crocker v. Allen, 34 S. C. 452; Taggart v. Wood, 20 Iowa, 236; Winters v. Means, 25 Neb. 242; Fowler v. Lee, 10 Gill & J. 358, 32 Am. Dec. 172; King v. Watts, 23 La. Ann. 563.

And the following cases granted an injunction without requiring a valid defense to be shown: Bornschein v. Finck, 13 Mo. App. 120; Wilson v. Sparkman, 17 Fla. 871, 35 Am. Rep. 110; United States Mut. Acc. Ins. Co. v. Reisinger, 43 Mo. App. 571; San Juan & St. L. Min. & S. Co. v. Finch, 6 Colo. 214; Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 503, 23 L. ed. 396; Blakeslee v. Murphy, 44 Conn. 188; Mills v. Scott, 43 Fed. Rep. 452; Bell v. Williams, 1 Head, 229; White v. Espey, 21 Or. 328; Ridgeway v. Bank of Tennessee, 11 Humph. 523; Ryan v. Boyd, 33 Ark. 778 (Overruled in State v. Hill, 50 Ark. 458); Nicholson v. Stephens, 47 Ind. 185; Witt v. Kaufman, 25 Tex. Supp. 384.

II. As to party.

An injunction was granted where a judgment was fraudulently changed as to the parties after the term, and was entered against the complainant without notice. Byars v. Justin, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Wilson) 1 686.

And where a judgment was rendered by a justice in favor of the plaintiff, and on a second trial the defendant obtained judgment, and the justice erased the same without notice to the defendant, at the instance of the plaintiff, and issued an execution on the first judgment. Smith v. Chandler, 13 Ind. 513.

And where a default judgment on a note of a feme covert was void as against her separate estate. Griffith v. Clarke, 18 Md. 457.

And in case of judgment against a married woman alone on a note in which her husband did 31 L. R. A.

not unite as where there was no statute authorizing such a judgment. Hoffman v. Shupp, 80 Md. 611.

But an injunction was refused in Russell v. Interstate Lumber Co. 112 Mo. 40, where the parties to a judgment of sale under a mechanic's lien, had no interest in the property and the court had no jurisdiction to order the sale. If void the sale would not affect the complainant.

So, in Wilkinson v. Rewey, 59 Wis. 554, an injunction was refused against executions upon two pretended judgments alleged to be no judgments because one had not been properly docketed and there were no parties to the other, as they could be set aside or vacated and the executions recalled on motion in the original actions, and such was a complete remedy at law, and for the further reason that it was not alleged that the judgments were in substance inequitable.

And where the Federal court had no jurisdiction to render a judgment on account of the citizenship of the parties. Skirving v. National L. Ins. Co. 59 Fed. Rep. 742.

And where the plaintiff at law was not a corporation as alleged, but such objection was not made or excused before judgment. Mahan v. Accommodation Bank, 26 La. Ann. 34.

And where one of the parties to a judgment was dead at the time of its rendition, as there was a remedy by appeal. Holman v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex.) 30 S. W. 1120.

See also the main case of TEXAS MEXICAN R. CO. v. WRIGHT, refusing an injunction where process was issued against and served upon an agent of a corporation defendant, as there was a remedy by certiorari.

For injunctions on account of death of party, see note to Gum-Elastic Roofing Co. v. Mexico Pub. Co. (Ind.) 30 L. R. A. 700, Injunctions against judgments for errors and irregularities.

III. As to time.

As to an injunction claimed because the judgment was void or without jurisdiction on account of time, there is some conflict of authority. But injunctions on this ground have been generally refused where there was adequate remedy at law.

An injunction was allowed against a judgment where the summons required an appearance at an impossible time, as service on the 27th day of the month to appear on the 1st day of the same month. The question of valid defense does not appear to be discussed. Rice v. American Nat. Bank, 3 Colo. App. 81.

And where a garnishee was notified to appear at the pending term instead of at "the next term" as required by the statute, although the complainant appeared at the pending term but did not make a defense, as the court had temporarily adjourned and he believed that the adjournment was for the term, and judgment was rendered in his absence. Padden v. Moore, 58 Iowa, 703.

And where the justice of the peace had no power to enter judgment as the debt was not due. Kapp v. Teel, 33 Tex. 811.

And where the justice lost jurisdiction of the case by an adjournment. Iowa Union Teleph. Co. v. Boylan, 86 Iowa, 90.

But an injunction was refused against a judgment rendered at an improper time where it was not shown that complainant had not an adequate remedy at law by a suit for damages. Connery v. Swift, 9 Nev. 39.

himself of the remedy of certiorari, is not sufficient to invoke the equitable powers of a district judge, and is subject to a general demurrer.

Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Ware, 74

And where there was a remedy by motion to set aside or by appeal. Petalka v. Fitle, 33 Neb. 756.

And where there was a remedy in the court to correct the same, and a valid defense to the action was not shown. Gould v. Loughran, 19 Neb. 392.

And where there was a remedy by defense of a suit upon a replevin bond. Proctor v. Pettitt, 25 Neb. 96.

And where the prevailing party was not a party to any deception, and complainant did not tender the amount due, or take an appeal. Herwiok v. Koken Barber Supply Co. 61 Mo. App. 454.

And where there was a remedy by motion to quash the execution, and there was no allegation of fraud or accident. Stockton v. Ransom, 60 Mo. 535. But see the Missouri cases, supra, I.

And where there was a remedy in the court rendering judgment to arrest process, and the judgment was void because not rendered in term time, and one of the defendants in the injunction suit was insolvent, but nothing was said about the other. Sanchez v. Carriaga, 31 Cal. 170.

And where there was a remedy by certiorari against the judgment void because of an indefinite adjournment of the court prior thereto. Crandall v. Bacon, 20 Wis. 639, 91 Am. Dec. 451.

And where there was a remedy by motion to set aside, or by a writ of recordari, and jurisdiction was lost by a continuance, and lack of notice. Gallop v. Allen, 118 N. C. 24.

And in Bear v. Youngman, 19 Mo. App. 41, an injunction was denied where a judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace on Thanksgiving day, as the statute did not prohibit a justice from holding court on that day, and it was said that if it was void that fact alone would not entitle one to relief by injunction. See the Missouri cases, supra, I.

And an injunction against a judgment was denied where a justice of the peace rendered a judgment on the 4th of July, which was a legal holiday, but there was no statute prohibiting courts from sitting on that day if it did not fall on Sunday. Hamer v. Sears, 81 Ga. 288.

And where by the terms of a statute a garnishee was discharged by lapse of time. Hastings v. Cropper, 3 Del. Ch. 165.

For injunctions against judgments on account of the time of their rendition, see note to Gum-Elastic Roofing Co. v. Mexico Pub. Co. (Ind.) 30 L. R. A. 700, Injunctions against judgments for errors and irregularities.

IV. As to venue.

Where the court had no jurisdiction over the person of the defendant on account of venue, and there was a valid defense to the action, injunctions have generally been granted, but not to third parties, and have been refused on account of pleadings or where a valid defense was not shown.

So, an injunction was granted against a judgment that was void for want of jurisdiction as to venue, although the defendant had a remedy at law, and attempted to pursue it, but on account of the misapprehension of the law by the court he was deprived of the same. Connell v. Stelson, 33 Iowa, 147.

And the same was held in Bornschein v. Flnck, 13 Mo. App. 120, where an appeal would have been a waiver, and the constable was not liable because he had no authority to look beyond the execution. A defense to the merits was not required to be shown and complainant was entitled to have a threatened levy enjoined. The authority of this case was denied in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Lowder, 59 Mo. App. 3, claiming that the contrary was decided, prior thereto, in Stockton v. Ransom, 60 Mo. 535.

31 L. R. A.

Tex. 47; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rawlins, 80 Tex. 579; Anderson v. Oldham, 82 Tex. 228; Wood v. Lenox, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 318; Western v. Woods, 1 Tex. 1; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bacon, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 55; Gulf, C. & S. F.

And an injunction was granted in Jones v. Pharis, 59 Mo. App. 254, where an application for a change of venue was filed before a justice of the peace in a detainer suit, as under Mo. Rev. Stat. 880, § 6241, the justice was divested of jurisdiction; distinguishing St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Lowder, supra, on the ground that in Jones v. Pharis, if the plaintiff at law was allowed to reap the fruits of his illegal judgment, the complainants would be deprived of the legal advantage which their possession gave them, for the loss of which the law would afford them no reparation and it might result in the loss of their land. See Missouri cases, supra, I.

In Grass v. Hess, 37 Ind. 193, an injunction was granted against a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace in a county other than that in which the complainant resided. No question was made as to a valid defense. In referring to Gage v. Clark, infra, it was said that though the court decided that case against the applicant for an injunction on account of the imperfection in his papers, it is clearly to be understood that when a judgment is rendered without an appearance or consent of the defendant when the suit is in the wrong township, an injunction will be granted.

But an injunction was refused where a justice of the peace rendered a judgment against a resident of another township of the same county, which judgment was claimed to be void because there was at that time a justice in the township of the defendant, as it was not shown that the defendant did not consent to the jurisdiction. Gage v. Clark, 22 Ind. 163.

And where mortgagees had canceled their mortgages and acquired the land and claimed that on account of venue a court had no jurisdiction to render judgments against the mortgagor, which were prior to the mortgage, as the surrender of the mortgage reduced the mortgagees to the position of purchaser. And it was said that if the judgments were void they would not affect complainant, and if not void they should not be enjoined. Blekeley v. Branyan, 28 S. C. 445.

And where service of process was made by the deputy sheriff out of his bailiwick, and he promised to return the same non est, but a valid defense was not shown. Gardner v. Jenkins, 14 Md. 58.

And where a party having a summer residence in New York was proceeded against by an attachment and was brought into court by a curator ad hoc in Louisiana, which state he claimed as his residence. Morris v. Bienvenu, 30 La. Ann. 878.

And where the judgment was not in the parish of complainant's domicile under La. Civ. Code, arts. 162, 167, prohibiting suits except in the domicile of defendant's residence, but providing that he might be sued in the parish of his former domicile within one year after removal therefrom, unless a public declaration of intention to change the same was made. King v. Watts, 23 La. Ann. 563.

V. As to amount.

An injunction was granted against a judgment in excess of the amount allowed, under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 4843, providing that upon the rendition of a judgment against a claimant in a trial of right to property a judgment shall be rendered for the amount of the property and legal interest. Wills Point Bank v. Bates, 76 Tex. 333.

R. Co. v. Henderson, 83 Tex. 70; Smith v. Ryan, 20 Tex. 661; Hamblin v. Knight, 81 Tex. 351; Meniffee v. Myers, 33 Tex. 690; Harrison v. Crumb, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 991; Windisch v. Gussett, 30 Tex. 744; Kanawha & O. R. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364; Hilliard, Inj. p. 214, § 230; Freem. Executions, § 435.

And where a justice of the peace rendered a judgment in excess of that allowed under Fla. Const. 1888, art. 6, § 11, limiting the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace. No question was made as to a valid defense. Wilson v. Sparkman, 17 Fla. 371, 35 Am. Rep. 110.

But an injunction was refused against a judgment in the Federal court in a collateral attack by a third party on the ground that the amount was below the jurisdictional amount, where the counts together aggregated more than that amount, and twenty years' time had elapsed. Hill v. Gordon, 45 Fed. Rep. 276.

And where in three several actions the defendant's claim of set-off, which was in excess of the county court's jurisdiction, was allowed against each of the judgments, and the judgments were rendered by agreement. Nichols v. Snow, 42 Tex. 72.

And where an account beyond the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace was split into several cases, and the bill did not show how much the alleged account was, or that the objection was made before the justice. Brundage v. Candle, 25 Tex. Supp. 387.

And where it was not shown that complainant did not participate in such an action, or that he was thereby deprived of some right. Pryor v. Emerson, 22 Tex. 162.

And where a judgment was rendered against a garnishee for about $500, under Mo. Gen. Stat. 1885, § 35, providing for garnishment proceedings, it was held that Mo. act 1858, p. 59, § 1, limiting the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in an action on a contract to $300, exclusive of interest, did not apply. Davis v. Staples, 45 Mo. 567.

VI. As to judge or court.

When the judge was incompetent to try the cause, or had no jurisdiction to render such judgment on account of a prohibitory statute, injunctions have been granted, but have been refused where complainant was guilty of fraud.

So, an injunction was granted against a judgment where a mayor had no jurisdiction to try civil cases. Smith v. Deweese, 41 Tex. 504.

And where the district court ordered a resale of land for the purchase money, where the purchaser had died and the county court had exclusive jurisdiction of such a case. Cunningham v. Taylor, 20 Tex. 126.

And where a justice of the peace could not render final judgment, under Kan. Code, § 44, providing only for an order against a garnishee, which cannot be enforced by execution. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Reid, 34 Kan. 410.

And where a court ordered a sale under a mechanic's lien, but lost jurisdiction by a repeal of the statute. Holcomb v. Boynton, 151 Ill. 294.

And where the judge was incompetent, under Tex. act May 24, 1838, § 8, providing that a judge of the district court shall be disqualified, on account of interest, from sitting in a cause. Chambers v. Hodges, 23 Tex. 104.

And the same was held under Tenn. Code, § 4098, prohibiting a justice who is related to the party from sitting in the case unless his incompetency is waived in writing, where such a waiver was not made. Smith v. Pearce, 6 Baxt. 72.

But an injunction against a judgment was refused where the party rendering the judgment in a sham case was not judge of court, but complainant was a party and privy thereto, and imposed on the supreme court, which affirmed such judgment. Blackburn v. Bell, 91 Ill. 434.

31 L. R. A.

VII. Matters of process and service.

a. Form.

Irregularities in regard to the form of process will not deprive the court of jurisdiction to render judgment, or authorize an injunction.

So, an injunction was refused against a judgment and execution for want of legal service of process where the writ was not stamped, as a statute provided for having the error of court reviewed, and it was supposed the court passed on the question of service before judgment was rendered. Windisch v. Gussett, 30 Tex. 744.

And where a revenue stamp was not attached to the process, and such defect was waived by appearance. Wilsey v. Maynard, 21 Iowa, 107.

And where there was no seal on the process, as there was a remedy to arrest the process or to appeal, especially where no valid defense was shown. Logan v. Hillegas, 16 Cal. 200. For lack of seal, see also Jilsun v. Stebbins, 41 Wis. 235, infra, d.

And where a summons was not signed or sealed by a clerk of the court in South Carolina, as under the South Carolina Code the summons does not issue from the courts, but is a notice from the plaintiff to the defendant. Genobles v. West, 23 S. C. 154.

And where it was claimed that a justice of the peace never acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant on account of the form of process, and that the judgment was void, as there was an adequate remedy at law by motion to set aside the execution. Luco v. Brown, 73 Cal. 3.

And where the petition and citation were not served in the French language, which was the maternal tongue of the defendant. Ortes v. Lailande, 4 La. Ann. 188.

And where a garnishee did not understand the English language or the purport of the process served on him. Windwart v. Allen, 13 Md. 196. See further, Ballinger v. Tarbell, under next heading.

b. Time and manner.

Injunctions have been refused where the return of service of process was defective, insufficient, or irregular, or where the process required the defendant to appear at a time before that provided by law, or where service of process was made on the Jewish Sabbath; but have been granted where the process was served by a party interested, or on Sunday, as the judgments were void.

So, an injunction was refused against a judgment where the service of process was good, but the return was defective. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Dugran, 32 Ill. App. 351.

And where service of process was defective and a defense was ineffectually made after the judgment in the court of law. Graham v. Roberts, 1 Head. 56.

And where a judgment was voidable because rendered upon a defective service, as there was a statutory mode of correcting the error by appeal or certiorari. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Ware, 74 Tex. 47.

Or where there was ambiguity in the return of the service of process, and the defendant appeared before the justice at the time, and no steps were taken by certiorari to test the service. Fleming v. Nunn, 61 Miss. 603.

And where the return of process by a constable was insufficient or irregular, as a bill for injunction releases all errors of law. Moss v. Craft, 1 Mo. 720.

And where the return of process was irregular as not showing the place of service, and the process was properly served. Pico v. Sunol, 6 Cal. 294.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error presented its petition to the Honorable A. L. McLane, praying a writ of injunction against J. A. Wright, C. L. Coyner, and John Larcade, in which it was alleged, in substance, that on the 26th day of February, 1894, J. A. Wright, by his

And where the writ was returned prior to the time named in the copy served, and the complainant knew of the mistake and did not show any valid defense to the action. Gallup v. Manning, 48 Conn. 25.

And where the summons was made returnable in a shorter time than that required by statute, and was so returned. Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16 Iowa, 491, 85 Am. Dec. 527.

And where the process served required the defendant to appear before the justice at a time prior than that stated in the writ, but there was no allegation of accident, surprise, or fraud, or that he was misled. Hale v. McComas, 50 Tex. 384.

And where a summons was not duly served. Coon v. Jones, 10 Iowa, 131.

And where the service of process was within a less time than that required by statute, and complainant was negligent and did not show a good defense. Waldrom v. Waldrom, 78 Ala. 285.

And where the return of service of process on a corporation was amended during the term so as to comply with the statute, and where in such a case a default was rendered without evidence. Boyd v. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. 17 Md. 195, 79 Am. Dec. 646. See further, Service on corporation, infra, f.

And where the service of process was returned by the deputy marshal in his own name, and the execution sale was attacked by a third party; as the defendant in the action is the party to question the return, and it cannot be collaterally attacked. Hill v. Gordon, 45 Fed. Rep. 276.

And where service of process was made against a Hebrew on the seventh day of the week, although 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. §§ 60-71, make it a misdemeanor for knowingly or maliciously causing process to be served on that day on certain persons. But such knowledge or malice was not established in this case. Marks v. Wilson, 11 Abb. Pr. 87.

See also note to Merriman v. Walton (Cal.) 30 L. R. A. 788, Injunctions against judgments obtained by fraud, accident, mistake, surprise and duress.

And where the service of process was irregular, but no injustice was done. Harrison v. Crumb, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 991.

And where the process by judicial attachment was irregular. Bissell v. Bozman, 2 Dev. Eq. 154.

And where the constable made a mistake indorsing on the copy of the summons delivered to the defendant a less amount than the summons called for, and made a proper return of the summons, as such summons was only voidable. In the original opinion in this case it was understood that the indorsement upon the original summons was of the same amount as the indorsement upon the copy, and the opinion was changed on rehearing as above. Bassett v. Mitchell, 40 Kan. 549.

But an injunction was granted against a judgment where it was void because of service of process on Sunday, and a sale on execution was about to be made, where the defendant tendered into court the amount of the judgment. Hauswirth v. Sullivan, 6 Mont. 203.

And where service of process was made by the sheriff, who was plaintiff in the action, and there was a good defense, as Ky. Civ. Code, § 737, provided that process in an action wherein the sheriff was a party should have been directed to the coroner, or, if he was interested, to a constable. Knott v. Jarboe, 1 Met. (Ky.) 504.

See also, as to officer interested, Martin v. Parsons, 49 Cal. 94, infra, c.

See further, as to manner of service, Ortes v. 31 L. R. A.

Lallande, 4 La. Ann. 188, and Windwart v. Allen, 13 Md. 196, supra, a.

c. Fraud as to service.

That the defendant was enticed within the jurisdiction of the court in order to serve process, or that there was an alteration of service, has been held insufficient cause for an injunction against a judgment that was not fraudulent; but where the return was fraudulently altered an injunction was granted.

So, an injunction was refused against a judgment where the defendant was enticed into the state in order to serve process, and such fact was not made a defense in the action. Vastine v. Bast, 41 Mo. 498.

And where the complainant removed the cause to the Federal court. Sayre v. Harpoid, 33 W. Va. 553.

And where a service of process was erased and another name was substituted on the return by the sheriff, and no charge was made of fraud or that the sheriff did not return the summons executed as it appeared, or that any alterations were made in the return, and no defense was shown to the action. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 188, 73 Am. Dec. 639.

But an injunction was granted against the use of a judgment as estoppel where the purchaser of the land thereunder was an officer of the court, and had fraudulently made a false entry, showing service of process. Martin v. Parsons, 49 Cal. 94.

See also, as to officer interested, Knott v. Jarboe, 1 Met. (Ky.) 504, supra, b.

d. Acceptance of service.

An acceptance of service of process will prevent an injunction on account of process. But where the party so accepting is not the defendant or duly authorized, an injunction will be granted.

So, an injunction against a judgment was refused where the defendant therein acknowledged in writing personal service of a copy of the summons and complaint, as at most it would be a mere irregularity, although it was claimed that the process was not under seal. Jilsun v. Stebbins, 41 Wis. 235.

But an injunction was granted where service of process was accepted by a person not duly authorized, and no showing of a valid defense to the action was required. Mills v. Scott, 43 Fed. Rep. 452.

And in Finney v. Clark, 86 Va. 354, the same was held where the service was accepted by the son of the defendant without his knowledge or authority. It was said that "when the bill presents only the question of the validity of the proceedings resulting in the judgment, and does not in any way raise the question on the merits, or bring them before the court, the court of its own motion shifts the lawsuit to the chancery side and assumes chancery jurisdiction on the merits of the case. . . . As the record presented shows no memorandum of payments or set-offs, no itemized statement of the accounts between the parties, it is impossible for this court to determine the merits, nor is it incumbent on it to consider them."

e. Party served.

A misnomer of the defendant in the process, or that the defendant was privileged from process, will not entitle to an injunction against the judgment.

So, an injunction was refused where the com-attorney, C. L. Coyner, in a suit before James F. Mount, a justice of the peace in Duval county, recovered a judgment against the petitioner for the sum of $100, and for $11.70, costs of court, with interest at 6 per cent per annum from the date of judgment; that on the 17th day of March, 1894, Coyner, as attorney for Wright, procured James F. Mount to plainant was served with process, but was named incorrectly therein. Genobles v. West, 23 S. C. 154.

And where the defendant was grossly negligent in making his defense. Graham v. Roberts, 1 Head, 56.

And where the writ was served on D. C., Jr., who made no defense, but gave a forthcoming bond and appealed, although the suit was against D. C. Sr. Chisholm v. Anthony, 2 Hen. & M. 13.

And where a party summoned by a wrong name appeared, and allowed a judgment against him by his true name, where there was no allegation that he did not owe the debt, as there was a remedy on a constable's bond. Williams v. Hitzle, 83 Ind. 303.

And where the complainant was a member of the city council of Baltimore and in the discharge of his duties at the time of service, and claimed exemption on account of privilege. (A judgment against a privileged person is voidable, but not void.) Peters v. League, 13 Md. 58, 71 Am. Dec. 622.

And where the sheriff promised to inform the complainant whether or not the process was against him or another person of a similar name, and failed to do so. Higgins v. Bullock, 73 Ill. 205.

And where the defendant claimed that he was not the party named in the process, but swore to an affidavit of defense, and did not know what it contained. Burke v. Gibson, 6 Kulp, 310.

But in Givens v. Tidmore, 8 Ala. 745, an injunction was granted against a judgment which was upon a note that complainant had never signed, and had had no notice of the suit, and proved that the note was made by another person of a similar name. On this showing the defendant in the equity case was required to prove that complainant was served with process.

See also supra, II.

f. Service on corporation.

Generally injunctions have been granted against judgments where the defendants were corporations and the service of process was not made on the officer designated by statute as the proper person on whom it should be made; but have been denied where there was an adequate remedy at law, or where the facts constituting a valid defense were not stated.

So, an injunction was granted where the service of process was upon a person not the proper officer of a corporation, and there was a valid defense. The return of service of process stating facts not within the personal knowledge of the officer may be impeached. Chambers v. King Wrought Iron Bridge Mfrs., 16 Kan. 270.

And where process was not served, as required by law, at the principal office of the corporation. Wagner v. Shank, 59 Md. 313.

And where the citation was against an agent, and not against the corporation, and the amount was such that there was no remedy by appeal or certiorari. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rawlins, 80 Tex. 579.

And where service was made on the clerk of the company's agent. Southern Exp. Co. v. Craft, 43 Miss. 508.

And where the service was upon an agent of an insurance company not authorized to receive the same, under Iowa Code, § 2613, providing that where the corporation has, for the transaction of any business, an office or agency in any county other than that in which the principal resides, service may be made on any agent or clerk employed in such office or agency in an action growing out of that office. State Ins. Co. v. Waterhouse, 78 Iowa, 674.

And where a justice of the peace issued a summons to be served in another county, as Mo. Laws, p. 184, providing that every foreign insurance company shall designate the superintendent of insurance as its agent to accept service of process in any part of the state, does not enlarge the power of a justice of the peace. There is no statement in the case as to requiring a valid defense to be made. United States Mut. Acc. Ins. Co. v. Reisinger, 43 Mo. App. 571.

And where the statute required that service upon an unincorporated company should be upon certain named officers, and the service was returned served on the "within named company," which denied such service and also the indebtedness. Grand Tower Min. & T. Co. v. Schirmer, 64 Ill. 106.

And where service was upon a person who had ceased to be an agent of the company. Combs v. Hamlin Wizard Oil Co., 58 Ill. App. 123.

And where an attachment was rendered in a suit against a corporation and no summons was directed against the corporation or served on the same, and the record showed service on three individuals. No showing was required to be made that the plaintiff in the injunction suit had a good defense to the action. San Juan & St. L. Min. & S. Co. v. Finch, 6 Colo. 214.

But an injunction was refused against a judgment where it was claimed that the person upon whom service of process against the corporation was made was not the proper party to be served, and the facts constituting the defense were not specifically stated. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Manning, 23 Neb. 552.

And where process was served on a "late agent" of the corporation defendant, and there was a remedy by writ of error. Alabama Ins. Co. v. Kingman, 21 Ill. App. 483.

See also TEXAS MEXICAN R. Co. v. WRIGHT.

And where the return on the summons did not show service on an attorney of the corporation in the county of his residence, although W. Va. Code 1887, chaps. 50, 54, provide that failure to so return shall render the service invalid; but there was a remedy of certiorari. Kanawha & O. R. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364.

And where the summons was not served on the state superintendent of insurance, but upon the proper officer, and was valid, under Taylor's (Kan.) Gen. Stat. 1889, § 4890, providing for service of process on an insurance company or its chief officer, as this statute was not repealed by implication by an act providing for service upon the superintendent of insurance. Burlington Ins. Co. v. Mortimer, 52 Kan. 784.

g. Service on partners.

Injunctions have been denied, where judgments were against a firm, on service of process on one of the partners when the other member was not in the state. Winters v. Means, 25 Neb. 242.

And where the judgment was against one member of a firm and a codefendant, instead of being against the firm and the codefendant, and was entered by agreement, and the parties were not prejudiced. Crenshaw v. Wickersham, 15 Iowa, 154.

But in Purviance v. Edwards, 17 Fla. 140, which was a suit to vacate a judgment, it was held that complainant would not be bound if he was not a member of the firm, under the Florida statute authorizing a judgment against the members of a firm, after service of process on one member, and issue execution against petitioner, which was placed in the hands of defendant Larcade, acting as constable of precinct No. 1 of that county, and instructed the said constable to levy upon property of the petitioner; that on the 21st day of March, 1894, the constable aforesaid demanded of petitioner's agent in San Diego a levy upon property to make the

if the service at the complainant's residence was not according to Fla. Thomp. Dig. 286, requiring information to be given to the persons with whom the copy was left, even if there was service on the other parties. It was said that the "general practice of cases of this character is for the court of law to grant a stay of proceedings and to remit the party to a court of equity where, by injunction, he can prevent and restrain the party from availing himself of such judgment."

See further, infra, VIII, On account of appearance.

b. Service at residence.

Injunctions have been granted against judgments rendered on a return of service of process at the "defendant's residence," where the same was not served at his residence, or where he was absent from the same and had a valid defense; but have been denied where there was a remedy at law, or complainant was negligent, or where the person with whom the process was left was a member of the family.

So, an injunction was granted against a judgment where process was returned as served by posting the same at complainant's place of abode, and the defendant and his family had removed from that house some time before and were residing in another place. The court does not discuss the question of valid defense. Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 508, 23 L. ed. 398.

And where service of process was made at complainant's residence during his absence from the state, and he had no notice of the suit, and had a valid defense. Jones v. Commercial Bank, 5 How. (Miss.) 43, 35 Am. Dec. 419; La Piece v. Hughes, 24 Miss. 60.

And where a sheriff returned process served "at the residence," and the complainant at that time was a nonresident of the state. The case does not show whether a defense to the action was required to be made or not. McNeill v. Edie, 24 Kan. 108.

And where a return of process, "executed by leaving a copy," was erased as to all but "executed" by the plaintiff's attorney, and the defendant did not reside in that county, and had no knowledge of the suit until after judgment, and had a valid defense. The injunction was granted notwithstanding he had prosecuted a writ of error. Wilson v. Montgomery, 14 Smedes & M. 205.

And in Blakeslee v. Murphy, 44 Conn. 188, an injunction was granted where process was served at complainant's residence while he was confined in an asylum in another part of the state. It was held not necessary to show a good defense to the action at law in such a case. But this latter proposition in effect was overruled by Jeffery v. Fitch, 46 Conn. 601, infra, where no process was served; but on this question neither case cites any authorities, and the latter case does not refer to the former.

In Lucas v. Waller, Morris (Iowa) 303, it was said that if service of process was not made at defendant's residence as shown by the return, there was a remedy in equity against proceedings on the judgment, or by motion to set aside.

But an injunction was refused against a judgment where process was served at the usual place of abode of the defendant, although complainant was absent from the state and had no notice of the pendency of the suit, and he had ample remedy at law by petition for a new trial, or by writ of error coram nobis, or by a suit in equity for relief. Hurlbut v. Thomas, 55 Conn. 181.

31 L. R. A.

And where the service was similar, and there was a remedy by motion to set aside the judgment, or by appeal, and the complainant was absent from the state at the time process against him was served on his wife as follows: "I hereby certify that I left a copy of the within in hands of Mrs. E. H. C." Comstock v. Clemens, 19 Cal. 77.

And where, in a suit to revive the judgment, complainant could have made his defense that in the original suit the process was left at a house where he had formerly resided. Haynes v. Aultman, 36 Neb. 257.

And where there was a remedy by motion, and the return of the summons did not affirmatively show that it was served on two persons in the manner prescribed by law, but stated that the service was upon one party by leaving a copy at his house with his sister and upon the other party by leaving a copy with his wife, without saying that the defendants were not found at their usual place of abode, and that these persons were members of the family and of the proper age, and that the purport of the summons was explained. Goolsby v. St. John, 25 Gratt. 146.

And where complainant supposed the sheriff returned process personally served, when it was in fact served at his residence while he was absent from the state, and he had moved to open the judgment within a year, under Mich. Rev. Stat. 1851, chap. 70, § 90, providing for vacating the same within one year, and the year had expired at the time of the injunction suit. Myrick v. Edmundson, 2 Minn. 259.

An injunction was refused against a judgment rendered on service of process at complainant's residence, where a copy was given to his mother-in-law, a member of the family, while complainant was absent from the state, although he did not know of the judgment until after it had been rendered, and the justice had admitted improper evidence on the trial, but there was no fraud; and the service was held to be sufficient under the statute. Merritt v. Baldwin, 6 Wis. 439.

And in Hamer v. Sears, 81 Ga. 288, an injunction was refused where service of process was made at the defendant's place of residence while he was known to be absent from the state, and judgment was rendered on the 4th of July, which was a legal holiday, but there was no statute prohibiting courts from sitting on that day unless it should fall on Sunday. The court does not discuss the question of service of process.

1. Where there was no service as required by law.

There is conflict of authority as to granting injunctions on the ground of no service of process. The weight of authority is that an injunction will only be granted where there is a valid defense to the action. Some cases do not refer to the necessity of showing a valid defense, and some hold that it does not have to be shown. Other cases deny relief on the ground that there is a remedy at law, and some on the ground of defective pleading in the injunction suit; and some cases hold that the return of the officer is conclusive and cannot be overcome. The proof must be clear to overcome the officer's return.

So, an injunction was granted against a judgment where the complainant was not served with process and had no notice or did not appear, and he had a good defense to the action. Robinson v. Reid, 50 Ala. 60; Crafts v. Dexter, 8 Ala. 707, 42 Am. Dec. 606; Rice v. Tobias, 89 Ala. 214; Weaver v. Poyer, 79 Ill. 417; Wofford v. Booker (Tex.) 30 S. W. 67; Cobbey said judgment, and that petitioner's agent pointed out a box car of the reasonable value of $300, which property the said constable refused to levy upon, but levied the execution upon certain lots described in the petition, being the depot grounds of petitioner's railroad, worth $1,000. It was alleged in the petition that, when the said Wright filed

v. Wright, 34 Neb. 771; Walker v. Gilbert, Freeman, Ch. (Miss.) 55.

And where the record did not show service of process. Givens v. Campbell, 20 Iowa, 79.

And where the return of the service of process was false, and the defendant did not know of the judgment until after it was rendered. Raymond v. Conger, 51 Tex. 536.

And where the false return of process was procured through collusion of the sheriff and the plaintiff at law, and the judgment was not known until five days thereafter, and no objections were made to the bill for injunction on the ground of remedy at law. Hamblen v. Knight, 60 Tex. 36.

And where an old and infirm man claimed ignorance of service of process issued from another county, and that his only knowledge of the suit was through his attorney, who attended to all his business generally, and the failure to make a defense was excused on account of the delay in miscarriage of the letter from his attorney. Herring v. Winans, Smedes & M. Ch. 466.

Or where a summary judgment was taken on a sheriff's bond without service of process on the surety, after the sheriff's term of office had expired. Kinzer v. Helm, 7 Heisk. 675.

Where the application for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, and his answer, did not show personal service, and the order appointing the guardian ad litem did not show that it was filed, and the plaintiff's attorney, and the officer who made proof of service, and the infant, testified that the latter was not personally served,—an injunction was properly granted. Genobles v. West, 23 S. C. 154.

For injunctions against judgments on account of process against infants, see note to Gum-Elastic Roofing Co. v. Mexico Pub. Co. (Ind.) 30 L. R. A. 700, Injunctions against judgments for errors and irregularities.

Where an injunction against a void judgment was dissolved, and a judgment was recovered on the injunction bond for the amount of the void judgment, and a second bill was filed, which was sufficient to enjoin the void judgment for want of service of process,—the judgment on the injunction bond was also enjoined. Weaver v. Poyer, 79 Ill. 417.

In Bramlett v. McVey, 91 Ky. 151, an injunction was granted where the return of service of process was false, under Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 81, § 17, providing that the sheriff's return shall be conclusive except for fraud and mistake,—distinguishing Taylor v. Lewis, and Shoffet v. Menifee, infra, which held that a return could not be attacked collaterally, as they were decided prior to this statute.

And an injunction was granted against a judgment, where the officer deceived the defendant and prevented a defense by reading a copy of the summons in a case to which there was no defense, and made a return of service at the same time of a summons in another action, on a claim that had no foundation. Owens v. Ranstead, 22 Ill. 161.

Some cases grant injunctions without requiring a valid defense to be shown, where the complainant was not served with process and did not know of the judgment in time to defend.

So, a judgment and execution sale were enjoined where there was no service of process or authorized appearance, and a defense to the merits was not required to be shown in the injunction suit. Mills v. Scott, 43 Fed. Rep. 452.

And in Tennessee where it is not necessary to show a valid defense to the action. Bell v. Williams, 1 Head, 229.

And where a cloud on title was created by filing a transcript of the justice of the peace in the county clerk's office, and docketing the judgment in the circuit court, and there was no service of process or appearance, the only equitable showing required being that it would cast a cloud on complainant's title. White v. Espey, 21 Or. 328.

The record showing a return of service of process may be impeached, and an injunction granted, where there is no adequate remedy at law. Ridgeway v. Bank of Tennessee, 11 Humph. 523.

In Ryan v. Boyd, 33 Ark. 778, where the return of service of process was false, and a judgment was rendered in a magistrate's court, and a transcript filed in the circuit court, and the latter court could only act upon the record, an injunction was granted without requiring a defense to the action to be shown; and the remedy of Gantt's (Ark.) Dig. § 2619, providing for quashing an execution in the same court, is only cumulative.

But this was overruled, as to failure to show a valid defense, in State v. Hill, infra.

And an injunction was granted, without regard to a valid defense, where there was no service of process, notice, or appearance, and no real party plaintiff, and the record did not show any service of summons. Nicholson v. Stephens, 47 Ind. 185.

And where the only service of process was an attachment levied on land and an execution sale was about to be made. Ingle v. McCurry, 1 Heisk. 26.

And Injunctions have been granted where the return did not show such service as was required by the statute.

So, an Injunction was granted where the return upon a citation did not show that service was made by the sheriff, and there was no appearance, such judgment being void, and the amount being too small to obtain a remedy at law. In Texas a defense to an action does not have to be shown as against a void judgment before an injunction will be granted against the same. As to a judgment exceeding $20 in amount, the remedy by certiorari prevents an injunction. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Ware, 74 Tex. 47.

And where the process was not served by the sheriff of the proper county. There was nothing said as to showing a valid defense to the action, but the court held that a judgment might be rendered in the injunction-suit for the debt enjoined. Witt v. Kaufman, 25 Tex. Supp. 384.

But an injunction was refused where the record showing a return of service was not overcome by the evidence. Johnson v. Jones, 2 Neb. 126.

And where the evidence as to false return of service was contradictory, and it was not shown that there was a defense on the merits or that the judgment was contrary to equity and good conscience. Wilson v. Shipman, 34 Neb. 573.

And where the evidence was not sufficient to overcome the officer's return. Duncan v. Gerdine, 50 Miss. 550.

And where the evidence was uncertain. Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Holbrook, 92 Ill. 297.

Generally an injunction against a judgment will be denied where there is no service of process or appearance, if a valid defense is not shown.

So, an injunction was not granted where a good defense to the action at law was not shown. Stewart v. Brooks, 62 Miss. 492; Jeffery v. Fitch, 46 Conn.

his suit before the justice of the peace, citation was issued, directing the sheriff or any constable of the said county to summon W. H. Vannort, agent of the Texas Mexican Railway Company at San Diego, Tex.; that petitioner never appeared, nor in any way answered to the said suit, but that, service having been made upon the said W. H. Vannort, 661 (see Blakeslee v. Murphy, 44 Conn. 188, supra, h); Rice v. Tobias, 83 Ala. 348; Secor v. Woodward, 8 Ala. 500.

So, an injunction was refused where the facts stating the defense were not set out in the bill. Sharp v. Schmidt, 62 Tex. 263.

And where the bill in equity did not allege that complainant failed to appear, or did not show a good defense to the action. Masterson v. Ashcom, 54 Tex. 324.

And was refused against an action of ejectment on a decree rendered without service of process or knowledge of the defendant, where it was not made to appear that the result would be other or different from that already reached. Cromelin v. McCauley, 67 Ala. 542.

So, where an agent served an attachment upon himself in a suit by him against his principal who had no notice of the suit until after the time to obtain relief at law. Spooner v. Leland, 5 R. I. 348.

Under Ill. Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 579, § 7, providing that only so much of a judgment at law shall be enjoined as the complainant shall show himself equitably not bound to pay, an injunction will not be granted against a judgment at law for want of service of process and a false return, where no defense to the action is shown. Colson v. Leitch, 110 Ill. 504. See also Virginia v. Dunaway, 17 Ill. App. 68, infra, J.

So, where there was a remedy by writ of error. Burch v. West, 134 Ill. 258, Affirming 83 Ill. App. 359.

And will be refused where the complainant does not deny the indebtedness for which the judgment was rendered, or charge fraud, or that the sheriff did not return the process as executed, as the remedy is against the sheriff. Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 138, 73 Am. Dec. 639.

Equity will relieve against a judgment obtained on a false return of service of process if the complainant shows that he did not know of the pendency of the suit; but an injunction will not be granted where he has no meritorious defense to the action. (Overruling Ryan v. Boyd, 33 Ark. 778.) State v. Hill, 50 Ark. 458.

In Janex v. Howell, 37 Neb. 320, it was said that while there is some conflict the weight of authority is that a court of equity will not enjoin a judgment at law merely on the ground that the process in the suit in which the judgment was rendered was not served on the defendant, or, in other words, that the return of the officer as to service is in fact false; it must be shown that a valid defense exists against the action.

In Langley v. Ashe, 38 Neb. 53, it was held that where a judgment was obtained without service of process, a statement that complainant would have alleged a good defense, without defining it, was insufficient, as the facts constituting such defense must be stated.

Some cases have denied injunctions against judgments where there was no service of process, on the ground that there was an adequate remedy at law by motion, or by affidavit of illegality, or by action against the sheriff. See Burch v. West, supra.

So, an injunction was refused against an execution sale under a judgment void for want of service of process, as there was a remedy at law. Armstrong v. Cheshire, 2 Dev. Eq. 234, 34 Am. Dec. 273.

So, where there was a remedy by motion in the court rendering judgment. Mason v. Miles, 63 N. C. 564.

And where the judgment was not shown to be unjust, or the debt not due. Crocker v. Allen, 84 S. C. 452.

And an injunction against a judgment was refused where there was a remedy by motion before the justice, or by appeal. Whitehurst v. Merchants' & F. Transp. Co. 100 N. C. 344.

And where there was a remedy by motion in the original case, especially where want of equity was established. Fullan v. Hooper, 19 N. Y. Week. Dig. 93, Affirming 66 How. Pr. 75.

And where there was a remedy by motion to set aside. Partin v. Luterloh, 6 Jones, Eq. 341.

And where there was a remedy by affidavit of illegality, or by motion to set aside, under Ga. Code, § 3621, providing that if the defendant has not been served and does not appear, he may take advantage of the defect by affidavit of illegality. Hart v. Lazon, 46 Ga. 396.

And where there was a remedy by a writ of prohibition, or by a motion to set aside the judgment, or by an action against the sheriff. Stites v. Knapp, 2 Ga. Dec. 36.

In Taylor v. Lewis, 2 J. J. Marsh. 400, 19 Am. Dec. 135, and Shoffet v. Menifee, 4 Dana, 150, it was held that where a sheriff falsely returned process as served, the defendant could not collaterally attack the judgment by injunction, where the plaintiff at law acted in good faith, as the remedy was against the sheriff for false return. But since these cases were decided a statute has been passed under which a sheriff's return is not conclusive in case of fraud or mistake. See Bramlett v. McVey, 91 Ky. 151.

In St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Lowder, 59 Mo. App. 3, it was held that the levy on personal property under an execution on a judgment void on account of no service of process will not be enjoined where there is a remedy at law, of an action of trespass.

There is much conflict, in Missouri, as to the right of injunction, which is noted supra, I.

And the failure to show that it is too late to apply for a new trial will prevent relief by injunction against a judgment obtained on false return of process and unauthorized appearance. Hamblin v. Knight, 81 Tex. 351.

In Sebring v. Joanna Heights Asso. 2 Pa. Dist. R. 629, an injunction was refused against a sale under a judgment where the court had no jurisdiction on account of service of process as the sale would not pass any title if the judgment was a nullity.

In Comstock v. Clemens, 19 Cal. 77, and Gates v. Lane, 49 Cal. 286, injunctions were refused against judgments because no summons was served, and were denied on the ground that there was a remedy by motion to set the same aside, and these cases were approved in Luco v. Brown, 73 Cal. 5, which was an action to enjoin a judgment because the process was defective as to form.

But in Harnish v. Bramer, 71 Cal. 155, which was a suit to enjoin a judgment by two parties on the ground that no summons was ever served on one, and that the summons was served on the other in the wrong county, on a general demurrer, it was held: "We need only to inquire whether there is a statement of all the facts essential to a recovery."

The judgment as against W. H., who was never served with summons, and who never appeared in the cause, was in fact void, but as the record shows service and appearance, and the judgment is fair on its face, it cannot be attacked collaterally." And as to the other defendant, the judgment was held voidable because entered by default before time for answer; but it must be against conscience in order to be enjoined. "It said justice of the peace rendered judgment against the petitioner in the said suit, as before stated, which judgment, the petitioner alleged, was void, because the said justice of the peace had no jurisdiction to render the said judgment as aforesaid. The district judge granted the writ of injunction, which was issued as prayed for. The defendants therefore became necessary for the plaintiffs to show that they had a good defense, . . . and this they have done by averring that at the time of the entry of the judgment complained of (the plaintiff) J. J. C. had no cause of action against them. This averment shows a perfect defense to the action,"—and the demurrer to the complaint was overruled.

In Gates v. Lane, supra, it is said that it will not be decided whether a false return of process can be controverted in a justice's or county court after a transcript from the justice's court has been filed in the county court, or whether the remedy would be by injunction or motion, where a justice's judgment is void on its face.

In Gillam v. Arnold, 32 S. C. 503, which was an action to enjoin a judgment because the defendant was not served with process and the record showed service, the court refused to decide whether a remedy by motion in the case or by an independent action should be pursued, where the question was not raised by answer or demurrer.

In Knox County v. Harshman, 133 U. S. 152, 33 L. ed. 586, it was said that a false return of service of process, not connected with the plaintiff, will not authorize an injunction against the judgment, where no fraud is charged or proved and there is a remedy at law. In this case the proof showed that service was on the clerk of a county, who failed to inform the county officers of the suit.

Some cases deny injunctions where a party defendant was not served with process, but had knowledge of the suit and made no defense, or where in such a case there was an unsuccessful attempt to defend.

And where, in an action upon a transcript of a foreign judgment, complainant failed to make a defense that such judgment was void for want of service of process. Scroggins v. Howorth, 23 Miss. 514.

And where the defendant knew that a judgment was rendered within five days thereafter, and did not move to set it aside, on the ground that it was without service of process or appearance, and the return showed service at his residence, and there was no defense to the action. Taggart v. Wood, 20 Iowa, 236.

In Graham v. Roberts, 1 Head, 56, it was said that if a default judgment was taken without service of process the court had the power to set the same aside upon a proper application, and an injunction was not granted where the complainant was fully advised of the default before final judgment and resisted the same, as this was a waiver of process.

Some cases hold that the record showing service cannot be attacked collaterally, except in cases of fraud, accident, or mistake.

So, an injunction was refused against a judgment where there was no service of process but there was no allegation of fraud, accident, or mistake, and the record showed proper service. Gillam v. Arnold, 35 S. C. 612.

And where complainant did not state what the record showed, and did not make the codefendants parties in the injunction suit. Gates v. Lane, 44 Cal. 322.

Where the record of the justice showed that the summons was served, an injunction was refused on the ground that the justice had determined the facts essential to jurisdiction, which could not be overthrown in a collateral attack, and there was a distinction between some service of process and no service, although it was claimed that in this case there was no service. The court also held that the 31 L. R. A.

return of the officer of service of process was conclusive. Hume v. Conduitt, 76 Ind. 508.

The common-law rule, which does not allow the sheriff's return of service of process to be contradicted, does not apply in Louisiana. Marvel v. Manouvrier, 14 La. Ann. 3, 74 Am. Dec. 424.

Where the record failed to show service of process on the defendants, a purchaser of land subject to the judgment was refused an injunction against a sale of such land under the judgment. Colby v. Brown, 10 Neb. 413.

There are cases which do not disclose whether the objection was made on the ground of lack of process, which may be found under next subhead.

J. Where there was no notice.

Generally an injunction will be granted against a judgment obtained without notice, where such notice is required by statutes and the complainant is not negligent and has a good defense. But there are some cases which deny an injunction on the ground that there is a remedy at law, or that the same is not shown to be unjust.

So, an injunction was granted to restrain proceedings on a judgment where the same was void because obtained on motion without notice. Caruthers v. Hartsfield, 3 Yerx. 386, 24 Am. Dec. 580.

And where the statute in regard to publication was not followed as to notice. A tender of the amount into court was not required as a condition precedent to the injunction. Edrington v. Allebrooks, 21 Tex. 186.

And where a resident of a state, having no notice of the action, was proceeded against improperly by publication. Kitchen v. Crawford, 13 Tex. 516.

And where the publication was defective although the application for injunction was made more than twelve months after the rendition of the judgment, and it was alleged that complainant knew of its rendition within twelve months, and a statute required the injunction to be sued out within that time. But the supreme court did not discuss that question, but sustained the injunction as the judgment was void. Cooke v. Burnham, 32 Tex. 129.

And where an appeal was taken from a judgment against the makers and indorsers of a promissory note, without the knowledge or consent of the indorsers, and judgment was rendered against him on affirmance. Coles v. Anderson, 8 Humph. 491.

And where no writ of error was applied for, and no notice of the proceedings on error was given, as such court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment against a party having no notice. Wooten v. Daniel, 16 Lea, 156.

And where a judgment in the county court allowed a claim and the executor had no notice of the application in time to contest the same or take an appeal. An attempt to obtain a remedy by certiorari, which proved abortive by reason of the unskillful manner in pleading, did not prevent an injunction against the judgment. Propst v. Meadows, 13 Ill. 157.

And where a judgment was signed against a defendant at the time he was in attendance as a grand jurymen, and he was not called at the trial of the action, and had a valid defense, the injunction was granted on the ground of fraud. Manwarring v. Kouns, 35 Tex. 171.

And where a principal was not called by a sheriff under an order of the court, on a bond for his appearance in a criminal case, and the judgment was against the surety on such bond. (On a bond appeared, and excepted to the said petition upon several grounds, of which the following were sustained: "(1) That the petitioner had not exhausted its legal remedy of appeal from the judgment sought to be restrained;" and "(2) that appellant had not exhausted its legal remedy of certiorari." The petitioner having refused to amend its petition, the inof this, kind no notice or citation is required.) Langridge v. Judge of 21st Jud. Dist. Ct. 46 La. Ann. 29.

And where the note upon which such judgment was obtained was barred by the statute of limitations, as this was a valid defense. Gerrish v. Seaton, 73 Iowa, 15.

While a judgment rendered without notice will not usually be set aside if it is upon a just claim, yet, upon a petition not admitting the indebtedness where the defendant stood on his demurrer, the judgment was enjoined. Gerrish v. Hunt, 66 Iowa, 682.

The execution of a judgment of sci. fa. on a mortgage was enjoined at the instance of an heir who had no notice of the judgment of the orphans' court directing the mortgage to be made, or any notice of the confirmation of the mortgage, as it was a cloud on his title. Morgan's Appeal, 110 Pa. 271.

And a judgment to be released on payment of a sum to be determined by referees was enjoined in favor of heirs, where the referee's report was made after the death of the debtor, without notice given to the interested parties. Young v. Reynolds, 4 Md. 375.

Where a judgment was enjoined as void because the defendant had no notice, the court in the injunction suit properly retained jurisdiction and rendered a judgment for the amount due. Hickman v. White (Tex.) 29 S. W. 692.

But where a petition on an appeal from a justice of the peace was filed after the statutory time in the district court without notice, an injunction was refused against the judgment on appeal, as Neb. Code Civ. Proc. § 602, allowing a new trial, afforded ample means for redress for irregularities, and there was no valid defense or charge of fraud. Woodward v. Pike, 43 Neb. 777.

And an injunction was refused against a judgment where proceedings were had without notice, and there was a remedy in the same court by habeas corpus. Lance v. McCoy, 34 W. Va. 416.

And where a justice redocketed a case, and rendered a judgment without notice, and the debt was not shown to be unjust, as Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 69, § 7, provides that only so much of a judgment shall be enjoined as is shown to be inequitable. Virginia v. Dunaway, 17 Ill. App. 68. See also Colson v. Leitch, 110 Ill. 504, supra, 1.

And where there was an agreement to give notice when the case would be taken up, and none was given, but there was a remedy of affidavit of illegality. Morris v. Morris, 76 Ga. 733.

And where there was no notice, although a settlement of the debt had been made by complainant with an agent of plaintiff in the suit at law, but it was not shown that the agent had full authority to make such settlement. Newman v. Taylor, 69 Miss. 670.

VIII. On account of appearance.

There is some conflict of authority as to granting injunctions against judgments where the appearance of a party was not authorized. Some courts deny the relief on the ground of quasi authority given by one party for all; others on the ground that there is a remedy by motion, or by action against the attorney.

So, an injunction was denied against a judgment where there was an unauthorized appearance by an attorney, as the remedy was by an action against the attorney. Everett v. Warner Bank, 58 N. H. 340; Bunton v. Lyford, 37 N. H. 512, 75 Am. Dec. 144, 31 L. R. A.

See Smith v. Balch, infra; Piggott v. Addicks, 3 G. Greene, 427, 56 Am. Dec. 547.

And where there was also irregular service of process at complainant's house, as the remedy was against the attorney, but it was not shown that there was a valid defense or that such attorney was insolvent, and he was employed by one of the defendants to represent all of them. Harris v. Gwin, 10 Smedes & M. 563.

And where there was a subsequent demurrer by the defendant, and there was no meritorious defense and a long delay, as there was a remedy by opening the judgment. Hollinger v. Reeme, 138 Ind. 263, 24 L. R. A. 46.

And where there was a remedy by motion to stay the judgment. Critchfield v. Porter, 3 Ohio, 518.

And where there was a remedy at law by motion, as the remedy in chancery would be too dilatory and expensive. Lyon v. Bollvin, 7 Ill. 629.

And where the appearance of one partner was entered by the other. Lucas v. Bank of Darien, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 280.

And where there was an appearance for one of the members of a firm who was not served with process, and the lack of authority to appear was not shown or a valid defense was not specifically stated. Winters v. Means, 25 Neb. 242.

And where there was a false return of service of process upon one of the defendants, and an attorney for another defendant pleaded for all, as there was a remedy at law in the court giving judgment, or by an action against the marshal. Walker v. Robbins, 55 U. S. 14 How. 581, 14 L. ed. 552.

Other cases deny relief on account of the pleading or proof in the injunction suit.

So, an injunction was refused where it was sought against the whole judgment, on the ground of no service of process, unauthorized appearance by an insolvent attorney, and oppressive costs, and the debt was due and there was no tender or offer to enjoin the costs only. Parsons v. Nutting, 45 Iowa, 404.

And an injunction should not be made perpetual against a judgment obtained without notice on an unauthorized appearance, but should continue only until the party can have a trial of his right at law. Campbell v. Edwards, 1 Mo. 325.

And an injunction was refused against a judgment where there was no service of process and an unauthorized appearance although an affidavit of illegality was unsuccessful on account of a mistake of an attorney in not making a proper application. Hambrick v. Crawford, 55 Ga. 335.

And where it was not shown that the appearance was unauthorized or fraudulent, or that a defense was meritorious, or a tender made. Fowler v. Lee, 10 Gill & J. 358, 82 Am. Dec. 172.

And where no legal citation was served, but an answer was filed. Rooks v. Williams, 13 La. Ann. 374.

And where there was no service of process, but it was not shown that the defendant did not appear or waive service, and he afterwards caused the judgment to be stayed. Carter v. Griffin, 32 Tex. 212.

And where it was not shown affirmatively that the appearance was unauthorized. Stubbs v. Leavitt, 30 Ala. 352.

And where an attorney was authorized to appear, but was not authorized to consent to the judgment, and there was no valid defense. King v. Watts, 23 La. Ann. 563.

But where there is an unauthorized appearance, some courts grant injunctions against judgments junction was dissolved and the petition dismissed, from which judgment appeal was taken to the court of civil appeals, by which court the judgment of the district court was affirmed.

on the ground of fraud, others on the ground that the remedy against the attorney is inadequate, and some on the ground that such judgments are void. In Louisiana the plaintiff at law has a remedy against the attorney for the defendant where he enters an appearance without authority,—differing from other states.

So, an injunction was granted where a plea was filed in a court by an unknown and unauthorized attorney, through the fraud of the prevailing party. Sneed v. Town, 9 Ark. 535.

In Baker v. O'Riordan, 65 Cal. 368, which was an action to set aside a judgment, it was held that the appearance of an unauthorized attorney where there was no service of process would authorize an action to set aside the same, and that the remedy of Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing for a motion in the same court, was not intended to curtail, but to extend, relief. It was said also that equity will restrain a judgment obtained by fraud.

And an injunction was granted against a justice's judgment where the appearance was fraudulent, unauthorized, and collusive, and a statute gave the justice jurisdiction only by service of process, or personal appearance and a waiver of service, notwithstanding an abortive attempt was made to appeal by certiorari; as equity may relieve for fraud notwithstanding a remedy at law. Nelson v. Rockwell, 14 Ill. 375.

And where a judgment was rendered against a plaintiff, and the suit was brought by an attorney without authority, and the attorney was too poor to respond in damages. Smyth v. Balch, 40 N. H. 363. See Everett v. Warner Bank, 58 N. H. 340, supra.

And in a suit on a judgment rendered without jurisdiction of the person because the summons was not served and an appearance was not authorized, the same may be impeached by a suit in equity or by a cross bill in the same suit, where an equitable defense is allowed. But a showing of merits should be made although the liability need not be disproved. Wilson v. Hawthorne, 14 Colo. 530.

An injunction may be granted against the making of a deed on an execution sale, where the judgment was rendered on an unauthorized appearance of an attorney without any service of process or notice; but the defendant must act promptly, and he must tender what is due. Bryant v. Williams, 21 Iowa, 329.

And an injunction was granted against a judgment in Louisiana where there was no service of process and an unauthorized appearance, as Pothier, Cour de Mandat, vol. 5, p. 274, § 130, gave the plaintiff at law a remedy against the attorney of the defendant and the common law did not apply, and the defendant was not required to show that he had a good defense to the action. Marvel v. Manouvrier, 14 La. Ann. 3, 74 Am. Dec. 424.

And where there was no appearance and a party without authority prosecuted certiorari for a defendant and an execution was issued on a judgment rendered therein. Glass v. Smith, 66 Tex. 548.

In Walworth v. Henderson, 9 La. Ann. 339, which was a suit upon a judgment against a partner on a transcript from Mississippi, and the defense was that the appearance in the original action was unauthorized, it was held that the appearance of an attorney, although not authorized, was a good appearance to the court, and the judgment was regular, leaving to the defendant his remedy against the attorney for damages. But it was said when there is an affidavit that the attorney was not employed or process was not served, and there is a good de-

The plaintiff in error presents the case to this court upon three propositions: First, that the judgment of the justice of the peace against it was void, and therefore that the injunction was properly granted; second, fense, complainant in equity has the right to interpose that defense. It was held that "the judgment is not null and void by reason of the want of authority of the attorney, who filed the plea, but as in the case of a judgment rendered on the false return of the sheriff that he had served the process on the defendant, the judgment is still regular, leaving to the party his action at law against the officer for damages and his right in equity to enjoin the execution of the judgment establishing a meritorious defense."

But this case was distinguished in Marvel v. Manouvrier, supra, as controlled by the common law of Mississippi.

IX. Pleading and practice.

An injunction was refused where complainant alleged that he had no knowledge of the judgment, as he must allege that he was not served with summons and did not appear. Farrington v. Brown, 65 Cal. 320.

And where there was no service of process, and the judgment was rendered on a debt barred by the statute of limitations, and the complainant did not show that she had property subject to the lien of the judgment. Titsworth v. Cook, 49 Ill. App. 307.

An appeal from an order dissolving an injunction obtained on the ground that no process was served does not lie in Louisiana where the amount involved is less than $300. New Orleans v. De la Cuesta, 10 La. Ann. 724.

A judgment was rendered for the debt on the dissolution of the injunction where a judgment was enjoined because there was no service of process, and because the notes sued upon were improperly described. Willis v. Gordon, 22 Tex. 241.

As to pleading and practice for mistake in copy served, see Hale v. McComas, 59 Tex. 848, supra, VII. b.

As to alteration on return, see Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 138, 73 Am. Dec. 639, supra, VII. c.

As to record and parties to injunction suit, see Gates v. Lane, 44 Cal. 382, supra, VII. i.

As to fraud, accident, or mistake, see Gillam v. Arnold, 35 S. C. 612, supra, VII. i.

As to fraud, see Woodward v. Pike, 43 Neb. 777, supra, VII. j.

As to tender, see Bryant v. Williams, 21 Iowa, 329, supra, VIII.

X. Where there was no judgment or it was set aside.

Injunctions have been granted where there was no judgment, or where a judgment was set aside, although some cases denied relief on the ground that there was a remedy at law.

So, an injunction was granted against an execution where there was no judgment, although there was a finding, notwithstanding the complainant did not show that there was a valid defense. Sare v. Butcher, 141 Ind. 146.

And an injunction was granted against a judgment where an appeal from a justice's court was dismissed by the county court and afterwards, when jurisdiction was lost, the order of dismissal was set aside and a judgment was rendered, and there was a valid defense to the action. Byars v. Justin, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 638.

And where a judgment obtained in the county court was set aside, and the plaintiff filed a transcript of the judgment in the district court, and had the same entered upon the docket. Pollock v. Boyd, 36 Neb. 369.

And where a judgment was obtained in violation of an injunction. Collins v. Fraiser, 27 Ind. 477.

that the levy upon the real estate belonging to petitioner, when a levy upon personal property was tendered by its agent, was contrary to law, and that the injunction should have been sustained upon that ground; third, because the real estate levied upon was a part of, and necessary to the use of, the depot and station of the petitioner.

The judgment of the justice of the peace, enjoined in this case, was void because the court which rendered it had no jurisdiction of the defendant. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rawlins, 80 Tex. 581. But the court below and the court of civil appeals correctly held that the defendant in that judgment, having the right to a writ of certiorari, could not sue out an injunction to stop the execution of the judgment. The case of Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Ware, 74 Tex. 47, cited and followed by the court of civil appeals, lays down the correct doctrine upon this question.

Article 2287 of the Revised Statutes requires that in case the defendant in execution shall point out, for levy, personal property, such property shall be delivered into the "possession of the officer." The possession given must be such as places the property under the control of the officer, so that it could be delivered to the purchaser. The allegations of the petition in this case do not show that such possession of the box car was given to the officer in this instance. Ross v. Lister, 14 Tex. 469.

Article 10, § 4, of the Constitution is in this language: "The rolling stock and all other movable property belonging to any railroad company or corporation in this state shall be considered personal property, and its real and personal property, or any part thereof, shall be liable to execution and sale in the same manner as the property of individuals." The allegations of the petition show that the land levied upon was the property of the defendant, and the Constitution makes no distinction on account of the use made of the land by the corporation. The question of the right to sell, under execution, depot grounds acquired by condemnation, in which the railroad company has only the right to use it for that purpose, is not before us in this case.

We find no error in the judgment of the court of civil appeals, and it is affirmed.

And where a new trial was awarded to some of the defendants on the ground that the debt had been partly paid, as the new trial could be taken advantage of by the other defendant, notwithstanding a remedy at law by motion to stay proceedings. Miller v. Longacre, 26 Ohio St. 291.

And where a judgment entered by the clerk was unauthorized by any order of court. It was said in that case that a judgment entered by carelessness, mistake, or fraud will be enjoined. Wingate v. Haywood, 40 N. H. 437.

But an injunction was refused where there was no judgment, as there was a remedy by motion to set aside the execution. Lassell v. Moore, 1 Blackf. 226.

And where there was a remedy at law of trespass or trover, and the execution on its face showed that there was no judgment. Davidson v. Floyd, 15 Fla. 667.

See further, note to Gum-Elastic Roofing Co. v. Mexico Pub. Co. (Ind.) 80 L. R. A. 700, Injunctions against judgments for errors and irregularities. 1. T.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Hiram HAYES

v.

DOUGLAS COUNTY et al.

(.....Wis.....)

1. A specification of the items in detail which make up a general fund for which a city tax levy is made is not necessary under a charter which only requires the statement to specify the amount required, but directs the levy of only such sums as may be sufficient for lawful purposes.

2. Estimates by the board of public works and the comptroller, required by the charter of the city of Superior, under Wis. Laws 1891, chap. 124, do not limit the power of the common council in fixing the amount for which a tax levy may be ordered, as they are required to "levy such sums of money as may be sufficient."

3. An injunction against the enforcement of a tax levy because of an irregularity, even if it renders the levy void, will not be granted unless the tax is excessive or unequal and unjust.

4. Assessments upon property according to the frontage of each lot, made without actual view of the property or considering the actual benefits accruing to each parcel, are invalid where the law requires the lots to be assessed "in proportion to the benefits secured thereto," even if the property abutting or fronting on the improvement is made an assessment district.

5. The failure of an assessment made by the frontage rule to show upon its face that it was made according to the benefits accruing to each parcel, when the statute requires such benefits to be taken as the measure of the assessment, renders it void.

6. It is matter of common knowledge that property lying in the vicinity of a street improvement often derives important benefits therefrom, although not fronting upon or directly contiguous thereto.

7. An assessment for a street improvement, levied only upon property fronting thereon and made by the frontage rule, is invalid when the law requires it to be made according to benefits.

8. Payment by a property owner of his proportion of an assessment is not a condition precedent to relief against the assessment.

NOTE.—For frontage rule of assessments, see note to Raleigh v. Peace (N. C.) 17 L. R. A. 330. 31 L. R. A.

when that is made in entire disregard of the statute so that it is presumed to be unequal.

9. A statute making the issue of improvement bonds conclusive of the validity of an assessment, and permitting the issue of the bonds without actual notice to the owners of the property assessed, or on published notice only, within forty days after the assessment is finally determined, is unconstitutional as providing for deprivation of property without due process of law.
10. An appeal from an assessment, which permits a review only of the amount assessed, is not such a remedy as will preclude a suit to set aside the assessment when it is unequal and void.
11. The expense of placing blocks of stone from a county in a state building at the Columbian World's Fair cannot be made a county tax.
12. A limitation of the amount of costs to $30 when the law determines their amount, under Wis. Rev. Stat. § 2918, subsec. 7, and § 2921, is erroneous.

(December 17, 1895.)

CROSS-APPEALS from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Douglas County in a proceeding to set aside certain taxes and assessments and a tax sale and certificate which had resulted therefrom; the plaintiff appealing from so much of the judgment as held certain street improvement assessments valid, and defendant appealing from so much as held certain general tax assessments void. Reversed on both appeals.

Statement by Newman, J.:

This is an action to set aside certain taxes and assessments, and a tax sale and tax certificate, in which the taxes and assessments resulted. The tax certificate is upon 80 acres of unplatted land, in the city of Superior, owned by the plaintiff, and described as the E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section No. 23, in township No. 49 N., of range No. 14 W. In the year 1892 this tract of land was sold by the treasurer of Douglas county, for taxes and assessments which were delinquent upon the tax roll for the city of Superior for 1891, amounting to \$9,500.14. The common council of the city of Superior, by an ordinance of November 4, 1891, levied a city tax of \$249,000 upon the taxable property of the city. This levy was based, in part, upon estimates furnished by the board of public works and the city comptroller, and included a general item of \$61,000, designated as "general fund," without further specification of particular purpose or purposes for which it was levied, nor items of which it was composed, and was not included in the estimates so furnished. This item of the general city tax was held by the circuit court to be unauthorized by the city charter, and illegal. The portion of this general tax which was carried out against the plaintiff's land, and included in the sum for which it was sold, was found to be \$421. This sale also included a county tax of \$100 to pay the expense of placing some blocks of Douglas county stone in the Wisconsin Building at the Columbian World's Fair. This item was also held to be unauthorized and illegal. It was found that, of this item, 52 cents were carried out and charged to the plaintiff's lands. There was also included in the sum so carried out and charged against the plaintiff's land the sum of \$4,581.32, the sum of several assessments for street improvements, and instalments of certain improvement bonds which had been issued to pay for other street improvements. These were an instalment of the Belknap avenue improvement bonds, \$1,972.10; one instalment of Grand avenue improvement bonds, \$125; assessment for grading Hill avenue, \$1,438.62; for grading Ritchie avenue, \$777.96; for grading Belknap avenue, \$267. Of these items, those for the Grand avenue improvement and for the grading of Belknap avenue were incurred under the city charter of 1889; the others, under the charter of 1891. Under the former charter, street improvements were "chargeable to the lots or parcels of land fronting or abutting upon such street or alley, in proportion to the benefits accruing to such lots or parcels of real estate by reason of such improvement." Laws 1889, chap. 152, § 143. Under the latter they were "chargeable to the lots or parcels of lands benefited thereby, in proportion to the benefits secured thereby." Laws 1891, chap. 124, § 117. In neither case are the benefits assessed to exceed the benefit actually accruing to each tract or parcel by such improvement. The plaintiff's lands are bounded on the north by Belknap avenue, on the east by Hill avenue, on the south by Ritchie avenue, on the west by an unplatted 80 acre tract, owned by the Land & River Improvement Company. It nowhere abuts upon or touches Grand avenue. In the year 1890 the city of Superior graded Grand avenue. This avenue runs diagonally across section 23. But it nowhere touches appellant's land, although it runs across a corner of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the section. Benefits are assessed against the entire N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ by that description. An improvement bond, covering the entire quarter section, was issued and sold. The sum of \$125.64 is included in the tax included in the tax roll of 1891, carried out against the plaintiff's land to pay the part of one instalment on the improvement bond, which the city clerk estimated to be the share appropriate to plaintiff's land. It is claimed that, as to this assessment, the action is barred, because not begun before the issuing of the improvement bond, under a provision of the charter (§ 137). This assessment the circuit court held invalid, on the ground that plaintiff's land, having no frontage upon the improvement, was not liable to assessment. In the year 1891 the city paved Belknap avenue, and assessed the whole cost of the improvement upon the lands fronting and abutting upon the avenue. The sum of \$7,585.36 was assessed against the north 40 acres of the plaintiff's tract of land, and there was no assessment against the south 40 acres. An improvement bond upon the north 40 was issued and sold to raise money to pay for the improvement. The sum of \$1,972.20, intended as one instalment of such improvement bond, is included in the sum for which the plaintiff's 80 acres were sold. It is also pleaded that the action is barred by section 137 of the charter, because not begun before the issuing of the improvement bond. The circuit court held this item good as a special assessment, though void as a bond against the city, because in excess of the constitutional limit to municipal indebtedness. In the same year Hill avenue was graded. For this improvement benefits were assessed, as in the other cases, to the owners of property fronting on the improvement, by the front foot. The amount assessed to the plaintiff's land as benefits of this improvement was \$1,438.67. The same year Ritchie avenue was graded. For benefits of this improvement, there was assessed against the plaintiff's land \$777.96.

The circuit court found that in each case the benefits were assessed upon the basis of frontage; that the amount assessed per front foot was determined by dividing the entire cost of the improvement by the number of feet frontage on both sides of that part of the street to be improved; that the rate of the assessment was uniform and equal; that the total amount of the sums assessed was equal to the actual total cost of the improvement; that before making such assessments of benefits, in each case, the board of public works "actually viewed the premises as required by the charter;" that there is no evidence that the board of public works did not use its best judgment in respect to such improvements; that in each case the notices given were directed only to the owners of property abutting upon the proposed improved part of the street. It is not certified, either by the board of public works or by the common council, nor found by the court, that the assessment by the frontage rule alone is in proportion to the benefits conferred by the improvements, nor that the assessment of benefits was made upon actual view and consideration of benefits to be conferred, nor, in any case, upon all the property benefited by the improvement; while, on the other hand, it is claimed for the plaintiff that the evidence shows that these assessments were made without an actual view or assessment, but were made with paper and pencil only, in the city engineer's office, by the front-foot rule, and were not made on the basis of actual benefits received, but on the theory that all abutting property was benefited equally, while in truth some parcels were more benefited than others of the same frontage. There was included in the certificate an excess of interest amounting to $41.18. The circuit court adjudged that the sale and certificate be set aside, upon the condition that the plaintiff pay all of the taxes included in the certificate except $421, the general fund tax; the World's Fair stone tax, $0.52; the Grand avenue grading bond tax, $125.64; and the excessive interest included in the certificate, $41.18,—leaving the amount to be paid $8,911.80, with costs to the plaintiff; costs, above disbursements, not to exceed $30. Both parties appeal,—the plaintiff from those parts of the judgment which require him to pay the amount of the assessments, and that which limits the amount of the costs to be recovered by him; and the defendants from that part of the judgment which exempts the plaintiff from the payment of the sums named.

Messrs. Spooner, Sanborn, Kerr, & Spooner, for plaintiff:

Every tax here is specially authorized by § 31 L. R. A.

statute, and the authority to levy can be exercised no further than it is clearly given.

Freeland v. Hastings, 10 Allen, 570; Oconto County v. Jerrard, 46 Wis. 317; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kossuth County, 41 Iowa, 57.

The taxpayer has a right to know whether the money is to be raised for a legal purpose, or for one altogether illegal, and beyond the scope of the taxing power. The levy must show on its face that the money is raised and applied to some lawful object or purpose.

State, Verhule, v. Saalmann, 37 N. J. L. 156; State, Hance, v. Sickles, 24 N. J. L. 125; State, Banghart, v. Sullivan, 36 N. J. L. 90; State, Detmold v. Enole, 34 N. J. L. 425; State, Slack, v. Palmer, 39 N. J. L. 250; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. 39 Ky. 531; Freeland v. Hastings, supra.

These words "the remainder of the general fund," in the charter, are to be construed according to the well-settled maxim noscitur a sociis.

State, Lederer, v. Inter-National Invest. Co. 88 Wis. 512.

When any fund is set apart for any purpose it must be kept intact for that purpose and not diverted.

State v. Hastings, 11 Wis. 448; State v. Haben, 22 Wis. 660; State, Brown, v. Slavin, 11 Wis. 154.

The city comptroller must countersign every contract and order entered into or drawn by the city, and without such countersigning the contract or order is void. This he is prohibited from doing unless the money is provided for, or a fund on hand to which the contract applies.

Laws 1891, chap. 124, § 27; Lee v. Racine, 64 Wis. 231; Superior v. Norton, 63 Fed. Rep. 357, 24 U. S. App. 59.

The World's Fair stone tax is void, and the rule de minimis does not apply.

Barden v. Columbia County Supers. 33 Wis. 445, 14 Am. Rep. 762; Baker v. Columbia County Supers. 39 Wis. 444; Milledge v. Coleman, 47 Wis. 184; Case v. Dean, 16 Mich. 32; Burroughs v. Goff, 64 Mich. 464; Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84, 4 Am. Rep. 450; Bayle v. New Orleans, 23 Fed. Rep. 843; New London v. Brainard, 22 Conn. 552; Law v. People, 87 Ill. 387.

This court has uniformly held, as a matter of public policy, a strict rule in respect to special assessments, and this is the general rule.

Liebermann v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 336; Mitchell v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 93; Kneeland v. Milwaukee, Id. 412; Myrick v. La Crosse, 17 Wis. 443; Wells v. Burnham, 20 Wis. 113; Pound v. Chippewa County Supers. 43 Wis. 63; Hull v. Chippewa Falls, 47 Wis. 267; Dean v. Borchsenius, 30 Wis. 237; Gilman v. Milwaukee, 61 Wis. 588; State, Moore, v. Ashland, 88 Wis. 599; Beaser v. Ashland, 89 Wis. 28; Dieckmann v. Sheboygan County, Id. 570.

The plaintiff, and all other persons assessed for special benefits, were entitled to have notice given to all persons whose lauds might be afterwards included in the district, so that they might appear before the board, if they wished to do so.

It may be that the board, upon a proper notice to the owners of lands benefited, might decide that only the lands fronting upon the part proposed to be improved were actually benefited. But they could not do this in advance of notice and hearing.

Weller v. St. Paul, 5 Minn. 95; Diggins v. Brown, 76 Cal. 318; Mock v. Muncie, 9 Ind. 586; Davis v. Litchfield, 145 Ill. 313, 21 L. R. A. 563; State, Stees, v. Otis, 53 Minn. 318; Municipality No. 2 for Opening Rossignac Street, 7 La. Ann. 76; Continental Imp. Co. v. Phelps, 47 Mich. 289.

The statute requires, not only that the lands benefited shall be assessed, but that the board shall view the premises.

Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315; Watkins v. Zucietusch, 47 Wis. 513; Watkins v. Milwaukee, 52 Wis. 98.

Of course the board must act as a body, and not proceed from the map or their general recollection of the premises individually gained. It is a deliberative body and it must act together.

Re Paradise Road, 29 Pa. 20; McLellan v. Kennebec County Comrs. 21 Me. 390; State v. Coleman, 13 N. J. L. 99.

The action of the board in assessing damages and benefits for improvements is judicial in its nature.

State, Winans, v. Crane, 86 N. J. L. 394; Cooley, Taxn. 454.

An assessment for the improvement of a street by which the cost is assessed upon the property bordering the street in proportion to the frontage of each lot, without reference to the degree in which the different lots may be benefited, is unconstitutional and void.

Chicago v. Baer, 41 Ill. 306; Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 203; State v. Hudson, 29 N. J. L. 105; State, Cunningham, v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct. 29 Minn. 62; State, New Brunswick Rubber Co., v. Commissioners of Streets & Sewers, 38 N. J. L. 195; Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551; Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315; State v. Jersey City, 40 N. J. L. 485; Warren v. Grand Haven, 30 Mich. 31; Clapp v. Hartford, 35 Conn. 66; Seely v. Pittsburgh, 82 Pa. 360, 22 Am. Rep. 760.

Taxation to pay void bonds is invalid.

Bonds like those here in question are general city bonds.

Fowler v. Superior, 85 Wis. 411; Hebard v. Ashland County, 55 Wis. 145; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 627; Lavo v. People, 87 Ill. 386; Howell v. Peoria, 90 Ill. 104; Prince v. Quincy, 105 Ill. 138, 44 Am. Rep. 785; Drheo v. Altoona, 121 Pa. 401; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Woodcock, 18 Kan. 20; Perrin v. New London, 67 Wis. 416; McPherson v. Foster, 43 Iowa, 48, 22 Am. Rep. 215; Carter v. Dubuque, 35 Iowa, 416.

In Pier v. Fond du Lac, 38 Wis. 470, the court says: "We cannot hold that the right of such appeals is an adequate remedy to the lot owner, or that the legislature intended that it should constitute his exclusive remedy."

Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315; Watkins v. Zucietusch, 47 Wis. 513; Watkins v. Milwaukee, 52 Wis. 98; Teegarden v. Racine, 56 Wis. 545; Harrison v. Milwaukee, 49 Wis. 247; Hiron v. Oneida County, 82 Wis. 529.

The law upon the question of short limitation laws is perfectly well settled. A reasonable time must be given.

31 L. R. A.

Howell v. Howell, 15 Wis. 55; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365; Hughes v. Fond du Lac, 73 Wis. 380; Perceles v. Watertown, 6 Biss. 79; McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 34 L. ed. 304; Hart v. Bostwick, 14 Fla. 162; Baker v. Columbia County Supers. 39 Wis. 448; Smith v. Sherry, 54 Wis. 114; Sherry v. Gilmore, 58 Wis. 324; Eaton v. Manitowish County Supers. 40 Wis. 668; Hyde v. Kenosha County Supers. 43 Wis. 129; Smith v. Morrison, 22 Pick. 480; De Moss v. Newton, 31 Ind. 219; Smith v. Cleveland, 17 Wis. 556.

Property is specially benefited, within the meaning of the law, when the proposed improvement would increase the value of the land, relieve it from a burden, or make it specially adapted to a purpose which enhances its value.

Lipes v. Hand, 104 Ind. 508; Kelly v. Chicago, 148 Ill. 90; Cincinnati v. Batsche (Ohio) 27 L. R. A. 536.

Local assessments may be laid on property specially benefited without any constitutional restriction, save that of section 3 and its amendment, article 11. Assessments are not subject to the constitutional rule of uniformity.

Cooley, Taxn. pp. 636, 637; Datrymple v. Milwaukee, 53 Wis. 178; Lumsden v. Cross, 10 Wis. 282; Hale v. Kenosha, 29 Wis. 599.

An assessment based on the contract price of the work, without even a finding that the contract price was a fair price, is erroneous.

Bingaman v. Pittsburgh, 147 Pa. 353; Travers' Appeal, 152 Pa. 129.

An assessment of benefits is void if it rests on the cost or the estimated cost of the improvement, and not upon an actual consideration or estimate of actual benefits.

Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315; Watkins v. Zucietusch, 47 Wis. 513; State, Moore, v. Ashland, 88 Wis. 599.

An assessment is void if made arbitrarily and without view of the premises.

Johnson v. Milwaukee, and Watkins v. Zucietusch, supra; Watkins v. Milwaukee, 52 Wis. 98; Charter 1891, § 119; Hersey v. Barron County Supers. 37 Wis. 75.

Assessments determined arbitrarily and upon a false and illegal basis, irrespective of the actual benefit to each lot, are absolutely void.

Watkins v. Zucietusch, supra; State v. Hudson, 29 N. J. L. 104; State v. Jersey City, 38 N. J. L. 410; Springfield v. Sale, 127 Ill. 359; Chicago v. Baer, 41 Ill. 306; Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 203; State, Cunningham, v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct. 29 Minn. 62; Warren v. Grand Haven, 30 Mich. 24.

Messrs. Ross, Dwyer, & Hanich, H. H. Grace, and H. C. Sloan for defendants.

Newman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The point made against the general tax is not, indeed, that it was not authorized to be levied at all, but that it was not authorized to be levied in the manner in which it was levied, nor unless the item criticised—that is, the item "$61,000. general fund"—should be included, with a detailed statement of the items which enter into it, in the general statements required to be made and filed by the board of public works and by the city comptroller. It is urged that this detailed statement is a necessary prerequisite to a valid levy of the city's taxes. The statute which authorizes the levy of the city's taxes, and which directs the manner of this levy, is section 102 of the city charter, which is chapter 124 of the Laws of 1891. The section reads as follows: "On or before the first day of October in each year the board of public works shall file with the city clerk a detailed statement of the amount of money that will be required for the ensuing fiscal year in their departments, and the city comptroller shall likewise file a statement of the amount required by the police department, fire department, and the remainder of the general fund, and for the propose of paying interest for the ensuing year on the public debt and 5 percent of the principal thereof. The city clerk shall, not later than the second Tuesday of October, place such estimates before the city council for their consideration, and the council shall thereupon, by resolution, levy such sums of money as may be sufficient for the several purposes for which taxes are authorized, not exceeding the limit provided by law, and in making such levy they shall take into consideration the estimated amount that will be received by the city during the fiscal year from licenses." This section evidently contemplates that a fund shall be raised in the nature of a general fund, and which it will not be a misnomer to call the "general fund," for it speaks of the "remainder of the general fund." And in other sections the charter speaks of payments to be made out of the general fund. Sections 118, 125. The section seems to contemplate that at least the amounts required by the police department and fire department are parts of the fund denominated the "general fund," for they are coupled by the conjunction "and" with "the remainder of the general fund." There are other purposes for which taxes may be lawfully levied which would seem appropriately to come within the designation of "general fund." Such are moneys for the payment of salaries to city officers, the expenses of the health department, of city hospitals, of lighting and cleaning streets, of caring for the sewers, and many other like purposes. But it was contemplated that the city comptroller should make and file an estimate of the entire amount of moneys needed to be levied for such general fund. The charter only requires the statement to specify the amount required. It is not, in terms at least, required to specify in detail. Nor is it, in terms at least, required that the common council specify, in detail, the items which go to make up the sum which it levies. Nor is it in terms limited by the amount estimated by the comptroller. But it is directed to "levy such sums of money as may be sufficient for the several purposes for which taxes are authorized," up to the limit provided by law. This seems to confide to the judgment and discretion of the common council to levy such sums as, in its judgment, are sufficient for all the several purposes for which taxes may be raised, uncontrolled by the estimates of the board of public works and the city comptroller. It would seem that the statements of these officers are designed for aids to the judgment of the common council, rather than for limitations upon its power. This view seems to be re-enforced by section 112 of 31 L. R. A.

the charter, which provides: "The directions hereby given for the assessing of lands and personal property, and levying and collecting taxes, shall be deemed directory only, and no error or informality in the proceedings of any of the officers entrusted with the same, not affecting the substantial justice of the tax, shall vitiate or in any wise affect the validity of such tax or assessment." It does not appear that a larger sum or sums were levied than were sufficient for the several purposes for which taxes were authorized, nor that any error or informality intervened affecting the substantial justice of the tax; and while it is realized that there are too few safeguards around this power of levying municipal taxes, and that it is a power liable to be abused, and which, very likely is often abused, no doubt it is a subject difficult of adequate regulation. This regulation is within the province of the legislature, not within that of the court. The court can only enforce the law as it is written by the legislature. And, even if the court should be of opinion that the manner of the levy of this particular tax was so irregular as to render the levy void, still, unless it shall also appear that the tax is excessive or unequal and unjust, so as to affect its substantial justice, a court of equity will not interfere to declare it invalid or to restrain its collection, without payment of the tax. Fisfield v. Marinette County, 62 Wis. 582; Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Ashland County, 81 Wis. 1. So no ground is apparent on which the plaintiff can be relieved from the payment of this tax as a condition of the relief which he seeks.

The special assessments for street improvements were all made in the same manner, and all have a common vice. Both charters under which they were respectively made provide that the benefits shall be chargeable to the lots or parcels to be assessed "in proportion to the benefits secured thereto." All of these assessments were made by the frontage rule. In each case the whole amount of benefits to be assessed for the entire improvement was divided by the number of feet fronting on the improvement. This found the benefit accruing to each separate front foot fronting on the improvement. The benefit to each front foot, so found, multiplied by the number of front feet in each parcel, produced the benefit which was assessed against such parcel. This so called "assessment" was made in the office of the city engineer, and without actual view and consideration, by the board of public works, of the benefits actually accruing to each parcel by reason of the improvement. It is fundamental that the assessment of benefits shall be made by the rule of apportionment prescribed by the charter; and where the rule of actual benefits is the rule prescribed, as in these charters, such benefits can be assessed only upon an actual view of all the property in the assessment district, and an impartial comparison and estimation of the benefits actually accruing to each parcel from the improvement; and it must be made to appear, affirmatively, that the assessment has been made in substantial compliance with the authority given by the charter. Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 815; Watkins v. Zucietusch, 47 Wis. 513; Liebermann v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 336, and cases cited on page 346, 89 Wis.; Springfield v. Sale, 127 Ill. 359. In Johnson v. Milwaukee the court says: "We rest our decision, not upon the rule of assessment, but upon the necessity of assessment, fairly and actually made, upon actual view of the premises to be assessed, of the benefits actually accruing to the premises by the improvement. This must have rested, in the first instance, upon the judgment and conscience of the commissioners of public works, which we could not properly have reviewed; that would have been for the common council firstly, and for the circuit court secondly. But we can require the apparent exercise of such judgment and conscience, in an apparently fair and just assessment, made under the conditions of the statute, by the board of public works, as a condition precedent to a valid charge upon the property assessed for the improvement. And where it is apparent that there was none such, it is our duty to hold invalid the attempt to charge the property liable to assessment." In Liebermann v. Milwaukee, the court says: "The assessment must show upon its face that the board has considered and passed upon all questions made material by the statute, and the results at which they have arrived. That which the law regards as of the substance of the proceeding, we cannot treat as immaterial, nor can presumptions supply its place. . . . We must therefore hold that the assessment in question is void on its face, for a failure to show affirmatively that it was made in conformity with the authority conferred upon the board of public works by the provisions of the charter referred to." When it is required that the assessment shall be according to benefits accruing to each parcel, an assessment by the frontage rule does not show affirmatively a compliance with the statute. While such an assessment is not necessarily erroneous, it is presumed to be so, unless the return shows that the board has considered that matter, and find that the benefits are in the proportion of the frontage of each parcel. State v. Hudson, 29 N. J. L. 104; State v. Jersey City, 38 N. J. L. 410; O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 439; Springfield v. Sale, supra.

It is evident that these assessments each fail to show upon their face that the statute which authorized them was complied with. Hence they must be held to be void.

The plaintiff's land was not liable, at all, to assessment for the Grand avenue improvement. It did not front or abut on that improvement, and so, under the charter of 1889, was not in the assessment district.

The assessments for paving Belknap avenue, and for the grading of Hill and Ritchie avenues, were made after the enactment of the charter of 1891. The former charter had constituted the frontage upon the improvement as the district upon which benefits were to be assessed. The new charter formed no assessment district, but declared the cost of the improvement to be "chargeable to the lots and parcels of land benefited thereby." The purpose of this change is manifest. It is fair and just that each parcel of property benefited by the improvement shall bear its proportionate share of the burden. It is a matter of common knowledge that property lying in the vicinity of such improvements often derives important benefits from them, although not fronting upon or directly contiguous to them. There necessarily devolved upon the board of public works the duty to ascertain and determine what parcels of land were or would be benefited by the improvement,—in effect, to determine the assessment district. It was the duty of that board to include within the limits of the assessment district all parcels of land which, in its judgment, fairly exercised, would be benefited. In the case of these last-named assessments, the board of public works entirely disregarded this provision of the new charter, and levied the assessments, as heretofore, upon the property fronting the improvement only; and it in no way appears that the board considered the matter, or determined, in the exercise of its judgment, that no other property would be benefited. So wide a departure from the rule of the statute cannot be without important effect upon the validity of the assessment. An assessment, under this statute, which does not distribute the burden fairly upon all the property benefited by the improvement, cannot be just and equal. While mere errors of judgment do not invalidate it, it must appear to be a fair attempt at compliance with the statute. As suggested by Ryan, Ch. J., in Johnson v. Milwaukee, supra, the court may and should require an apparent exercise of the judgment and conscience of the board of public works, in an apparently fair and just assessment, in conformity with the directions of the statute. An intentional omission from the assessment of property benefited must necessarily make the assessment unequal and unjust. Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 242-264. These assessments were made in entire disregard of the statute, and are presumed to be unequal, and that the inequality is sufficient to justify the interference of a court of equity. Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528, 536, 537; Re New York Protestant E. Public School, 75 N. Y. 324. And because the defects go to the very foundation of the assessment, and make it necessarily unequal, the plaintiff is not required to pay his proportion of the assessment, as a condition of relief. Hassan v. Rochester, supra; Marsh v. Clark County Supers, 42 Wis. 502; Meggett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 326.

In the cases of the Belknap avenue improvement and the grading of Grand avenue, the common council issued and sold improvement bonds upon the assessments. This it is authorized by the charter (§§ 131, 132) to do as soon as the amount of benefits chargeable to the real estate has been "finally determined," and the contract for doing the work has been let, after giving thirty days' notice, by publication in a newspaper, of its intention to issue such bonds, and for collecting it from the property assessed, by instalments, as special taxes (§ 136). The charter (§ 137) also provides that "no action shall be maintained to avoid any of the special assessments of [or?] taxes levied pursuant to the same," after such improvement bonds have been issued; and that "said bonds shall be conclusive proof of the regularity of all proceedings upon which the same are based." The right to question the validity of these assessments and bonds in this action is denied, upon the authority of these provisions of the charter. So the question is presented whether the right of the owner to contest the validity of these assessments can be lawfully taken away by so short a limitation, by a statute which provides for no actual notice. The assessments of benefits must be finally complete before the contract for doing the work can be let. § 127. The contract may be let after publication of notice for bids for one week. After the contract has been let, the improvement bonds may be issued after thirty days' notice by publication in a newspaper. No actual notice is provided for, and the bonds may be issued before the work has commenced. So that, if the statute is sustained as a valid limitation, its bar may be complete within forty days after the assessment is finally determined, and regardless of the fact whether the owner has acquired actual knowledge of the proceedings against his property. These are proceedings whereby property is to be taken in writum. No man's property can be lawfully taken or taxed but by due and regular process of law; nor forfeited except by his own omission seasonably to assert his right. It has been already demonstrated that these assessment proceedings are not due process of law, and are invalid to deprive the plaintiff of his property. So the plaintiff's property has not been effectually taken by these proceedings unless the plaintiff has debarred himself from contesting the validity of the proceedings by his own laches; and this depends upon the validity of this statute as a statute of limitations. All statutes of limitation proceed upon the theory that the party has forfeited his right to assert his title, in the law, by lapse of time and omission to assert it. This necessarily presupposes that a full and fair opportunity has been afforded him to try his right in the courts; for it cannot justly be considered that he is in default and laches until such just opportunity has been afforded him, and he has failed to avail himself of it. Any attempt to cut off his right without having afforded him such just and reasonable opportunity is not properly a statute of limitations at all. It savors rather of spoliation and plunder. Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 449. No doubt under a statute which provides for actual notice to the owner, a shorter limitation could be held reasonable than where constructive notice only is provided. Under this statute, many an owner may, without fault, be without actual knowledge of the pendency of proceedings against his property, until the bar of this statute has foreclosed his right; and this may all well happen before any work, such as might arrest the attention of resident owners, is actually commenced under the contract. It is not questioned that all the proceedings relating to the assessment may be supported on notice by publication only; but the fact that the notice provided for is constructive only is an element proper to be considered in determining whether the time limited affords reasonable opportunity for the owner to assert his right. No doubt such time should be allowed as would give a reasonable chance to acquire actual knowledge of the pendency of proceedings against his property, and to ascertain and assert his rights.

31 L. R. A.

No absolute rule can be laid down as to what length of time will be deemed reasonable for the government of all cases alike. Different circumstances require different rules. What would be reasonable in one class of cases would be entirely unreasonable in another. Wheeler v. Jackson, 137 U. S. 245, 255, 34 L. ed. 659, 663. While it is no doubt convenient and desirable, on the part of the municipality, that all questions in respect to the validity of such proceedings shall be put at rest as soon as may be, still there is no such exigency as to justify even an apparently unfair abbreviation of the rights of property owners or undue advantage taken. The time allowed should be ample to afford a reasonable probability that he would become informed of the proceedings against his property, and be fairly able to assert his right, before it is finally barred. It is considered that, plainly, this statute does not afford such reasonable opportunity, and cannot be sustained as a valid limitation. A short statute of limitation is not an allowable substitute for due process of law. It is utterly subversive of that constitutional protection to private rights of property. The fact that such short limitations have been sustained by some courts does not persuade the court that they are just and supportable on principle.

But it is said the plaintiff's remedy is limited to an appeal from the assessment. It is true that an appeal is given to the owner who feels aggrieved by the determination of the board of public works; but this appeal does not stay the progress of the work if the contract has been let, nor the issuing of the certificate against the lot for the benefit assessed; and, in case the appellant succeeds on his appeal, the only remedy given him is that "the difference between the amount charged in the certificate so issued and the amount adjudged to be paid as benefits accruing to the real estate described in the certificate shall be paid by the city out of the general fund." Section 125. It is also declared that the appeal so given "shall be the only remedy of the owner of any parcel of land . . . for the redress of any grievance he may have by reason of the making of such improvement." Section 126. It is obvious that upon this appeal only the proper amount of benefits to the particular lot can be investigated. No remedy appropriate to any other wrong is given. It furnishes no remedy by which to avoid an unequal and void assessment. Clearly, the appeal is no adequate remedy for the lot owner in this case; and it will not be presumed that the legislature intended the appeal given to be the exclusive remedy, except as to matters which can be redressed upon the appeal. Pier v. Fond du Lac, 38 Wis. 470.

The Columbian Fair stone tax was altogether unauthorized and void.

It was error to limit the amount of costs to be recovered to $30. The court had exhausted its power over the matter of the costs when it had determined that the plaintiff should recover them. The law determines their amount. Rev. Stat. 2918, subsec. 7; Id. § 2921; Re Carroll's Will, 53 Wis. 228.

The judgment should be reversed on both appeals. On payment of the sum of $421 the taxes for general fund hereby held valid, and the sum of $4,497.80, for taxes and assessment conceded by both parties to be valid,—in all, the sum of $4,968.80, with legal interest; that is, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum up to March 27, 1893, and 6 per cent per annum thereafter up to the time of payment (Pierce v. Schutt, 20 Wis. 424; State v. Guenther, 87 Wis. 675).—the tax certificate and the several special assessments, hereby declared void; and the tax for the Columbian Fair, should be vacated and set aside.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed on both appeals, and the cause remanded, with directions to render a judgment in accordance with this opinion.

Marshall, J., took no part.

Petition for rehearing denied March 10, 1896.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Grace E. LEWIS, Appt.,

v.

Joseph T. TERRY et al., Respts.

(.....Cal.....)

One who sells a folding bed, representing it to be safe for use when he knows it to be dangerous, is liable for injuries caused by the defects in the bed to any person who uses it, although there may be no privity of contract between them.

(January 21, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defect in furniture sold by defendants under a warranty of fitness for the use to which it was to be applied. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Clement, Cannon, Kline, & Stradley, for appellant:

Where a manufacturer sells an article which is so defectively constructed as to render it dangerous to human life, and a third person is injured by reason of such defective construction, the manufacturer is liable in damages to such third person for his injury, for the reason that a duty devolves upon the manufacturer toward third persons, independently of any privity of contract, to use care in the construction of such article; and this rule applies to vendors having knowledge of the defects.

Heaven v. Pender, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 506; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; Coughtry v. Globe Woolen Co. 56 N. Y. 124, 15 Am. Rep. 387; Devlin v. Smith, 89 N. Y. 470, 42 Am. Rep. 311; Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64; Davidson v. Nichols, 11 Allen, 519; McDonald v. Snelling, 14 Allen, 290, 92 Am. Dec. 768; Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298; Elkins v. McKean, 79 Pa. 498; Hourigan v. Nowell, 110 Mass. 470; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. pp. 10-17, note; Callahan v. Warne, 40 Mo. 131; Thomp. Neg. p. 232, § 2; Shearm. & Redf.

NOTE.—As to liability to third persons for sale of dangerous article, see also Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. (Minn.) 15 L. R. A. 818; Heizer v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co. (Mo.) 15 L. R. A. 821; also, as to sale of dangerous food or drug, see note to Craft v. Parker (Mich.) 21 L. R. A. 139.

31 L. R. A.

Neg. 4th ed. § 117; Davis v. Guarnieri, 45 Ohio St. 470; Fleet v. Hollenkemp, 13 B. Mon. 219.

Respondents are liable for the injury complained of because of their false representations as to the safety of the bed.

Langridge v. Levy, 2 Mees. & W. 519, 4 Mees. & W. 387; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 117; Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. supra; Heizer v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co. 110 Mo. 605, 15 L. R. A. 821; 1 Wait, Act. & Def. pp. 137, 138.

Mr. George E. Lawrence, for respondent:

Without the warranty or representations defendants would not be liable to their vendees.

Civil Code, § 1764.

The principle applying would be that of causent emptor.

Civil Code, § 1767; Johnson v. Powers, 65 Cal. 179; Byrne v. Jansen, 50 Cal. 624.

This action, being based upon the contract, cannot be maintained for the reason that the complaint shows there was no privity of contract between plaintiff and defendants.

Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109; Loose v. Clute, 51 N. Y. 494, 10 Am. Rep. 638; Loop v. Litchfield, 42 N. Y. 351, 1 Am. Rep. 548; Jones v. George, 61 Tex. 345, 48 Am. Rep. 280; Burdick v. Cheadle, 26 Ohio St. 393, 20 Am. Rep. 767; Maguire v. Magee, 22 W. N. C. 159; Necker v. Harvey, 49 Mich. 518; National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621; Deford v. State, 30 Md. 195; Martin Safe Co. v. Ward, 46 N. J. L. 19; Sproul v. Hemmingway, 14 Pick. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 350; Munn v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 86 Mo. 350; Lampert v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 14 Mo. App. 376; Gordon v. Livingston, 12 Mo. App. 267; Roddy v. Missouri P. R. Co. 104 Mo. 234, 13 L. R. A. 746; Blakemore v. Bristol & E. R. Co. 8 El. & Bl. 1035; Curtin v. Somerset, 140 Pa. 70, 12 L. R. A. 322 (1891); Rapson v. Cubitt, 9 Mees. & W. 710; Martin Safe Co. v. Ward, 46 N. J. L. 19; Nickerson v. Bridgeport Hydraulic Co. 46 Conn. 24, 33 Am. Rep. 1; Davis v. Clinton Waterworks Co. 54 Iowa, 59, 37 Am. Rep. 185; 1 Thomp. Neg. pp. 232-238; Whart. Neg. 2d ed. pp. 367-369; Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 466, 68 Am. Dec. 345; Panjoy v. Seales, 29 Cal. 249; Albany v. Cuntiff, 2 N. Y. 171; Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill, 531.

This action cannot be maintained on the ground of negligence for the reason that duty is an essential element, and defendants owed no duty to plaintiff.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 8; National

Sar. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621; Loose v. Clute, 51 N. Y. 494, 10 Am. Rep. 638; Marcia Safe Co. v. Ward, 46 N. J. L. 19; Nickerson v. Bridgeport Hydraulic Co. 46 Conn. 24, 38 Am. Rep. 1; Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109; Heaven v. Pender, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 303, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 503; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 387, 57 Am. Dec. 455; Curtin v. Somerset, 140 Pa. 80, 12 L. R. A. 322; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1227, § 2.

An action which in substance depends upon a breach of contract cannot be brought by any person not a party to the contract, even though it be presented in the form of an action for tort.

Longmeid v. Holliday, 6 Exch. 761.

This folding bed cannot with any regard to the accurate use of language be termed a dangerous instrument.

Loop v. Litchfield, 42 N. Y. 351, 1 Am. Rep. 543; Heizer v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co. 110 Mo. 615, 15 L. R. A. 821; Roddy v. Missouri P. R. Co. 104 Mo. 284, 12 L. R. A. 746.

Plaintiff occupied the bed at the request and invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Apperson, and not at the request of defendants, and therefore she is not entitled to recover.

Blakemore v. Bristol & E. R. Co. 8 El. & Bl. 1035; Whart. Neg. pp. 367-370.

Fraud in misrepresentations can only be sued on by the person to whom, or to whom it is intended, the statement shall be made, and who in consequence thereof, and confiding therein, has been injured.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 643; Langridge v. Levy, 2 Mees. & W. 519, 4 Mees. & W. 337; Blakemore v. Bristol & E. R. Co. supra; Wood's Mayne, Damages, 1st Am. ed. § 83, p. 116.

Britt, C. filed the following opinion:

It is alleged in the complaint in this case, among other things, that defendants were engaged as copartners in the business of selling household furniture, and that among the wares dealt in by them were certain folding beds, which were represented and warranted by defendants to their customers and the public to be safe for use; that defendants, in the course of said business, sold and delivered one of said beds to a Mr. Apperson and his wife, and expressly represented and warranted to them that such bed was so constructed that it would stand upright against the wall during the daytime, inclosing necessary bed furniture, and at night its front could, with little effort, be lowered to a horizontal position, by means of hinges at the bottom; that a solid piece of iron inclosed in framework at the back of the bed acted as a balance to the front part while being lowered, and rendered it easy to raise or lower the same with perfect safety; that, as soon as the front part was lowered, the legs of the same would automatically descend, and securely lock themselves, so that the outer end of the bed would be firmly supported in its horizontal position upon its said legs. It is further alleged that there was an inherent and latent defect in said bed, so that the said legs would sometimes fail to adjust and secure themselves, with the result that, if any weight should be placed on the bed, the heavy upright frame would be precipitated with such force upon the lowered portion of the bed as to crush, wound, and even kill any one reclining thereon, and that such defect rendered the bed dangerous to all who might use it; that defendants, with full knowledge of such defect and of such danger, sold the bed to the Appersons, without warning them thereof, and assured them that it was perfectly safe; that plaintiff rented a room from the Appersons, and, on the day the bed was purchased from defendants by them, it was placed in such room for plaintiff to sleep on; that a few days later the plaintiff, being about to retire for the night, opened and let down the bed, and, the legs thereof being apparently secure, she, in the course of her preparations for retiring, leaned with her left arm, upon the side of the bed; and, while she was in this attitude, the heavy upright framework of the bed fell forward and downward, upon the horizontal part, and upon the plaintiff, breaking her arm, and otherwise injuring her, to her damage, etc. A demurrer to this complaint, on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, was sustained, and judgment passed for defendants.

The complaint is faulty in not stating directly that the fall of the bed was caused by the latent defect described, but, as the argument of the parties has proceeded on the theory that such was the fact, we may join in that assumption. Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. 49 Minn. 335, 15 L. R. A. 818. We agree that the action cannot be sustained on the ground of any privity of contract between plaintiff and defendants, for there was none. If a tradesman sells or furnishes for use an article actually unsound and dangerous, but which he believes to be safe, and warrants accordingly, he is not liable for injuries resulting from its defective or unsafe condition to a person who was neither a party to the contract with him, nor one for whose benefit the contract was made. Coughtry v. Globe Woolen Co. 56 N. Y. 127; 15 Am. Rep. 387; Heizer v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co. 110 Mo. 605, 15 L. R. A. 821; Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109 (the leading case); Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 116; 1 Beven, Neg. pp. 60, et seq. But when the seller, as in the case made by the complaint before us, represents the article to be safe for the uses it was designed to serve, when he knows it to be dangerous, because of concealed defects, he commits a wrong independent of his contract, and brings himself within the operation of a principle of the law of torts. "It is well settled that a man who delivers an article, which he knows to be dangerous or noxious, to another person, without notice of its nature and qualities, is liable for any injury which may reasonably be contemplated as likely to result, and which does in fact result, therefrom, to that person or any other, who is not himself in fault." Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64, per Gray, J.; Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. 49 Minn. 331, 15 L. R. A. 818; Elkins v. McKean, 79 Pa. 498; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 117. See Civil Code, §§ 43, 1708. The liability of the wilful wrongdoer in like instances is recognized in several cases cited in support of the judgment. Longmeid v. Holliday, 6 Exch. 765; Heizer v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co., supra.

The fact insisted upon by respondents that a bed is not ordinarily a dangerous instrumentality is of no moment in this case. If mere non-feasance or perhaps misfeasance were the extent of the wrong charged against defendants, that consideration would be important (Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455); but the fact that such articles are in general not dangerous would seem to enhance the wrong of representing one to be safe for use when known to be really unsafe, for the danger is thus rendered more insidious.

Nor is the further point that the chain of causation implicating defendants in the injury was broken by the intervention of the Appersons, as the persons who furnished the bed immediately to plaintiff, available to defendants on this appeal. To have that effect, it must appear that the Appersons knew of the defect in the structure of the bed, and so were a culpable intervening cause, and this does not appear on the face of the complaint. Pastene v. Adams, 49 Cal. 87: 1 Beven, Neg. p. 76. The judgment should be reversed, with instructions to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: Haynes, C.; Belcher, C.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, with instructions to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

Rehearing denied.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

QUEEN CITY MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Appt.,

P. E. BLALACK,

(.....Miss.....)

1. The objection that the ground of an attachment sued out on a large demand consisting of many items, some of which are due and others not, is maintainable only as to a few of them as representing debts fraudulently contracted, must be made in the trial court to be available on appeal.
2. A reversal will not be awarded for the granting of erroneous instructions to the appellee if the appellant has himself asked and received the same instructions.
3. A defendant in attachment who appears in open court and consents that judgment may be entered for the full sum demanded cannot on appeal, where the declaration, notes, and open accounts sued on are absent from the record, without exception taken at the trial on the ground that they were not filed, assert that the debt sued for was not due, or that the notes and accounts were not filed.
4. The shipping by an insolvent corporation of its manufactured products out of the state to fill orders by which the goods were to be delivered in other states, so that they remain its property when sent out of the state, is a removal of its property beyond the state which constitutes a ground for attachment, although its business cannot be successfully conducted unless the property is sent outside the state for sale.

(January 6, 1896.)

NOTE.—Decisions as to the right of attachment for removal of property from the state in regular course of business seem not to be numerous. The subject is somewhat developed by the present decision.

For fraud which will sustain an attachment, see note to Weare Commission Co. v. Druley (Ill.) 30 L. R. A. 466.
31 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lauderdale County in favor of plaintiff in an attachment proceeding to collect a debt. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McIntosh & McIntosh and Hamm, Witherspoon, & Witherspoon for appellants.

Messrs. Miller & Baskin for appellee.

Cooper, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee sued out an attachment against the Queen City Manufacturing Company to recover the sum of $7,500, claimed to be due "on an open account and notes." The grounds of attachment stated were: (1) That the defendant had removed, or was about to remove, its property out of the state; (2) that it had assigned or disposed of, or was about to assign or dispose of, its property or rights in action, or some part thereof, with intent to defraud its creditors; (3) that it had property or rights in action which it concealed and unjustly refused to apply to the payment of its debts; (4) that it fraudulently contracted the debt or incurred the obligation for which suit was about to be brought. The defendant, by its plea in abatement, traversed the grounds of suing out the attachment as set out in the plaintiff's affidavit, and on this plea the case was submitted to a jury, which found that the attachment was rightfully sued out. The defendant, having lost on the issue thus made, declined to plead to the merits, but consented in open court that the debt sued for was correct and owned by it to the plaintiff, and that judgment might be rendered therefor, which was accordingly done.

The fourth ground of attachment alleged by the plaintiff, viz. that the defendant fraudulently contracted the debt sued on, is the only one stated in the affidavit upon which, under our statute, an attachment may be issued on a debt not due. Counsel for appellant earnestly contends for a reversal of the judgment.

appealed from on the ground that a large part of the demand sued on was not due when the attachment was sued out, and because as to no part of the debt except the sum of $300, arising in a distinct transaction, is there a suggestion in the evidence tending to show it to have been fraudulently contracted. The argument is that to maintain the verdict and judgment will be to permit the plaintiff to have recovery on a large part of his demand, for which, on the most favorable interference for him which can be drawn from any view of the evidence, he was not entitled either to sue out an attachment or to sue in the common action. The difficulty against which the appellant contends in this respect is, (1) that a case is sought to be here tried which was not tried in the lower court; (2) that the defendant, by its own instruction (the sixteenth), submitted to the jury the proposition that the attachment was maintainable if any one or more of the grounds alleged was true; and (3) because it does not certainly appear from the record that any part of the debt was not due when the writ was sued out. We fully appreciate the disadvantage to which a defendant may be subjected when an attachment is sued out on a large demand, consisting of many items some of which are due and others not, and the ground of attachment is maintainable only as to a few of them as representing debts fraudulently contracted. But the defendant should object in the trial court to such proceeding, in order that, the court's attention being directed to the matter, the correction may be there applied. It is settled by several distinct decisions in this state that a reversal will not be awarded here for the granting of erroneous instructions to the appellee if the appellant has himself asked and received the same instructions, for we cannot say that the jury was misled by the instructions of the appellee rather than by those of the appellant, and one may not complain of action which he has himself invoked. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Van Os, 63 Miss. 431, 56 Am. Rep. 810.

No declaration appears in the record, but the clerk certifies that one was on file, which has been lost from the files. The notes and open accounts upon which the suit was brought are also absent from the record, but no exception was taken in the court below to the trial of the cause on the ground that they had not been filed, and the defendant appeared in open court, and consented that judgment might be entered for the full sum demanded. Under these circumstances the defendant cannot now assert that the debt sued for was not due, or that the notes and accounts were not filed in the cause.

The principal controversy in the court below seems to have been over the proposition that the general assignment made by the defendant the day after the attachment was sued out, and which it was confessedly about to make at the time the writ was issued, was a fraudulent assignment, and to this issue the instructions were chiefly directed. But upon another of the issues presented by the pleadings we think the law, on the facts disclosed by the record, was with the plaintiff, and entitled him to the verdict. The plaintiff introduced in evidence the books of the railroads doing business at Meridian, and the clerks and employees of said roads, and by them proved that the defendant, at times when the other evidence shows it to have been insolvent, was engaged in shipping its manufactured products out of the state. To meet this evidence the defendant introduced evidence to show that the goods sent out of the state were shipped out to fill orders sent from other states, and that in fact the goods shipped were, when shipped, the property of the consignees. But this evidence shows that in several instances the goods were to be delivered by the defendant in the other states, and so remained its property when sent out of the state. The consignments to the Hatcher Manufacturing Company, so far as can be gathered from the record, were under a contract requiring delivery of the property at Columbus, Ga., and, since the goods remained the property of the defendant until delivered, the shipment thereof was a removal of the property of the defendant beyond the state, and subjected it to attachment. We say this appears to have been the case, for, although the contract under which these shipments were made seems to have been introduced in evidence, we have been unable to find it copied into the record; but the terms of the contract as testified to by the witness Price show that it and certain other contracts required the delivery of the goods at points beyond the limits of this state, and such delivery was the consummation of the contract. Pearson v. State, 66 Miss. 510, 4 L. R. A. 835. Mr. Price testified that certain of the goods consigned to one Grolock at Milledgeville, Ga., were at the risk of the shipper until actually delivered at that point. In this condition of the record, and assuming, as we must, that the contracts testified to by the witness were such as he says they were, the court should have given a peremptory instruction for the plaintiff. Stephenson v. Swan, 65 Miss. 407. In Louvenstein v. Bew, 68 Miss. 265, we repudiated the proposition that an insolvent debtor might lawfully send his property out of the state because such was the usual course of business. It is immaterial that the business cannot be successfully conducted unless the property may be sent to markets outside the state for sale. When the concern becomes insolvent, it must go into liquidation, or take the consequences of so acting as to subject itself to attachment.

The points made by the claimant on appeal are without merit. There is no bill of exceptions to what occurred on the trial of the claimant's issue. The attachment was sued out and levied before the execution of the assignment, and nothing that was done in execution of the assignment can displace the lien lawfully secured by the attachment.

Affirmed.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Hugh HEARNS, Appt.,
v.
WATERBURY HOSPITAL.

(.....Conn.)

A charitable corporation maintaining a hospital is not liable for injuries caused by personal, wrongful neglect of servants who have been selected with due care.

(April 5, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Haven County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for negligent treatment of plaintiff while a patient in the defendant hospital. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Webster & O'Neil and William Kennedy, for appellant:

It may be that the law does not impose upon a hospital any duty towards the patients therein receiving public aid, or the aid of trust funds, more than an expenditure of the fund; but it seems that a hospital owes a very different duty to a patient who pays than to a non-paying patient.

Gooch v. Association for R. of A. I. F. 109 Mass. 558.

It cannot be said, on looking into this record, that this defendant is in any sense a "public charity."

American Asylum v. Phenix Bank, 4 Conn. 172, 10 Am. Dec. 112.

A corporation for business purposes may incidentally contemplate benevolent results; but this does not make it a public charitable corporation.

People, Blossom, v. Nelson, 46 N. Y. 477.

It is very doubtful if a devise to this corporation could be held valid as a gift to "public and charitable uses," unless the words of the devise limited the use to which the funds could be put.

Bristol v. Bristol, 53 Conn. 242; Adye v. Smith, 44 Conn. 60, 26 Am. Rep. 424; Hughes v. Daly, 49 Conn. 34.

Even if it could be said that this hospital is such as all would agree was a "public charity," why is it that the funds of such an institution should be exempt?

In Parnaby v. Lancaster Canal Co. 11 Ad. & El. 223, s. c. 1 Thomp. Neg. 541, extensive note, it was held that the private corporation operating a public canal, must pay damages to any one injured by reason of such canal being out of repair.

Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, L. R. 1 H. L. 93, s. c. 1 Thomp. Neg. 581, extensive notes, held that a corporation entrusted with the performance of a public duty, receiving no profits, is liable to one injured.

This Docks Case has been affirmed, and liability insisted upon in every instance where there is a corporate body charged with a duty to perform.

Winch v. Thames, L. R. 7 C. P. 458 (1872); Smith v. West Derby, L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 423 (1878); Gilbert v. Trinity House, L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 795 (1896); Geddis v. Bann Reservoir Proprs. L. R. 8 App. Cas. 430; Coe v. Wise, L. R. 1 Q. B. 711; Nitro-Phosphate & O. C. M. Co. v. London & St. K. Docks Co. L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 503; Queen v. Williams, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 418; Lyme Regis v. Henley, 3 Barn. & Ad. 77; Hill v. Metropolitan Asylum Dist. L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 433, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 193; Morton v. New York, 140 N. Y. 207, 22 L. R. A. 241; Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1; Danbury & N. R. Co. v. Norwalk, 37 Conn. 109; Weed v. Greenwich, 45 Conn. 170; Greenwood v. Westport, 63 Conn. 587.

Heriot's Hospital v. Ross, 12 Clark & F. 513, was founded on Duncan v. Findlater, 6 Clark & F. 908; and Duncan v. Findlater was expressly overruled in the Mersey Docks Case, supra.

It has been decided in England that whenever a duty is imposed by statute upon public officers, and costs incidentally arise in questioning the propriety of acts done in the fulfillment of that duty, the public officers have a right to defray those expenses out of the funds they are authorized to administer.

King v. Tower Hamlets Comrs. 1 Barn. & Ad. 232; Rez v. Essex, 4 T. R. 591; Addison, Torts, 733.

And whenever necessary expenses are incurred in the execution of a trust, or in performance of the duties thrown on any persons, and arising out of the situation in which they are placed, such persons are entitled, without any express provision for that purpose, to make the payments required to meet those expenses out of the funds in their hands belonging to the trust.

Atty. Gen. v. Norwich, 2 Myl. & C. 425; Lewis v. Rochester, 30 L. J. C. P. 169; Addison, Torts, 733.

Expenses incurred through blunders or negligence may always be charged upon a public or trust fund.

Company of Proprs., etc. v. Local Bd. of Health, 8 El. & Bl. 812.

A trustee employed a servant to fell trees upon the trust estate, and the servant carelessly felled a tree upon a third person, who recovered a judgment against the trustee for the injury. The amount was allowed to the trustee in his account.

Bennett v. Wyndham, 4 De G. F. & J. 259; Duncan v. Findlater, 6 Clark & F. 894; Heriot's

NOTE.—The decision in the above case reinforces the doctrine of the nonliability of a charitable institution for negligence of its employees, as stated in the note to Williamson v. Louisville Industrial School (Ky.) 23 L. R. A. 200. For later cases see also Downs v. Harper Hospital (Mich.) 25 L. R. A. 602; Elghy v. Union P. R. Co. (Iowa) 27 L. R. A. 206; Union P. R. Co. v. Artist (C. C. App. 8th C.) 23 L. R. 31 L. R. A.

A. 581 (the two last cited being cases of railroad hospitals); and Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sullivan (Ind.) 27 L. R. A. 840 (this being a case of charitable employment of physician for an employee).

For liability of such a charitable corporation for maintaining a nuisance, see Herr v. Central Ky. Lunatic Asylum (Ky.) 28 L. R. A. 204.

Hospital v. Ross, 12 Clark & F. 517; Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 686, 13 L. R. 1 H. L. 93.

Want of funds with which to repair is no defense to an action for negligence.

Hartnall v. Ryde Comrs. 4 Best & S. 861; Orby v. Ryde Comrs. 5 Best & S. 743; Walsh v. New York & B. Bridge, 96 N. Y. 427.

If the duty is a duty to the individual, then a neglect to perform it, or to perform it properly, is an individual wrong, and may support an individual action for damages.

Bennett v. Whitney, 94 N. Y. 302.

There are offices which, though created for the public benefit, have duties which are due to individuals exclusively. In these cases instead of individuals being benefited by the performance of public duty, the public is to be incidentally benefited by the performance of duties to individuals.

If the duty has been neglected the individual injured may have his action.

Hayes v. Porter, 22 Me. 371; Nickerson v. Thompson, 33 Me. 433; Tardos v. Bozant, 1 La. Ann. 199; Teall v. Pelton, 1 N. Y. 537, 49 Am. Dec. 352, 53 U. S. 12 How. 284, 13 L. ed. 990; Bishop v. Williamson, 11 Me. 495; Christy v. Smith, 23 Vt. 663; Ford v. Parker, 4 Ohio St. 576; Brown v. Lester, 13 Smedes & M. 892; Bank of Mobile v. Marston, 7 Ala. 108; Amy v. Barkholder, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 136, 20 L. ed. 101.

Messrs. Stephen W. Kellogg and John P. Kellogg, for appellee:

There is no question that a hospital like this is a charitable institution.

American Asylum v. Phoenix Bank, 4 Conn. 177, 10 Am. Dec. 112; 1 Bl. Com. 471; 2 Kent, Com. 275; Ould v. Washington Hospital, 95 U. S. 303, 24 L. ed. 450.

A charitable institution like the defendant is not liable for the negligence or faults of its agents, physicians, or attendants.

McDonald v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332; Benton v. Boston City Hospital, 140 Mass. 13, 54 Am. Rep. 436; Maxmilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Van Tassel v. Manhattan Eye & Ear Hospital, 39 N. Y. S. R. 781; Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 1 L. R. A. 417; Perry v. House of Refuge, 63 Md. 20, 52 Am. Rep. 495; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375; Harris v. Woman's Hospital, 27 Abb. N. C. 43; Laubheim v. De Koninklijke Nederlandsche S. B. Maatschappij, 107 N. Y. 228; Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 425, 34 Am. Rep. 675; Union P. R. Co. v. Artist, 60 Fed. Rep. 865, 23 L. R. A. 581; Williamson v. Louisville Industrial School, 95 Ky. 251, 23 L. R. A. 200, note; Heriot's Hospital v. Ross, 12 Clark & F. 507.

There can be no recovery against a charitable corporation like this defendant, for any wrongful act or negligence of the agents or employees of the corporation and the officers or managers of the same.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 381; Beach, Corp. § 751.

The defendant cannot be made liable in this case by reason of the fact that the complaint is in the form of contract instead of tort.

Downes v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 25 L. R. A. 602.

31 L. R. A.

Hamersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Waterbury Hospital was incorporated, by special act of the legislature, "for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a hospital in the town of Waterbury." Under this authority it was organized "for the purpose of furnishing medical and surgical care, nurses, medicines, and food, to patients suffering from disease or from injuries." It has no capital stock, and its members can derive no profit from the corporation. These features clearly indicate a "charitable corporation," within the meaning of our law. American Asylum v. Phoenix Bank, 4 Conn. 172, 10 Am. Dec. 112; Bishop's Fund v. Eagle Bank, 7 Conn. 476; Hamden v. Rice, 24 Conn. 350. To this hospital the plaintiff applied for treatment of a fractured kneecap, and brings this action to recover damages for injuries caused, as he claims, by the unskillful and negligent treatment which he received at the hospital. The complaint, after stating the incorporation of the hospital, and the adoption of certain by-laws, alleges that the plaintiff requested of the proper officers admission to the hospital, and promised to pay the defendant such reasonable compensation as it should demand; that the defendant, in consideration thereof, agreed to treat him with care and skill, and furnish him with surgical care, etc., for that purpose; that the defendant was guilty of negligence in the manner specified, and thereby violated its said agreement and duty, whereby the plaintiff was injured, etc. The defendant's answer denies the negligence and injury, and sets up a special defense to the action, reciting the purposes of its incorporation, and alleging that its by-laws provided that "neither the medical and surgical staff, nor physician or surgeon designated by them, nor any officer of the corporation, shall receive compensation from the hospital in any form for the duties performed in its behalf." To this special defense the plaintiff demurred. The court below overruled the demurrer, and gave judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed from that judgment.

The demurrer to the defendant's answer cannot entitle the plaintiff to judgment if his complaint is insufficient. We therefore pass over the question which might have been raised, as to the special defense alleged being a strictly legal way of presenting the defendant's claims, and consider the only question argued before us, namely, Does the negligence alleged in the complaint entitle the plaintiff to recover damages from the defendant? The negligence which caused the injury is stated to have been that of the attending surgeon and attending nurses while in performance of their duties, and in order to confine the issue as closely as possible, it was stipulated by the parties that, solely for the purpose of the disposition of this appeal, and without prejudice to any future proceedings, the court should assume, upon the record, that the defendant exercised due care in the selection of nurses, physicians, and surgeons, by whose alleged negligence or want of skill and attention the plaintiff was injured. Possibly it might be claimed that the complaint raises the further question of the defendant's liability for its own negligence in failing to perform its alleged duty of appointing a house physician, or "intern," so called; but such claim has not been made, and we do not think it can properly be made upon this appeal. Even if the question were not excluded by the stipulation of the parties, the record fails to show that it was raised on the trial and decided by the court below. It is not specified in the reasons of appeal, and in the argument before us was not discussed. The only question with which we have to deal is the liability of the defendant for the negligent conduct of physicians and nurses employed by it, and in the selection of whom it has exercised due care. The conclusion we have reached makes it unnecessary to pass upon the question whether the hospital's attending physicians can really be regarded as standing to the corporation in the relation of servant to master, or to discuss the nature and extent of the corporate liabilities of an eleemosynary corporation. All questions essential to the disposition of the case presented by this appeal are settled by deciding upon the liability of the defendant for the negligence of its servants,—i. e. when a corporation like the defendant employs a servant who does not represent it in the way that every corporation must be represented by its directors or managers, but is simply employed for a special work in the same manner as if employed by an individual for the same work, is such corporation liable for an injury caused in the course of his employment by such servant, and due solely to his negligent conduct?

This question has never been decided in this state. It has, however, arisen in other states and in England, and has been so intermingled with the different one of the corporate liability of eleemosynary corporations for their own corporate negligence that the review we make of cases illustrating the treatment the subject has received from other courts will necessarily include some cases bearing more directly on the latter question.

The question arose in England in 1824, in the court of common pleas, in the case of Huli v. Smith, 2 Bing. 156. Commissioners for the town of Birmingham ordered a tunnel through a public street. The surveyor and contractor appointed by them to build it failed to put up guard rails or to provide lights. The court held that the commissioners were not liable,—not because such a corporation or quasi corporation for public purposes was not liable for its negligence; not because the surveyor and contractor were not the servants of the corporation (the early case of Bush v. Steinman, 1 Bos. & P. 404, had not then been overruled); but because the rule of respondent superior did not apply. Best, Ch. J., said: "The maxim of respondent superior is bottomed on the principle that he who expects to derive advantage from an act which is done by another for him must answer for any injury which a third person may sustain from it." And so the reason of the rule does not apply to trustees for public purposes, acting according to their best judgment and with the best advice.

31 L. R. A.

In 1839, Duncan v. Findlater, 6 Clark & F. 894, was decided by the House of Lords. It was a Scotch case,—an action against the trustees of a turnpike road for injuries caused by the negligence of a surveyor appointed by them. The only question actually decided in this case was that the trustees were not liable for an injury caused by the neglect of a person not standing in the relation of a servant to the trustees. But the language of Lord Cottenham went further, and stated the principle that unpaid trustees for public purposes can in no case be liable in their corporate or quasi corporate capacity. This statement was rejected in subsequent cases, and in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, L. R. 1 H. L. 93, was distinctly held unfounded in law.

The same year Parnaby v. Lancaster Canal Co. 11 Ad. & El. 223, was decided, and held that when a statute of incorporation authorized a company to construct a canal, and did not in special terms impose any duty in reference to its use, the general law imposed upon the company the duty to use reasonable care in making navigation secure. The case is pertinent only because it defines the principle of implied corporate duty corresponding to granted corporate powers, which principle subsequent cases hold applicable to powers granted to trustees for public purposes and corporations for charitable purposes, as well as to corporations organized for profit.

Heriot's Hospital v. Ross, 12 Clark & F. 507, decided in 1846, has been frequently cited in American cases. The action was an attempt to apply trust funds given by a private donor for founding a hospital for the maintenance of fatherless boys, to be governed in pursuance of statutes established by him, towards the payment of damages caused by a refusal of the trustees of the fund to obey the statutes of the founder in respect to an applicant for admission to the hospital. The Scotch court of session ordered damages to be assessed against the fund, and upon appeal to the House of Lords two questions were presented: Did the statutes of the founder give to every eligible person a right to admission on application, without any discretion in the trustees as to selection? And, second, can the damages caused by the wrongful refusal of trustees to admit an applicant entitled of right to admission be recovered from the trust fund? The house refused to consider the first question, and reversed the order of the court of session on the ground that the wrong, if any, done to the applicant, was done by the individual trustees who voted against his admission, and that they were liable in an action, and the trust fund was not. In Duncan v. Findlater, supra, the claim had been made that the Scotch practice of using trust funds to pay damages for injuries caused by their managers was authorized by Scotch law, and the House of Lords had decided that it was not authorized by Scotch law; and now, within a few years of that decision, when a Scotch court again holds that the condemned practice is authorized by Scotch law, the house makes short work of the case, refuses to consider a doubtful and important question involved, or to discuss an authority, except Duncan v. Findlater, which had not been duly respected. The pith of the case appears in the remarks of each of the law lords in reference to Duncan v. Findlater. Lord Brougham says: "It would have been better had the court paid more attention to the high authority of that case as decided in this house than here appears to have been paid to it." The main significance of Heriot's Hospital v. Ross is in the assertion of the supremacy of the house of lords in determining questions of Scotch law. The uniform severity with which the case has been ignored by the courts at Westminster, in the cases which have since dealt elaborately with the question of the liabilities of corporations for public and charitable purposes, indicates that it is not regarded as an authority on the subject in that jurisdiction, and certainly there is nothing in the case that can aid the courts of other jurisdictions.

Holliday v. St. Leonard's, 11 C. B. N. S. 192, decided in 1861, held that the defendants, the vestry of a parish, were not liable for the negligence of servants in the performance of a public duty with which they were intrusted by statute. The case is decided on the ground that trustees for public purposes are exempt from the application of the rule of respondent superior which would apply to private persons under like circumstances. It was afterwards claimed that the opinion of Erle, Ch. J., seemed to favor the erroneous dictum of Lord Cottenham in Duncan v. Findlater, that the exemption rested on the immunity of such corporations from all corporate liability, and not the exemption from the application of the rule of respondent superior as stated by Best, Ch. J., in Hall v. Smith; but when this claim was pressed in argument of Coe v. Wise, 5 Best & S. 440, Erle, Ch. J., said, "I certainly never intended so wide a proposition."

In 1863, the court of queen's bench, in the case of Hartnall v. Ryde Comrs. 33 L. J. Q. B. 39, held that trustees for public purposes charged with not having performed a duty cast on them by statute were liable for special damage; and the court distinguished the case from Metcalfe v. Hetherington, 11 Exch. 257, where such trustees were held not liable, because in that case the duty alleged to have been neglected did not clearly appear to have been imposed.

In 1864, Coe v. Wise, supra, was tried in the court of queen's bench. Commissioners were directed by statute to make a cut, and maintain at its opening a sluice to exclude tidal waters. The sluice was properly made; but, owing to want of care in the persons employed to maintain it, it burst, and flooded adjoining lands. There was no proof of negligence in employing unskilful agents. A majority of the court (Mellor, J., and Cockburn, Ch. J.) held the defendant not liable. Blackburn, J., dissented. Mellor, J., places the exemption from liability on the ground that the statute in this case did not impose an absolute duty to maintain the sluice, but that the real duty imposed on the trustees was bona fide to employ such agents as they believed to be skilful. He assumes the corporate liability for violation of corporate duty in all cases, irrespective of the objects of the corporation, and classifies the cases maintaining the liability of trustees for public purposes as follows: (1) Individual liabilities, where trustees exceed or abuse powers; i. e. where the wrongful act is individual and not corporate, the individual and not the corporation is liable. (2) Where a duty imposed on trustees has been violated by reason of orders given by them for doing the acts from which damage resulted; i. e. liability follows when the negligence is strictly corporate negligence, and not the collateral negligence of servants. (3) Where trustees are authorized to maintain works of a trading character, i. e., works to be supported by selling the right to use them (in their nature a substitution on a large scale for individual enterprise), in such cases, although the quasi corporation is organized for public purposes, yet its corporate liability is not confined to negligence resulting from its direct corporate act, but includes negligence resulting from conduct of its servants, apparently on the ground that the duties imposed by statute on such quasi corporation towards the persons to whom it sells the use of the works it is authorized to maintain cannot be distinguished from those of a railroad or canal company in dealing with those who purchase the use of their works, and are not affected by the charitable object of the corporation. There is no such element of trading use in the works maintained by the defendant. Cockburn, Ch. J., places the exemption from liability on the ground that the negligence complained of is that of servants only, and also that, upon proper construction of the statute under which the trustees act, there is no fund at their disposal for the payment of damages resulting from negligence, and that it is absurd to hold that an action will lie where judgment cannot possibly be satisfied. Blackburn, J., dissents, and holds that the defendant is liable on the ground that the jury has found that the injury was in fact caused by want of due care on the part of the defendant in maintaining the sluice. The question whether such a corporation is liable, not only for its direct corporate negligence, but also for the negligence of its servants, does not arise. The verdict of the jury that the negligence was the corporate negligence of defendant is conclusive. In referring to the cases which hold that trustees for public purposes are exempt from liability where there has been no direct corporate negligence, but the only negligence is due to the wrongful conduct of persons to whom they stand in the relation of master and servant, he says: "These decisions, or at least the greater part of them, might be supported on the ground that the relation of master and servant did not exist; . . . but this explanation does not apply to Holliday v. St. Leonard's, the ratio decidendi of which seems to me to express that there is an exception from the general rule that masters are responsible for the negligent acts of their servants, when the master falls within the class somewhat indefinitely styled 'trustees for public purposes;’ but the doctrine in question has, as it seems to me, no bearing on the present case, since the drainage commissioners are not sought to be charged for the collateral negligence of their servants, but for the nonfulfilment of a duty which was, it is alleged, imposed by act of Parliament on the drainage commissioners themselves.” He also holds that the question raised by Cockburn, Ch. J., as to the power of the trustees to apply the funds in their control to the payment of damages, does not arise in the case, and is not sufficient ground to deny the right of the plaintiff to a judgment. An appeal was taken from the judgment of the majority of the court to the exchequer chamber. In that court the appeal was held to await the decision in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, then pending before the House of Lords, and after the decision in that case was announced, the judgment of the court of queen’s bench was reversed on the grounds stated in the dissenting opinion of Blackburn, J., as delivered in the court below. Coe v. Wise, supra.

In 1866, Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, supra, was decided. The Mersey Docks Trustees were a corporate body, created by act of Parliament, charged with the care of the Liverpool docks, and with the collection of the rates levied for their use. The funds so collected, after defraying the expenses of maintenance, were to be applied to the payment of debts incurred in construction, with a view to the reduction of the rates. The purpose was public, and the motive was charitable. Two actions were brought against the trustees by owners of vessels injured in entering the docks. The wrong charged in each action was that the trustees, knowing the entrance of the dock to be unfit for use, neglected to repair it, and knowingly suffered it to continue in a condition unfit for use while it was used by vessels with their permission. Judgments were given against the trustees. Upon appeal to the House of Lords, the two cases were heard as one, and the judgments below were sustained. In the House of Lords the unanimous opinion of the common-law judges was submitted by Blackburn, J., and was adopted by the house as the ground of its decision. This is the leading and best-considered English case on the subject; but to understand the bearing of the opinion it must be read in connection with the opinions of Mellor and Blackburn, JJ., in Coe v. Wise. The judges of the queen’s bench, who had differed in the latter case, agreed in the opinion in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, and that opinion, as given by Blackburn, J., is plainly drawn on the lines of the opinion of Mellor, J., as well as of his own dissenting opinion in Coe v. Wise. And immediately after the decision of Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, the same judges who had participated in that decision (except the judges of queen’s bench), sitting as judges of the exchequer chamber, reversed the judgment of the queen’s bench in Coe v. Wise, on the grounds of the dissenting opinion of Blackburn, J., and in the course of argument Erie, Ch. J., affirmed the authority of the decision in Holliday v.

St. Leonard’s, which had been discussed and not dissented from in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs. Only by considering the two cases of Coe v. Wise and Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs together, can we ascertain the true bearing of the opinion in the latter case. The precise questions presented and answered are: Was the duty imposed on the trustees an absolute duty to maintain the docks in a state fit for use? Can the trustees be guilty of negligence without actual knowledge that the docks are unfit for use? Both are answered in the affirmative. In answering the first question the court holds that the rule of corporate duty and liability laid down in Parnaby v. Lancaster Canal Co. depends on the nature of the corporate powers and duties, and not on the fiduciary or beneficial purpose of the corporation; and these powers and duties must be determined upon a true interpretation of the statute creating it. When the legislature imposes on trustees for public purposes the duty of maintaining works by trading in their use, so that they are in their very nature a substitution for private enterprise, it will be presumed, in the absence of something to show the contrary, that the legislature intends “that the body created by statute shall have the same duties, and its funds shall be rendered subject to the same liabilities, as the general law would impose on a private person doing the same thing.” And so, in this case, the legislature intended to impose upon the trustees the absolute duty of maintenance to the same extent as the general law imposes such duty on an individual carrying on a similar enterprise. In answering the second question the court holds that, although the duty of keeping the dock in a fit state for use could be performed by a corporate body only through servants, yet if the corporation had means of knowing, by its servants, that the dock was in an unfit state, and was negligently ignorant of its state, such negligent ignorance is the neglect of the corporation. In one of these actions the fact of such corporate negligence is admitted by the demurrer. In the other, it is found by the jury. The question whether the negligence of the persons actually in charge of the docks was only the collateral negligence of the servants of the corporation, and whether a charitable corporation is liable for the collateral negligence of its servants, is not involved in the decision. The trustees, however, while not admitting the rule of construction adopted by the court as determining their duty and liability, mainly relied on the broader claim that such bodies as theirs are, by the general law of the country, trustees for public purposes, and, being such, they are not, in their corporate capacity, liable for damages caused by the neglect of their servants to perform the duties imposed on the corporation; or, at all events, that the duty of such corporations is limited to due care in the choice of officers, and, such care being exercised, redress must be sought against the officers alone. The court treats this claim elaborately and holds that it has no foundation in law; that the cases supporting the principle that one who is a public officer, in the sense that he is a servant of the government, and as such manages some branch of government business, is not responsible for the negligence of those in the same employment, have no application, because they are decided on the ground that the government is the principal and the public officer its servant, and therefore not liable on general principles of the law of agency. This principle is laid down by Story in his work on Agency (sec. 313). Here the defendants are not servants of the public in that sense. The class of cases cited, which depends on the principle that when the legislature directs a thing to be done, and damage results merely from doing that thing, the person acting under such authority is not liable, but compensation can be recovered only under special provisions of the statute legalizing the wrong, has no application. The cases apparently bearing in favor of the defendant's claim were decided either on the ground that the injury was caused by a person not standing in the relation of servant to the defendant, or upon the ground that, in the case of corporations organized to carry on an enterprise in the nature of a public charity, there is an exception to the rule making a master liable for the collateral negligence of his servant. In such a case as the present the liability does not depend on the relation of master and servant, but on the existence of a corporate duty, and the liability for a direct corporate negligence in the failure to perform that duty. Duncan v. Findlater, 6 Clark & F. 894, was properly decided on the ground that the relation of master and servant did not in fact exist, and this was all that was actually decided. The dictum of Lord Cottenham, that in no case can such a body be liable for negligence in its corporate capacity, has been rejected in subsequent cases, and is unfounded in law. While much that was said in the judgment in Holliday v. St. Leonard's is based on the opinion of Lord Cottenham in Duncan v. Findlater, and open to the same objections, it does not support that dictum; but the point actually decided was that there is an exception from the general law making a master liable for the negligence of his servant where the servant is employed by a public body. This point, which the case decides, does not now arise. And the court significantly says: "It is necessary, in considering these authorities, to bear in mind the distinction between the responsibility of a person who causes something to be done which is wrongful, or fails to perform something which there was a legal obligation on him to perform, and the liability for the negligence of those who are employed in the work." In the case of the latter liability, i. e., the liability of a master for the collateral negligence of his servant, it has been decided that there is an exception from the general law when the servant is employed by a public body, and that point does not arise in this case. In respect to the former liability, i. e., the liability of a corporation for corporate neglect in the performance of a corporate duty, there is no case which decides there is an exception from all liability in favor of public or charitable associations; and the dictum of Lord Cottenham in Duncan v. Findlater is not law.

Levingston v. Lurgan Union, 2 Ir. C. L. Rep. 202, decided in Ireland in 1868, is of interest as showing one bearing given to the decision in the above cases at the time. The action was against the poor-law guardians in their corporate capacity. It was held that where a corporation or public trustees, acting gratuitously for public purposes, cause damage by a tortious act, without having funds with which to compensate the party injured, they are responsible in their corporate capacity. Whiteside, Ch. J., says (page 219): "Upon the ultimate decisions in these two cases (Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs and Coe v. Wise), it must, I think, be now taken as established: First, that unless the provisions of the legislature, by express enactment or necessary implication, otherwise determine, an action for such a wrong as that which is the subject of the present suit lies against a corporation or public trustee acting gratuitously for public purposes; secondly, that they are not exempted by the legislature from this liability because the legislative provisions which regulate them do not provide funds out of which damages recovered in an action against them can be paid, or because these provisions specially apply their funds to purposes not including the payment of such damages; and, thirdly (what, indeed, may be considered as, in principle, comprised in the second proposition), that this liability subsists, although no property, whether provided by act of Parliament or otherwise, be shown to exist, liable to execution upon a judgment."

In 1871, the court of queen's bench, in the case of Foreman v. Canterbury, L. R. 6 Q. B. 214, undertook to overrule the decision of the court of common pleas in Holliday v. St. Leonard's. The opinion is given by Blackburn, J., and he says that Holliday v. St. Leonard's, as an authority for the principle that there is an exception to the rule of respondent superior when the servant is employed by a corporation for public or charitable purposes, was overruled by the decision of the House of Lords in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs; forgetting that in the opinion in that case delivered by himself, and in which the chief justice of the court of common pleas, who delivered the opinion in Holliday v. St. Leonard's concurred, he said that the point decided in the latter case "does not arise in the present case, so that it is unnecessary directly to decide anything upon it." Foreman v. Canterbury is not a well-considered case on this point. Indeed, the point is not at all discussed on principle, and the decision rests wholly on an assumption of the action of the House of Lords which the record proves to be untrue. The authority of Holliday v. St. Leonard's on this point was distinctly and carefully left unquestioned, both in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs and in Coe v. Wise. The most that can be said is that in Foreman v. Canterbury, the court of queen's bench differs from the court of common pleas. The influence of the decision, however, is to be plainly noticed in subsequent cases.

In Queen v. Williams, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 418, decided in 1884, the rule in Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs was applied where similar powers and duties had been given by act of Parliament to the executive government of New Zealand. The action was brought under authority of the Crown suits acts of 1881.

In Gilbert v. Trinity House, L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 795, decided in 1886, the defendant was a private guild or corporation, established some 500 years ago, for charitable and public purposes, such as the relief of the poor, maintenance of religious services, promotion of the interests of mariners, etc. In very early days, when beacons along the coast were mainly private property, it undertook their maintenance, at first, perhaps, as a charity, and gradually acquired rights and powers to collect tolls. Such funds, however, were devoted wholly to the original charity and relief of poor mariners. Under recent statutes the powers and duties of the corporation in reference to lighthouses and beacons were largely increased. The corporation was sued for damages caused by negligence in the removal of a beacon, leaving a portion of it under water. The broad claim made in behalf of trustees for public purposes, in former cases, was again made in behalf of this private corporation. The question was: "Are the defendants liable to be sued at all in respect of injuries caused by reason of the negligent condition in which beacons, or the remains of beacons, vested in them, are kept?" The court held that the recent legislation enlarging the powers of the defendant did not make it an agent or servant of the government, or alter the character of the corporation. It remained a private corporation as before. The principle of Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs was applied to this corporation, and stated more broadly and with less discrimination than it was stated in that case twenty years before. Day, J., says: "The law is plain that whosoever undertakes the performance of, or is bound to perform, duties, whether they are duties imposed by reason of the possession of property or by the assumption of an office, or however they may arise, is liable for injuries caused by his negligent discharge of those duties. It matters not whether he makes money as a profit by means of discharging the duties, or whether it be a corporation or an individual who has undertaken to discharge them. It is also immaterial whether a person is guilty of negligence by himself or by his servants. If he elects to perform the duties by his servants, if in the nature of things he is obliged to perform the duties by employing servants, he is responsible for their acts in the same way that he is responsible for his own."

The English rule was recently (1890) applied in New Brunswick to trustees incorporated for the maintenance of a public hospital. Donaldson v. General Public Hospital Comrs. 30 N. B. 279. The action was for injury caused to a person admitted to the hospital, by negligent failure to supply the necessary medical and surgical attention. The questions were raised by a demurrer to 31 L. R. A.

the declaration. The court held that the duty the defendant owed the plaintiff, as alleged, was admitted by the demurrer, and a breach of that duty by the negligent failure to supply any medical or surgical attendance, which he had the right to have supplied, was also admitted, and therefore the claim that the duty imposed on the defendant was in fact fulfilled by exercising due care in selection of physicians, and in having necessary appliances, etc., was not in the case, for such facts, if they are an answer, should be set forth by way of plea; that, admitting the defendant to be a public charitable institution, that fact does not exempt it from this action for negligence. A public charitable institution is liable to be sued for negligence.

The first case in the United States to which our attention has been called was decided in Virginia in 1867. Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375. It was an action for the value of a slave lost by negligence on the part of servants of a hospital. Liability was denied on the ground that the managers of the hospital exercised governmental powers, that under the Virginia laws the managers of the hospital were exercising governmental powers, and the government was the principal or master, and therefore the rule of respondent superior did not apply.

Marmilian v. New York (1875) 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468, was an action against the city. The only question decided was that under the New York statute the commissioners of public charities were not the agents or servants of the city, and therefore the city was not responsible for the negligence of a servant employed by the commissioners.

McDonald v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529, was decided in 1876. It was an action against the hospital for negligent surgical treatment. The court distinctly held that a hospital, being a public charitable institution, is not liable for the negligence of a servant when it has exercised proper care in his selection. But the ratio decidendi is not entirely clear. Apparently the decision is based on the authority of Holliday v. St. Leonard's, and if so, it is an authority for the principle that there is an exception to the rule of respondent superior when the negligent servant is employed by a public charitable corporation. Subsequently a similar question arose in Benton v. Boston City Hospital, 140 Mass. 13, 54 Am. Rep. 436. The accident was caused by the negligence of the superintendent of a building owned by the city of Boston and used as a hospital under the management of corporate trustees appointed by the city. The court said that, if the trustees could be regarded as trustees of a public charity, the case came within McDonald v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, but held that, under the statute incorporating them, the trustees were agents for the city; that the city, in the performance of the duty of maintaining the hospital, was not liable for negligence, because the case came within the principle of Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332, where Judge Gray, in an elaborate opinion and exhaustive review of the cases, defended the Massachusetts doctrine of nonliability of municipal corporations, and also of Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 289, which somewhat extends that doctrine. And in Donnelly v. Boston Catholic Cemetery Assn., 146 Mass. 163, the court states that McDonald v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital was decided on the ground "that the defendant was a public charitable institution under the laws of the commonwealth," and Benton v. Boston City Hospital, on the ground that the real duty was imposed by statute on the city for public benefit, and that the city would not be liable under the rule stated in Tindley v. Salem, and Hill v. Boston, and therefore a mere statutory agent without property, intervening between the city and the actual wrongdoer, was free from liability.

In 1880, the question came up in Rhode Island, in Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 675. The plaintiff claimed damages—First, on the ground of negligence of the corporation in the selection of an interne who was employed as a surgeon, and to whose surgical care the plaintiff was committed. The court held that the defendant was liable for its corporate negligence in the selection of its physicians. Second, on the ground of the negligence of the interne while acting as a surgeon, in his careless and unskillful treatment of the plaintiff. The court held that the defendant was not liable on this ground, and that the hospital does not undertake to treat the patient through the agency of the surgeon, but only to procure his services, and therefore the relation of master and servant does not exist, and the hospital is only liable for a breach of its duty to use proper care in the selection of the surgeon. Third, on the ground that the plaintiff, being in a critical condition, it was the duty of the interne, under a hospital rule, to send immediately for an attending surgeon, and the duty of the corporation, under a special provision of its charter, to put the rule in execution. The court held that, while the interne acts as surgeon, and, when so acting, he may not be the servant of the corporation, yet he also is appointed to perform other duties, and when acting in such capacity the relation of master and servant exists; that the corporation undertakes in critical cases to send for one of its staff of surgeons. This duty is imposed upon it in pursuance of the special terms of its charter, and can only be performed by the corporation through an agent. The interne is its agent for that purpose, and his neglect is that of the corporation, and for such neglect the defendant is liable. The broad claim was also made that the defendant, by reason of being a public charitable corporation, was exempt from all liability. The court held: That this broad claim was not supported by any cases cited, discussing the English and Massachusetts cases. That the theory of a public policy which forbids the use of corporate funds in any case to compensate for injuries inflicted is not sound. There is no such public policy, and the establishment of such a policy is a question for the legislature. That the theory that the corporate funds are trust funds, and their use to pay a judgment would be a violation of trust, is unsound. That the result of the English cases is: (a) Where there is a duty, there is a prima facie liability for neglect; and a corporation being created for certain purposes which cannot be executed without the use of care or skill, it becomes the duty of the corporation to exercise such care, and funds acquired for the purposes of its creation will be applied to satisfy a judgment for its default in this respect. (b) The corporate funds can be applied, notwithstanding the trusts for which they are held, because the liability is incurred in carrying out the trusts and is incident to them. That these rules for corporations for public purposes apply equally to corporations like the Rhode Island Hospital.

Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 1 L. R. A. 417, was decided in 1888. This was an action against a corporation organized to aid the city government of Philadelphia in preservation of life and property at fires, for an injury caused by the negligence of its servants employed at a fire. The court held that under the laws of Pennsylvania the defendant, in the performance of its duties, was acting in aid of the municipal government in the performance of a governmental duty, and in such case the rule of respondere superior has no application, for the state, and not the defendant, is the superior. The court further held that the funds of a public charity cannot be taken to compensate injuries by negligence of agents, and says: "It would be carrying the doctrine of respondere superior to an unreasonable and dangerous length. That doctrine is at best, as I once before observed, a hard rule."

In 1891 the question was somewhat discussed in the New York court of common pleas, in Harris v. Woman's Hospital, 27 Abb. N. C. 37. But the case was decided on questions of fact. No actual negligence or want of care was found on the part of the hospital authorities, the surgeons, or the nurse.

During the past year the question has arisen in three cases: In Kentucky, in the case of Williamson v. Louisville Industrial School, 95 Ky. 251, 23 L. R. A. 200, where the liability of the defendant for injuries committed by its agents was denied, on the sole ground that this corporation was a mere agent of the state exercising governmental functions. In Michigan, in Downes v. Harper Hospital, reported in 101 Mich. 555, 25 L. R. A. 602, a hospital for the insane was sued by the representatives of a patient who had escaped from the strong room of the hospital, jumped from a window, and so was killed. The negligence alleged was that of the trustees in the construction of the building, and of the employees in the care of the patient. Judgment was given for the defendant. Perhaps the decision might be sustained on other grounds, but the reasoning of the court fairly tends to support the extreme claim of the defendant in this case. There is, however, a distinction that may have strongly influenced the language of the court. The Harper Hospital was originally a private foundation by deed conveying property to trustees on a specific trust. These trustees were subsequently incorporated under a general statute. It is possible that by the act of incorporation the corporate powers were limited to administration of the original trust in accordance with the laws established by the founders. If this were so, the corporate capacity would be reduced to the minimum, and the defendant might be held not liable upon a construction of the terms of its charter, without questioning the liability of an eleemosynary corporation for injuries committed in pursuance of its corporate powers. The case of Union P. R. Co. v. Artist, 9 C. C. A. 14, 60 Fed. Rep. 365, 23 L. R. A. 581, decided by the United States circuit court of appeals, does not deal at all with the relation of a corporation, whether business or eleemosynary, to its corporate funds, nor directly with the nature of the duties imposed on a public or charitable corporation by its charter. The only question considered or decided in respect to a corporation is that any corporation, when it undertakes an act of charity not within the purposes of its incorporation and which it is under no legal obligation to perform, assumes the same personal duties, neither more nor less, than an individual assumes who undertakes a similar act of charity, and that a corporation, in administering a trust fund distinct from its corporate funds, held by it on a specific trust, stands in the same position as an individual who administers a trust fund for a similar purpose. But the case is of peculiar interest as maintaining the proposition that an individual establishing hospital accommodations as a charity undertakes no duty towards those who accept them as a free gift, except the duty of using reasonable care in providing such accommodations, and that if one is injured through negligence, not of the individual in the performance of his personal duty, but of the servants employed by him, the principal is not liable, because such case does not come within the reason of the rule of respondent superior, and such rule has no application. As this proposition is true of a corporation as well as of an individual, the court held that the railroad corporation which had established hospital accommodations as such a charity was not liable in a suit to recover for injuries caused through the negligence of the servants it had employed; that the doctrine of respondent superior has no just application, and "it was responsible for the discharge of its own personal duty, and not for the performance of the duties of its employees." This is the most direct application we have found in an American case of the doctrine which, in Hall v. Smith and Holliday v. St. Leonard's, was applied to corporations established for public and charitable purposes.

It is apparent that there are marked differences in these cases, both as to results and the process by which results are reached. These differences mainly appear in the tests adopted for ascertaining in each case what is a corporate duty and what is a corporate neglect; in the confusion of the quasi trust, arising from the restriction which binds every corporation to apply its corporate funds to the purposes for which it was organized, with the relation of a strictly legal trustee to his trust funds; and especially in the various means by which courts have sought to escape the patent injustice of applying the extreme doctrine of respondent superior to the personal defaults of employees of charitable institutions. But we think the drift of all the cases clearly indicates a general conviction that an eleemosynary corporation should not be held liable for an injury due only to the neglect of a servant, and not caused by its corporate negligence in the failure to perform a duty imposed on it by law, and we are satisfied that this general conviction rests on sound legal principles. The law which makes one responsible for his own act, although it may be done through another, and which is expressed by the primary meaning of the maxim, Qui facit per alium facit per se, is based on a principle of universal justice. The law which makes one responsible for an act not his own, because the actual wrongdoer is his servant, is based on a rule of public policy. The liability of a charitable corporation for the defaults of its servants must depend upon the reasons of that rule of policy, and their application to such a corporation. The rule is distinguished as the doctrine of respondent superior, although that phrase is used broadly in reference to any relation of principal and agent, thereby causing much confusion. Here we use it in the narrow meaning suggested by its origin. The phrase is taken from the words of the statute of Westm. II. (Car. II.). Si custos gaolre non habeat per quod iusticietur vel unde solvat, respondeat superior suus qui custodiam huiusmodi gaolre sibi commisit. As Lord Coke tells us (2 Inst. 382), this law was intended only for those who "having the custody of gaols of freehold or inheritance commit the same to another that is not sufficient." As sheriffs originally profited through the appointment of their subofficers, the rule of the statute was applied to sheriffs, although they were not included in its letter. This statute was passed before the first Year Book was kept, at a time when the English law was "without form." It recognized an injustice, and declared a rule of public policy, i. e. an injury done by one who is irresponsible must be answered for by his superior, when for his own convenience and emolument that superior has given the wrongdoer the opportunity of committing the injury. This rule of public policy modified the development of the law of master and servant from the beginning, and in this way infused into the law of agency a sort of fictitious agency, depending, not on the principle of justice that makes one responsible for his own act, but on a rule of public policy which, under certain circumstances, estops one from showing that the act in question was not his own. This view is suggested by the opinion of Best, Ch. J., in Hall v. Smith, supra, and is the occasion of his emphatic declaration that respondent superior is bottomed on the principle that he who expects to derive the advantage from an act done for him by another must answer for any injury which a third person sustains from it. The reasons for the rule have been differently stated by others. In Maxmilian v. New York, supra, the rule is based upon the right which the employer has to select his servants, to discharge them if not competent, and to control them while in his employ. In Dicey, Parties, rule 102, p. 446, the liability is stated as "analogous to the liability of an owner for injuries committed by animals belonging to him. Neither the master nor owner is liable because he has himself done the particular act complained of. He is responsible because the wrong is the result of his having in the one case employed the incompetent servant, and in the other kept an animal of habits injurious to his neighbors." Here the policy stated seems to be that the master should not only be liable for his negligence in the employment of servants, but should be held as a guarantor that none employed by him should abuse their opportunities. And a similar notion is expressed in Wood, Mast. & S. § 277, i. e. that the penalty of liability is imposed in order to secure in the master "the exercise of proper care and diligence in the selection and retention of his agents." Whart. Neg. § 157, gives, as the reason of the policy, that "he who puts in operation an agency which he controls, while he receives its emoluments, is responsible for the injuries it incidentally inflicts," relying on Lord Brougham's statement in Duncan v. Findlater, 6 Clark & F. 894: "I am liable for what is done for me and under my orders by the man I employ, for I may turn him from that employ when I please; and the reason that I am liable is this, that by employing him I set the whole thing in motion, and what he does, being done for my benefit and under my direction, I am responsible for the consequences of doing it."

This defendant does not come within the main reason for the rule of public policy which supports the doctrine of respondent superior. It derives no benefit from what its servant does, in the sense of that personal and private gain which was the real reason for the rule. Again, so far as the persons injured are concerned, especially if they be patients at the hospital, the defendant does not "set the whole thing in motion," in the sense in which that phrase is used as expressing a reason for the rule. Such patient, who may be injured by the wrongful act of a hospital servant, is not a mere third party, a stranger to the transaction. He is rather a participant. The thing about which the servants are employed is the healing of the sick. This is set in motion, not for the benefit of the defendant, but of the public. Surely, those who accept the benefit, contributing also by their payments to the public enterprise, and not to the private pocket of the defendant, assist as truly as the defendant in setting the whole thing in motion. But the practical ground on which the rule is based is simply this: On the whole, substantial justice is best served by making a master responsible for the injuries caused by his servant acting in his service, when set to work by him to prosecute his private ends, with the expectation of deriving from that work private benefit. This has at times proved a hard rule, but it rests upon a public policy too firmly settled to be questioned. We are now asked to apply this rule, for the first time, to a class of masters distinct from all others, and who do not and cannot come within the reason of the rule. In other words, we are asked to extend the rule, and to declare a new public policy, and say: On the whole, substantial justice is best served by making the owners of a public charity involving no private profit, responsible, not only for their own wrongful negligence, but also for the wrongful negligence of the servants they employ only for a public use and a public benefit. We think the law does not justify such an extension of the rule of respondent superior. It is perhaps immaterial whether we say the public policy which supports the doctrine of respondent superior does not justify such extension of the rule, or say that the public policy which encourages enterprises for charitable purposes requires an exemption from the operation of a rule based on legal fiction, and which, as applied to the owners of such enterprises, is clearly opposed to substantial justice. It is enough that a charitable corporation like the defendant, whatever may be the principle that controls its liability for corporate neglect in the performance of a corporate duty, is not liable, on grounds of public policy, for injuries caused by personal wrongful neglect in the performance of his duty by a servant whom it has selected with due care; but in such case the servant is alone responsible for his own wrong. This result is justified by the opinions in Hall v. Smith, Holliday v. St. Leonard's, and Union P. R. Co. v. Artist, supra, substantially on the grounds above stated, and is reached, for one reason or another, by the greater number of courts that have dealt with this particular liability of a corporation for public or charitable purposes.
81 L. R. A.

There is no error in the judgment of the Superior Court.

The other Judges concur.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

ANNISTON LOAN & TRUST COM-PANY, Appt.,v.
R. H. STICKNEY, Jr.

(.....Ala.....)

An option indorsed upon the back of a negotiable note for its extension for a definite time by giving a new note at the option of the makers and indorsers similar to the original does not destroy its negotiability.

(January 9, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Anniston City Court in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce his alleged liability as indorser on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Knox, Bowie, & Pelham, for appellant:

The place of payment is sufficiently certain. Rudolph v. Breuer, 98 Ala. 189; Boit v. Corr, 54 Ala. 112; Potter v. Sheets, 5 Ind. App. 506; Brown v. First Nat. Bank, 103 Ala. 123.

The uncertainty as to the time when the note or bill is payable is not a defect, provided the time described in the paper must come sooner or later; nor is remoteness of time material.

Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 25; Conn v. Thornton, 46 Ala. 587; Brewster v. Williams, 2 S. C. N. S. 455; Nelson v. Manning, 53 Ala. 549; Gaines v. Dorsett, 18 La. Ann. 563; Mortee v. Edwards, 20 La. Ann. 236; Knight v. McKey- nolds, 37 Tex. 204; Atcheson v. Scott, 51 Tex. 218; Chicago R. Equip. Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 34 L. ed. 349; Riker v. Sprague Mfg. Co. 14 R. I. 402, 51 Am. Rep. 413; Independent School Dist. v. Hall, 113 U. S. 140, 28 L. ed. 956; Morton v. New Orleans & S. R. Co. & Immi. Asso. 79 Ala. 590; First Nat. Bank v. Slaughter, 98 Ala. 602; Cota v. Buck, 7 Met. 588, 41 Am. Dec. 464.

A note payable twelve months after date, "or before if made out of the sale of a machine," was held to be negotiable in Ernst v. Steckman, 74 Pa. 13, 15 Am. Rep. 542.

A promise to pay on or before a day mentioned states the time of payment with sufficient certainty.

Walker v. Woolen, 54 Ind. 164, 23 Am. Rep. 639; Mattison v. Marks, 31 Mich. 421, 18 Am. Rep. 197; Jordan v. Tate, 19 Ohio St. 596; Sagory v. Metropolitan Bank, 42 La. Ann. 627; Seymour v. Farquhar, 93 Ala. 292; Makepeace v. Harvard College, 10 Pick. 298.

If the event upon which the instrument is to become payable must inevitably happen, it is no objection that it is uncertain when it will happen, nor is it of any importance how long the payment may be in suspense.

Sackett v. Palmer, 25 Barb. 179; Chitty, Bills, 8th Am. ed. from the 8th London ed. pp. 155, 156.

A note payable "on or before" a certain date is not rendered non-negotiable by reason of an option in the maker to pay at any time before ultimate maturity of the note.

First Nat. Bank v. Skeen, 101 Mo. 653; Lamb v. Story, 45 Mich. 489; Chitty, Bills & Notes, § 161.

NOTE.—Provision for renewal as affecting negotiability of note.

There seems to be only one case which is in conflict with ANNISTON LOAN & T. Co. v. STICKNEY, and there may be ground for distinguishing even that one. In it a note by an agent for the sale of merchandise payable one year after date, but containing the clause that if the agent does not sell enough in one year one more is granted, was held not to be negotiable, upon the ground that it implied that it was payable out of a particular fund, and for this reason and because payable only on the happening of a condition, it is not negotiable during the first year. Miller v. Poage, 56 Iowa. 96, 41 Am. Rep. 82. The court adds: "It is true it is payable absolutely at the expiration of two years. But we think it must have been negotiable when executed, and continuously from that time, or not at all."

The fact that the court interpreted the note as requiring payment out of a particular fund is, however, sufficient to make a difference in the decision. For that alone would under many authorities make the note non-negotiable. Notwithstanding that, however, the ruling on the other branch of the case is in conflict with the STICKNEY CASE.

In the cases of the other notes which have been held non-negotiable because of an agreement for renewal, the agreements have been for indefinite renewal, and there is much ground for distinction between an agreement for an indefinite renewal, which under the rules regarding negotiable paper could not fail to destroy negotiability, and an agreement for one renewal for a definite time which would make the time of payment one of two dates known from the inception of the paper. As to whether or not the uncertainty caused by such alternative is sufficient to destroy negotiability, the two courts which have passed upon the question do not agree, and it will require further consideration to settle the question.

An agreement for extension from time to time indefinitely, as the payee may see fit, renders the note non-negotiable. Woodbury v. Roberts, 39 Iowa, 348, 44 Am. Rep. 685.

A provision that the payee or his assigns may extend the time of payment from time to time indefinitely, as he or they may see fit, renders the note non-negotiable. Glidden v. Henry, 104 Ind. 278, 54 Am. Rep. 316.

A stipulation in a note that the holder may renew or extend the time of payment from time to time as often as required, and without prejudice to his rights to enforce payments against the makers, sureties, and indorsers, at any time when the same may be due and payable, renders the note non-negotiable. Coffin v. Spencer, 39 Fed. Rep. 262. The court places its ruling upon the ground that every successive taker of the paper is bound to take notice of this stipulation, and instead of looking only to the face of the paper for the time of its maturity, as in case of commercial paper he must, is put upon inquiry whether or not an agreement for a renewal or extension of time has been made by his proposed assignor or by any previous holder.

In Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 548, a note containing a clause that the holder may renew or extend the time of payment from time to time, as often as required, without notice and without prejudice to his rights, was held not to be negoti-

L. R. A.

Messrs. Matthews & Whiteside, for appellee:

Said agreement was a part of said note before the issuance of it, and it never was an unconditional written promise, signed by the maker, to pay absolutely and at all events a sum certain in money to any one; but this is one of the requisites of a negotiable instrument.

Altman v. Rittershofer, 68 Mich. 287; First Nat. Bank v. Bynum, 84 N. C. 24, 37 Am. Rep. 604; Maryland Fertilizing & Mfg. Co. v. Norman, 60 Md. 584, 45 Am. Rep. 750; Garrison v. Purdy, 3 Dak. 178; Sterens v. Johnson, 28 Minn. 172; Iron City Nat. Bank v. McCord, 139 Pa. 52, 11 L. R. A. 559; Costello v. Correll, 127 Mass. 293, 34 Am. Rep. 867; 1 Randolph. Com. Paper, p. 319, note 1; Miller v. Poage, 56 Iowa, 96, 41 Am. Rep. 82 (1881); Humphrey v. Beckwith, 48 Mich. 151 (1882); 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 41; Chandler v. Carey, 64 Mich. 237.

A printed stipulation on the back of a note is as much a part of the instrument as if set out in its body.

Seymour v. Farquhar, 93 Ala. 292.

If when it is made the payment is to depend on a condition, contingency, or uncertain event, the subsequent happening of that event or contingency will not change its character.

Blackman v. Lehman, 63 Ala. 547, 35 Am. Rep. 57; Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 546.

If the note had purported to be payable at "Anniston Loan & Trust Company" this alone, if there were no other defects in the paper, would have brought it within the influence of § 1756 of Ala. Code of 1886, as there is no averment in the complaint that that is the name of the bank or banking house or the name of any place, and the name itself does not import or imply that it is the name of a place or bank or banking house.

Rominger v. Keyes, 78 Ind. 376; Tiedeman, Com. Paper, p. 82, note 4; Muse v. Dantzier, 85 Ala. 359.

There was never any suit brought against the maker of the note, and no excuse was shown, either in the complaint or by the evidence, for not bringing it.

Cook v. Mutual Ins. Co. 53 Ala. 39; Mobile Sav. Bank v. McDonnell, 83 Ala. 595; Seymour v. Farquhar, supra; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Piolet, 126 Pa. 194, 4 L. R. A. 190.

On petition for rehearing.

By reason of said memorandum on the back of the note it was optional with the maker and indorsers either to pay it or, in lieu thereof, to give a new note similar to it.

This note does not provide that the day or time of its payment might be extended to a day when this particular paper should certainly be honored. On the contrary it provides expressly for its own dishonor.

Commercial Bank v. Crenshaw, 103 Ala. 497.

How can it be said to be negotiable when it is apparent that the party taking it must inquire into an extrinsic fact in order to ascertain if it be payable.

Hartley v. Wilkinson, 4 Maule & S. 25 (1815); Leeds v. Lancashire, 2 Campb. 205; Cook v. Satterlee, 2 Cow. 108, 16 Am. Dec. 432; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Piolet, 126 Pa. 194, 4 L. R. A. 190; Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 546; First Nat. Bank v. Carson, 60 Mich. 432; Barnard v. Cushing, 4 Met. 231.

Brickell, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The suit was founded on the defendant's able, and from the authorities cited it would seem that the ruling was placed on the ground that the time of payment was not certain.

Provision for indefinite extension of time of payment destroys negotiability. Smith v. Van Blarcom, 45 Mich. 371.

In Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Piolet, 126 Pa. 194, 4 L. R. A. 190, the question was as to the liability of the indorser, and the court held that the agreement indorsed on the note that it would be renewed at maturity destroyed its character as negotiable paper, and that therefore the defendant's liability was not that of an indorser of commercial paper. The court said: "The obligation of the note therefore is uncertain, depending on whether the maker chooses to pay it or give a new note in place of it. This uncertainty destroys its negotiability, and for that reason relieves the indorser."

There are several cases in which there have been collateral agreements for renewal which have been set up to control the note. Such agreements could rarely affect the question of negotiability and in most cases they have been held to be without effect upon the contract as expressed in the note.

A parol promise to extend, made after the inception of the note, will not bar an action on it. Allen v. Kimball, 23 Pick. 478.

A parol agreement not to negotiate the note, and to renew it at maturity, is unavailing, and will not affect the note in the hands of a purchaser with notice. Heist v. Hart, 73 Pa. 280.

The law will not enforce a contemporary parol agreement that the note is to be renewed at maturity. Hoare v. Graham, 3 Campb. 57.

In Flight v. Gray, 3 C. B. N. S. 320, 27 L. J. C. P. 31 L. R. A.

13, 4 Jur. N. S. 13, the defendant was not permitted to file as a defense to an action upon a bill of exchange a plea setting up that plaintiff had agreed to renew upon conditions which defendant had complied with. The court held that under the statute which was relied on as authorizing the plea, only such facts could be pleaded as would entitle defendant to absolute and unconditional relief in equity, where in that case there could be no relief unless the tender was kept good, and the court of law had no power to compel that to be done.

In Bowerbank v. Monteiro, 4 Taunt. 844, a collateral agreement in writing was taken that the holders of the bill would renew from time to time until sufficient effects should be received from a certain source to pay it, and the case turned upon the construction of the agreement, rather than upon its effect on the negotiability of the instrument.

An agreement in a note to one who had advanced money for carrying on estates, that should the crops not come forward in time to provide for the notes, "I shall expect to have them renewed for such period as shall be found necessary," was held to provide but for one renewal. Innes v. Munro, 1 Exch. 473, 17 L. J. Exch. 71. But although the action was brought by an indorsee, the question of the negotiability of the note did not arise.

Maillard v. Page, L. R. 5 Exch. 312, 39 L. J. Exch. 235, 23 L. T. N. S. 80, was an action by the drawer against the acceptor, in which the question of negotiability did not arise, but the court says, that as between the original parties to a bill it is clear that the effect of the bill can be controlled by a written contemporary agreement. H. P. F.

indorsement of a promissory note, which is in these words and figures:

Anniston, Ala., February 11th, 1893.
$1,100.00.

Six months after date, I promise to pay, to the order of Benjamin Micou, eleven hundred dollars. Value received. Negotiable and payable at Anniston Loan & Trust Company, of Anniston, Ala. And in case this note is not paid at maturity, and suit is brought for its collection, we agree to pay 10 per cent attorneys' fees; and each of us, whether maker or indorser, hereby waive and renounce for myself and family any and all homestead or exemption rights we may have guaranteed to us by the Constitution or statute laws of the state of Alabama or any of these United States.

V. H. Marshall.

Due Aug. 11-14.

Certificate No. 42, for 31 shares of the capital stock of the Anniston Transfer, attached as collateral.

Indorsed on back:

It is hereby agreed that this indebtedness is to be extended for six months from the maturity of this note, if so desired by the makers and indorsers, upon their giving a new note similar to this.

John H. Noble, Sec.

Benj. Micou.

R. H. Stickney, Jr.

Demand, notice, and protest waived. Aug. 14, '93.

Benj. Micou.

R. H. Stickney, Jr.

The trial was had before the judge of the city court, without the intervention of a jury. The pleadings are voluminous, but the case involves only one question of merit and importance; and, as that was directly presented and decided by the city court, we shall consider and determine it, without reference to any matter of mere pleading. That question is whether the instrument indorsed has the essential qualities and properties of a promissory note governed by the commercial law.

Though, according to the law merchant, a promissory note is not confined by any set form of words, whatever are the words employed, they must import an unconditional promise to pay to another's order or to bearer a certain sum of money at a time therein specified. Story, Prom. Notes, § 1. To these essential requisites of a promissory note, certainty in obligation, certainty in the money to be paid, and certainty in the time of payment, the statute adds certainty of the place of payment. To be negotiable and governed by the commercial law, the statute requires that the note be payable "at a bank, or private banking house, or a certain place of payment therein designated." Code, § 1756.

At the time of the making and indorsement of the instrument, the Anniston Loan & Trust Company was a corporation engaged in the business of banking, having a known place of business in the city of Anniston. This fact was shown affirmatively by extrinsic evidence, rendering certain the place at which the instrument was payable, whether we read it as payable at a bank "or at a certain place of payment therein designated." When a promissory note is made, having a place of payment expressed, the place may be distinguished, individualized, and rendered certain by extrinsic evidence, for the same reason that when the description in an instrument of writing of persons or things or places is vague and general, or is applicable to several persons or several species of things or several places, extrinsic evidence may be received to give application to the description. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 288; Rudolph v. Brewer, 96 Ala. 189. The note and the agreement thereon indorsed must be read and construed as if they were embodied in and formed a single writing. So reading and construing them, the contention is that the note was not payable in money, but payable in another similar note, or, in any event, that the time of payment was uncertain, and of consequence the note is wanting in the essential qualities of an obligation to pay money, and of certainty in the time of payment. The error of the contention in the first respect seems obvious. It is not payment—satisfaction of the obligation resting upon the makers and indorsers—which the indorsement contemplates, or which, upon any just construction, can be deduced from its words. All that was contemplated was that the maker and indorser should have the option or privilege of extending the debt, not of paying it, by giving a new note similar to the existing note. The giving of a promissory note or bill of exchange, without more, is not satisfaction of a pre-existing indebtedness. The only effect of taking such note or bill is, ordinarily, to suspend the creditor's remedy upon the original indebtedness, until the maturity of such note or bill. 1 Brinkell's Dig. p. 287, §§ 501, 502. In Keel v. Larkin, 72 Ala. 493, it was said: "The giving of the debtor's own note or bill, even though negotiable, does not, according to what is deemed the better doctrine as settled in this state, operate to discharge such debt unless accepted in absolute payment." In Lee v. Green, 83 Ala. 491, it was also said: "It is the settled doctrine in this state that when a debtor gives his own security, of no higher nature, for a pre-existing debt, it is considered, in the absence of an agreement, express or implied, as collateral or additional security, or a conditional payment, which does not operate an extinguishment of the original debt, but an extension of the time of payment." In 3 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 1226, it is said: "It is a general principle of law that one simple executory contract does not extinguish another for which it is substituted, and negotiable securities form no exception. And by the general commercial law, as well of England as of the United States, a bill of exchange drawn or promissory note made by the debtor does not discharge the precedent debt for which it is given, unless such be the agreement of the parties." The same author, in volume 2, § 1266a, further says: "The delivery or surrender to the maker of the old note upon its being renewed does not in itself raise a presumption of its extinguishment by the new, it being considered as a conditional surrender, and that its obligation is restored and revived if the new note be not duly paid." To the same effect is Crocket v. Trotter, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 446. And in 3 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 1511, it is said: "The renewal of a bill or note is not in general payment."

But it is insisted that reading the indorsement, as it must be read, as if it was incorporated in the body of the note, the time of payment is contingent, uncertain, and the contingency or uncertainty is destructive of its negotiability. The authorities to which we have been referred in support of the proposition have been carefully examined and considered. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Piolet, 126 Pa. 194, 4 L. R. A. 190; Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 546; First Nat. Bank v. Carson, 60 Mich. 432. In the first case, a promissory note had on its margin a memorandum in these words: "this note is given for advancements, and it is the understanding it will be renewed at maturity." The court, after declaring that it is a necessary quality of negotiable paper that it should be single, certain, unconditional, not subject to any contingency, said it was manifest "that the only inquiry necessary to determine the question of negotiability is the effect of the memorandum upon the terms of the note. As we have seen, it makes an important change in the note, in that, instead of the note being a distinct contract to pay a fixed sum of money at a day certain, the holder has agreed to accept, instead of payment in money, another note, payable at another time, which is not fixed. The obligation of the note, therefore, is uncertain, depending on whether the maker chooses to pay it or give a new note in place of it." In the second case, on its face, the note contained this stipulation. "And the payee or holder of this note may renew or extend the time of payment of the same from time to time as often as required, without notice, and without prejudice to the rights of such payee or holder to enforce payment against the makers, sureties, and indorsers, and each of them, parties hereto, at any time when the same may be due and payable." In the last case the note contained a stipulation that the sale or removal of the property, the price of which was the consideration of the note, should cause it to mature. The court said the time of payment was not certain. "It is made dependent, until the contract matures, upon the fact of whether the defendant shall sell or remove the property for which the contract was made." These cases are manifestly distinguishable from the present case. In the first two cases, the stipulation for a renewal of the note was vague, indefinite. There was no time fixed beyond which it should not, or to which it should, extend. This material element was left to future negotiation and the future agreement of the parties; and, as it was dependent on future negotiation and agreement, the result of which could not be known or anticipated, the time of payment of the renewed note was necessarily contingent and uncertain. Apparently, this was present in the mind of the Pennsylvania court when rendering the decision in the case first cited. But in this case there can be no occasion, as there is no room, for future negotiation. If the maker and indorser exercise the option or privilege of renewing the note, of extending the day of payment, the indorsement declares the precise time of the extension, in clear, certain, and precise words: "His indebtedness is to be extended for six months from the maturity of this note, if so desired by the maker and indorsers." The argument is that, as it cannot be known until the maturity of the note whether the makers and indorsers will exercise the option or privilege of renewal, the payment is contingent. The renewal or failure to renew is an event which must necessarily happen, and happen at a precise, fixed day. Certainty of the time of payment is an essential quality of negotiable paper, by which is intended that there must be a period fixed by the parties, or by implication or construction of law, or an event prescribed, which must necessarily happen. Story, Prom. Notes, § 27. It would serve no useful purpose, and would necessarily prolong the opinion, to notice the cases in which there was a contingency of payment, destructive of the negotiability of the paper, and cases in which such contingency was pronounced not to exist. It is the contingency of payment which destroys negotiability. In 1 Chitty on Bills, top page 173, it is said: "With respect to the time when payment is to be made, it depends entirely on the agreement of the parties, and there is no limitation in point of law, though the payment must not be contingent." In Clayton v. Gosling, 5 Barn. & C. 360, the note was payable twelve months after notice, with lawful interest. It was said by Abbott, Ch. J.: "There is not any contingency as to the debt, for that is admitted to be due. Nor is the time of payment contingent, in the strict sense of the expression; for that means a time which may or may not arrive; this note was made payable at a time which we must suppose would arrive." In Cota v. Buck, 7 Met. 588, 41 Am. Dec. 464, it was said by Shaw, Ch. J.: "The true test of the negotiability of a note seems to be whether the undertaking of the promisor is to pay the amount at all events, at some time which must certainly come, and not out of a particular fund or upon a contingent event." This is the true test of negotiability. If the paper be for the payment of a sum certain, absolutely, at a time which must certainly come, or on an event which must inevitably happen, it is negotiable. It was not payment of the debt the indorsement contemplates; it was but an extension of the day or time of payment. Not a vague, indefinite extension, the time of which rested in the future negotiation or agreement of the parties, but an extension the duration of which is precisely fixed and declared. If there was not renewal, the note was payable at its maturity. If there was renewal, the time of payment was fixed and certain. Renewal, or the failure to renew, was an event which must inevitably happen. There is no force in the suggestion that whoever might acquire the note after maturity could not know or ascertain without inquiry whether there had or not been a renewal. It is not contemplated that negotiable paper shall pass current after maturity, and whoever might take the note after maturity would take it at his own peril. But whoever acquires it before maturity would read on its face, in connection with the indorsement, that there was no contingency about its payment,—no uncertain event, which might or might not happen, on which the duty and obligation to pay depended. In respect to the renewal, or failure to renew, an event which must happen at the day of payment fixed by the note, and would determine no more than whether the day of payment should be extended to a future day and time certain, I am not aware of any authority or principle which would justify a declaration that there is that want of certainty in the time of payment, or that contingency of payment, which deprives the note of negotiability. The time of payment is precise; the money is demandable six months after the date, or twelve months thereafter. By the terms of the note and indorsement, which are inseparable, it was to be the one or the other; and the means of ascertaining or determining whether it was to mature at the one day or the other were definitely and conclusively provided. No holder could ever be involved in doubt or uncertainty as to the happening of any contingency on which payment depended, or as to the time of payment. Under this view, the note must be regarded as payable absolutely in money at a bank or private banking house, at a time certain, fulfilling all the conditions and having the qualities requisite to commercial paper.

The city court erred in rendering judgment for the defendant. Its judgment is reversed, and a judgment will be here rendered in favor of appellant (plaintiff in the lower court for the amount of the note sued on, with interest from August 11, 1893, together with the costs of suit and costs of the appeal in this court and in the court below.

Reversed and rendered.

Rehearing denied February 11, 1896.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

William BRAITHWAITE, App't,

v.

Walter B. JORDAN et al.

(..... N. D.)

- *1. A libel in a possessory action in rem was filed in the district court of the territory of Dakota, sitting as a court of admiralty. The plaintiff herein defended the action as claimant of the vessel, and was successful. On appeal by the libelants to the territorial supreme court, the undertaking sued on was given to secure a stay of proceedings. The judgment of the district court being affirmed, plaintiff, who was respondent on the appeal, brought suit on such undertaking. Held, that the action was not an integral part of the original admiralty case, and that therefore the Federal district court for the district of North Dakota, as the successor in admiralty cases of the territorial district court, did not have exclusive jurisdiction of the proceedings to enforce such undertaking, although the plaintiff might have secured in that court, in the very action in which the undertaking was given, a summary judgment against the persons who signed such undertaking,—the defendants herein,—but that an action on such undertaking would lie in the district court of this state.
- 2. Also, held, that this action on the undertaking is not a proceeding to enforce the judgment in the admiralty case, within the meaning of the rule that the court, whether state or Federal, in which a judgment is rendered, has exclusive jurisdiction to enforce it.

- 3. Also, held, that no principle of comity requires the state courts to refuse to take cognizance of the case. It is no objection to the jurisdiction of the court in entertaining a common-law action of debt, that the plaintiff has in another tribunal a remedy more speedy and simple in its character, and equally efficacious. Especially should this be the doctrine where to compel him to resort to the summary remedy would deprive him of the right to a trial by jury.

*Headnotes by CORLISS, J.

- 4. The judgment from which the appeal was taken merely adjudged that the claimant was entitled to possession, and ordered the marshal, who was legally in custody of the property, to deliver it to him. Held (by CORLISS, J.), that this was not a judgment directing the delivery of personal property, within the meaning of section 416 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under Revision of 1877 (Comp. Laws, § 5221), assuming such statute to be applicable to admiralty cases, and that therefore, on this assumption, the appellants could have secured a stay of proceedings on the giving of a mere cost bond, Code Civ. Proc. § 422, Revision 1877. The undertaking, therefore, so far as it was more than a mere cost undertaking, was without consideration, and void as a statutory undertaking. But the majority of the court thought that the undertaking would be valid, even under the statute. But, held, that the practice on appeal in the admiralty case to the territorial supreme court was not regulated by the territorial statutes, but by the rules and usages of courts of admiralty, and that as the appellants had no absolute right, under such rules and usages, to perfect an appeal to the territorial supreme court and secure a stay of execution pending such appeal on the giving of a mere cost bond, and as the respondent in the appeal did in fact treat the undertaking as entitling the appel-

NOTE.—While admiralty cases are of interest to limited class of lawyers, the above case by reason of its elaborate discussion of the exclusiveness of jurisdiction as between admiralty and common-law courts is of interest to a much wider class of lawyers. The questions are too fully developed in the briefs and opinions of the court to need annotation.

A. R. A.

lants to a stay, by abstaining pending the appeal from all attempts to enforce the judgment in his favor.—Held, further, that the undertaking was valid as a common-law obligation supported by a sufficient consideration.

5. It is no defense to an action on a statutory undertaking on appeal, that the court has not fixed the amount thereof under the statute. Such provision is for the benefit of the respondent, and if he waive it, and treat the undertaking as sufficient to accomplish the purpose for which it was given, the undertaking may be enforced by him, the same as if the statute had been complied with.

(On rehearing.)

6. The vessel at the time the appeal was taken was in the actual possession of the appellants, and this appeared from the record in the case. The bond recited that the judgment was against them for delivery of possession to claimant. It was for $15,000. Having been given to secure a stay of proceedings under these circumstances, it was necessarily given to enable the appellants to retain possession pending the appeal. Therefore, held, that it was in the nature of a stipulation for value, and claimant having, in reliance thereon, actually refrained from disturbing the appellants in their possession of the vessel pending the appeal, the instrument was valid as a voluntary bond.

7. Unlike stipulations for value in other cases, a stipulation for value in a possessory action can be enforced in any court having jurisdiction of an action of debt, for the amount due on the stipulation.

(October 28, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Burleigh County in favor of defendants in an action upon an appeal bond. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. George W. Newton, for appellant:

Section 416 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1877 requires an undertaking in such amount as the court judge thereof shall direct.

It was competent for the respondent to waive any mere formality of procedure, and by not objecting he did waive it. It takes effect, then, in all regards as tendered by the obligors.

Shaw v. Tobias, 3 N. Y. 188; Wolcott v. Mead, 12 Met. 517; Decker v. Judson, 16 N. Y. 439.

The burden was on the appellants in Rea v. The Eclipse ("The Eclipse") 4 Dak. 218, on appeal, 135 U. S. 599, 34 L. ed. 269, to obtain the direction of the court as to the amount of the undertaking. They gave the undertaking in question and thereby obtained a stay, and they will not now be heard to allege a want of a mere detail to escape liability.

Buck v. Lewis, 9 Minn. 814.

To render an appeal effectual for any purpose, an undertaking for costs and damages was required.

Civil Code Proc. 1887, § 414.

Assuming that the costs awarded in the district court were not a "judgment directing the payment of money" (sec. 415), then no undertaking by the provisions of that section was required.

McCallion v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. 98 Cal. 31 L. R. A.

442; Daly v. Litchfield, 11 Mich. 497; Prosser v. Whitney, 46 Mich. 407.

The undertaking was in effect to perform the judgment of the district court if affirmed.

Dunteman v. Storey, 40 Neb. 447.

In attaching and surrounding the boat, the marshal in a sense was acting as the agent of the libelants and interveners. He was conforming to and carrying out their wish and direction.

Douglass v. Douglass, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 98, 22 L. ed. 479.

The affirmance of the judgment fixed the liability of the signers of the undertaking, and the sureties are bound to the same extent as the principals. Indeed they are all principals.

Dunteman v. Storey, supra; Babbitt v. Shields, 101 U. S. 7, 25 L. ed. 820; Karthaus v. Owings, 6 Harr. & J. 134; Gillette v. Bullard, 87 U. S. 571, 22 L. ed. 387.

The undertaking secured all damages on account of the delay.

Wood v. Fulton, 2 Harr. & G. 71.

The boat, in the sense of section 416, was never in the hands of the court. In a sense it was, until the marshal parted with it, in the possession of the law and under the jurisdiction of the court.

Cooper v. Reynolds, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 308, 19 L. ed. 931; Flannagan v. Cleveland, 44 Neb. 58; The Rio Grande v. Otis ("The Rio Grande"), 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 458, 23 L. ed. 158.

The statute contemplates that the undertaking shall secure the respondent against loss and damage by virtue of the supersedeas of the execution of the judgment from which the appeal is taken.

United States v. Hodson, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 395, 19 L. ed. 937; Omaha Hotel Co. v. Kountze, 107 U. S. 378, 27 L. ed. 609.

Immediately upon the affirmance, the duty of the undertakers became fixed and active, not passive and indifferent. They were required to see that the judgment was obeyed, executed, and performed, and not wait to be coerced, much less to take an adverse and hostile position.

Jennison v. Haire, 29 Mich. 208; Douglass v. Douglass, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 98, 22 L. ed. 479.

But they have failed to perform what they undertook to perform, and the appellant asks to be reimbursed his loss and damages suffered by virtue of such default.

Gillette v. Bullard, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 571, 22 L. ed. 387; Cobbey, Replevin, p. 735; Murfree, Official Bonds, §§ 36, 48, 82.

(On rehearing.)

The courts of admiralty, both in England and in the United States, exercise a dual jurisdiction: (a) as instance courts, (b) as prize courts.

3 Bl. Com. 108, note 14, by Coleridge; Percival v. Hickey, 18 Johns. 257, 9 Am. Dec. 210; Doane v. Penhallour, 1 U. S. 1 Dall. 218, 1 L. ed. 108.

The jurisdiction of admiralty as a prize court has no bearing on any question before this court on this record.

3 Bl. Com. p. 108; Percival v. Hickey, supra; 2 Browne, Civil & Admiralty Law, 29; Henderson v. Clarkson, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 174, 1

L. ed. 387; Slocum v. Maberry, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 1, 4 L. ed. 169; Notion v. Hallett, 16 Johns. 327; Doane v. Penhallow, supra; Ross v. Rittenhouse, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 160, 1 L. ed. 381, 1 Yeates, 443; Sasportas v. Jennings, 1 Bay, 470; Simpson v. Nadeau, N. C. Conf. Rep. 115, 2 Am. Dec. 634; Tazier v. Sweet, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 81, 1 L. ed. 298; Findlay v. The William, 1 Pet. Adm. 12; Jecker v. Montgomery, 54 U. S. 13 How. 498, 14 L. ed. 240.

The common-law courts have jurisdiction of all causes cognizable upon the instance side of the court, except when a vessel is proceeded against as the offending thing, i. e. in all cases except where the proceeding is in rem to enforce a maritime lien.

The Belfast v. Boon ("The Belfast"), 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 624, 19 L. ed. 266; The Moses Taylor v. Hammons ("The Moses Taylor"), 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 411, 18 L. ed. 397.

The territorial district courts, under the provisions of the statute investing them with the jurisdiction of cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, etc., were invested with jurisdiction in causes cognizable in the district courts of the United States as courts in admiralty.

The City of Panama v. Phelps ("The City of Panama"), 101 U. S. 453, 25 L. ed. 1061; Reynolds v. United States, 99 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244; United States v. Beebe, 1 Dak. 292.

There was a judgment in the territorial district court as to the ownership and right of possession of the boat in question.

In order to effect an appeal at all, an undertaking for costs was required.

Code Civ. Proc. 1877, § 414.

And if a supersedeas of the judgment was sought, a further undertaking must be executed in compliance with section 416 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1877.

The statute of the territory governs the privileges of the undertaking in question.

United States v. Ames, 99 U. S. 35, 25 L. ed. 295.

Even if an undertaking of the character under review had been put up in an admiralty action strictly, in the ordinary courts of admiralty jurisdiction, nothing short of an action could have enforced it.

2 Foster, Fed. Prac. §§ 402-405; The Palmyra, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 531; Barlett v. Spicer, 75 N. Y. 528; The Ann Caroline v. Wells, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 538, 17 L. ed. 838; The William H. Webb v. Barling ("The Webb"), 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 406, 20 L. ed. 774.

Summary judgment by motion is never deemed an exclusive remedy. It is cumulative.

1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 1018; Trent v. Rhomberg, 66 Tex. 252; Loddell v. Lake, 32 Conn. 16; Cande v. Hayward, 37 N. Y. 653; State v. Boies, 41 Me. 344; Mestling v. Hughes, 89 Ill. 389; Hester v. Keith, 1 Ala. 316; Rowlet v. Eubank, 1 Bush, 477; Burroughs v. Louder, 8 Mass. 372; Legate v. Marr, 8 Blackf. 404; Ellis v. Hull, 23 Cal. 161; Philbrick v. Buxton, 40 N. H. 384; McConnel v. Swailes, 3 Ill. 571; Karthaus v. Owings, 6 Harr. & J. 138; Hobart v. Hilliard, 11 Pick. 143; Ashley v. Brasil, 1 Ark. 144; State v. Montgomery, 74 Ala. 226; non v. Levins, 6 Port. (Ala.) 414; Curry v.

L. R. A.

Barclay, 3 Ala. 484; Tarver v. Nance, 5 Ala. 712; Hinson v. Preslor, 27 Ala. 643.

This undertaking is ancillary to the case of Rea v. The Eclipse ("The Eclipse"), 4 Dak. 218, on appeal, 135 U. S. 599, 34 L. ed. 269, not so as to give any court of admiralty exclusively the right to enforce it.

The case at bar is entirely distinct from the judgment in Rea v. The Eclipse ("The Eclipse"). At the best that judgment is a mere incident. A purely personal contract without relation to any maritime service is not within the admiralty jurisdiction.

Alberti v. The Virginia, 2 Paine, C. C. 115.

The damages recoverable under this undertaking have nothing essentially maritime in their composition. It is only a question of damages.

The Paola R., 32 Fed. Rep. 174.

Ancillary proceedings to be sustained irrespective of citizenship must be:

(1) In the same court as the original proceedings.

Winter v. Swinburne, 8 Fed. Rep. 49; Freeman v. Howe, 65 U. S. 24 How. 450, 16 L. ed. 749; Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 748, 18 L. ed. 859; Jones v. Andrews, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 327, 19 L. ed. 935; Dunn v. Clarke, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 1, 8 L. ed. 845; Hatch v. Dorr, 4 McLean, 112; Hatfield v. Bushnell, 1 Blatchf. 393; Re Sabin, 18 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 151.

(2) In reference to the same subject-matter as the original proceedings.

Conwell v. Whitewater Valley Canal Co., 4 Biss. 195; Dunn v. Clarke, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 1, 8 L. ed. 845; Myers v. Dorr, 13 Blatchf. 22; Wickliffe v. Eve, 58 U. S. 17 How. 468, 15 L. ed. 163; Christmas v. Gaines, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 69, 20 L. ed. 762; Hubbard v. Bellevue, 3 Fed. Rep. 447.

(3) And, as a general rule, between the same parties as in the original proceedings.

U. S. Rev. Stat. Gould & Tucker's notes, p. 109.

The court in which the action of Rea v. The Eclipse ("The Eclipse"), 4 Dak. 218, on appeal 135 U. S. 599, 34 L. ed. 269, was commenced and prosecuted to final judgment is no longer in existence. This action is not in regard to the same subject-matter as that. This action is not between the same parties.

Ancillary jurisdiction generally is quite another thing from ancillary jurisdiction under the judicial system of the United States.

Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Souther, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 609, 17 L. ed. 886; Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276, 28 L. ed. 145; Barrow v. Hunton, 99 U. S. 80, 25 L. ed. 407; The Moses Taylor v. Hammons ("The Moses Taylor"), 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 429, 18 L. ed. 401; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 288, 20 L. ed. 577; Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 748, 18 L. ed. 859; Freeman v. Howe, 65 U. S. 24 How. 451, 16 L. ed. 749; Reilly v. Golding, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 56, 19 L. ed. 858; Dunn v. Clarke, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 1, 8 L. ed. 845; Wickliffe v. Eve, 58 U. S. 17 How. 468, 15 L. ed. 163; Christmas v. Gaines, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 69, 20 L. ed. 762; Hubbard v. Bellevue, 3 Fed. Rep. 447; Ober v. Gallagher, 98 U. S. 199, 23 L. ed. 829; Metcalf v. Watertown, 128 U. S. 586, 32 L. ed. 543; Lacassagne v. Chapuis, 144 U. S. 119, 36 L. ed. 368; Re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 37 L. ed. 689; Root v. Woolworth, 150 U. S. 401, 37 L. ed. 1123; Devey v. West Fairmont Gas Coal Co. 123 U. S. 329, 31 L. ed. 179; Gumbel v. Pitkin, 124 U. S. 131, 31 L. ed. 874; Morgan's L. & T.R. & S. Co. v. Texas C. R. Co. 137 U. S. 171, 34 L. ed. 625; Johnson v. Christian, 125 U. S. 642, 31 L. ed. 820.

Whenever the proceeding is such that a new subject-matter is involved or new parties necessary to its complete determination, jurisdiction is in the Federal or state courts exclusively or concurrently, according to the existence or nonexistence of other jurisdictional facts.

Hawes, Jurisdiction of Courts, § 46.

The undertaking in question did not in any sense take the place of The Eclipse Case. It is not a stipulation for value in admiralty to stand in the place of the res, or any part or interest in it.

Hagan v. Lucas, 85 U. S. 10 Pet. 400, 9 L. ed. 470; Abbott, Forms of Fed. Proc. p. 571, No. 596; Bartlett v. Spicer, 75 N. Y. 528; Ramsey v. Allegre, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 611, 6 L. ed. 746; Fox v. Patton, 22 Fed. Rep. 746; Meyers v. Isaacs, 120 U. S. 206, 30 L. ed. 642; Block v. Myers, 35 La. Ann. 221.

In Meyers v. Isaacs, supra, the court upheld the jurisdiction of the state court in an action upon an injunction bond given in a Federal court. In Lacaze v. State, Add. Rep. 59, the court sustained a common-law action upon a bond put up in a court of admiralty that had become extinct.

Mr. Edgar W. Camp, for respondents:

No appeal bond was required to obtain a stay, except a $200 bond.

No order for release was made; no stipulation approved by the court was furnished; the boat, therefore, at all times after the seizure was in contemplation of law in the custody of law, in the possession of the marshal.

It is a common, almost a necessary, proceeding on the part of officers who have property in custody, to deliver it to some person or persons who receipt to the officer therefor. This the officer does on his own responsibility.

The possession of the receptor is the possession of the officer.

The decree was simply a command to the marshal, in whose hands the law deemed the boat to be, to deliver her to, Braithwaite.

Section 416 cannot apply to a case where the thing in controversy is already in court, —already out of the power of the litigants and in the custody of the marshal of the court so completely that no writ was necessary to carry out the decree of the court.

Hayne, New Trial & Appeal, § 223.

The order of the district court not being one which defendants were to obey, the mere affirmance of that order did not make an order for appellants to obey.

Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 157 U. S. 72, 39 L. ed. 624.

So that the $15,000 bond had no greater effect than a $250 bond would have had, conditioned to pay all damages and costs which might be awarded against appellant on the appeal.

Re Schedel's Estate, 69 Cal. 241; Pennie v. 31 L. R. A.

San Francisco City & County Super. Ct. 89 Cal. 31; Born v. Horstmann, 80 Cal. 452.

The recovery on appeal bonds is limited to those conditions of the bond which are required by statute, and the statute did not authorize any condition to "obey the order of the court."

Kountz v. Omaha Hotel Co. 107 U. S. 378, 27 L. ed. 609; Post v. Doremus, 60 N. Y. 371; McCollion v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. 98 Cal. 442; Powers v. Crane, 67 Cal. 65; Powers v. Chabot, 93 Cal. 267; Steele v. Crider, 61 Fed. Rep. 484; Pacific Nat. Bank v. Minter, 124 U. S. 721, 31 L. ed. 567; Shunk v. Miller, 5 Pa. 250; Hall v. Cushing, 9 Pick. 404; Sanders v. Rives, 8 Stew. (Ala.) 109; Woods v. State, 10 Mo. 698.

As securing costs the bond is good, but the costs are only those incurred in the supreme court.

Janeway v. Haft, 46 N. Y. S. R. 917; Concordia Sav. & Aid Assn. v. Read, 124 N. Y. 189; Com. v. Wistar, 142 Pa. 378; Michie v. Ellair, 60 Mich. 73.

On rehearing.

At any time during the progress of the case, even after appeal, and whether the appeal bond operated as a supersedeas or not, Mr. Braithwaite could have compelled the libelants to file the usual stipulation for value, or have had the boat sold under the well-established admiralty practice.

2 Conkling, Admiralty, pp. 167-169; United States Sup. Ct. Rules of Practice in Admiralty, No. 11.

After the admission of the state the United States district court in admiralty matters proceeds to do whatever remains to be done in admiralty cases pending in the territorial courts.

Hamilton v. The Walla Walla, 44 Fed. Rep. 4; The Blanche Page, 16 Blatchf. 1.

In The Blanche Page, supra, Justice Blatchford said: "The fact that the libelants could not recover judgments on the stipulations or bonds in any other court than the admiralty court does not prevent their resorting to other courts, where they have obtained judgments in the admiralty court, to enforce such judgments."

Ex parte Phillips, 25 L. ed. 781; The Baltic, 1 Blatchf. & H. 149; The Wanata v. Avery ("The Wanata"), 95 U. S. 600, 24 L. ed. 461; Campbell v. Hadley, 1 Sprague, 470; The Aligator, 1 Gall. 145; Nelson v. United States, Pet. C. C. 285; Dunlap, Admiralty Practice, 164; McLellan v. United States, 1 Gall. 227; The Octavia, 1 Mason, 150; 2 Conkling, Admiralty, 2d ed. p. 105; Holmes v. Dodge, 2 Abb. Adm. 60; Gaines v. Travis, Id. 422; Benedict, American Admiralty, 2d ed. p. 290, 3d ed. p. 637; Re Sawyer, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 235, 22 L. ed. 617.

Stipulations are enforced in our courts of admiralty by summary process of execution. 2 Conkling, Admiralty, p. 114.

A stipulation or bond is in admiralty regarded as a fund in court to be distributed by that court.

The Tolchester, 42 Fed. Rep. 180; De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398.

After a two years' search I have found but one case holding that an action at common law would lie on a bond taken in admiralty.

Lacaze v. State, Add. Rep. 59; Respublica v. Le Caze, 1 Yeates, 55.

Admiralty, having jurisdiction of the main case, has jurisdiction of all incidental and ancillary proceedings.

De Lovio v. Boit, supra; Munks v. Jackson, 66 Fed. Rep. 571; Jackson v. Munks, 58 Fed. Rep. 596; Ramsay v. Allegre, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 611, 6 L. ed. 746; Seymour v. Phillips & C. Constr. Co. 7 Biss. 460; Arnold v. Frost, 9 Ben. 267; Hatch v. Dorr, 4 McLean, 112; Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, 4 Wash. C. C. 482; Rio Grande R. Co. v. Vinet, 132 U. S. 478, 33 L. ed. 400; Thompson v. McReynolds, 29 Fed. Rep. 657; Lacassagne v. Chapuis, 144 U. S. 119, 36 L. ed. 368; Dunlap v. Stetson, 4 Mason, 349; Miller v. Rogers, 29 Fed. Rep. 401; Babcock v. Millard, Fed. Cas. No. 699; Winslow v. Leland, 128 Ill. 304; Wade v. Wortsman, 29 Fed. Rep. 754; McDermott v. Doyle, 11 Mo. 443; Burtus v. McCarty, 13 Johns. 424; Davis v. Packard, 6 Wend. 327, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 276, 8 L. ed. 684; Penhallow v. Doane, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 54, 1 L. ed. 507; Jennings v. Carson, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch. 2, 2 L. ed. 531.

No court will entertain a distinct suit to accomplish nothing beyond what can be effected by orders in a cause or a rule on parties therein.

Mann v. Blount, 65 N. C. 101; Wells, Jurisdiction, p. 135; Parker v. Murray, 37 N. Y. S. R. 949; Garrett v. New York Transit & T. Co. 36 Fed. Rep. 518.

So far as we can learn, there is no such thing known to modern practice as a separate suit on an admiralty bond or stipulation, not even in an admiralty court. The remedy is always by motion or petition in the case in which the bond was given.

The Blanche Page, 16 Blatchf. 1; The Baltic, 1 Blatchf. & H. 149; Campbell v. Hadley, 1 Sprague, 470; The Wanata v. Avery ("The Wanata"), 95 U. S. 600, 24 L. ed. 461; Re Sawyer, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 235, 22 L. ed. 617; The Alligator, 1 Gall. 145; The Sydney, 27 Fed. Rep. 119; Benedict, American Admiralty, p. 637; Conkling, Admiralty, p. 114, footnote p. 115; The Tolchester, 42 Fed. Rep. 180.

Federal courts on their part are careful not to assert jurisdiction of causes which are ancillary or auxiliary to actions in state courts.

Flash v. Dillon, 22 Fed. Rep. 1; Buford v. Strother, 10 Fed. Rep. 406; Pratt v. Albright, 9 Fed. Rep. 634; Poole v. Thatcherdeft, 19 Fed. Rep. 49; Lamb v. Ewing, 54 Fed. Rep. 269; Root v. Woolworth, 150 U. S. 401, 37 L. ed. 1123; Brooks v. Memphis, Fed. Cas. No. 1,954.

But the same courts retain jurisdiction over ancillary matters where they have it of the main case.

Deakin v. Lea, Fed. Cas. No. 8,695; Lamb v. Ewing, Root v. Woolworth, and Brooks v. Memphis, supra; Cohen v. Solomon, 66 Fed. Rep. 411; Kern v. Huidekoper, 103 U. S. 494, 26 L. ed. 497; Johnson v. Christian, 125 U. S. 642, 31 L. ed. 820; Lacassagne v. Chapuis, 144 U. S. 119, 36 L. ed. 368; Dunlap v. Stetson, Fed. Cas. No. 4,164; Miller v. Rogers, 29 Fed. Rep. 401; Babcock v. Millard, Fed. Cas. No. 699; Thompson v. McReynolds, 29 Fed. Rep. 657; Gwin v. Breedlove, 43 U. S. 2 How. 29, 11 L. 81 L. R. A.

ed. 167; Reilly v. Golding, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 56, 19 L. ed. 858; Wells, Jurisdiction, § 156.

Corliss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Although the steamer Eclipse has for years lain at the bottom of the Missouri river, the litigation connected with her shows no signs of decadence. Rea v. The Eclipse, 4 Dak. 218, on appeal, 135 U. S. 599, 34 L. ed. 269; Braithwaite v. Power, 1 N. D. 455; Braithwaite v. Aikin, Id. 475, 2 N. D. 57, 3 N. D. 365. In this case Capt. Braithwaite is seeking to recover damages for breach of an undertaking given by defendants on appeal from the district court to the supreme court of the territory of Dakota from a judgment rendered in a proceeding in admiralty instituted to try his title to, and right to the possession of, this vessel. The questions of law on the merits which are here at issue arise on demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint. The trial court sustained the demurrer. The plaintiff has appealed. It is obvious from the complaint that the undertaking was given as a cost bond, and also for the purpose of securing a stay of proceedings under the judgment appealed from pending the appeal. It is in the following form:

"Whereas, on the 18th day of September, 1884, in the district court within and for the 8d judicial district, the above-named respondent, William Braithwaite, recovered judgment against the above named appellants for the possession of said steamer Eclipse and costs, and the above named appellants and interveners, feeling aggrieved thereby, intend to appeal therefrom to the supreme court of the territory of Dakota: Now, therefore, we do hereby undertake that the said appellants will pay all costs and damages which may be awarded against appellants on said appeal, or on a dismissal thereof, not exceeding $250, and do also undertake that if said judgment so appealed from, or any part thereof, be affirmed, or said appeal be dismissed, the said appellants will pay the amount directed to be paid by said judgment, or the part of such amount as to which the said judgment shall be affirmed, if it be affirmed only in part, and all damages and costs which shall be awarded against said appellants on said appeal, and also undertake to obey any order the appellate court may make in the premises: conditioned, however, that our liability hereunder shall not exceed $15,000. Dated December 16, 1884."

On appeal the judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of the territory of Dakota.

Preliminary to the consideration of the merits, we must settle the question of the jurisdiction of the state courts to take cognizance of this action. Counsel for defendants insists that the power to render judgment on the undertaking sued on is vested exclusively in the United States district court for the district of North Dakota, sitting as a court of admiralty. He founds his contention upon the fact that the undertaking is the outgrowth of an action in admiralty, and on the proposition that any proceeding to enforce it is merely incidental to the main action in the course of which it was given. He asserts that a suit on the undertaking is an offshoot from the original proceeding,—is supplemental in character,—and that, therefore, the court in which it was given, and that court only, has power to enforce it. His argument certainly derives no support from the analogies of the law. If the doctrine to maintain which he has striven with great force in this court be indeed the true doctrine, it stands alone. In no other case is it the rule that the court in which a bond, recognizance, undertaking, or other security is taken in the course of a judicial proceeding pending therein has exclusive jurisdiction of an action brought to enforce it. (Of course, where scire facias is resorted to, the court in which the main proceeding was had is the only court which can take jurisdiction.) An action on such security, whatever be its form, is always as much incidental to the original suit as this action is incidental to the admiralty proceeding in which the undertaking sued on was given. The security is in the same sense an outgrowth of the main litigation, and the action thereon is as strictly an offshoot from the original proceeding, as is any suit to enforce an appeal bond given in the course of an admiralty action an offshoot from such original proceeding in admiralty. And yet, aside from admiralty cases, no case can be found—with possibly a single exception, to which we will hereafter allude—holding that a suit to enforce any bond given during the progress of any judicial proceeding must be brought in the tribunal in which it was given. Undertakings given on suing out writs of attachments; undertakings given to secure the discharge of attachments; undertakings to obtain orders of arrest; undertakings to secure release from imprisonment thereunder, supersedeas bonds and undertakings on appeal; bonds given on the allowance of a writ of injunction; bonds given by the plaintiff, and also bonds given by the defendant, in replevin actions, to obtain possession pendente lite of the property in controversy,—all these and other obligations given in the course of judicial proceedings may, in the absence of some statute to the contrary, be sued on in any court having jurisdiction of actions on contract involving a like amount. That the court in which any such security is given is not vested with exclusive cognizance of an action thereon is apparent from the general trend of practice, which is to institute such an action in any tribunal possessing jurisdiction of actions on contract, where the amount is the same as that for which suit is brought on such security. If there is any class of actions in which it might be claimed with great force that the exclusive cognizance of actions on a judicial bond inheres in the court in which it was given, it is the class to which belong actions on bonds given in claim and delivery proceedings in replevin cases. Proceedings to enforce such bonds are not only incidental to the main case, and an offshoot therefrom, but they are also supplemental in their character to the original action. The property to recover which the replevin suit is brought is released, and the bond substituted for it. In the event of the sheriff's being unable, after judgment, to produce the property or collect its adjudged value, the successful litigant, in proceeding to enforce the bond, is merely pursuing his original purpose to secure redress for the wrong done him in depriving him of the possession of his property. Such action is strictly supplemental in its nature, and if, in any case aside from the class of cases to be hereafter noted, a subsequent proceeding to enforce a judicial bond could be regarded as in any sense an essential part of the prior suit, it is in just such a case; and yet we can find no authority which holds that the exclusive cognizance of an action on such a bond is vested in the court in which it was given. In McDermott v. Doyle, 11 Mo. 443, the court ruled, not that the court in which the replevin bond was given had exclusive jurisdiction of an action to enforce it, but that the action should have been brought in such court, unless the plaintiff was prevented from suing on the bond in that court. The language of the court in that case is that "the bond was given in the circuit court, and suit should have been instituted on it in that court, unless the party suing was prevented from instituting his suit in that court. The action on the bond, for a breach thereof, is virtually a continuance and part of original detinue suit, and to permit the plaintiff to sue on the bond in the court of common pleas would be to permit him to divide his action, and prosecute one branch of it in the circuit court, and the other in the common pleas. On this point authorities are very abundant." In the first place, it is to be noticed that by necessary implication the court recognizes the fact that the question is not one of jurisdiction, by so qualifying the rule there enunciated as to allow the plaintiff to sue in another court when he is unable to bring his action in the court in which the bond was given. The utmost scope of the decision is that it is the duty of the plaintiff to sue in the latter court, if possible. To sustain this novel rule in actions on replevin bonds, the court cites the cases which lay down such a rule with respect to recognizances of bail. But this rule had its origin in a peculiar privilege enjoyed by the obligors on such recognizances, conferred upon them by statute. When proceeded against in the court in which such recognizance was taken, the statute allowed the recognizers to retry the merits of the original action in which the recognizance was given, although judgment had already been rendered in such original action against the defendant therein. See the opinion of Smith, J., in Lacaze v. State, Add. Rep. 59-90, and of Chew, J., in same case, at page 68. The courts have refused to allow the plaintiff to sue in another tribunal when he could bring his action in the court in which the recognizance was given, because they have assumed that the latter court only could give the recognizers the relief provided for by statute, or because, as some of the cases seem to indicate, no other court could afford the recognizers as effectual relief. According to Smith J., in Lacaze v. State, supra, the foundation of the rule that the recognizers must be proceeded against in the court in which the recognizance is a matter of record is that no other court can give them the equitable relief provided for by the statute; and according to the United States Supreme Court in Davis v. Packard, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 276, 8 L. ed. 684, the rule rests upon the supposition that the court in which the recognizance was given is more competent to relieve the recognizers. It is therefore obvious that the foundation of the rule is the protection of the recognizers against the loss or impairment of this special privilege, statutory in its origin. The plaintiff cannot force them into a court in which they will be deprived of it altogether, or, at the most, will enjoy it shorn of a portion of its efficacy, unless he is powerless to sue in the court in which the recognizance was given. The rule is not that no other court possesses jurisdiction to entertain the action, but that the recognizers may, for their protection, insist that, when possible, the plaintiff shall proceed against them in the court in which they gave the recognizance. It is purely a personal privilege, and if the defendants waive it the case may proceed in any other tribunal in whose jurisdiction over the case they acquiesce. Davis v. Packard, 6 Wend. 327. This could not be done if such tribunal did not possess jurisdiction of the subject-matter, as consent will never confer such jurisdiction. In many cases the recognizers have been sued in another court, and the jurisdiction of such court sustained. Davis v. Gillet, 7 Johns. 318; Haswell v. Bates, 9 Johns. 80; Gardiner v. Burham, 12 Johns. 459. See also Burtus v. McCarty, 13 Johns. 424, and Davis v. Packard, supra. Moreover, a recognizance was a matter of record, and in the nature of a judgment against the recognizers in the case in which it was given. Davis v. Packard, 6 Wend. 327, 330, 331; Respublica v. Cobbet, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 467-475, 1 L. ed. 688-686. Proceedings to enforce it were by scire facias. They might therefore be regarded as part of the original action with much greater reason than an action like the one at bar, on an undertaking on appeal. It is therefore clear that the cases cited to support the decision of the court in McDermott v. Doyle, supra, do not sustain it, in so far as that case may be regarded as holding that exclusive jurisdiction of a proceeding to enforce a replevin bond resides in the court in which it was given. We feel justified in asserting it to be the general rule that the plaintiff may, in the absence of a statute regulating the matter, enforce any bond, undertaking, or other security given in the course of a judicial proceeding, in any court having jurisdiction of an action on contract for the amount he seeks to recover; and we are unable to discover any reason why this rule should not apply to an undertaking on appeal given in an admiralty action in rem. We are at a loss to understand on what principle it can be claimed that admiralty courts exercise a more extended jurisdiction than common-law courts in analogous cases. Formerly their powers were very much circumscribed, and, while it is true that their jurisdiction and powers have been considerably enlarged, we do not believe that they are in the possession of this exclusive jurisdiction which is not enjoyed by common-law courts in similar cases.

But counsel for defendants earnestly urges that a strong array of authority supports his contention. We are unable to agree with him in the view which he takes of the decisions he cites. It is undoubtedly true that courts of admiralty have power summarily to render judgment against stipulators upon any stipulation given during the progress of an admiralty proceeding, and that such judgment may be rendered in the very proceeding in which the stipulation was given. No new suit is necessary. Nor does it matter whether the stipulation is for value or for costs, or is given to perfect an appeal, or stay execution during the pendency thereof. United States v. Ames, 99 U. S. 35, 25 L. ed. 295; The Palmyra, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 531; The William H. Webb v. Barling ("The Webb"), 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 406, 20 L. ed. 774; The Wanata v. Avery ("The Wanata"), 95 U. S. 600, 24 L. ed. 461; Pearce v. Germanic Ins. Co. ("The Lady Pike"), 96 U. S. 461, 24 L. ed. 672; Sawyer v. Oakman, 11 Blatchf. 65, Fed. Cas. No. 12,403; The Blanche Page, 16 Blatchf. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 1,524; Id. 17 Blatchf. 221, Fed. Cas. No. 1,525; The Alligator, 1 Gall. 145, Fed. Cas. No. 248; McLellan v. United States, 1 Gall. 227, Fed. Cas. No. 8,895; Nelson v. United States, Pet. C. C. 235, Fed. Cas. No. 10,116; The Virgin v. Vyfhins, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 538, 8 L. ed. 1036; The Baltic, Fed. Cas. No. 826; The Sydney, 47 Fed. Rep. 260; 2 Conkling, Admiralty, p. 114; Bartlett v. Spicer, 75 N. Y. 528.

By virtue of admiralty rules 3 and 4 of the United States Supreme Court, the same practice is prescribed with respect to stipulations or bonds given in proceedings in personam to secure the discharge of an attachment or the release of the defendant from arrest. See these rules in Benedict, American Admiralty, pp. 381, 382.

Nor does the fact that a bond, instead of a stipulation, is taken, alter the rule that the admiralty court may, in the same proceeding, summarily enforce the obligation. Bonds are regarded in admiralty as stipulations to be enforced in the same manner. The Wanata v. Avery ("The Wanata"), The Alligator, McLellan v. United States, and Nelson v. United States, supra; Conkling, Admiralty, p. 434; The Sydney, supra; Dunlap, Admiralty Practice, 164.

Neither does the power of the court to render in the same action judgment against the parties bound by the stipulation or bond depend upon their express consent recited in the obligation, or their submission to the jurisdiction of the court by the terms of the security. It was long customary to embody such submission and consent in stipulations, and this is still done in many cases. It is possible that this doctrine that an admiralty court may proceed in the same suit summarily against the stipulators may have had its origin in such submission and consent. But, however this may be, such doctrine no longer rests thereon. In several cases in which this practice was upheld and followed with respect to supersedeas bonds on appeal, such bonds contained no clause by which the obligors in terms submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the court nor did they contain any consent that execution might issue against them in the same action in a summary manner. The Sydney, and The Blanche Page, supra; The New Orleans, 17 Blatchf. 216, Fed. Cas. No. 10,181; The Wanata v. Avery ("The Wanata"), supra. See also The Alligator, and Sawyer v. Oakman, supra; Ex parte Sawyer, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 235, 22 L. ed. 617. Mr. Conkling, in his work on Admiralty Practice, in which he declares that bonds and stipulations are placed in the same category, so far as the procedure to enforce them is concerned (p. 434), sets out at length the forms of bonds which may be given, instead of stipulations, in various stages of an admiralty proceeding; and in none of them is any submission to the jurisdiction of the court, or consent to summary proceeding to enforce the bond, to be found. Conkling, Admiralty, pp. 574, 575, 581, 582, 589. He says that in this country the clause of expressing the consent of the stipulators that execution issue against their property, on the bond to enforce the decree, is not necessary. Id. p. 582, note.

We are strongly of the opinion that the United States district court for the district of North Dakota has jurisdiction to render judgment against the persons who executed the undertaking in suit, and to this extent we agree with counsel for defendants. It has the same power which it would have had if the admiralty suit in which such undertaking was given had been instituted in such court subsequently to statehood. It is the successor of the old territorial district court in which this action was brought, so far as such court was vested with admiralty jurisdiction. Section 22 of the enabling act. The Walla Walla, 44 Fed. Rep. 4. That the territorial district court was vested by the act of Congress with the same admiralty jurisdiction as was vested in the several district courts of the United States, is clear from the language of § 1910 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which declared that the district courts of the several territories therein referred to (Dakota being one of them) should have and exercise the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States as was vested in the circuit and district courts of the United States. The authorities are explicit that under such legislation the same admiralty jurisdiction is vested in the territorial district courts as is vested in the Federal district courts. Houseman v. The North Carolina, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 40, 10 L. ed. 653; The City of Panama v. Phelps ("The City of Panama"), 101 U. S. 453, 25 L. ed. 1061; Rea v. The Eclipse ("The Eclipse"), 135 U. S. 599, 34 L. ed. 269. That the territorial district court had admiralty jurisdiction was held by the court in The Eclipse Case; and that the proceeding in which the undertaking sued on was regarded by that court as an admiralty proceeding is apparent, not only from the language of the opinion in that case, but also from the fact that, being vested by Congress with the duty of deciding what cases were and what were not exclusively of Federal cognizance, on remanding them after final decision (see § 22 of the enabling act), the court remanded The Eclipse Case to the United States district court for the district of North Dakota, instead of to the state district court. Therefore, in determining what power the Federal district court for the district of North Dakota has to enforce the undertaking in suit, we must proceed on the same theory on which we would proceed if the original admiralty suit had been commenced after such Federal court had, by the admission of North Dakota into the Union, come into existence. The authorities seem to warrant the counsel for defendants in his contention that that court has full jurisdiction to enforce the undertaking sued on. But the right to exercise jurisdiction does not necessarily carry with it the right to an exclusive exercise of such jurisdiction. The plaintiff may at his election, proceed in that court, but we do not think he is bound to resort to that tribunal. The language of Smith, J., in Lacaze v. State, 1 Add. Rep. 59, 89, 90, in which this very question was involved, is in harmony with our views: "That all proceedings legally commenced in any court to which the parties have agreed to submit, may be more properly carried into execution by that court than by any other, and that no superior court ought to prohibit the inferior court from carrying such proceedings into execution, unless when authority is expressly given to the superior court for this purpose, seems not to admit of dispute, when the party entitled to the effect of those proceedings applies to the inferior court to have them carried into execution; but does it follow that, if the party entitled to such effect chooses to apply to a superior court of common law and general jurisdiction, the superior court is precluded from carrying into effect any of the acts of the inferior court? Does this follow especially where the party applying had been forced into the inferior court? If the party who has chosen the admiralty jurisdiction, in which to institute a suit should be confined to that court to the conclusion of the transaction, does it follow that the other party, who had been forced into it, should be thereby deprived of his election of applying to the courts of common law, and of trial by jury to carry into effect a stipulation taken in the cause by the admiralty, and so deprived without the intervention of positive law or any solemnly adjudged case? I think the affirmative cannot be supported." The plaintiff in this case did not seek a court of admiralty. He was forced into it by the libelants in the original case. To assert that he has made his election to proceed in admiralty, when he might have proceeded at common law or in equity, and that, therefore, he is bound by his election, and hence that all proceedings which grow out of the principal case must by him be instituted in the admiralty court, is to ignore the undisputed facts of this litigation. He was dragged into admiralty by the libelants, when, as the United States Supreme Court held in that very case, the remedy of the libelants to secure the relief they were after was in a court of equity, for an accounting, and not in admiralty at all.

The courts, in holding that stipulations may be enforced, against those that sign them, by summary proceedings in the original case, do not adjudge such proceedings to be an essential part of the main suit. The title of the original action is used. The proceedings are carried on with greater dispatch than a formal action, and the procedure is much simpler. But, in its essence, it is an independent litigation against new parties,—the stipulators. They cannot, it is true, retry the merits of the original action; but they have an absolute right to be heard, at some stage of the proceeding, before their property is finally wrested from them under execution, on the questions whether they in fact signed the stipulation, and whether it is a valid and binding instrument. These facts may be put in issue by them, and some kind of notice must be given to them, and some opportunity afforded them to litigate such facts. The proceeding against the stipulators is, in its essential nature, as much an independent proceeding against them as though an entirely new action were instituted on the stipulation in the usual way, unless, indeed, such proceeding is indispensable to secure to the successful litigant the fruits of his victory according to the usages of courts of justice. This brings us to an important and, in our judgment, controlling distinction. A proceeding to enforce a stipulation for value, given in an action exclusively in rem, in admiralty, is an indispensable part of such action. Without it the action would be of no possible benefit to the suitor who had won. In an admiralty action, exclusively in rem, there is no personal defendant; and therefore no judgment against a personal defendant can be rendered, aside from a judgment on the stipulation for value, in case one is given. The suit is against an impersonal defendant,—the res. After it is seized the owner may appear, and on establishing his rights as owner he may secure the release of the res by the giving of the stipulation for value. Thereafter the original res disappears from the case, and the substituted res takes its place. Henceforth the suit is against the substituted res, and the court exercises, and must, from the necessities of the case, exercise, the same jurisdiction over it that it would have exercised over the original res, had such res remained in the possession and under the control of the court. The remedy is transferred from the ship to the stipulation. United States v. Ames, The Palmyra, and The William H. Webb v. Barling ("The Webb"), supra; United States v. The Haytian Republic ("The Haytian Republic"), 154 U. S. 118, 38 L. ed. 930. It is true that in cases of fraud or mistake, or when the res has been unprovidently released, the court possesses ample power to order its return to the custody of the marshal. The Thales, 3 Ben. 327, Fed. Cas. No. 13,855; The Virgo, 18 Blatchf. 225, Fed. Cas. No. 16,976; Litington v. The Jewess, 1 Ben. 21, note, Fed. Cas. No. 8,412; The Union, 4 Blatchf. 90, Fed. Cas. No. 14,346; The Favorite, 2 Flipp. 86, Fed. Cas. No. 4,698; 2 Parsons, Shipping & Admiralty, 411; United States v. The Haytian Republic ("The Haytian Republic"), supra; United States v. Ames, 89 U. S. 35, 25 L. ed. 295. But this must be done before final judgment against the stipulators. Ibid. And when this is done the stipulation is necessarily annulled. The libellant cannot have a remedy against both the res and the stipulation for value. The stipulation is not additional security. It is the only security. In every case, therefore, in which there is a valid stipulation for value, which may be enforced, no resort to the original res can be had. It is true that in every suit in rem, brought to enforce some claim against the res, the judgment in terms condemns the original res to be sold to satisfy the amount for which judgment is rendered. But such judgment is never enforced against the original res in those cases in which a stipulation has been given, and has not been annulled by the return of the original res to the custody of the marshal, under the order of the court. 2 Foster, Fed. Pr. § 416. This is recognized by all the decisions, and is an elementary principle of admiralty practice. Having no power to render a personal judgment against the owner, and no power to enforce according to its terms the judgment formally rendered against the original res, a judgment against the stipulators, on their stipulation, is an indispensable step in the case. Without it the remedy would be incomplete. The action would be a farce. The question of abstract right would be settled, but no means would be provided by the employment of which the successful suitor could enforce the claim which the court had decreed to be just. Judicial tribunals are not wont to administer justice after the manner of moot courts. It is their invariable practice to give the victorious litigant a judgment which will be enforced by the court rendering it according to its terms. The only judgment which a court of admiralty can render in a proceeding in rem, brought to enforce a claim against the res, which it will execute according to the terms of such judgment, in those cases in which a stipulation for value has been given, and has not been annulled by the seizure of the original res under the order of the court, is a judgment against the stipulators for value. And hence such a judgment is an integral part of the action in which such stipulation was given. It is as much an indispensable step in the case as any prior proceeding therein, or as proceedings with respect to the sale of the original res after judgment, in cases where such res has not been released. There is therefore an obvious reason for holding that the enforcement of the stipulation against the stipulators for value, in such cases, is within the exclusive cognizance of the court in which it was given. It is within its exclusive jurisdiction, the same as any other essential part of the case. No court has power to lay hold of an unfinished litigation pending in another court, and take cognizance of its remaining stages. The whole case must be finished in the forum in which it was started.

There is another conclusive reason why the court in which the stipulation for value is given has sole cognizance of the proceedings to enforce it: Its jurisdiction over the original res is exclusive. Such jurisdiction includes the power to make the res produce, up to its value, in that very suit, the money to satisfy the libellant's claim. This is accomplished by a sale after judgment. The stipulation takes the place of the ship. It, in turn, becomes the res, and over it the court exercises the same jurisdiction as over the vessel itself. It has, and must have, power, in the same suit, to make this new or substituted res produce, up to its value, money to satisfy the libellant's claim. The procedure against the stipulation is different from the procedure against the vessel, because the former differs from the latter in its nature. In making the stipulation produce money to apply on libellant's claim, the admiralty court proceeds as other courts proceed against similar instruments. It does not sell the obligation at public auction, but renders judgment and awards execution against the obligors therein. This it has the exclusive power to do just as it possesses exclusive jurisdiction to sell the original res in case it is not released from the control of the court. But the instrument sued on in the case at bar is an appeal bond, and not a stipulation for value, and judgment on such a bond is not an essential part of the admiralty proceeding in which it is given. The admiralty court can, without awarding judgment thereon in the same case, render a judgment which it will enforce according to its terms,—either a judgment against the original res, to be enforced against it by sale thereof in case it has not been released, or a judgment against the stipulators for value, in case it has been released, to be enforced against them by a general execution against their property. As a judgment against the sureties on an appeal bond is not an indispensable step in the case, as is a judgment against stipulators for value, admiralty does not possess exclusive cognizance of the proceeding to enforce such bond. Many of the cases cited by counsel for defendants are cases which merely hold that summary judgment may be rendered in the original action against stipulators for value for costs, and sureties on appeal bond. They do not decide that admiralty has exclusive jurisdiction of proceedings to enforce such instruments. The case of Bartlett v. Spicer, 75 N. Y. 528, relied on by counsel for defendants, involved a stipulation for value, and not an appeal bond; and, for the reasons already set forth, such a case is therefore not in point. Moreover, the stipulation was given in an action in admiralty instituted by the majority owners of the vessel to secure possession thereof for a voyage. Such a remedy a common law court was powerless to give. Exclusive jurisdiction of the subject-matter rested with admiralty; and the decision of the court in the Bartlett Case is based on the ground that the proceeding to enforce such a stipulation is part of the original subject-matter,—a subject-matter within the exclusive cognizance of admiralty, just as in a prize case. But admiralty did not possess exclusive cognizance of the remedy which the libelants sought to enforce by their proceeding in admiralty. It is entirely competent for a court of common-law jurisdiction to entertain an action to recover possession of a vessel. Taylor v. The Royal Saxon, 1 Wall. Jr. 311, Fed. Cas. No. 13,803. See also American S. B. Co. v. Chace, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369. The subject-matter of the original case not being within the exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty, as in Bartlett v. Spicer, the reasoning of the court in that case does not apply. None of the decisions cited by the New York court of appeals in the Bartlett Case decide that admiralty has exclusive cognizance of actions to enforce even stipulations for value in cases on the instance side of the court, and in Lacaze v. State, Add. Rep. 59, the majority of the court were of the contrary opinion. Three of the judges (Chew, Biddle, and Smith) were of opinion that an action of debt would lie on such stipulation in a common-law court. Rush, J., while concurring in the result, thought that admiralty had exclusive jurisdiction. Addison inclined somewhat to the same view, but was by no means emphatic in the expression of his opinion. While, for the peculiar reasons already stated, we do not think that the doctrine of concurrent jurisdiction is applicable to proceedings to enforce stipulations for value, yet, with respect to appeal bonds, the reasoning of the majority opinions in Lacaze v. State seems to us to be conclusive. See these parts of such opinions at pages 65-68, 88-91, Add. Rep.

It is true that cases can be found in which it has been asserted that admiralty has exclusive jurisdiction to enforce all bonds and stipulations given in admiralty proceedings. But these cases will be found, on examination, to be prize cases, and not actions in the instance side of the court. Such were the cases of Smart v. Wolff, 3 T. R. 336; Brymer v. Atkins, 1 H. Bl. 164. It is on this ground that these cases are distinguished by Chief Justice Chew in Lacaze v. State, Add. Rep. 65, 66. The cases of Penhallow v. Doane, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 54, 1 L. ed. 507, and Jennings v. Carson, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 5, 2 L. ed. 532, cited by counsel for defendants, were both cases of prize. So are the cases of Sasportas v. Jennings, 1 Bay, 470; Le Caux v. Eden, 2 Dougl. 594; Doane v. Penhallow, 1 U. S. 1 Dall. 218, 1 L. ed. 108; Ross v. Rittenhouse, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 160, 1 L. ed. 331, 1 Yeates, 443; Simpson v. Nadeau, N. C. Conf. Rep. 115, 2 Am. Dec. 634; Cheriot v. Foussat, 3 Binn. 220, and Novion v. Hallett, 16 Johns. 327. Except the New York case (Bartlett v. Spicer), we have been unable to find a single authority which asserts the exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty to enforce bonds and stipulations taken on the instance side of the court. The reason for the distinction, so far as the question of exclusive jurisdiction is concerned, between cases of prize and actions on the instance side of the court, is obvious. When sitting as a prize court, the tribunal is administering the laws of nations, and not the mere municipal jurisprudence of a single state or kingdom. The rights of foreigners are often involved. The decision in such a case may affect the public relations of the government whose tribunal had cognizance of the cause. Great international rights growing out of a state of war are generally at issue. No court of a nation, therefore, except such as is recognized by all the civilized powers as the proper tribunal in that nation to deal with such matters, should ever exercise any jurisdiction over the case of any of its incidents. Under such circumstances, the incidents are inseparably bound up with the main cause. This cogent reason for investing prize courts with exclusive jurisdiction over the whole controversy—incidental matters as well as the principal litigation—has been recognized by the master minds in jurisprudence. Said Chancellor Kent in Novion v. Hallett, 16 Johns. 327, at page 334: "Such cases generally arise between native citizens, or subjects and foreigners, and it is highly expedient that they should be decided by general laws, known and adopted by every nation. Courts of common law are governed by local municipal laws, and are incompetent, as Lord Mansfield afterwards observed in Lindo v. Rodney, 2 Dougl. 613, note 'to embrace the whole of the subject.' Matters of prize, and a piratical capture, without regular authority, involve more or less the responsibility of the national government, and may affect the public relations of the country. It is therefore exceedingly fit that they should be discussed and tried in a court proceeding according to rules of national law equally known to every country, and which court is specially intrusted with the cognizance of such questions." In Lacaze v. State, Add. Rep. 59, Addison, J., at page 97, referring to the decision of the court in Le Caux v. Eden, 2 Dougl. 594-597, said: "As the admiralty had full authority to remedy an unlawful capture, and all its consequences, the court thought it would be extremely inconvenient to withdraw this question or any of its incidents, from a jurisdiction proceeding on a general law of all nations, and in a summary and equitable manner, and bring it before a jurisdiction governed by a limited municipal law and proceeding with a formality and mode of proof ill suited to the nature of the subject. If captors were liable to a suit at common law, by every person affected by the capture, none would venture to take a prize. And if foreigners had no remedy for injuries done to their property under color of prize, but from suits in our courts of municipal law, to the principles and effects of which they are strangers, mutual confidence between nations would be destroyed, and, in a war between any two nations, all others would protect themselves by force, and compel by arms that administration of justice to which they are reciprocally entitled." But when sitting as an instance court, a court of admiralty administers, not the laws of nations, but the municipal regulations of the jurisdiction under whose laws the tribunal is erected. Unlike a prize court, the instance court has not exclusive power to afford the suitor redress. There is nearly always a concurrent remedy at law. Section 563, subd. 8, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, saves this right to every litigant. It is true that the suitor cannot, in this country, proceed in rem in any other court. The Moses Taylor v. Hammons ("The Moses Taylor"), 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 411, 8 L. ed. 397. But he always has a remedy in a common-law court to enforce the claim or redress the wrong of which he complains. Perceval v. Hickey, 18 Johns. 257-291, 9 Am. Dec. 210; Leon v. Galceran, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 185, 20 L. ed. 74; Schoonmaker v. Gilmore, 102 U. S. 118, 26 L. ed. 95; Benedict, American Admiralty, §§ 201, 205; American S. B. Co. v. Chace, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369. There is therefore no more reason for the exclusive jurisdiction of an instance court over the incidents of the main case than for the exclusive jurisdiction of any other of the municipal courts of the same government which administer the purely municipal law of that government over the incidents of an action tried and determined therein.

The Federal Supreme Court appears to have settled the question involved, under facts precisely the same as in the case at bar, so far as the issue of jurisdiction is concerned. An admiralty action in personam was instituted in the United States district court, sitting as an admiralty court. The case having been decided in favor of the libellant in the district court, and thereafter on appeal in the circuit court, it was carried by appeal to the Federal Supreme Court. On that appeal a super-seas bond was given. The judgment of the lower court was affirmed. New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchant's Bank, 47 U. S. 6 How. 344, 12 L. ed. 465. Instead of securing judgment against the sureties on the appeal bond in the very case in which the bond was given, the libellant sued them in the United States circuit court in an action of debt. This was a suit in a common-law court, and not in an admiralty court. The United States circuit court had common-law jurisdiction, but no original jurisdiction in admiralty cases. Georgius v. Madrazo, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 110, 7 L. ed. 73. It could take cognizance of such cases only on appeal. The action to enforce the appeal bond was, like this action, a common-law action brought in a court possessing original jurisdiction of common law and not of admiralty cases. Ives v. Merchants' Bank, 53 U. S. 12 How. 159, 13 L. ed. 936. No one connected with the case, from the time the United States Supreme Court affirmed the original judgment on appeal (47 U. S. 6 How. 344, 12 L. ed. 465), seems to have had any thought that the only remedy on the appeal bond was in admiralty. If such had been the law, the court in the Ives Case would have declared the judgment appealed from a nullity, for want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter. If counsel for defendants be correct in his contention, then both the judgments of both the circuit and the supreme court were void, and always have been. With this case before us, we feel constrained to hold that the district court of this state has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this action, and the case is therefore properly before us on appeal. We are of opinion that sound principle supports our view. The dictum of Judge Blatchford in The Blanche Page, 16 Blatchf. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 1,524, so far as it indicates that it was his opinion that admiralty only could render judgment on an appeal bond taken in the course of admiralty proceedings, cannot prevail against the decision in the Ives Case. We attach very little importance to this dictum, in view of the facts of the case in which it was uttered; and it is apparent that he regarded the appeal bond as having been given under the act of 1847, which in terms declares that judgment shall be rendered in the very case in which the bond was given. The statute which authorized the giving of such bonds having declared how they should be enforced, that remedy might be regarded as exclusive. The effect of our refusal to entertain jurisdiction might be serious, in case we were in error in so holding. But no irremediable harm can flow from our taking jurisdiction of this case, as the Federal Supreme Court, on writ of error, can reverse our judgment, if we are wrong. Indeed, our judgment, in that event, would be a nullity, and could be attacked collaterally in any court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties. So far from its being the rule that a court has exclusive jurisdiction of all the incidents of an action, it is a well-settled doctrine that the court of equity in which an injunction bond has been given has no power, on dissolving the injunction, to render judgment on the bond, or even to assess the damages sustained by the defendant by reason of the injunction, unless some statute gives such power. The defendant must sue at law on the bond. 2 High, Inj. §§ 1642, 1657, and cases cited.

A large number of cases have been cited by defendants' counsel, holding that an action may be maintained in the Federal court, irrespective of diverse citizenship, if such action is an offshoot from another suit of which such Federal court had jurisdiction. Among them are Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Fed. Cas. No. 1,592; Arnold v. Frost, Fed. Cas. No. 558; Lacassagne v. Chapuis, 144 U. S. 119, 36 L. ed. 388; Campbell v. Hadley, 1 Sprague, 470, Fed. Cas. No. 2,358; Seymour v. Phillips & C. Constr. Co. 7 Biss. 460, Fed. Cas. No. 12,689. But none of the cases cited hold that the Federal court has exclusive jurisdiction under such circumstances. The decision in Wade v. Wortman, 29 Fed. Rep. 754, is hostile to the contention of counsel for defendant. The original replevin suit was carried on in the United States circuit court. After judgment therein an action was commenced in a state court on a forthcoming bond given in such replevin suit. It was removed to the United States circuit court. The motion to remand was denied. But, if counsel's views be sound, —that the Federal court had exclusive jurisdiction of the second action,—the motion must have been granted; for the Federal court can never secure jurisdiction of a case by transfer from a state court under the laws of the United States, unless the state court had jurisdiction of the cause, so there could be something before it to be transferred. By holding that the case was properly removed to the Federal court, the court necessarily held that the state court had jurisdiction of the case before it was so removed. In Meyers v. Block, 120 U. S. 206, 30 L. ed. 642, the court affirmed a judgment of the state court in an action of debt on an injunction bond given in a case in equity in the Federal circuit court. In Campbell v. Hadley, 1 Sprague, 470, Fed. Cas. No. 2,358, the court merely held that the Federal district court had jurisdiction of an action in the nature of a scire facias on a bail bond given in admiralty proceedings to secure release of defendant from execution. But the court did not decide that no other court had jurisdiction.

It is urged that the state courts ought not to take jurisdiction of this case, for the reason that the plaintiff has an adequate remedy by proceeding in the original admiralty case. While it is true that courts of equity will refuse to entertain a bill to set aside a judgment, where there is an adequate remedy by motion in the action in which the judgment was rendered, we have been unable to discover any decision making that general doctrine of equity jurisprudence applicable to suits at law. The fact that the suitor has another remedy, which may be more speedy, and even more efficacious, does not debar him from bringing his action at law. It appears to be the rule that, despite the fact that the respondent in an appeal has, by statute, a summary remedy to enforce the appeal bond, in the very case in which it was given, still he may sue on the bond at law. 1 Enc. Pl. & Fr. 1018.

It is next urged that comity requires us to refuse to take jurisdiction of this case. The cases to which we are cited on this point hold that where, in an action in a Federal court, property has been seized, the state courts must not interfere with the control of the property by the Federal court, but that, if any person not a party to the suit desires to litigate his right to the property, he must intervene in the action, and there try his case. We have carefully examined these decisions, but the great length of this opinion prevents a review of them. It is sufficient to say that we are clear that they do not lay down any rule inimical to the jurisdiction of the state courts over this action. The rule which they lay down is thus stated in Cohen v. Solomon, 66 Fed. Rep. 411, at page 418: "No principle is more firmly entrenched in the law than the doctrine that, when one court acquires jurisdiction and power over the res, no other court can interfere with its possession or control." Many of the cases cited by counsel for defendants are there referred to. In Meyers v. Block, supra, the court affirmed a judgment of the state court in an action on an injunction bond given in an action in equity in the Federal court. This case is hostile to this contention of defendants' counsel. It furnishes, also, a complete answer to his contention that the suit on the appeal bond is ancillary to the proceedings in the admiralty court, within the scope of the rule that such proceedings must be carried on in the state or Federal court in which the main action was litigated. The cases cited by counsel for defendants in this connection are cases in which the courts have held that the proceedings were inseparably connected with the enforcement of the judgment in the main action, and were therefore only additional steps in that action, looking to the enforcement of such judgment. The great length of this opinion prevents a more particular reference to these cases. A casual examination of them cannot fail to show that they are not in point. They are Flash v. Dillon, 22 Fed. Rep. 1; Buford v. Strother, 10 Fed. Rep. 406; Pratt v. Albright, 9 Fed. Rep. 634; Poole v. Thatcherdeft, 19 Fed. Rep. 49; First Nat. Bank v. Turnbull, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 190, 21 L. ed. 296. This action is not in any sense a proceeding to enforce, nor is it in any manner connected with the enforcement of, the judgment in the admiralty case. On the contrary, it proceeds on the theory that plaintiff has been and is unable to enforce it, and that therefore he desires to compel those to pay him the damages he has thereby sustained who have agreed to be bound in the event that he should not be able to enforce it. The decision in Meyers v. Block, supra, is, as we have said, an authority against the defendants on this branch of the case.

We now come to the merits of the case. The defendants' counsel contends that the undertaking sued on is void. The plaintiff seeks to recover damages for the alleged breach of the condition of the undertaking that the obligors would obey any order the appellate court might make in the premises. The defendants' counsel asserts that, so far as this provision of the undertaking is concerned, the undertaking is void as a statutory undertaking. A consideration of this branch of the case necessitates a more particular reference to the facts. The action in which the undertaking was given was an action in admiralty in a cause of possession, civil and maritime, instituted in the district court of the territory of Dakota, for the third judicial district thereof, sitting as a court of admiralty under the laws of the United States. The power of such court to take jurisdiction of such an action was derived, as we have before said, from § 1910 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. This section provided that the district courts of the several territories referred to therein (Dakota being one of them) should have and exercise the same jurisdiction, in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, as was vested in the circuit and district courts of the United States. That such a statute is valid, and that its effect was to vest in the territorial district court of Dakota territory full admiralty jurisdiction, is well settled. Houseman v. The North Carolina, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 40, 10 L. ed. 658; The City of Panama v. Phelps ("The City of Panama"), 101 U. S. 458, 25 L. ed. 1081; Rea v. The Eclipse ("The Eclipse"), 135 U. S. 599, 34 L. ed. 269. This same section declares that "writs of error and appeals in all such cases may be had to the supreme court of each territory as in other cases." Construing this last provision, the supreme court of Dakota, when the admiralty case in question was before it on appeal, held that such appeal, and all appeals in admiralty cases from the district court to that court, should be governed by the laws, statutes, and rules that obtained in other civil actions tried in such district court. Rea v. The Eclipse, 4 Dak. 218. Both parties agree that this decision correctly states the law on this subject. It therefore being conceded that the statutes of the territory of Dakota regulated the appeal in that case, we will first treat the case from that standpoint. We therefore come to the question whether this undertaking is valid as a statutory supersedeas undertaking.

It is claimed by the plaintiff that the judgment appealed from directed the delivery of personal property, and that therefore the execution of a mere cost bond would not have been sufficient to stay the execution of such judgment. Section 416 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as revised in 1877 (the statute in force when the appeal in question was taken), provides that, "if the judgment appealed from direct the assignment or delivery of documents or personal property, the execution of the judgment shall not be stayed by appeal, unless the things required to be assigned or delivered be brought into court, or placed in the custody of such officer or receiver as the court shall appoint, or unless an undertaking be entered into on the part of the appellant, by at least two sureties, and in such amount as the court, or judge thereof, shall direct, to the effect that the appellant will obey the order of the appellate court upon the appeal." The judgment that was appealed from did not in terms direct the delivery by the appellants, on such appeal, of the steamboat Eclipse, her tackle, apparel, and furniture. It merely adjudged that the claimant, who is the plaintiff in this case, was the owner of one half of such property, and entitled to the possession thereof; that the libel be dismissed, with costs, and that the intervention of certain parties who had intervened in the case be dismissed, with costs; and that the marshal deliver the possession of such property to such claimant. Had the district court, as a court of admiralty, ordered that the marshal deliver the property to the libelants in that action, or to the interveners, on their giving proper security (whether this could be done we do not decide), it is obvious that the judgment of the court must have been against the parties so lawfully in possession of the property, directing them to deliver such property to the claimant. In such a case there would have been a judgment directing a delivery of personal property, within the letter and the spirit of section 416, assuming that this section was intended to apply to admiralty cases. But that the particular judgment which was in fact rendered was not a judgment for the delivery of personal property, within the meaning of § 416, Code Civ. Proc., does not admit of doubt. That judgment merely adjudged that the claimant was entitled to possession. It did not direct that the libelants or interveners deliver such possession. The judgment itself does not show that they were in possession. Its language indicates the contrary. We do not understand that in admiralty the libelant is ever allowed to secure possession of the res pendente lite, unless the action is to secure possession of the vessel for a voyage. In an action to secure absolute possession of a vessel, there seems to be no practice authorizing a delivery of the res to the libelant pendente lite. We must assume, therefore, that the property was in the legal custody of the marshal, as the hand of the court. The finding of fact (assuming that we may consider it at all that the marshal had delivered possession of the steamer to the interveners in the action without any order of court does not show that the legal possession of the property was anywhere except in the marshal. The court did not lose its control over the steamer by the illegal act of the marshal in suffering the interveners to take possession thereof pendente lite. The Rio Grande v. Otis ("The Rio Grande"), 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 458, 23 L. ed. 158. The marshal, and his official sureties were liable to the claimant for his failure to keep possession of the steamer, as it was his clear duty to do. The Jack Jennett, 2 Ben. 353, Fed. Cas. No. 7,121. The judgment of the court recognized this obligation by directing that the marshal deliver the steamer to the claimant. The obvious meaning of this clause of the judgment is not that the marshal, as the executive officer of the court, shall take the property from the interveners or libelants, as under a judgment directing them to deliver the property to the claimant, but that the marshal (who is the legal custodian of the property, and is therefore responsible for the possession of the property, irrespective of what he has done with it) shall himself deliver to the claimant the property, which the law regards him (the marshal) as having in his control. If he had delivered it to any one pendente lite, it was to hold it for him. The law does not, in such a case, recognize the possession of any one else. The court deals with the marshal alone, in directing what shall be done with such possession. The judgment was therefore not a judgment against either the libelants or the interveners, directing them to deliver possession of the property to the claimant, but was merely a judgment declaring that the latter was entitled to the possession thereof, which the law deemed to be held by the marshal, as the hand of the court. Had the purpose of the court been to award a judgment against the libelants or interveners, directing them to deliver possession to the claimant, the phraseology of the judgment would have been different. It would have been similar to that of a judgment in a replevin action where the property is in the legal possession of the unsuccessful party. Such a judgment, in terms, adjudges that the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, recover possession of the property of the adverse party, who has such legal possession. But where the adverse party has no such possession, the property being already in the possession of the successful suitor, the judgment merely provides, as does the judgment under consideration, that the successful party is entitled to the possession. Comp. Laws, § 5099; 2 Abbott, Forms of Fed. Pr. 554. In replevin actions the property is never left in the custody of the officer pendente lite, but always in the possession of one of the parties to the suit. Hence a judgment in such cases adjudging that one party is entitled to possession never contains a provision that the officer deliver the possession to him. But in admiralty actions to recover possession the property may be, and in this case it would seem that it actually was, left in the legal custody of the marshal during the pendency of the action. It was therefore entirely proper that the clause directing the marshal to deliver the property to the claimant should have been inserted in the judgment. It was aimed at the marshal solely, because the court regarded him, as it was bound to do, as being legally in possession of the property. If the court had intended to render a judgment directing the libelants or interveners to deliver the possession of the property to the claimant, or that he recover the possession from them, it would have expressed such purpose in the judgment itself. The marshal, in taking the property from the possession of the interveners, to enable him to comply with the judgment, would not have made the seizure under the judgment, but under his right to revest himself with the possession of such property pendente lite. He had the same power to take it from the possession of the interveners before the judgment was rendered. That the judgment was not a judgment directing the delivery of personal property, within the meaning of § 416, Code Civ. Proc., is plain, when we consider the object of this section. It was passed to require the appellant to give a supersedeas bond in order to stay execution in cases in which the property should be in the legal possession of the adverse party, and would be left there by stay of execution. In such cases the respondent needs security. But when such property is in the custody of the court there is no occasion for additional security on appeal, as the party has the security of the court's control of it as much after appeal as before. The stay of execution will merely leave it where it was before,—not in the hands of a party, but in the custody of the court. That no supersedeas bond was required to be given to secure a stay, where the property was already legally in the custody of the court, is apparent from that provision of § 416 which gives the appellant the option of placing the property in the custody of the court, and thus securing a stay. If he can secure a stay by the giving of a cost bond, and the surrender of the property to the control of the court, he may obtain a stay by the giving of such cost bond when the property is already legally in the control of the court. A stay of execution in the admiralty case in which the appeal bond sued on was given would not have left the property in the possession of the interveners, as a matter of legal right. The legal possession was all the time in the marshal, and he could at any time (as well after execution had been stayed as before) have taken the property from the interveners, and have held it himself pending the appeal. If an appeal, with stay of execution, would have entitled the interveners to retain possession of the property during the pendency of the appeal, the marshal would have been exonerated from liability because of their possession. But it was never the purpose of the court, in rendering the judgment in the admiralty case, to release the marshal from liability. On the contrary, it expressly ordered that he, and not the parties to the suit, should deliver the property to the claimant. We very much question the power of the admiralty court to discharge the marshal from liability without the consent of the claimant, in a suit in which such question was not at issue; and, if the marshal continued liable, it is because the interveners, during the pendency of the appeal, had no right, as against him, to retain possession of the property.

In determining whether the judgment appealed from is of such character that a stay of proceedings under it will entitle the appellant to hold possession of the property which the judgment declares shall be delivered to the adverse party, we are never to look at the practical, but at the legal, situation at the time judgment was rendered, if it is at all permissible to travel outside of the terms of the judgment itself. A stay of proceedings confers no new privilege. It merely restores a right lost by the judgment whose execution is superseded. Unless the appellant had a legal right temporarily to hold the property in controversy before the judgment was rendered, he can secure no such right by staying the execution of such judgment. Of course, in speaking of the legal right to the possession of property pending litigation, we do not refer to the ultimate legal right. It often happens that the later right resides in a person different from the one who is vested with the former right. Property about which this litigation is pending must remain during the progress of the case, and before judgment, either in the possession of one of the parties to the suit, or in the hands of a third person. Whoever this may be, under the law, he is the one who is legally entitled to the temporary control of the property; and if he be the defendant, and is defeated, he may secure by a stay pending the appeal a restoration and continuation of this legal right to hold the property, which will not cease until the final decision on such appeal. But to obtain a restoration of this right lost by the judgment, and a continuation of it until the appeal is decided, he must have been vested with it before judgment. Now, it is evident that the appellants, before judgment, in The Eclipse Case, were not vested with any legal right to hold possession of the property, as against the one who was vested with that right by the law, i. e. the marshal. The marshal might have seized the vessel at any time before judgment. The stay of proceedings did not divest him of that right and confer it upon the appellants, for this would be to render the bare stay effectual to enlarge their legal rights, and not merely to revive and prolong them. If the stay of execution did not, under the statute, give the appellants such right, it was not a case in which the bond required by § 416 was necessary. They were not required by that section to give a supersedeas bond to secure a stay, unless they would thereby secure the right to retain possession of the property pendente lite. The authorities fully sustain this proposition under identical statutes. Re Schedel's Estate, 69 Cal. 241; Pennie v. San Francisco City & County Super. Ct., 89 Cal. 31; Born v. Horstmann, 80 Cal. 452; See also McCallion v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. 98 Cal. 442. We are therefore of opinion that the admiralty judgment does not fall within § 416. If, then, we are to accept the theory of both parties to this case that the territorial statutes, and not the practice in courts of admiralty, governed the procedure on appeal to the territorial supreme court, the undertaking was void as a statutory undertaking. It is conceded by counsel for plaintiff in this action that, if such judgment did not fall within § 416, there was no necessity, under the statutes, for the giving of a supersedeas bond to secure a stay of execution, but that the giving of the cost bond would, under § 422, have operated as a stay. As no bond other than a cost bond was required to secure a stay, the undertaking sued on is void as a statutory undertaking, so far as it relates to anything more than the costs on appeal. There was no consideration for it. The parties on whose behalf it was given derived no benefit from it. Powers v. Crane, 67 Cal. 65; Powers v. Chabot, 93 Cal. 266; McCallion v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. supra; Post v. Doremus, 60 N. Y. 371; Freeman v. Hill, 45 Kan. 435. Said the court in Powers v. Crane, supra: "On behalf of the sureties who are the real parties in interest here, it is claimed that the undertaking, except in so far as the $300 is concerned, and about which no question arises, was without consideration and void. The pretended consideration therefor was a stay of execution of the decree appealed from. And if the law itself operated a stay upon the giving of the $300 bond it would seem that the point is well taken. That the statute did so operate was held by this court in the case of Snow v. Holmes, 64 Cal. 232. As the statute itself wrought the stay, there was no consideration for the sureties' promise."

If we were to be governed by the territorial statutes referred to, we would be of opinion that the undertaking was void, for the reason that under such statutes the libelants were entitled to a stay of execution on giving the mere cost bond specified in § 422. But, despite the agreement of counsel, we cannot accede to their view that these statutes in any manner controlled the appeal in the admiralty case to the territorial supreme court. There are only two theories on which it can be held that the territorial statutes regulated the procedure on appeal in the admiralty case. One is that by the terms of § 1910, U. S. Rev. Stat. the procedure applicable to actions at law in the territorial courts was made applicable to actions in admiralty; and the other is that the territorial legislature had in fact regulated the procedure in admiralty cases on appeal. That § 1910 did not assume to regulate the practice on appeal to the territorial supreme court of Dakota territory in admiralty cases, at all, is apparent from its language. It merely declared that in such cases, among others, writs of error and appeal, might be taken in other cases. It gave the right to appeal, but did not attempt to establish the procedure on such appeal. On this point the decisions of the Supreme Court of Washington territory and of the Supreme Court of the United States are express authorities in support of our view. Section 1911 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which was applicable to the territory of Washington, contains precisely the same provisions as § 1910. The supreme court of that territory held in the case of Phelps v. The City of Panama, 1 Wash. Terr. 615, that the territorial statutes did not govern the procedure on appeal to that court from a judgment of the territorial district court in an admiralty case, but that on such an appeal the case must be tried de novo in the supreme court, and that on such trial new evidence in that court might be received. On appeal to the Federal Supreme Court the judgment of the territorial supreme court was affirmed; and that the Federal Supreme Court must have passed upon this question, and settled it in accordance with the ruling of the territorial supreme court, is evident from the fact that it appears from the report of the case that one of the assignments of error in the Federal Supreme Court related specifically to this point. It is in the following language: "The court erred in holding that the acts of Congress and the rules of the Supreme Court of the United States governing the circuit and district courts of the United States in admiralty practice were in force in the courts of the territory, and regulate the practice therein." There was no statute in force in the territory of Washington, giving the appellant in admiralty cases either a right to a new trial on appeal to the territorial supreme court, or a right to introduce new evidence in such court. Had the territorial and Federal courts regarded § 1911 (which is the same as § 1910, which related to Dakota territory) as ex proprio vigore, making the practice in the territorial supreme court in ordinary civil actions on appeal applicable to admiralty cases, the decisions in both courts would have been different. See also the opinion of Grier, J., in Nickels v. Griffin, 1 Wash. Terr. 374, 394, 395. In the case of Zephyr v. Brown, 2 Wash. Terr. 44, it was held that the territorial statutes regulating the practice in taking an appeal to the territorial supreme court were not applicable to an appeal in an admiralty case, but that the steps necessary to perfect such appeal must be such as were recognized by the usages and practice of courts of admiralty. It is true that the supreme court of the territory of Dakota, when The Eclipse Case was before it, held that the territorial statutes regulated the proceedings on appeal; but no such question was before the Federal Supreme Court in that case, and the point was not settled either way by that tribunal. We are unable to agree with the decision of the territorial supreme court in this particular. Undoubtedly, the legislature of Dakota territory might have regulated the practice in admiralty cases on appeal, but it did not do so. It is obvious that the statutes of the territory did not in any manner regulate the practice in admiralty cases in the district court. There was no statute which related to a single step in such cases, from the filing of the libel to the rendering of final decree. The whole scope of these statutes is limited to actions at law and in equity. This was the view of the counsel on both sides in The Eclipse Case, when it was before the territorial district court. The procedure there was in accordance, not with the territorial statutes, but with the practice in courts of admiralty. If the territorial statutes did not relate to the proceedings in the district court, they certainly could not govern the proceedings on appeal to the supreme court. The territorial statutes regulated only such proceedings on appeal as were governed by the same body of territorial law when pending in the district court. They did not purport to relate to any case tried in the district court in a manner unknown to the statutes of the territory. The statutes of the territory of Washington were fully as applicable to admiralty cases as were the statutes of Dakota territory, and yet the territorial supreme court of Washington, in the two cases already cited, held that there was no legislation in that territory regulating the practice on appeal to that court in admiralty cases. The practice in admiralty courts has always been so different from that in common-law courts that rules of procedure governing the practice in the latter courts are unsuited to admiralty courts; and nothing short of a very decisive expression of such purpose should warrant us in assuming that the territorial legislature intended to introduce such an anomaly into admiralty practice as the complete assimilation of all procedure in admiralty cases to the procedure in common-law courts. Were this done where the same courts that administered relief in common-law cases already possessed admiralty jurisdiction, also, as in the territory of Dakota, nothing would have been left of admiralty in the territory, but the name. We do not believe that the subject of admiralty procedure was ever considered by the territorial legislature with a view to regulating it, but in the light of the fact that the practice in admiralty courts was reasonably settled, and that the main features of that practice were so different from common-law procedure, it is a natural inference, which the silence of the statutes themselves significantly confirms, that the territorial legislature intended to leave undisturbed a practice whose boundaries were established, and which could not be regulated without either the framing of a special system of procedure adapted to admiralty cases, or the introduction of an anomaly into admiralty procedure,—the assimilation of the practice in such cases to the practice in common-law courts. Considering that the volume of admiralty litigation in the territory of Dakota would necessarily be small, in comparison with the number of cases at law and in equity; that the territorial condition would cease before that volume would much increase; that the practice in admiralty was reasonably well defined; and that whatever statutory procedure was adopted would be substantially a codification of the existing practice,—the members of the legislative body would naturally leave the subject untouched by legislation. We would expect them to pursue just such a course, and the universal silence of the statutes on the subject renders it certain that the policy of leaving admiralty practice unaffected by territorial statute is the very one they adopted. It is therefore apparent that the libelants and interveners had no absolute statutory right to a stay of proceedings pending their appeal to the territorial supreme court, in giving a mere cost bond. This right they could derive only from § 422, which we hold to be inapplicable. To what authority, then, must we look to discover the rules of procedure which regulated the practice in appealing The Eclipse Case to the territorial supreme court? Not to any statute of the United States regulating the practice in admiralty in the Federal courts, for it is well settled that territorial courts, although invested by statute with some of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, are not Federal courts, within the scope of legislative or constitutional provisions relating to Federal courts. They are merely territorial courts, which are for the time invested with some of the jurisdiction conferred upon the Federal tribunals. Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244; American Ins. Co. v. 356 Bales of Cotton, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 511, 7 L. ed. 242; Benner v. Porter, 50 U. S. 9 How. 235, 13 L. ed. 119; Clinton v. Englebrecht, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 434, 20 L. ed. 659; Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 648, 21 L. ed. 966; United States v. Bisel, 8 Mont. 20. For the same reason it is obvious that the rules of practice established by the Federal Supreme Court under the act of Congress were not applicable. Such rules are in terms limited in their application to courts of the United States. They were adopted and published by that court as rules of practice "for the courts of the United States" in admiralty cases on the instance side of the court. See Benedict, American Admiralty, 381. Moreover, the statute under which that court derived its power to act in adopting these rules limited the court, in framing such rules, to regulating the practice to be used in suits of admiralty "by the circuit and district courts;" thus specifically referring to the Federal courts, and excluding all other tribunals in which admiralty jurisdiction might thereafter be vested. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 917. The decisions of the supreme court of Washington territory and of the United States Supreme Court in the cases already cited are in harmony with our views in this respect. At the time these cases were decided, the rules in question had already been in force; and yet they were not regarded as controlling, but, on the contrary, the courts went back to the old usages, rules, and practice of admiralty courts, to ascertain the correct procedure in those cases. Phelps v. The City of Panama, 1 Wash. Terr. 615; The Zephyr v. Brown, 2 Wash. Terr. 44. See also Conkling, Admiralty, pp. 404, 405. When we turn to the old admiralty practice, we find that the appellants, in order to perfect an appeal, were required to give new security for the full value of the property in controversy, or for the full amount in litigation. Dunlap, Admiralty Practice, 322; 2 Browne, Civil & Admiralty Law, 437.

31 L. R. A.

Certainly, there was no settled rule of practice which would have entitled the appellants in The Eclipse Case to a stay of proceedings, and even to appeal at all, without giving such a bond as the court might direct. There being no inflexible rule on the subject, the district court of the territory in which The Eclipse Case was decided might, in allowing the prayer of the libelants that an appeal be allowed, prescribe such terms as to security, as in the judgment of the court might seem meet under the circumstances. Otis v. The Rio Grande, 1 Woods, C. C. 596, Fed. Cas. No. 10,614. Under the settled practice in admiralty, the court must allow the appeal, to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court. The appeal must not only be prayed, but also allowed. The Zephyr v. Brown, 2 Wash. Terr. 44-47; United States v. Haynes, 2 McLean, 155, Fed. Cas. No. 15,335; 2 Conkling, Admiralty, p. 405. Said the court in the case of The Zephyr v. Brown: "However, upon searching other books, we gather that no appellate court will assume jurisdiction until it is first satisfied that an appeal has been allowed by the judge of the court below. The allowance seems to have been invariably required both in the ecclesiastical and admiralty appeals." It is true that the territorial district court could not have arbitrarily refused to allow the appeal. The New England, 3 Sumn. 495, Fed. Cas. No. 10,151. But that court might certainly have required, as a condition of allowing the appeal, that the libelants give security for more than the mere costs. Indeed, it appears from several of the cases that the appellant, on appeal to the United States circuit court in admiralty cases, gave a bond as for a stay of proceedings, in addition to a mere cost bond, and such bonds were treated as valid. In the case of The Wanata v. Avery ("The Wanata"), 95 U. S. 600, 24 L. ed. 461, it appears that a bond on appeal to the circuit court, to prosecute such appeal with effect, was given, although a stipulation for value had been given. The same was done in Dutcher v. Woodhull, Fed. Cas. No. 4,204. In the case of The Blanche Page, Id. 1,524, it appears that a similar bond to secure the whole claim was given on appeal to the circuit court, notwithstanding the fact that a stipulation for value, good in the appellate court as well as the district court, had been executed. In all of these cases the bonds were treated as valid, and in two of them judgment was rendered against the sureties therein. The Wanata v. Avery ("The Wanata"), and The Blanche Page, supra. Indeed, the court, in the case of The Brantford City, 82 Fed. Rep. 324, treated the whole matter of fixing the bond on appeal as within 31 L. R. A.

the discretion of the trial court, and, in refusing in that case to require a bond for the full amount of the claim, the court was influenced by the consideration that, in the light of the later decisions of the Federal Supreme Court, the court considered that the rule of that district, when construed in view of the change in the rulings of the supreme court, should be held not to require full security on appeal. But the court in that very case did require an additional bond for $7,000. Nor do we think that the fact that legally the res was in the custody of the court made it the absolute duty of the trial court, in The Eclipse Case, to allow the appeal on the giving of a mere cost bond. It is by no means certain that, where a court has discretion to require security as a condition of staying execution, such court ought invariably to refuse to exact security in addition to a cost bond, even in cases where the res is in the actual possession of an officer of the court. Such possession does not afford absolute security to the respondent, who has been successful, and who is, according to the judgment, entitled to the res. Courts can hold property only through the instrumentality of some officer, and such officer may be faithless to his trust, and he and his bondsmen may become insolvent, or his bond may be exhausted by others, who first proceed against it. Capt. Braithwaite would have had a right either to enforce his judgment after an appeal by the libelants accompanied by only a cost bond, or at least to move to require the appellants to give additional security to entitle them to a stay. By abstaining from the exercise of this legal right he suffered detriment; and the appellants, in the same measure, were benefited. But the case is a much stronger one for him. If on such motion the appellants had insisted that they were in possession of the res, and desired and intended, if possible, to remain in possession thereof pending the appeal; that it was their wish to have the judgment regarded as practically, although not legally, a judgment against them for the delivery of this vessel to the respondent in the appeal, so that by stay of the execution of such judgment they could secure a right to retain possession pending the appeal; and if the respondent on such appeal had acquiesced in all this; had assented that a stay of execution, on proper security, should have the effect to leave appellants in possession of the property,—is it not clear that under such circumstances the trial judge would have required the appellants to give a supersedeas bond, in addition to a mere cost bond, as a condition of securing such a stay? It appears from the record that the appellants, in giving the bond in question, took precisely this position. They were in possession of the steamer. They prepared and executed an undertaking in which they recited that the respondent in the appeal had recovered a judgment against them for her possession. It is averred that they gave this undertaking to secure a stay of execution on such judgment. Had not the respondent a perfect right to rely on this position taken by them, and derive from it, through their voluntary action, the same advantage which he might have secured on motion, had they, on such motion, taken the same position? Well might he thus reason with himself: "This position taken by the appellants with respect to the nature of the judgment appealed from, and their right to retain possession of the steamer pending the appeal, on securing a stay of proceedings, would, if acquiesced in by me, undoubtedly impel the court to require security in addition to a mere cost bond. But there is no necessity for my urging this matter before the court, for lo! here is just such a bond as the court might under these circumstances require,—executed without any order from the court." That the respondent knew of this undertaking is undisputed. That he refrained from all efforts to enforce the judgment, and from all attempts to disturb the appellants in their possession pending the appeal, is also uncontroverted. The only natural inference is that his conduct in this regard was influenced by the giving of this undertaking. This furnishes a sufficient consideration to sustain the undertaking as a common-law obligation. George v. Bischoff, 68 Ill. 236, and cases hereafter cited. Nor can it be said that the sureties would not be bound, in such a case, because they had not signed the undertaking to be used as a means of enabling the appellants to retain possession pending the appeal, but only to secure for them such rights as a stay of proceedings would entitle them to, which would not include the right on their part to hold the vessel until the appeal had been decided. By the recital in their own instrument, they describe the judgment appealed from as such a judgment that, if the description were true, the stay of the enforcement thereof would give the appellants the right to hold the property during the pendency of the appeal. They recite that it is a judgment which the respondent has recovered against the appellants for the possession of the steamer, or, in other words, that it is a judgment which requires them to deliver the possession thereof to respondent. The stay of such a judgment would leave the appellants in possession. Now, it is true that no such judgment was in fact rendered. But the sureties treated it as such a judgment, and therefore they justified the respondent in assuming that they signed to this undertaking to the end that the appellants might secure the right to hold the property pending the appeal. We have no doubt as to this being the object sought to be accomplished by the giving of this undertaking. The respondent, therefore, in seeking to hold the sureties responsible on the theory that this undertaking was given by them and accepted by him for this specific purpose, is merely taking them at their own word, as evinced by the very language of the instrument itself. Indeed, there is authority for the proposition that the recital would estop them from showing that the judgment was different in character. George v. Bischoff, 68 Ill. 236; Pratt v. Gilbert, 8 Utah, 54; Gudner v. Kilpatrick, 14 Neb. 347; Adams v. Thompson, 18 Neb. 541; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 464. But we do not care to place our ruling on that ground. This doctrine of estoppel by recital has its limitations, and we should hesitate long before holding it applicable in a case like this. The bond appears to have been given in view of the practical situation, of which it is evident the sureties had knowledge, or could easily have obtained knowledge, i. e. the possession of the vessel by the appellants. On the records of the case in the paper preceding the judgment, and on which it rested, was a finding that a portion of the appellants were in possession of the boat. Still, notwithstanding this fact, the sureties, if the territorial statutes were applicable, would have the right to insist that the undertaking was intended as the statutory undertaking in such cases, and could not be used to accomplish any other purpose. But the moment we conclude that these statutes were not applicable, then the sureties, being presumed to know the law, are not in position to urge that they merely intended to give a statutory bond, there being no statute regulating the matter; but, on the other hand, we are to discover their purpose from all the circumstances surrounding the transaction, the instrument itself being silent on the subject. We do not, however, need to rest the case on this reasoning, as clearly both the sureties and the appellants gave the undertaking to secure at least a stay, and this stay the appellants actually obtained; the property never having been delivered to the respondent under the judgment at all, either while the appeal was pending, or after it had been formally disposed of.

It is urged that the respondent could not have been compelled to refrain from enforcing his judgment pending the appeal, but we are decidedly of the opinion that he would have been promptly restrained, upon motion, it being shown that this bond had been given to secure him. But it would not be decisive of the question, if we should hold that he need not have abstained from proceeding under the judgment pending the appeal. The fact is that he did so abstain. This is sufficient. Said the court in Wing v. Rogers, 138 N. Y. 361: "When an action is brought against sureties on a bond or undertaking given in an action or upon appeal, the validity and force of the instrument depend upon its efficacy in performing the office or accomplishing the end or result contemplated by the parties at the time it was given." To same effect Carter v. Hodge, 6 Misc. 575; Hathaway v. Davis, 33 Cal. 161; Gardner v. Donnelly, 86 Cal. 367; Hanna v. Savage, 8 Wash. 432; Healy v. Newton, 96 Mich. 228; Moffat v. Greenwalt, 90 Cal. 368; Buchanan v. Milligan, 125 Ind. 332; Hester v. Keith, 1 Ala. 316. Judge Elliott, in his work on Appellate Procedure, says: "Weight is attached,—justly, as we believe,—by the better-considered cases, to the fact that the bond has yielded the principal obligor beneficial consideration." § 357. See also 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1019. Supersedeas bonds on appeal to the circuit court in admiralty actions have been given in many cases where the claim was already secured, and yet it has never been intimated that such bonds were without consideration and void. So far as appears from the cases they were given voluntarily. On principle, such a bond must be valid, unless the obligors can show that the appellants obtained nothing under the bond except what they were entitled to without it. That the appellants did obtain something else, we are clear, for it is our opinion that they had no absolute right to stay of execution of the judgment awarding possession to the respondent on the execution of a mere cost bond; and we are also clear that they obtained the privilege of retaining possession pending the appeal, and that the sureties signed it that they might retain such possession. When an appellant, who does not become entitled to a stay, as a matter of right, by the doing of a particular act, voluntarily gives an understanding for the purpose of securing a stay which, in its effect, is substantially the same as that which the court might have required as a condition of allowing a stay, the appellant and those who signed the instrument with him for the purpose of his obtaining such stay, cannot, after it has accomplished its purpose, assail it for want of consideration, because the court did not order it to be given, or because it may not be precisely such an undertaking as the court would have required. The bond is as good as a common-law bond. Pray v. Wasdell, 146 Mass. 324-328; George v. Bischoff, 68 Ill. 286; Meserve v. Clark, 115 Ill. 580. Indeed, this is the rule even in those cases where the statute prescribes what kind of a bond will stay execution, and the appellant gives a different one; and the respondent treats it as a sufficient stay bond. Concordia Sav. & Aid Assn. v. Read, 124 N. Y. 189; Wing v. Rogers, 138 N. Y. 361; Goodwin v. Bunzl, 102 N. Y. 224. See also Granger v. Parker, 142 Mass. 186. Nor can the sureties complain because the bond is upheld as a good common-law bond. It must have been evident to them that it was designed to subvert some other purpose than the mere securing of costs on the appeal. On the theory that it was only a cost bond, it was enormously excessive in amount, and it contains provisions which on that hypothesis are utterly meaningless. In view of the law that the appellants had no absolute right to secure a stay on the giving of a mere cost bond, the sureties were chargeable with knowledge, from the language of the bond and the amount of the penalty, that it was executed to secure a stay, or at least that the respondent might so treat it, and thus be induced to refrain from enforcing his judgment pending the appeal.

Counsel for defendants now takes up his stand at the last barrier, save one, against his clients' liability, left him, and asserts that the district court did not in fact render a judgment against the libelants and interveners for the delivery by them of this property to the claimant, that when this judgment was affirmed its character was not changed in the least, and that, therefore, there has been no breach of the undertaking on appeal, as this refers to only such a judgment as the appellants must perform. It is on his construction of the undertaking that we differ from him. His two other propositions are clearly sound. The language of the undertaking is that the obligors undertake to obey any order made in the case by the appellate court. This does not mean merely any order requiring something to be done by the promisors, for no order of that kind could be made, as against such of the promisors as were sureties. The language is broad enough to cover any order which might be made in the case, whatever its character. The parties signing the undertaking, in legal effect, guaranteed that such order would be obeyed, and that if it were not obeyed they would save the respondent from loss. This interpretation accords with the plain significance of the language of the instrument; and it is reasonable that we should so construe the contract as to make it a security for the obedience by the marshal of the order of the court, when we consider the fact that the judgment appealed from was directed against him, and not against the parties, and that on affirmance of such judgment the only order of the supreme court to be obeyed, as the sureties must have well known, would be an order binding the marshal, and not the appellants, to deliver this property to the respondent. Unless we are prepared to say that the parties, in signing this undertaking, did not intend to bind themselves at all, except for costs, we must give it this construction. It is an elementary rule of construction that a contract must be so construed as to make it valid and efficacious, rather than invalid or inefficacious. Unless they were guaranteeing the performance by the marshal of the judgment on affirmance, they were, by all this language, really imposing no liabilities on themselves at all. Said the court in a very similar case: "We must attribute to the obligors the intention to enter into an obligation every provision of which would be valid." Shreffler v. Nadelhoffer, 183 Ill. 555. See also McElroy v. Mumford, 128 N. Y. 307; 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. We hold that the undertaking is supported by a sufficient consideration, and that the affirmance of the judgment followed by the failure of the marshal and the appellants to deliver the steamer Eclipse to the plaintiff herein, constituted a breach thereof. The complaint therefore states a good cause of action for damages, unless there is force in the next point to be considered.

This brings us to the question whether the failure of the court to fix the amount of this bond as a supersedeas bond renders it void. Having held that the territorial statutes do not apply, but that the bond is good as a common-law bond, this question is not important. But, even if the case were governed by the statute, the instrument would be good. Section 416 provides that, in cases where a bond is given thereunder, the court or judge shall fix the amount thereof. This provision is obviously for the protection and benefit of the respondent on the appeal. He may waive compliance with it. If he is willing to accept as a stay bond a bond in the penalty of a certain sum, no one has any reason to complain. When the sureties sign it as a stay bond, and the respondent accepts it as such, what has the court to do in the premises? Under such circumstances, the court, if appealed to, would fix the amount of the bond at the sum agreed on by the parties. There is ample authority for the view that the respondent may waive a compliance with such a provision. Hill v. Burke, 62 N. Y. 111; Irvine v. Cook, 17 Colo. 16; Bennett v. Mulry, 6 Misc. 304; Scherer v. Hopkins, 42 N. Y. S. R. 139; Coleman v. Bean, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 394; McCracken v. Todd, 1 Kan. 148; Skellinger v. Yendes, 12 Wend. 308; Shaw v. Tobias, 3 N. Y. 188; Wolcott v. Mead, 12 Met. 517; Decker v. Judson, 16 N. Y. 439; 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1007, cases in note 3. It is a necessary inference from the allegations of the complaint that the respondent on that appeal waived all objections to the bond because the court had not fixed the amount thereof. It alleges that the bond was given to secure a stay, and that it was served on respondent's attorney. It shows on its face that it is a stay bond. It must have been treated by respondent as such, for the complaint alleges that the possession of the boat has never been restored to him. In Post v. Doremus, 60 N. Y. 371, the party did not waive the omission to have the amount of the bond fixed, for the reason that it did not purport to be a stay bond, and the court took the view that the respondent accepted it only as a cost bond. In that case the bond could not operate as a stay without an express order of court to that effect. Here no order granting a stay was necessary. All the court was required to do, assuming that the statute applies, was to fix the amount of the bond. A waiver of this act by the respondent made the bond effective to stay the proceedings. The acceptance of a bond in the Post Case did not make such bond operate as a stay: for an order granting a stay was, as we have said, indispensable. It was on an appeal from an order granting a new trial that the bond in that case was given, and the court held that in such a case nothing would stay the proceedings except an order of court; citing McMahon v. Allen, 22 How. Pr. 193, where the judge who wrote the opinion said: "I conclude, therefore, that the only way in which, in such a case as this, the proceedings in the court below can be stayed after an order for a new trial has been made, is by a motion directly for that purpose in this court." As the respondent on the appeal in the admiralty case saw fit to accept and act on this bond as a sufficient stay bond, without the amount thereof being fixed by the court, the obligors therein are in no position to interpose the objection that the bond is void because the amount thereof was not so fixed.

The plaintiff successfully vindicated his right to the possession to the steamer Eclipse through the entire course of the action in admiralty; obtaining a judgment in the district court, which was affirmed by the supreme court of the territory, and finally by the Supreme Court of the United States. The justice of the case is palpably with him. All parties have regarded this bond as taking the place of the vessel,—as his security in lieu of his obtaining possession of her under the judgment appealed from. It is a source of great satisfaction to the court that we are able, under the law, to recognize and uphold the justice of his claim.

The order of the District Court is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter an order overruling the demurrer.

All concur.

Bartholomew, J., concurring:

I concur in the foregoing opinion, but also deem it proper to go one step further than my Brother Corliss has gone. Assuming that the territorial statutes were controlling in the matter of giving the undertaking on appeal from the original judgment in admiralty, I then think that the undertaking sued upon should be sustained as a statutory undertaking given to stay execution upon a judgment for the delivery of personal property. True, the judgment was not such in form, but the facts found show that it was such in its practical effect, and all the parties to the litigation so treated it. I am authorized by the chief justice to say that he concurs in this view, also.

An application for rehearing was subsequently filed in response to which the following opinion was handed down:

On the application for rehearing, the opinion of the court has been attacked with such ability and earnestness by the counsel for defendants, who has laid under tribute, to strengthen his argument, so wide a field of juridical learning, that, despite the length of the original opinion, we feel constrained to state our reasons for not agreeing with him with respect to the new points he has presented. He seems to concede that we are correct in our view that the territorial statutes did not govern the appeal in the admiralty case. But he contends that such appeal was in all respects regulated by the statutes of the United States and the rules of the Federal Supreme Court relating to appeals from the Federal district to the Federal circuit court in that class of cases. The decision in The City of Panama v. Phelps ("The City of Panama"), 101 U. S. 453, 25 L. ed. 1061, is cited as conclusive on this point. We do not so construe it. The court was not called on in that case to decide whether such statutes and rules governed the appeal to the supreme court of the territory of Washington from the territorial district court, for the practice which was in fact adopted on such appeal was sanctioned by the usages of courts of admiralty on appeal in such cases, and did not require any support from legislation or formulated rules of court. The Federal Supreme Court nowhere asserts that the acts of Congress, and the rules promulgated by that court, governed the appeal to the territorial supreme court, nor is there to be found in the opinion any reasoning leading up to this conclusion. There is only a faint inference that such was the decision of the court, from the language of the assignment of error which is overruled. But that assignment would not have been changed, in its essential nature, had it stated that the court erred in holding that the general practice in admiralty, independently of legislation and formulated court rules, governed the proceedings on appeal to the territorial supreme court, and in refusing to hold that the territorial statutes regulated such appeal. And the assignment, as so framed, would have more accurately expressed the proposition before the Federal Supreme Court for decision. In Smith v. "The Challenger", 2 Wash. Terr. 447, both parties agreed that rule 16 of the Federal Supreme Court, relating to admiralty practice in the Federal courts, was applicable to a case in territorial courts, the only difference between them being as to the construction of that rule.

But, even if we should agree with counsel that the appeal to the territorial supreme court in the admiralty case was governed by the statutes of the United States, so far as applicable, we could not assent to his view that at the time such appeal was taken there was any Federal legislation relating to appeals from Federal district to Federal circuit courts in admiralty cases, aside from the statute giving the right to appeal. Rev. Stat. § 641. As this section originally stood, it provided that such appeals should be governed by the rules, regulations, and restrictions relating to proceedings on writs of error. While the statute remained in this form, there could be little doubt about appeals to the Federal circuit court, in admiralty proceedings on the instance side of the court, being governed by the statutes of the United States relating to proceedings on writs of error. See Wilson v. Bell ("The Lotawanna"), 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 201, 22 L. ed. 259; Hayford v. Griffith, Fed. Cas. No. 6,263. Mr. Conkling bases his criticism of Justice Story's ruling to the contrary on that language of the statute which had been dropped therefrom before the appeal to the supreme court of the territory of Dakota was taken in The Eclipse Case. 2 Conkling, Admiralty, pp. 385 et seq. Under the statute as it then stood, the authorities cited, which construed the statute as it originally was framed, are not in point. There is, however, a single decision in favor of the counsel's contention. It is Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Wager, 87 Fed. Rep. 59. The reasoning of Judge Wallace does not convince us that he is right. He admits that his construction does violence to the language of the statutes relating to the subject. He finds his strongest—and practically his only—argument to justify his wrestling of the words of the statutes in question from their obvious meaning in the circumstance that Congress had, in express terms, exempted the government from the necessity of giving security on appeal to the circuit court in admiralty as well as in other cases. The inference he draws from this provision, that it indicates that Congress considered that the government was not entitled to such an exemption as a matter of right, is a very natural inference. But his further deduction that therefore Congress must, by prior legislation, have imposed on the government, as well as on others, the duty of giving security on such appeals, is not necessarily sound. The obligation to give security on appeal was, as we shall show later, recognized by courts of admiralty long before the Federal government was established. It is just as logical a conclusion that Congress had this practice in view, in framing the provision exempting the government from the performance of this obligation, as that it had in view a statutory enactment on the subject. Nay, the former conclusion is much more reasonable than the latter, when we examine the terms of the statutes from which the purpose to regulate proceedings on appeal to the Federal circuit court in admiralty cases is, by Judge Wallace, extorted by a process of construction which does violence to the language in which these acts are couched. Section 1012 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is, to our minds, a significant provision, and it occurs to us to be hostile to the views of Judge Wallace. It, in terms, declares that the rules, regulations, and restrictions applicable to cases taken to a higher court on writs of error shall govern appeals in admiralty cases in only prize cases. Cases on the instance side of the court are not mentioned. In The Brantford City, 32 Fed. Rep. 324, Judge Brown held that there was no Federal statute regulating the matter of security on appeals to the circuit court in admiralty cases, 31 L. R. A.

and this decision we regard as sound. It is not pretended that there was any rule of the Federal Supreme Court, at the time The Eclipse Case was appealed, which regulated the matter of security on appeals to the circuit court in admiralty cases. Our conclusion therefore is that neither the territorial statutes, nor the acts of Congress, nor the rules of the Federal Supreme Court, governed the question of security on appeal to the territorial supreme court in The Eclipse Case. We also hold that, even if the statutes and rules which governed appeals to the Federal circuit court in such cases applied to the appeal in question, still there was no statute or rule regulating this matter on appeals to the Federal circuit court.

But conceding all this to be true, counsel for defendants still contends that, on the assumption that general rules of admiralty practice regulated the appeal in question, the instrument sued on is void so far as it provides that the obligors shall obey any order which the court might make in the premises. We fully agree with him that if the appellants in that appeal had an absolute legal right to secure a stay of proceedings by appealing, without incorporating in the bond that condition, then that portion of the bond is without consideration and void, unless other circumstances to be referred to later take the case out of the general rule laid down and applied. Kountze v. Omaha Hotel Co. 107 U. S. 378, 27 L. ed. 609. In this connection we must express our dissent from the proposition that writs of error and appeals operated of themselves, at common law, absolutely to stay execution. Counsel for defendants insists that no authority to require security as a condition of allowing a stay is ever vested in any court without a statute to that effect, and that, as we hold that there is no statute relating to this matter in admiralty cases, the bond was a nullity. This is not a correct statement of the law. There has always inhered in courts of law, courts of equity, and courts exercising admiralty jurisdiction, power to require security to be given as a condition of staying execution. It is true that at common law a writ of error operated in the first instance as a supersedeas. But the court from which the appeal was taken had power, in its discretion, to allow the successful party to enforce his judgment despite an appeal, and the same power was vested in the tribunal to which the appeal was taken. Messonnier v. Kauman, 3 Johns. Ch. 66; Bradwell v. Weeks, 1 Johns. Ch. 325; Brewster v. Cowen, 55 Conn. 152; Allen v. Hopper, 24 N. J. L. 514, 515; Enticelle v. Shepherd, 2 T. R. 78; Kempland v. Mocauley, 4 T. R. 486. This power to permit executions to be issued notwithstanding an appeal necessarily included the lesser power to require the appellant to give security to obtain a stay pending the appeal. The statutes in England referred to by Mr. Justice Bradley in Kountze v. Omaha Hotel Co. supra, were passed to give the respondent an absolute right to that which at common law he could only pray for as a favor to be granted or withheld in the discretion of the court. When we turn to appeals in equity cases, we find that except during the struggle of the house of lords to maintain its jurisdiction to review cases in chancery on appeal, when the rights of litigants were lost sight of in the strife for power, an appeal has never, of itself, been sufficient to entitle the appellant to a stay of proceedings pending the appeal. So long as the jurisdiction of the house of lords was challenged, that body deemed every step taken in the case, however slight, as a denial of its authority; and accordingly it arbitrarily held that nothing could be done in the lower court after appeal, however foreign it might be to the branch of the case which was carried up. As soon as its jurisdiction was generally recognized, it began to abate, its now no longer ambition inspired pretensions, and in 1772 it was held that the stay did not extend beyond that portion of the case which was removed to the house of lords by the appeal. Finally, in 1807, it declared, by resolutions, that even this doctrine, which had its origin in bitter contentions for judicial power, in which the interests of the suitor were lost sight of, had for a long time previous thereto ceased to be followed, but that, on the contrary, an appeal, of itself, did not operate as a stay,—the appellant being required to apply to chancery to secure a stay, which could refuse it or allow it on such terms as the courts might prescribe. The action of the chancellor in this regard seems to have been subject to the supervision of the appellate court. Hart v. Albany, 3 Paige, 381; Messonnier v. Kauman, 3 Johns. Ch. 66; Burke v. Broome, 15 Ves. Jr. 184, note; Willan v. Willan, 16 Ves. Jr. 216; Way v. Foy, 18 Ves. Jr. 452; Monkhouse v. Bedford, 17 Ves. Jr. 380; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1467. Except as changed by statute, this has been the law in England for upwards of a century. In this country some of the courts have followed the English practice, while others have held that an appeal in an equity case stays, in the first instance, the order or decree appealed from, but that the chancellor or the appellate court may allow the successful litigant to enforce the decree or order despite the appeal. Messonnier v. Kauman, supra; Riggs v. Murray, 3 Johns. Ch. 160; Bradwell v. Weeks, 1 Johns. Ch. 325; Green v. Winter, 1 Johns. Ch. 77; Hart v. Albany, supra; Schenck v. Conover, 13 N. J. Eq. 31; Riehle v. Heulings, 38 N. J. Eq. 88; Peer v. Cookerou, 14 N. J. Eq. 361–365; Kimball v. Alcorn, 45 Miss. 149; Cook v. Dickerson, 1 Duer, 691. This power to permit the successful suitor to enforce the decree pending an appeal includes the lesser power of requiring the appellant to give security, as a condition of withholding execution while the appeal is pending. In several of the English cases the appellant was required to pay into court the money which the decree adjudged that he must pay, to be invested for the benefit of the person finally adjudged entitled to it. Willan v. Willan, and Monkhouse v. Bedford, supra. This was ordered to be done in Riggs v. Murray, supra, also. It cannot be questioned that in these cases the court could have required a bond, instead of the payment of the money into court. Indeed, in Riggs v. Murray the appellant was given an option to furnish security, instead of bringing the money into court. See also Cook v. Dickerson, supra.

With respect to appeals in admiralty cases, counsel contends that there is, in the absence of some statutory change in the practice, no such thing as a stay of proceedings, for the reason that the appeal, of itself, annuls the decree appealed from, thus leaving nothing to be enforced pending the appeal. Undoubtedly, it has been many times asserted by the courts that the case is to be heard de novo on the appeal,—as though no decree had been rendered. And in some of the cases even stronger language is used. Fenton v. United States, 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 281, 3 L. ed. 101; The Collector, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 194, 5 L. ed. 239; United States v. Preston, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 57, 7 L. ed. 601; The Lucille v. Respass ("The Lucille"), 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 73, 22 L. ed. 64; Penhallow v. Doane, 8 U. S. 3 Dall. 54, 1 L. ed. 507. But as was said by Judge Benedict in Dutcher v. Woodhull, Fed. Cas. No. 4,204, there was no question before the court as to the right of the respondent to enforce a decree after appeal, no security having been given. In this case Judge Benedict intimates it to be his opinion that, despite an appeal, the decree would stand unaffected for the purpose of enforcing it pending the appeal, should no security be given. "In determining this case, it is not necessary to say whether, under some circumstances, a decree in admiralty, made by the district court, cannot remain of effect after an appeal is taken to the circuit court. It would seem that such may be the case where an appeal is taken, but no bond for damages on appeal is given. Under such circumstances, the failure of the appellant to give a bond for damages would seem to change the aspect of the case, and render it thereafter a proceeding to obtain a decree of restitution, and the numerous cases heretofore determined, both in the circuit court and the Supreme Court of the United States, do not appear to me to furnish authority for determining that, after an appeal without security for damages on the appeal, no effect whatever can be given to the decision of the district court. The general language of these decisions can only be understood by referring to the position of the cases then under consideration, which were not cases of appeal without security." That an appeal did not, of itself, prevent an enforcement of a decree in admiralty, and that for that purpose it would be regarded as a subsisting decree, would seem to follow from the language of Clerk. Praxis S. C. Adm.: "If the party against whom sentence was passed shall have appealed at the time of delivering the sentence, and a term have been assigned for prosecuting the same, and a certificate of the prosecution of the same, and in the interim the judge has not been prohibited from further proceedings, the proctor who obtained the sentence ought to pray that the adverse party should be called upon to show cause why sentence of execution should not be ordered, and the cost be taxed." (How could the court proceed, if the appeal, of itself, annulled the judgment?) Title 61. See page 110 of Hall's Practice and Jurisdiction of Courts of Admiralty, where this title is found translated. In this country stay bonds have been given, and their necessity, as a condition precedent to a supersedeas, have been recognized in many cases. Some of these cases are referred to in the original opinion. In our view, these bonds were not required to be given by any act of Congress, but only by general principles of admiralty practice. If an appeal annulled the judgment, why was it necessary in these cases to give a stay bond to prevent the enforcement of the judgment, which, on this theory, was swept away by the appeal. But whether an appeal in admiralty cases left the decree standing for the purpose of enforcement, and security had to be given to obtain a stay, or whether the appeal was not perfected so as to annul the decree until proper security had been given, is not very important, for it cannot be denied that on appeal in admiralty cases the appellant was required to give security. "If the plaintiff in the first instance shall appeal, he is not allowed to file a libel until he has put in fiduciary security to prosecute the cause, to pay the costs, to submit to the judgment, and to confirm the act of his proctor." Clerke, Praxis S. C. Adm. title 59. See also Browne, Civil & Admiralty Law, 437; Dunlap, Admiralty Practice, 322; The Brantford City, 32 Fed. Rep. 324-326.

We agree with counsel for defendants that the plaintiff or libellant, when he was the libellant, was ordinarily not required to give security to pay or obey any judgment which might be rendered in the case, because as a rule he was not in possession of anything belonging to his antagonist which could be awarded him by the decree of the court. Generally speaking, the utmost extent of his liability under the English practice was for costs, and his stipulation for costs covered this liability. But the situation of the parties in The Eclipse Case, at the time the appeal was taken, was peculiar. The vessel was in the actual possession of the appellants, and this fact appeared upon the face of the record in the case. The appellants desired to retain such possession pending the appeal. The sureties must be deemed to have knowledge of the fact that appellants were in possession, for it was part of the record in the case in which the bond was given. And they must also be regarded as being cognizant of the object of the appellants in giving such bond, for its recitals as to the nature of the judgment appealed from, if true, show that it was such a judgment that a stay of execution on it would leave the appellants in possession of the property pending the appeal. The sureties were therefore plainly apprised of the purpose of the appellants to secure by means of that bond the right to remain in possession of the boat pending the appeal; and the large penalty named in the bond was another circumstance which made it obvious that the bond was given to enable the appellants to hold the vessel until final decision on appeal, thus leaving very valuable property which the decree awarded to the claimant in their hands at his risk, making it necessary that he should be secured. The bond was in the nature of a stipulation for value. But counsel for defendants urges that it cannot be regarded as having been given for any such purpose, for the reason that the complaint, in terms, avers that it was given to stay execution. But this allegation of the complaint must be construed in the light of the other facts set forth in that pleading; and, when so interpreted, it is manifest that it is an averment of the ultimate purpose for which the bond was given, namely, to enable the appellants to retain possession of the vessel pending the appeal. To give a bond to stay execution of a judgment which those giving it construe as a judgment requiring the appellants to deliver property, of which they had actual possession, to their successful adversary, is, in its ultimate analysis, to give a bond to enable such appellants to hold possession of such property pending the appeal. We are therefore clear that the sureties executed this bond with full knowledge that it would be used by the appellants for the purpose of enabling them to keep possession of the vessel. When so used by them with the tacit acquiescence of the respondents, it became a valid obligation: having served the purpose which all the obligors intended it should serve. Whether the libellant in a possessory action is ever entitled to possession on giving a stipulation for value, or whether he may secure possession in this way after decree in favor of the claimant, even assuming that he may do so before final judgment, it is not necessary to inquire. 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 576. No statute or rule of law declares the bond in question void; and therefore, even though the claimant was not bound to allow the libellants to retain possession after the giving of this bond, still, as he did in fact permit them to remain in possession on the strength of the bond, the bond is valid in all its provisions, as a common-law bond, for the reasons set forth in the original opinion. Nor do we, by reaching the conclusion that the bond was in the nature of a stipulation for value, bring the case within the rules stated in the main opinion—that exclusive cognizance of proceedings to enforce stipulations for value is vested in the Federal court sitting as admiralty courts. The reasons for that rule do not apply to stipulations for value given in possessory actions. They are not substitutes for the original res, but are mere securities. Nor is it true that the only judgment which can be enforced according to its terms in a possessory action, where a stipulation for value has been given, is a judgment against the stipulators for value. Judgment is rendered for the delivery of possession to the successful party, and is enforced according to its terms, even if the property is in the possession of the defeated suitor. Were this not so, the right to maintain a possessory action in admiralty would, in most cases, be illusory. If the claimant, by giving a stipulation for value, could defeat the right of the libellant to recover possession of his property, the word of promise of the admiralty law that possession of property might be recovered in admiralty courts would be kept only to the ear, and broken to the hope. On principle, it must be the rule that in possessory actions the original res can be seized under the judgment, and delivered to the successful suitor. The John, 2 Hagg. Adm. Rep. 805-317; The "Elize Cornish", 2 Spinks, Eccl. & Adm. Rep. 34; The Gran Para, 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 497, 6 L. ed. 375. A stipulation for value, in such an action, is therefore not a substituted res, but in the nature of security for the property, as in replevin actions. The court can render a judgment for the delivery of the res, which it will enforce according to its terms. Therefore the reasons for the rule that exclusive jurisdiction of proceedings to enforce stipulations for value is vested in the court in which it was given do not apply to stipulations given in possessory actions, and it follows that they may be enforced in other tribunals.

Finally, it is said that there has been no breach of the condition of the bond to obey any order the appellate court might make, for the reason that no order requiring anything to be done has in fact ever been made by that court. It is urged that a judgment of affirmance is not, either in terms or in legal effect, an order requiring the delivery of the vessel to the claimant. In this connection the case of The Lucille v. Respass ("The Lucille"), 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 73, 22 L. ed. 64, is cited. This merely holds that a judgment of affirmance in the circuit court is not a final judgment, from which an appeal will lie to the Federal Supreme Court. The ground of this decision is that the circuit court should render an entirely new judgment, for the reason that the amount of the judgment should not be left to be ascertained by an examination of the records of another court. But in The Eclipse Case it was not necessary to examine the records of the district court to ascertain just what the judgment of the supreme court was. The original decree, or a copy of it, was among the records of the supreme court in the case, and that showed that the vessel was to be delivered to the claimant. By construing the judgment of affirmance in the light of the original decree, it would appear that the supreme court also had ordered that the vessel be delivered to the claimant. All this would be shown by the records of the supreme court. It would not be necessary to look to any other record to determine the exact nature of the judgment of that court. While, perhaps, for the purposes of an appeal, the judgment of affirmance might not have been sufficient to sustain an appeal, it was a sufficient order of the supreme court for the delivery of the vessel to constitute a breach of the bond. Indeed, the Federal Supreme Court took jurisdiction of the case on appeal from such judgment, and have thus treated it as a sufficient, final judgment in the case. Rea v. The Eclipse ("The Eclipse"), 135 U. S. 599, 34 L. ed. 269. How a new judgment could now be entered, after an affirmance of this judgment by the Federal Supreme Court, we are unable to see; and, if counsel's contention be sound, there could never be any recovery in this case, because the judgment of the territorial supreme court did not, in terms, order that the vessel be delivered to the claimant, although, in legal effect, it was just such a judgment. The application for a rehearing is denied.

Wallin, J.:

I concur in the foregoing opinion, in so far as it denies the application for a rehearing.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

LAKE SHORE & MICHIGAN SOUTH-ERN RAILROAD COMPANY., Plff. in Err.,

v.

William SALZMAN.

(52 Ohio St. 558.)

A railroad company is under obligation to give such care to a passenger

*Headnote by the COURT.

who becomes sick on its train as is fairly practicable, with the facilities at hand, without thereby unduly delaying its train, or unreasonably interfering with the safety and comfort of its other passengers.

(April 23, 1893.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Williams County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover

NOTE.—Duty of carrier as to passengers taken ill during journey.

The cases are very few in which the courts have had to consider the question of the duty of a carrier to a passenger taken ill during the journey. There are several cases in which the question of the carrier's duty to receive and transport a sick passenger, and of the care it must give him, has been considered, and in some of them are dicta which, if accepted to their full extent, would make the duty which the carrier owes a passenger who becomes ill during the journey very slight. But when the attention of the courts has been called to the distinction it has been generally admitted that there is more ground for active care when the illness comes during the journey than when the passenger is ill when the journey begins.

In a Mississippi case the court holds that a conductor is not bound to arouse a passenger when he reaches his destination if he was sick when he embarked. The court says: "One too sick or from any cause not able to do as travelers usually do in conforming to the usage in running trains for the 31 L. R. A.

traveling public, should avoid them or secure the assistance necessary to enable them to accomplish what is required of passengers generally." But the court further says: "Whether sudden illness occurring to one on board a train after going upon it, and made known to the conductor, would create such an emergency as to impose the duty on him to give such passenger needed attention and vary the course of dealing with passengers, is purposely left an open question to be decided when it arises." Sevier v. Vicksburg & M. R. Co. 61 Miss. 8, 48 Am. Rep. 74.

So, in New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Statham, 42 Miss. 607, 97 Am. Dec. 478, in which the court says that railroad cars are not traveling hospitals, nor their employees nurses, and that no duty rests on the conductor to help passengers, it appeared that the passenger was ill when he embarked and was placed on board by friends, and the court held that under such circumstances he must provide attendants to assist him in disembarking.

In the few cases that have arisen upon the subject the court has considered more the duty of the damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Burket, J. :

The facts in the case are as follows: William Salzman resided in Bryan, Williams county, Ohio. On the morning of the 26th day of April, A. D. 1887, he, with his wife, went on an excursion train to Toledo, in company with a number of his brother Odd Fellows and their wives, to attend the dedication of the Odd Fellows' Temple at the latter place. At the conclusion of the ceremonies in the evening, he, with some of his friends, visited some of his acquaintances around the city until about nine o'clock, when he went to the Union hotel, and thence with his wife, about eleven o'clock, to the Union passenger station to take the train home.

The passenger train was a special one made up on purpose to carry the excursionists to their homes, and consisted of a locomotive and four passenger coaches, all properly connected together continuously one after the other, properly warmed and lighted, and which offered ample and abundant convenience and accommodation for the carriage of the plaintiff and his wife, and all the passengers taking passage upon said train.

After the train had pulled out of the station, but before proceeding on its way, there had been placed and attached to the rear of said train, as a protection and guard to said train, and for the sole use of the train men, a caboose car, provided with all the tools, lanterns, and implements for an emergency. The platform of the caboose was several inches lower than the platform of the passenger coach, and the space between the two platforms was from 12 to 15 inches.

Salzman and his wife had taken seats in the rear passenger coach, and the train proceeded on its way. It had not gone far before a man by the name of Charles Shawley, a brother Odd Fellow, and who occupied the seat immediately in front of Salzman, was taken sick and was suffering great pain, occasioned from scrotal hernia.

Some of the friends of the sick man sent for Mr. Wm. Darby, a friend of the sick man, who in turn went for Dr. Rotsel, also on the train. The doctor attended Mr. Shawley, but was unable to reduce the hernia in the seat where the sick man was. He said it was necessary to find some place where the man could be put on his back, and his lower clothes removed. The passenger car was filled principally with ladies, and that was not a proper place to expose his person.

Thereupon Mr. Darby went for conductor Covert and told him the trouble, and asked him if there was not some place on the train where they could take the man and lay him on his back. Conductor Covert said there was a caboose at the rear of the train, having seats at the side, and also a cot where they could take the man when the train stopped at the next station.

Mr. Darby went back into the caboose to see and arrange for Mr. Shawley's coming. The conductor informed his rear brakeman of the trouble, and that when the train arrived at the next station, the man would be moved back into the caboose, and to look after and attend to same, and not to give any signal to start the train until everything was well.

As the train began to slow down for the next station, four persons, viz.: Dr. Rotsel, carrier in the protection of other passengers than in the care of the one who is ill.

In Thurston v. Union P. R. Co. 4 Dill. 321, there is a dictum that the carrier is not bound to carry passengers infected with contagious diseases to the danger of other passengers. But that remark applies more to the receiving of them as passengers in the first instance than to the proper disposal of them after they have been received. And the same is true of the dictum in Pearson v. Duane, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 606, 18 L. ed. 447, where the court says that although a carrier may properly refuse to transport an insane man it cannot expel him after having admitted him as a passenger and received his fare unless he misbehaves during the journey.

But it has been held that it is the duty of the employees of the train to restrain a man attacked with delirium tremens so that he will not harm the other passengers. King v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 413.

So, in Lemont v. Washington & G. R. Co. 1 Mackey, 180, 47 Am. Rep. 238, a passenger with paralysis was placed on board a street car and during the journey he acted in such a manner that the conductor thought he was drunk and expelled him from the car, and the court treating the case as though he was in fact sick said that it was necessary that sick people should be transported on street cars, but that their right was not unlimited. A sick person has no prerogative to misbehave and must conform to the reasonable regulations of the company, and while showing him good treatment they are not required to provide, without a special contract, any extra means for his accommodation.

From the few cases in which an opinion upon the question has been expressed, it would seem that if the passenger is unattended when he becomes ill the carrier must remove him from the cars and place him where he can receive the necessary attention as soon as it can do so. And in the meantime such care must be given him as can be given without leaving unperformed the other duties of the employees.

Thus, it has been held that when an unattended passenger becomes sick and unconscious or insane during a journey, it is the duty of the carrier to remove him from the train until he is in a fit condition to resume his journey, and it must exercise reasonable and ordinary care in temporarily providing for his protection and comfort. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Weber, 38 Kan. 543, 52 Am. Rep. 543. In that case the court approves the rule that "a carrier is not required to keep hospitals or nurseries for sick or insane passengers, but when a passenger is found by the carrier to be in such a helpless condition, it is the duty of the carrier to exercise the reasonable and necessary offices of humanity toward him, until some suitable provision may be made." But it was held that it was a suitable provision to turn him over to the poor authorities of a town of 4,000 inhabitants.

And in Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Pitzer (Ind.) 4 West. Rep. 256, the court in considering the liability of a carrier for putting a child off the train quotes, with seeming approval, the doctrine of Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Weber.

So, a carrier has a right to remove from its train a passenger who breaks out with eruption which from the best medical advice that can be obtained is believed to be small-pox. But in removing him

Messrs. Campbell, Salzman, and Elliott, picked Mr. Shawley up out of the seat and started towards the rear end of the car. The brakeman, at that time, passing back to the rear end of the car, stopped them, requesting them to take plenty of time and not to come out onto the platform until the train had come to a full stop.

When the train stopped, the brakeman opened the door, and told the men carrying Shawley they could come on.

Thus far the facts are undisputed. On part of plaintiff in error it is claimed, in addition to the foregoing, that the brakeman after he opened the door of the car and told them to come on, immediately crossed over and down the caboose step to the ground, stepped between the passenger and caboose platforms, held up his lantern to light the way across, and as the men came out onto the platform, called out to them to "look out and be careful in stepping across;" that this warning and notice were heard by all those carrying Mr. Shawley, as well as Mr. Shawley himself, and including also Mr. Salzman; that the two ahead and in advance, Rotsel and Campbell, heard the warning and stepped down and across; that Mr. Salzman heard the notice and warning, but mistook or misunderstood the call, and in stepping, stepped a little short and between the two platforms, fell and was injured.

On part of defendant in error it is claimed that the conductor was present and asked Mr. Salzman to assist in carrying the sick man to the caboose; that there was no light on the platform; that it was not sufficiently lighted to enable a person to cross over to the caboose in safety; that the warning "look out and be careful in stepping across" came just as the step forward was being made, and coincident therewith; that defendant in error had no notice or knowledge of the condition of the step, and that there was a sudden jerk of the car by the engine just as the step across was being made.

A verdict was returned in favor of plaintiff below, and a motion filed by defendant below for a new trial, which motion was overruled, and judgment entered on the verdict, to which defendant below excepted.

On petition in error the circuit court affirmed the judgment. Thereupon a petition, was filed in this court to reverse the judgments below.

Mr. E. D. Potter, Jr., for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Charles H. Masters and Hurd, Brumback, & Thatcher, for defendant in error:

It is the duty of the railroad company to remove from the train a passenger entering the train well and becoming sick, on arriving at its next station, and provide a suitable and comfortable place for such sick passenger, and suitable attendance, nursing, including medical skill if necessary.

In the meantime it should provide for his care and comfort until such time that he can be thus removed.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Weber, 38 Kan. 543, 52 Am. Rep. 543.

What the company through and by its conductor assumed to do, it became liable for doing negligently.

Secord v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 224; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 275; Croom v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 52 Minn. 296, 18 L. R. A. 602; Weightman v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 70 Miss. 563, 19 L. R. A. 671.

It is the duty of the carrier to put him off at some place where he can find accommodations and medical attendance, or where there is a reasonable ground to believe that he can do so. Paddock v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 37 Fed. Rep. 841, 4 L. R. A. 231.

So, when the condition of a sick passenger is such that his continued carriage is inconsistent with the safety, or even the reasonable comfort, of his fellow passengers, regard for the rights of the latter will authorize the carrier to exclude him from the conveyance. Yet this right cannot be exercised arbitrarily or inhumanely, or without due care and provision for the safety and wellbeing of the ejected passenger. Conolly v. Crescent City R. Co. 41 La. Ann. 57, 3 L. R. A. 133. In that case a passenger on a street car was stricken with apoplexy and he was removed from the car and left lying beside the track for several hours, on a cold day, and the court said: "It should need no parade of learned authorities to maintain the proposition that a common carrier cannot treat an unfortunate passenger stricken with apoplexy while under its charge, in that manner, without a breach of the plainest obligations of its contract of carriage. If there were any precedent to the contrary, humanity would revolt at it, and it would be one more honored in the breach than in the observance."

England and the United States have enacted laws requiring ocean carriers to provide medical assistance for passengers who have become ill during the voyage. To these statutes the following constructions have been given:—

Under the English act of 1855, requiring passenger vessels to carry a physician and medicines, the responsibility of the carrier ceases when it has provided a competent physician and good medicines, and it is not responsible for the mistake of the physician in administering them. Allan v. State S. S. Co. 132 N. Y. 91, 15 L. R. A. 166, Reversing 29 N. Y. S. R. 288.

Under the act of Congress of 1882, requiring all steamships carrying passengers other than cabin passengers, exceeding fifty in number, to provide a surgeon and medicines for them, the ship is liable only for its own negligence in selecting the physician, and not for his acts in treating the passengers. O'Brien v. Cunard S. S. Co. 154 Mass. 272, 13 L. R. A. 329.

In Laubhelm v. De Koninglyke Nederlandsche S. B. Maatschappij, 107 N. Y. 230, the court refuses to determine whether a steamboat company owed a duty to passengers to provide a surgeon for their care and safety in the emergency of sickness or accident. But it held that even if it was bound to do so, its liability ceased when it had provided a competent one.

It would seem that whatever liability exists must be enforced by the passenger who had a right to require the performance of the duty, and not by his or her representatives, for in Briggs v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 52 Minn. 36, the action was to recover for the death of a person suffering from heart disease who in an attack to which he was subject was removed from a street car, and the court held that his administratrix could not recover unless it was shown that the death was caused by the removal.

H. F. F.

Burket J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was tried to a jury three times, and three judgments rendered in favor of the plaintiff below. The case was three times before the circuit court, and twice before this court. The second judgment in the common pleas was reversed by the circuit court on the ground that the verdict was not sustained by sufficient evidence, and that judgment of reversal was affirmed by this court.

It is claimed now by plaintiff in error that the evidence upon which the last verdict in the common pleas was rendered is substantially the same as that upon which the second verdict was rendered, and as the circuit court found that the second verdict was not sustained by sufficient evidence, it should have found that the last verdict was not sustained by sufficient evidence, and that failing to so find is error.

The defendant in error claims that the evidence in the last trial was much stronger in his favor than at the second trial, and that the last verdict is sustained by sufficient evidence.

Be that as it may, the circuit court affirmed the last judgment, and thereby said that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict. Even conceding that the evidence in the second and third trials was the same, the rule is that the last judgment controls. The circuit court may have concluded that its former judgment was wrong, and in this last judgment concluded to right the wrong. This court, not being required to weigh the evidence, did not examine the evidence when this case was here the first time, to see whether the circuit court was right or wrong as to the verdict not being sustained by sufficient evidence; neither do we now weigh the evidence to ascertain whether the last verdict was sustained by sufficient evidence. The judgment of the circuit court on that question is usually final. The charge of the court excepted to is as follows:

"If the jury find, from the evidence, that the plaintiff, pursuant to the direction or request of the conductor of defendant's train, attempted to assist in the carrying of Mr. Shawley from the passenger coach to the caboose, and that in so doing he used reasonable care, and was injured by reason of exposure to a danger of which he was not aware, and of which the servants of defendant, if exercising only reasonable care, would have known of, and either protected him from or gave him timely and adequate warning of,—then in that case, defendant is liable for the injury resulting from exposure to such danger."

On part of plaintiff in error it is urged, in support of the exception to this part of the charge, that the conductor had no control over Mr. Salzman to order him to do anything in aid of the sick man; that as Mr. Salzman was not bound to obey the orders of the conductor in that regard, whatever he did was purely voluntary on his part, and that he assumed all the risks incident to his voluntary acts, and that the conductor had no authority to bind the company in giving orders as to the sick man.

¶1 L. R. A.

On part of defendant in error it is urged that there is no difference in the obligation of the company, whether the removal of the sick man was undertaken by the direction and order of the conductor, or simply by his permission; that the duty devolved upon the company to take reasonable care of the sick passenger on its train, and that when other passengers assisted the officers of the train in the performance of that duty, the company owed to such assisting passengers the obligation of ordinary care to prevent injury to them.

If no duty devolved upon the company to take reasonable care of the passenger who became sick on its train, then neither the order, direction, nor permission bound the company, because such order, direction, or permission was not within the scope of his employment, and not in the line of his duties.

The case therefore turns upon the question, whether or not a duty devolves upon a railroad company to take reasonable care of passengers who become sick after entering its cars.

In travel by ship care and medical attendance are always provided by the company, as one of the necessities of the journey. In travel by rail no such necessity exists, and therefore a railroad company is under no obligation to furnish hospitals on wheels, or physicians or nurses to attend the sick on their journeys. But without hospitals, and without physicians and nurses of their own, still much can be done to alleviate the pains and aches of a sick passenger. While the train is in motion, the passenger is utterly helpless as to aid, except from those on the train. His fellow passengers owe him no duty, except humanity. The alternative is presented of being cared for by his fellow passengers, by the company, or to writhe in pain and sickness until relieved by death, or the end of his journey. By taking passage and repaying his fare the relation of carrier and passenger is established between the company and himself, and as he is under the control of the company for many purposes, and debarred by the rapid movement of its trains from receiving aid from the outside world, it would seem to follow as a necessity of the situation that those who have received his money, and are thus rapidly transporting him, should assume the obligation of taking reasonable care of him, in case of sickness while on the train. This obligation is on the company, not only for the benefit of the sick person, but also for the comfort and sometimes the safety of the other passengers. A sick person, by his cries and moans, may so annoy the other passengers as to require his removal to a separate apartment, or from the train. In case of small-pox or cholera, or other contagious disease, the comfort and safety of the other passengers would demand the early removal of the afflicted passenger from the train. The company would in such case be charged with the duty of removal, and reasonable care thereafter, until the afflicted person could be otherwise cared for. Atkinson, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Weber, 33 Kan. 543, 52 Am. Rep. 543; Conolly v. Crescent City R. Co. 41 La. Ann. 57, 3 L. R. A. 133.

It is therefore clear that the company owed a duty to the sick passenger, and was under obligation to take reasonable care of him—such care as was fairly practicable with the facilities at hand, without unreasonable delay of the train, or discomfort to the other passengers.

The defendant in error assisting in the care of such sick person by direction or permission of those in charge of the train was entitled to at least ordinary care on their part for his protection from injury. There was therefore no error as against the defendant below in the part of the charge excepted to.

In fact the charge throughout was much more favorable to plaintiff in error than to defendant in error.

There was also an exception to another part of the charge, but when taken in connection with the whole charge, there was no error.

The verdict, $9,100, seems large, but if too large a remittitur should have been ordered by the court of common pleas of the circuit court.

After the amount of a verdict, in an action not founded on contract, has had the sanction of a jury, and both the common pleas and circuit courts, this court will not usually interfere to reduce the amount.

Judgment affirmed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

ILLINOIS STEEL COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

James L. O'DONNELL et al.

(156 Ill. 624.)

1. Relationship of a creditor of an insolvent corporation to one or more of its directors or officers will not prevent the giving of a valid security as a preference to such creditor.
2. Unearned interest must be subtracted from the amount of recovery in entering judgment before maturity by the voluntary act of the payee of notes on which interest has been paid in advance.
3. Judgment notes of a corporation renewed after its insolvency are in the same position with respect to the right of the corporation to make preferences as prior judgment notes for which the renewals were given.
4. Valid securities may be given to its directors by a corporation, although it is in fact insolvent, where it is a going concern doing a large business, and the securities are given for money loaned at the same time in good faith to enable the company to carry on the purposes of its incorporation.
5. Directors and officers of an insolvent corporation can dispose of its property in good faith to pay or secure corporate debts, even though the result is to give some creditors a preference over others.
6. Subsequent insolvency of a corporation which has borrowed money when solvent from officers or directors will not affect their rights of action to recover such loans and enforce their securities.

(June 15, 1895.)

ERROR to the Appellate Court, Second District, to review a judgment reversing a NOTE—For validity of preferences among creditors of an insolvent corporation, see note to Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. (Tex.) 22 L. R. A. 802; also Corey v. Wadsworth (Ala.) 23 L. R. A. 618; Schufeldt v. Smith (Mo.) 29 L. R. A. 890; and Ballin v. Merchant's Exch. Bank (Wis.) 27 L. R. A. 367.

In addition, see Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. (Ill.) post, 269.

31 L. R. A.

judgment of the Circuit Court for Will County which set aside a judgment confessed by the Joliet Enterprise Company in favor of Henry Fish & Sons who had assigned their property to O'Donnell for the benefit of creditors. Modified and affirmed.

Messrs. Williams, Holt, & Wheeler, with Mr. E. P. Prentice, for plaintiff in error:

The judgment in favor of Henry Fish & Sons is void as being the result of the efforts of the directors themselves to create a preference in their own favor.

Bacon v. Harris, 62 Fed. Rep. 99; Blennerhassett v. Sherman, 105 U. S. 100, 26 L. ed. 1080; Atwater v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 40 Ill. App. 501; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 528.

Assuming that the notes on which the judgment was based, and the warrants of attorney attached thereto, were given before insolvency and for bona fide loans of money, still such notes with the warrants of attorney created no lien, but simply gave rise to the possibility of a lien, to be created by subsequent action.

P. C. Hanford Oil Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 126 Ill. 590.

The judgment in favor of Henry Fish & Sons, and also the conveyance of the property on Cass street to Mrs. Mary V. Fish, and the payment to Mrs. Miller, effected by the directors of the corporation, acting as agent for the creditor, on the morning of the 30th of November, 1892, were invalid and must be set aside.

No diligence on the part of the creditors is shown or claimed. The conveyance to Mrs. Fish was the result solely of the diligence of George Fish, acting as agent for the creditor of the corporation, and to that diligence and to the influence which George Fish had with his fellow directors, Mrs. Fish owes such security as she has received from the Enterprise Company. The payment to Mrs. Miller and the judgment given to Henry Fish & Sons' stand, so far as this phase of the argument is concerned, exactly in the situation of the conveyance to Mrs. Fish.

Atwater v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 40 Ill. App. 501; Aberdeen R. Co. v. Blaikie, 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 461; Cumberland Coal & I. Co. v. Sherman, 30 Barb. 553.

Messrs. George S. House and P. C. Haley, with Mr. E. A. Otis, for defendants in error:

Tested by the strictest rules applicable to the relation of trustee and cestui que trust, we challenge the counsel to show where the banking firm of Henry Fish & Sons obtained any advantage or preference over other creditors in this case by making direct loans to the Joliet Enterprise Company.

Merrick v. Peru Coal Co. 61 Ill. 472; Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 169; Harts v. Brown, 77 Ill. 226; Atwater v. American Exch. Bank, 40 Ill. App. 501.

The legal ownership of the assets of a corporation is not altered by the company's insolvency, and regular agents of the company would still have the power of representing it and managing its property for all authorized purposes.

2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 787; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 245; Smith v. Skenary, 47 Conn. 47; Stratton v. Allen, 16 N. J. Eq. 229.

Corporations that have the power to borrow money have also the necessary power, as well as the legal right, to give obligations for its repayment, in any form not expressly forbidden by law.

Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 9.

Where an officer of a corporation has received its securities in good faith as collateral to a debt due him from the corporation, it is an essential prerequisite to an avoidance of the transaction that the indebtedness should be paid.

Wait, Insolvent Corp. § 95; Duncomb v. New York H. & N. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 190; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. 242; Gould v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 52 Fed. Rep. 686.

The good will of a going concern can be considered as an asset in determining the question whether a corporation is solvent or insolvent.

Bell v. Ellis, 33 Cal. 620; Chipman v. McClellan, 159 Mass. 363.

Baker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the appellate court for the second district wherein the Illinois Steel Company is plaintiff in error, and James L. O'Donnell, assignee of Henry Fish & Sons, and others, are defendants in error. This writ brings before the court the same record and decree that have been in part reviewed in the appeal of Blair v. Illinois Steel Company. A statement of the case will be found with the report of that appeal.

The principal matters for consideration on this writ of error are the claims that the preference given by the insolvent Joliet Enterprise Company to Mary V. Fish was unlawful and invalid, and that the judgment for $176,420.96 rendered on the 30th day of November, 1892, against the Joliet Enterprise Company and in favor of Henry Fish & Sons was and is illegal, and should be set aside as an unlawful preference.

On November 30, 1892, the Joliet Enterprise Company was insolvent. At that time and for some time prior thereto it was indebted to Mary V. Fish in the sum of $15,000 for borrowed money, and she held the judgment note of the corporation therefor.

She was the mother of Charles M. Fish, George M. Fish, and Henry M. Fish, three of the five directors of the company. On the day mentioned the corporation, through its directors and officers, conveyed to her certain real estate in payment of the indebtedness due her, and she accepted the deed in satisfaction of her claim. The value of property conveyed was not greater than the amount of the debt for which it was given.

It is the settled law of this state that the directors and officers of an insolvent corporation have the power to dispose of corporate property, in good faith, for the purpose of paying or securing corporate debts, and that they may do this even though the result is that some creditors are given a preference over others. Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co. 106 Ill. 439; Bouton v. Smith, 113 Ill. 481; Burch v. West, 184 Ill. 258; Ragland v. McFall, 187 Ill. 81; Glover v. Lee, 140 Ill. 102; Warren v. First Nat. Bank, 149 Ill. 9; 25 L. R. A. 746; J. W. Butler Paper Co. v. Robbins, 151 Ill. 588; Gottlieb v. Miller, 154 Ill. 44. And the fact of relationship of the person to whom preference is given to one or more of the directors or officers of the corporation does not invalidate the transaction, if it is otherwise fair and free from fraud. Schroeder v. Walsh, 120 Ill. 403; Ragland v. McFall, and Gottlieb v. Miller, supra; Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. post, 269, 159 Ill. 350.

There was no error in sustaining the validity of the conveyance to Mrs. Fish.

The firm of Henry Fish & Sons was composed of Henry Fish, the father, and his three sons George M. Fish, Charles M. Fish, and Henry M. Fish, and it was engaged in the banking business at Joliet. The Joliet Enterprise Company was engaged in carrying on an extensive business in the manufacture of barbed wire. Said George M., Charles M., and Henry M. were, as already stated, three and a majority of its board of directors. The firm had for some years been loaning large sums of money to the corporation. On the morning of November 30, 1892, the firm held six judgment notes of the company for $29,000 each, amounting in the aggregate to $174,000. At that time it was manifest that both the bank and the corporation were insolvent, and that both would be compelled to suspend payment.

Among other things that were done during the morning of that day, a judgment was entered upon said judgment notes in favor of Henry Fish & Sons for $176,420.96 and costs, and execution immediately issued thereon and a levy made on the property of the corporation.

Later in the day, the firm of Henry Fish & Sons made a voluntary assignment for the benefit of its creditors, and James L. O'Donnell, the principal defendant in error herein, became the assignee.

In the decree in equity that was afterwards entered in the circuit court of Will county, the judgment by confession was sustained to the extent of $116,000, and to that extent only, and for the amount for which it was sustained it was given priority. But the court found and decreed that the Joliet Enterprise Company was insolvent on and after March 31, 1892; that while four of the judgment notes were renewals of like notes for loans made prior to said date, yet the other two of said judgment notes of $29,000 each upon which the judgment by confession was based were for loans made after that date and after insolvency; and that said corporation then had no power to make said two last-mentioned judgment notes, because three of the partners in the banking firm of Henry Fish & Sons were directors and officers of the insolvent corporation. And the court also found and decreed that an attorney's fee of $1,000 was unlawfully and improperly included in the judgment; and also that $1,420.96 interest was wrongfully included therein.

O'Donnell, the assignee of Henry Fish & Sons, appealed from the decree to the appellate court; and both errors and cross-errors were assigned in that court.

The judgment of the appellate court sustained the findings and decrees of the circuit court in regard to the sums of $116,000 and $1,420.96, respectively; but reversed its findings and decrees in regard to the two notes of $29,000 each and in regard to the attorney's fee of $1,000. It reversed the decree as to the judgment by confession, and remanded the cause with directions to sustain said judgment for the amount for which the same was entered, except $1,420.96 which had erroneously been included as interest and which was ordered to be deducted as of the date of said judgment, leaving said judgment as of such date at the sum of $175,000, and which judgment with interest thereon was ordered to be preserved as a lien upon the property of said Joliet Enterprise Company in favor of said firm of Henry Fish & Sons and their assignee under the judgment, execution, and levy.

It is conceded by all parties that the deduction of $1,420.96 was properly made from the judgment by confession. It was included in that judgment as interest, whereas the notes were not due at the time of rendition of judgment, and interest on them up to times of maturity had been paid. The judgment also contained another element of double and unlawful interest which a court of equity should correct. Interest had already been paid in advance up to the dates of the maturity of each of the six notes, respectively, and upon the entry of judgment before maturity at the election and by the voluntary act of the payees of the notes, this unearned interest should have been subtracted. The directions given by the appellate court are so modified as that the just and equitable proportion of the interest paid shall be deducted from the face of the notes and the judgment.

The circuit court, in its decree, found that the Joliet Enterprise Company was insolvent on the 31st day of March, 1892, and from and after that date. For the purposes of the decision, we will assume the correctness of this finding.

Four of the judgment notes on which the judgment was based, the principal of said notes amounting to $116,000, were renewals of other like judgment notes, and represented money actually loaned to the corporation by said banking firm of Henry Fish & Sons, said notes having their origin in loans made and judgment notes given on December 18, 1890, October 3, 1891, October 31, 1891, and February 16, 1892, respectively.

The giving of a judgment note is the giving of a security or preference. Young v. Clapp, 147 Ill. 176. Although this may be so, yet there can be no serious question of the propriety of the action of both of the courts below in sustaining the judgment so far as it has for its foundation the four renewal notes mentioned above. The renewal judgment notes were only continuations of the original judgment notes given during the solvency of the company. The substance of the matter is, that each loan of money and judgment note given therefor continued to be one and the same transaction, without reference to the number of like judgment notes given in renewal, and without regard to the fact that the last renewals may have been after corporate insolvency. Saylor v. Daniels, 37 Ill. 331, 87 Am. Dec. 250. And the law is, that the directors or officers of a solvent corporation, acting in good faith, may deal with it, and loan it money and take security therefor, and that the subsequent insolvency of the corporation will not affect their rights of action to recover such loans or enforce their securities. Mullanphy Sav. Bank v. Schott, 135 Ill. 655.

The circuit court found that two of the judgment notes, for $29,000 each had their origin in loans made by Henry Fish & Sons to the insolvent company,—one on June 13, 1892, and the other on October 4, 1892. It held that the taking of security for such loans, by way of warrants of attorney to confess judgment, or by way of judgment notes, was inequitable and unauthorized as against the creditors of the Joliet Enterprise Company, and forbidden by law. And it therefore set aside and annulled the judgment as to $58,000, that being the amount of the principal debts secured by said two notes.

Upon the appeal of O'Donnell, the assignee of the insolvent firm of Henry Fish & Sons, the appellate court held otherwise in regard to said two notes, as already herein sufficiently appears.

The two loans of money amounting in the aggregate to $58,000 were made by the banking firm to the corporation in good faith, and the judgment notes were given therefor at the time that the loans were respectively made. The assets of the corporation were not diminished by the transactions. It got the benefit of the moneys so borrowed, and they were used in completing the new plant that it constructed at a cost of some $280,000, and in conducting and keeping on its feet its large manufacturing business. The banking firm did not obtain, or anticipate receiving any advantage to itself by loaning the money to the corporation, other than that of getting interest on the money that it loaned. The corporation, at the time of these transactions, was embarrassed for want of means, in fact insolvent, in the sense that its liabilities exceeded its assets; and it was forced to adopt various temporary shifts and expedients for the purpose of raising money. At the same time, it was a going concern, had an extensive plant which had cost it over a quarter of a million of dollars, and was unencumbered; was employing some 300 workmen; had on hand manufactured products worth about $200,000; and was doing a large business, and meeting its commercial obligations. The securities that were given by the corporation to the banking firm—i. e. judgment notes—were not outside of the usual order of things, for the evidence shows that it was and for many years had been the custom and usage of the banking firm to require judgment notes in all cases of actual and absolute loans of money, and that the same custom and usage obtained with all of the other banks and banking firms doing business in the city of Joliet.

There is a marked difference between a case where a mortgage or other preference is given by an insolvent corporation to a director or officer to secure a pre-existing indebtedness, and a case like this, where the corporation, though in fact insolvent, in the sense above stated, is a going corporation that is seeking to accomplish the objects of its incorporation, and the security is given to directors for moneys actually and in good faith loaned at the time the security is given to such embarrassed corporation, and for its benefit.

In Harts v. Brown, 77 Ill. 226, the coal company had expended all of its means in sinking a shaft, etc., and owed debts to the amount of from $23,000 to $33,000. This court held that the directors had power to borrow money from one of their number and execute to him a mortgage on the corporate property. It was there said (p. 231): "The company had expended all their means, and had failed to realize their expectations, and had reached a point at which the enterprise must be abandoned unless means could be procured to further prosecute the work; and, so far as we can see, there was nothing reckless or unbusinesslike in effecting this loan for the time, at the rate of interest or on the security given. They all seem to be according to the usual course of business."

In Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. ed. 329, the corporation became very much embarrassed, and borrowed money from Marbury, who was one of its directors, and secured him by a note and trust deed. The court found that the loan was made in good faith to assist the corporation in its embarrassments, and held that no rule of law prohibited a director from loaning money to the corporation in good faith when it was needed for its benefit, and that such a rule would deprive a corporation of the aid of those most interested in it and most likely to render it assistance. The views we entertain in respect to the particular matter now under consideration are well expressed in certain language used by Justice Harlan in delivering the opinion of the circuit court of appeals in the late case of Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 11 C. C. A. 320, 63 Fed. Rep. 496. We quote the language referred to, which is as follows:

"A corporation is not required, by any 31 L. R. A.

duty it owes to creditors, to suspend operations the moment it becomes financially embarrassed, or because it may be doubtful whether the objects of its creation can be attained by further effort upon its part. It is in the line of right and of duty when attempting, in good faith, by the exercise of its lawful powers and by the use of all legitimate means, to preserve its active existence, and thereby accomplish the objects for which it was created. In such a crisis in its affairs, and to those ends, it may accept financial assistance from one of its directors, and, by a mortgage upon its property, secure the payment of money then loaned or advanced by him, or in that mode protect him against liability then incurred in its behalf by him." Of course, in cases of that kind, a court of equity will closely scrutinize the transaction, and, in a contest between general creditors and a director or managing officer who takes a mortgage upon its property, will hold the latter to clear proof that the mortgage was executed in good faith, and was not a device to enable him to obtain an advantage for himself over those interested in the distribution of the mortgagor's property. Washburn v. Green ("Richardson v. Green"), 133 U. S. 30, 43, 33 L. ed. 516, 521; Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 588, 23 L. ed. 329, 330.

A rule that would prevent directors and officers of financially embarrassed corporations, acting in good faith and for the apparent benefit of such corporations, from loaning them money and at the same time taking from them security for repayment—the terms and the securities being such as are in accord with the usual course of business—would be highly injurious to corporations themselves, and frequently detrimental to the interests of their creditors. The line of demarcation that separates valid from invalid preferences to directors or officers of insolvent corporations lies between already incurred liabilities and liabilities assumed by going corporations at the time the security is given and taken.

In our opinion, there was no error in the ruling of the appellate court, that the judgment notes given for the moneys lent and advanced on June 13, 1892, and on October 4, 1892, were legal and valid securities and preferences, even as against the claims of the general creditors of the corporation.

It is not intended or considered that anything herein decided or said is in conflict with the decisions in Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162, and subsequent cases in line therewith.

Some other and minor objections to the decree are suggested, but we think that a part of them are, in principle, disposed of by what we have already said; and that the others are not well taken, and do not require special notice.

With the slight modification in the directions to the circuit court that has already been adverted to, the judgment and order of the Appellate Court are affirmed. The plaintiff in error will pay the costs made in this court.

Chauncey J. BLAIR et al., Appts.,
v.

ILLINOIS STEEL COMPANY et al.

(159 Ill. 350.)

1. Jurisdiction to set aside a trust deed is acquired although complainants in the original bill in which such relief was sought were not judgment creditors of the grantor, where a cross bill to foreclose the deed is filed in the suit, making numerous parties defendant with a requirement to answer, which they do by attacking the deed, and upon issues so formed the question of the validity of the deed is submitted by the parties for decision.
2. Creditors whose executions cannot be levied upon their debtor's property because it is in the hands of a receiver are not, because of failure to levy executions, precluded from attacking the validity of a deed of trust which had been given by the debtor as being in fraud of their rights.
3. A defendant who is brought into a suit by cross bill may himself file a cross bill where it is necessary to do complete justice and terminate the litigation, under a statute providing that any defendant may, after filing his answer, exhibit and file his cross bill.
4. The filing, in a suit to dissolve a corporation and close up its business, of cross bills in the nature of creditor's bills, and of prayers to set aside a deed of trust on the property, will not operate to give the creditors praying such relief preference over the other creditors of the corporation.
5. A preference given by deed of trust to a creditor of an insolvent corporation is not avoided by the fact that the creditor is an aunt of some of the directors.
6. A sale of property in a suit to wind up an insolvent corporation is not made subject to the provisions, as to redemption, in a statute governing sales in foreclosure proceedings or under decrees for the payment of money, by the fact that in the suit are filed cross bills seeking preferences in the assets, if the decree refuses to recognize such claims, but leaves the assets unencumbered thereby.
7. A deed of trust by an insolvent corporation preferring certain creditors will not be rendered void by the fact that their claims were guaranteed by directors of the corporation, unless they are shown to be able to respond to the demands; nor by the fact that the preference was given without the knowledge of the creditors, unless it is shown that it was for the benefit of the directors rather than of the creditors.

(January 20, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant trustee and the beneficiaries under a deed of trust given by the Joliet Enterprise Company from a decree of the Appellate Court, Second District, affirming a decree of the Circuit Court for Will County setting aside a trust deed as being in fraud of creditors. Reversed.

Statement by Wilkin, J. :

On December 10, 1892, the Will County National Bank and Joseph Stephen filed their NOTE.—See Illinois Steel Co. v. O'Donnell (Ill.) ante, 265, and footnote therewith.

31 L. R. A.

bill in the circuit court of Will county, alleging, among other things, that the complainant Stephen had recovered a judgment against the Joliet Enterprise Company, a corporation of this state engaged in manufacturing barbed wire at Joliet, that execution had been issued and returned unsatisfied, and that said corporation was insolvent, and praying for the appointment of a receiver, the dissolution of the corporation, the ascertainment and enforcement of the individual liability of the stockholders and directors, and for such other, further, and different relief as might be agreeable to equity. On December 24, 1892, the Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company and the Illinois Steel Company filed their bill in the said court, alleging, among other things, that the Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company had recovered a judgment against the Joliet Enterprise Company, December 1, 1892, for $17,464.67, on which execution was immediately issued, and which remained wholly unpaid and unsatisfied; that said Joliet Enterprise Company was also indebted to the Illinois Steel Company in the sum of $169,751.04; that Charles M. Fish, George M. Fish, Henry M. Fish, Francis H. Connell, and John T. Brooks were directors and officers of said Joliet Enterprise Company; that said directors Charles M. Fish, George M. Fish, and Henry M. Fish, together with Henry Fish, their father, composed the firm of Henry Fish & Sons; that on November 30, 1892, the defendant corporation confessed judgment in said circuit court in favor of said firm of Henry Fish & Sons for $176,420.96, on which execution immediately issued, and was levied on all the property of the corporation; that on the same day said corporation executed and delivered a trust deed to Chauncey J. Blair, trustee, securing various creditors, to the amount of about $159,000; that said corporation at that time was, and for many months, prior thereto had been, insolvent; and that said confession of judgment and trust deed were unlawful attempts to prefer creditors, and praying that James L. O'Donnell, assignee of said firm of Henry Fish & Sons, insolvents, should be enjoined from enforcing said judgment, and that the judgment and trust deed should be set aside and declared null and void; that the trust deed be decreed to be a general assignment for the benefit of creditors; that the assets of the corporation should be marshaled, administered, and distributed among all the creditors of the corporation; that liabilities of the stockholders, directors, and officers should be determined and enforced; and that complainants might have such other and further relief as to equity should seem meet. The whole property of the corporation, except such as was in the custody of the sheriff, under the execution in favor of Henry Fish & Sons and certain attachment writs, had been in the possession of a receiver, appointed under a bill filed in the United States court; but on the same day that said bill of the Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company and the Illinois Steel Company was filed, the bill filed in the United States circuit court was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, and George H. Munroe, the former receiver, was appointed receiver under said bill of the Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company and the Illinois Steel Company, and took possession as such. On December 30, 1892, the court, on its own motion, and in pursuance of the stipulation and agreement of parties, consolidated the two suits so begun in the Will county circuit court, and the appointment of Munroe as receiver was extended over both. The Joliet Enterprise Company was defaulted on the bill to wind up the corporation, but answered the bill which questioned the judgment confessed and the trust deed, and contested that bill. James L. O'Donnell, assignee for Henry Fish & Sons, in his answer, claimed the right to enforce the judgment in favor of that firm for the full amount for the benefit of their creditors. The trustee and beneficiaries under the trust deed, in their answer, claimed the benefits conferred by the trust deed, and insisted on its validity. A cross bill was also filed by Chauncey J. Blair, trustee, and certain of the beneficiaries named in the trust deed for the foreclosure of the same. The Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company and the Illinois Steel Company answered the cross bill, challenging the validity of the trust deed, and setting out substantially the same matters averred in their original bill concerning it. Joseph S. Wiley and the Ashley Wire Company were brought in as defendants in said cross bill filed to foreclose the trust deed, and they answered and filed a cross bill thereto, alleging the recovery of judgments in their favor against the Joliet Enterprise Company, and averring that no execution had issued because the property of the corporation was in the hands of a receiver, and that the trust deed was an unlawful preference, and not authorized, and praying that it should be set aside and declared null and void. Afterwards said Joseph S. Wiley and the Ashley Wire Company were, by order of the court, admitted as complainants in the bill of the Will County National Bank and Joseph Stephen; and on the hearing of the cause said Joseph S. Wiley filed an intervening petition, setting out the recovery of his judgment, and asking to be made a party complainant with the Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company and the Illinois Steel Company in their bill. The prayer of the petition was granted, and said Joseph S. Wiley filed a supplemental bill to said bill of the Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company and the Illinois Steel Company, alleging that he recovered said judgment, and that no execution was issued because the property of the Joliet Enterprise Company was in the hands of a receiver, as aforesaid.

As a result of the hearing the court found that the judgment recovered by confession in favor of the firm of Henry Fish & Sons was based upon six judgment notes of the Joliet Enterprise Company, for $29,000 each, which were given for money actually loaned to said corporation by said Henry Fish & Sons; that said corporation was insolvent March 31, 1892, and thereafter the directors had no right to loan it money and take judgment notes therefor; that four of said judgment notes were renewals of like notes for loans made before March 31, 1892, and two were for loans made after that date; that the corporation had no power to make said last two judgment notes, because three members of said banking firm were members of the corporation; that $1,000, included in the judgment as attorney's fees, could not be sustained, and that $1,420.96 was wrongfully included as interest; and it was decreed that said judgment should stand for $116,000 only, the principal of the four notes held valid. The findings concerning the trust deed, and the rights of the beneficiaries thereunder, were that the several debts secured by the trust deed were all evidenced by notes of the Joliet Enterprise Company; that the debts were not created when the trust deed was made, but had existed a considerable time; that neither the trustee nor any beneficiary knew of the execution and recording of the trust deed, until after it was executed and recorded by the officers of the corporation; that in every case, except that of Cornelia A. Miller, two or more members of the banking firm of Henry Fish & Sons, who were also directors of the corporation, were bound as guarantors for the payment of the indebtedness, by written guaranties indorsed on the notes; that, as to such debts so guaranteed, the trust deed was an unlawful attempt on the part of the directors to secure indebtedness for which they were personally liable; that on November 30, 1892, the same day the trust deed was made, the corporation paid to Cornelia A. Miller, on her note, $4,500, leaving due her $500 and interest; that judgment was confessed on said note for $621.35, which included $50 attorney's fees; that said attorney's fees should not be allowed; and that she had a right to rely on the trust deed to the amount of $508 and interest due. The cross bill to foreclose the trust deed was therefore dismissed, with costs, for want of equity, except as to said Cornelia A. Miller, and except as to her the trust deed was held to be an illegal and fraudulent preference, and was set aside and canceled.

From the decree that was rendered by the circuit court an appeal was taken to the appellate court for the second district by James L. O'Donnell, assignee of Henry Fish & Sons, by Chauncey J. Blair, trustee, and by the Merchants' National Bank of Chicago, the American Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, the Third National Bank of New York, the Will County National Bank, the First National Bank of Joliet, and the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company, whose claims were secured by the trust deed. In the appellate court numerous errors were assigned by the three appellants, and cross errors were assigned by the Illinois Steel Company and by others. By the judgment of the appellate court the decree of the circuit court was affirmed in all respects, except as to the judgment by confession in favor of the firm of Henry Fish & Sons against the Joliet Enterprise Company, and as to such judgment the decree was reversed (53 Ill. App. 314), and the cause remanded, with directions to sustain said judgment for the amount for which the same was entered, except $1,420.96, which had been erroneously included as interest.

and which was ordered to be deducted as of the date of said judgment, leaving said judgment as of such date at the sum of $175,000, and which judgment, with interest thereon, was ordered to be preserved as a lien upon the property of the Joliet Enterprise Company, in favor of said firm of Henry Fish & Sons and their assignee, under the judgment, execution, and levy.

The present appeal is by Chauncey J. Blair, trustee, and the Merchants' National Bank of Chicago, the American Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, the Third National Bank of New York, the Will County National Bank, the First National Bank of Joliet, and the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company, beneficiaries under the trust deed executed by the Joliet Enterprise Company to said Blair as trustee.

Mr. George S. House, with Mr. E. A. Otis, for appellants:

The power of an insolvent corporation to secure any bona fide creditor by conveyance or mortgage of its property, even though it may result in a preference of one creditor over another, is no longer an open question in this state.

Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co. 106 Ill. 439; Bouton v. Smith, 113 Ill. 481; Burch v. West, 134 Ill. 258; Ragland v. McFall, 137 Ill. 81; Glover v. Lee, 140 Ill. 102.

The general current of authority as announced by decisions of courts of last resort in a great majority of the states, is that, in the absence of a statute, the corporation may give a preference to one creditor over another, provided there is no fraud practiced, nor any attempt by any one occupying a fiduciary relation toward it to obtain an undue advantage or preference in his own favor.

Ringo v. Biscoe, 13 Ark. 563; Bank of Montreal v. J. E. Potts Salt & L. Co. 90 Mich. 345; Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa, 284; 85 Am. Dec. 516; Planter's Bank v. Whittle, 78 Va. 737; Dana v. Bank of United States, 5 Watts & S. 223; State v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 205, 26 Am. Dec. 561; Catlin v. Eagle Bank, 6 Conn. 233; Wilkinson v. Bauerle, 41 N. J. Eq. 635; Gould v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 52 Fed. Rep. 680; Warren v. First Nat. Bank, 149 Ill. 9, 25 L. R. A. 746.

The fact that the indebtedness secured by the Blair trust deed was further evidenced by the guaranty of Henry Fish & Sons did not in any manner affect the power of the creditors to demand, or of the corporation to give, other security for its payment.

A sale or conveyance of property will not be set aside for constructive fraud on the part of the grantor alone, but both the grantor and the grantee must be shown to have participated in the fraudulent intent before relief will be granted against it.

Schroeder v. Walsh, 120 Ill. 408; Hatch v. Jordan, 74 Ill. 414; Phelps v. Curtis, 80 Ill. 109; Bump, Fraud. Conv. p. 195; Reehling v. Byers, 94 Pa. 316; Dudley v. Danforth, 61 N. Y. 626; National Tube Works Co. v. Ring Refrigerating & Ice Mach. Co. 118 Mo. 365.

The directors of the Joliet Enterprise Company, who were liable as guarantors, could not by payment of such debts be subrogated to the rights of the beneficiaries named in the deed of trust.

Sheldon, Subrogation, § 44; Dexine v. Harkness, 117 Ill. 145; Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Soutter, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 517, 20 L. ed. 543.

Security given for a bona fide preexisting debt is not to be held invalid for the sole reason that the corporate officers are personally liable for its payment.

Duncomb v. New York, H. & N. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 1; Re Wincham Shipbuilding, Boiler & S. Co. L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 322.

The officers are not trustees in the sense in which that term is used by courts of chancery, and they still have the full power of disposition and control of the corporate property and assets.

Warren v. First Nat. Bank, supra; Hospes v. Northwestern Mfg. & Car Co. 48 Minn. 174, 15 L. R. A. 470; Fogg v. Blair, 133 U. S. 534, 33 L. ed. 721.

A deed to a trustee for the benefit of bona fide creditors will be presumed to have been accepted by them in the absence of proof that they refused to accept it.

Brooks v. Marbury, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 78, 6 L. ed. 423; Dale v. Lincoln, 62 Ill. 22; Weber v. Christen, 121 Ill. 91.

The decree below directs the receiver to sell the property of the insolvent corporation without redemption, which is directly contrary to the decision in Locey Coal Mines v. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. 131 Ill. 9, 8 L. R. A. 598.

On petition for rehearing.

In this state under our general incorporation act the board of directors are invested with the exercise of all corporate powers.

Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162; Gottlieb v. Miller, 154 Ill. 44; Fogg v. Blair, 133 U. S. 534, 33 L. ed. 721; Hollins v. Brierfield Coal & I. Co. 150 U. S. 385, 37 L. ed. 1117.

There is no lack of power in the directors of an insolvent corporation to give preferences to debts due themselves, and such preferences will stand unless called in question in a court of equity by a party having the right to make the claim.

It is the vice as to this question of power in the opinion that leads the court to seemingly ignore the rights of the beneficiaries, and, accepting as granted that the act done is for the advantage of the directors, who are guarantors, hold the trust deed as invalid. The rights of the beneficiaries constitute an important factor in this transaction, and should be considered.

Lowry Bkg. Co. v. Empire Lumber Co. 91 Ga. 624; Wehl v. Atlanta Furniture Mfg. Co. 89 Ga. 297; Goodyear Rubber Co. v. George D. Scott Co. 96 Ala. 439; Henderson v. Indiana Trust Co. (Ind.) 40 N. E. 516.

Any direct creditor of an insolvent corporation created and existing in good faith has the right under the law to obtain and receive security for his debt even to the exhaustion of the entire estate of the insolvent creditor.

The fact that these directors were liable personally on these notes, as guarantors, is and was a mere incident. The securing of these notes by the trust deed may or may not be of benefit and advantage to these directors; but, be that as it may, it is not such an act as is brought within the principle governing, for the reason that the act works or results in no injury to the other creditors of the corporation whereby there exists right of complaint to such creditors.

Sanford Fork & T. Co. v. Howe, B. & Co. 157 U. S. 312, 39 L. ed. 713 (1895); Warren v. First Nat. Bank, 149 Ill. 9, 25 L. R. A. 746.

Messrs. Williams, Holt, & Wheeler, with Mr. E. Parmelee Prentice, for appellees:

The deed of trust to Blair is void as an attempt by an insolvent corporation to prefer its officers.

Atwater v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 40 Ill. App. 501; Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162; Roseboom v. Whittaker, 133 Ill. 81.

The time has long since passed when the directors in their own interest can defend their own acts. They cannot be heard in this court to claim what the trust deed would give to them, but their plan has been so conceived that other persons, represented by Mr. Blair, will be here, and will speak in their interest. We do not believe that the eyes of the court of equity, looking into the merits of a transaction, will be blinded by any such circuitry of action as that which is here shown.

Consolidated Tunk Line Co. v. Kansas City Varnish Co. 45 Fed. Rep. 7; Hutchinson v. Sutton Mfg. Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 998; Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 23 L. R. A. 618; Olney v. Conanicut Land Co. 16 R. I. 597, 5 L. R. A. 361; Goodyear Rubber Co. v. George D. Scott Co. 96 Ala. 439; Lowry Bkg. Co. v. Empire Lumber Co. 91 Ga. 624; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 661 et seq.; Sicardi v. Keystone Oil Co. 1 Pa. Adv. R. 710 (1892); Corbett v. Woodward, 5 Sawy. 403; Wait, Insolvent Corp. §§ 156, 157.

Under the 25th section of the incorporation act of this state a bill such as that which is now before this court may be filed by a simple contract creditor, and the court below had full authority to entertain the case so made.

Woolcorton v. Taylor, 132 Ill. 197; Talcott v. Grant Wire & S. Co. 33 Ill. App. 155; Woolcorton v. George H. Taylor Co. 43 Ill. App. 424.

The bill filed by complainants in the court below prayed that the various conveyances and payments made by the Enterprise Company on the 30th of November, 1892, should be declared in effect to be a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors. Whether complainants succeed in their contention upon this point or not, it nevertheless remains true that the court has jurisdiction to hear and to decide upon the question which is thus presented to it.

Roseboom v. Whittaker, 33 Ill. App. 442.

Some trust unquestionably exists.

Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162.

The legal title and the disposition of the property belong, to such extent as shall be declared by the court, to the corporation and its officers. The beneficial interest is in the creditors.

Lindauer v. Lang, 29 Ill. App. 188; Hanchett v. Waterbury, 115 Ill. 220.

Wilkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In deciding this case upon the former hearing, after making the foregoing statement of facts, we said:

"This appeal brings before us so much of the order and judgment of the appellate court as affirms those portions of the decree rendered by the circuit court of Will county, in the consolidated cause, that have reference to the trust deed dated November 30, 1892. Appellants challenge the right of appellees, and especially that of the Illinois Steel Company, to question the validity of the trust deed, and also seem to call in question the jurisdiction and right of the court, under the pleadings and proofs, to decree the invalidity of such trust deed, and the relief that it granted. We do not deem it necessary to inquire whether or not the Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company and the Illinois Steel Company, or either of them, had so exhausted their remedies at law as to entitle them, under their original bill, to set aside said trust deed in a court of chancery. Appellants answered said original bill, and then, on February 9, 1893, exhibited their cross bill to foreclose the trust deed, and the Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company, the Illinois Steel Company, Joseph S. Wiley, the Ashley Wire Company, and very numerous other persons, firms, and corporations, were, by appellants, made parties defendant to the said cross bill, and required to answer the same. This they did, and they interposed, by way of defense to the cross suit, substantially the same matters that had been alleged in the original bill, and made substantially the same objections to the validity of the trust deed; and thereupon appellants filed a replication to these answers, and the issues thus formed as to the validity of the trust deed were by the parties submitted to the decision of the chancellor at the hearing of the consolidated cause. We think that the circuit court, under the circumstances, had power and authority to adjudicate in respect to the matters thus submitted to it, and this, even though all or some of the defendants to the cross bill were but simple-contract creditors of the Joliet Enterprise Company. But, even assuming that the question of the validity of the trust deed could not be raised in chancery, even by way of defense, by a creditor of the Enterprise Company, without such creditor had first reduced his claim to a judgment, and had exhausted all legal remedies for its collection, yet the record before us shows that the Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company not only recovered a judgment at law for its demand of $17,464.67 and had an execution issued thereon, on December 1, 1892, on which the sheriff, on December 24, 1892, indorsed a return of 'No property found,' but that said execution and return were, on January 6, 1893, filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court; and that the demands of the Ashley Wire Company and Joseph S. Wiley were reduced to judgments on January 23, 1893, and that no executions were issued on said judgments, because all the property of the Joliet Enterprise Company then was, and for a long time had been, in the hands of a receiver, and in the custody of the court. There may be some question as to the sufficiency of the return on the execution, based on the judgment for $17,464.67, but there can be no question but that the Ashley Wire Company and Wiley had a clear right to contest the trust deed. When their judgments were recovered, all the property of the Enterprise Company was in the custody of the law, in charge of the receiver in the consolidated suit, composed of the winding-up bill exhibited by the Will County National Bank and Stephen and the subsequent bill of the Rolling-Mill Company and the Steel Company; and in that state of the case, the issuance and attempted levy of executions would have been a vain and idle ceremony, and probably a contempt of court. In Steere v. Hoagland, 39 Ill. 264, this court said that the general rule was that there must be a judgment and a return of no property before a creditors' bill will be entertained, yet that to that rule there were well-recognized exceptions; and the case of a deceased debtor was there held to be one of the exceptions, since, under our statutes, an execution cannot issue against an administrator so as to reach personal assets. The same principle has application in the case at bar. Where a debtor corporation is insolvent, and all its property is in the hands of a receiver in a suit in equity, brought under section 25, chap. 32, Rev. Stat., for the purpose of dissolving and closing up the business of such corporation, the case is one of an exception to the general rule that there must be a return of nulla bona upon which to base the right of a creditor to contest in equity a transfer of property made by the debtor.

"There can be no doubt but that the decree dismissing the cross bill to foreclose was fully authorized by the issues formed therein; and to any question made as to the authority of the court to grant the affirmative relief of decreeing the cancelation of the trust deed, it is a sufficient answer to say that the Ashley Wire Company and Wiley not only interposed answers to the cross bill to foreclose, but also each filed a cross bill, praying that the trust deed should be set aside and declared null and void, and that Wiley afterwards filed a supplemental bill of like tenor, and that appellants answered, and issues were formed upon such bills. In this state of the case it is hardly worth while to inquire whether or not it was proper practice to allow the filing of cross bills to a cross bill. It may be remarked, however, that the statute provides that any defendant may, after filing his answer, exhibit and file his cross bill; and no good reason is perceived why defendants, who are only brought into the suit by a cross bill, may not also exhibit cross bills, where the same are necessary or proper for the purposes of doing complete justice and terminating the litigation.

"If we assume that the circuit court decided properly in decreeing the invalidity of the trust deed, and in setting it aside, then such decree was for the benefit of the Illinois Steel Company and all others of the general creditors of the Joliet Enterprise Company, as well as for the benefit of Wiley and the Ashley Wire Company. The property covered by the trust deed and all other property of the insolvent corporation was in the possession and control of the receiver, appointed as well in the winding-up suit brought by the Will County Bank and Stephen as in the suit of the Illinois Steel Company et al. that had been consolidated with it. The prayer of the winding-up bill was that a decree should be entered dissolving the insolvent corporation, and for an accounting of all such matters wherein an account was necessary, and for the appointment of a receiver under the statute, with authority to close up its affairs, and for such further and other relief in the premises as should be agreeable to equity and good conscience. The whole consolidated cause was submitted to the court,—the two original bills, and the various cross bills,—and the issues formed on such bills; and when the court decreed, upon one branch of the consolidated cause, that the trust deed should be set aside as to the insolvent corporation and its creditors, then the proceeds of the property covered by said deed, as well as the proceeds of all other property of the insolvent corporation, was properly decreed, after the payment of the several parties found to be entitled to priorities, to be paid pro rata to Joseph Stephen, the Will County National Bank, Joseph S. Wiley, the Ashley Wire Company, the Illinois Steel Company, the numerous other creditors named in the decree, who were parties to the consolidated cause, and all other creditors of the Enterprise Company proving their claims.

"When a court of equity acquires jurisdiction over the assets of an insolvent corporation for the purpose of administering upon them, it will administer the assets upon the principle that equality is equity, and will distribute such assets ratably among all the creditors, paying due regard, however, to legal rights and preferences existing before it takes jurisdiction. Atwater v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 152 Ill. 605; J. W. Butler Paper Co. v. Robbins, 151 Ill. 588. Here the jurisdiction of the court of chancery attached on December 10, 1892, when suit in equity was brought, under the statute, for the purpose of dissolving the Joliet Enterprise Company and closing up the business of said corporation. The subsequent filing in the same court of a creditors' bill and of cross bills in the nature of creditors' bills, and of answers to the cross bill to foreclose the trust deed, did not have the effect of giving to some of the creditors preference over the other creditors; nor, indeed, do we understand that such a claim is made in behalf of any of the creditors.

"The principal controversy upon this appeal is whether or not the Joliet Enterprise Company had the right to make the preferences that it did by the trust deed of November 30, 1892, executed to the appellant Blair, trustee. We have held, in numerous cases, that an insolvent corporation, as well as an insolvent natural person, has the right, in the absence of a fraudulent intent, to make preferences among creditors. Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co. 106 Ill. 439; Bouton v. Smith, 113 Ill. 481; Burch v. West, 134 Ill. 258; Ragland v. McFall, 137 Ill. 81;

Glover v. Lee, 140 Ill. 102; Warren v. First Nat. Bank, 149 Ill. 9, 25 L. R. A. 746; J. W. Butler Paper Co. v. Robbins, supra; Gottlieb v. Miller, 154 Ill. 44. Such preference may even be given to the wife or a relative of directors or officers of the corporation, provided no pecuniary advantage is thereby obtained by such directors or officers. Ragland v. McFall, and Gottlieb v. Miller, supra; Schroeder v. Walsh, 120 Ill. 403. Therefore, in the case at bar, the court properly held that the fact that Cornelia A. Miller was an aunt of three of the directors of the insolvent company did not vitiate the preference given to the debt due her.

"It is assigned as error that the appellate court erred in holding that the circuit court had power, even by consent of counsel, to order the lands, premises, and plant of the Joliet Enterprise Company to be sold without redemption, and to direct the receiver of said corporation to execute and deliver deeds of conveyance to the purchaser thereof, upon the confirmation of said sale, without reserving any right of redemption. In our opinion the decision in Locey Coal Mines v. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. 131 Ill. 9, 8 L. R. A. 598, does not control in this case. The decision there made was based on the statute, which expressly makes subject to the right of redemption all sales of real estate made 'by virtue of an execution, judgment, or decree of foreclosure of a mortgage, or the enforcement of a mechanic's lien, or vendor's lien, or for the payment of money.' The sale there involved was one ordered in a decree rendered upon a creditors' bill to enforce the collection of a judgment at law, and it was considered that the decree was one 'for the payment of money,' viz. the amount due on the complainants' judgment, and also considered that the creditors' bill was to be regarded as a species of process for the execution and enforcement of a judgment at law. Here there was no decree of foreclosure and sale under the trust deed, even in favor of Mrs. Miller. The payment of the small amount remaining due and unpaid upon the debt secured to her was, by agreement of parties, otherwise provided for. Nor was any decree of sale rendered upon the creditors' bills or cross bills of either the Illinois Steel Company, the Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company, the Ashley Wire Company, or Joseph S. Wiley, giving them or either of them preference over the other and general creditors. The only effect accomplished by said bills and cross bills, and by the answers to the cross bills to enforce the trust deed, was to set aside said trust deed as a preference, and leave the real estate and plant as an asset in the hands of the receiver wholly unencumbered thereby. The decree for the sale of the real estate of the Joliet Enterprise Company, to be made by the receiver, without redemption, was manifestly based upon the winding-up bill and the statute that provides for the dissolution and winding up of insolvent corporations. We think that the statute upon which the decision in Locey Coal Mines v. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. supra, was based, has no application to the matter of a decree for the sale of real estate, ordered to be made by the receiver, in a suit in equity, brought, under our winding-up statute, for the purpose of dissolving an insolvent corporation, and closing up its business and affairs. The decree for a sale without redemption was the proper decree to be entered."

That part of the decree of the circuit court which dismissed the bill of these appellants was then affirmed on the ground that the trust deed was, as to them, for the benefit of those directors of the corporation who had guaranteed the payment of the notes secured by it, and therefore made in violation of the rule that the directors and other agents of an insolvent corporation cannot give themselves any advantage or preference in payment of claims due them by the corporation at the expense of other creditors. The correctness of this position is the only question before us upon this rehearing, and we are satisfied, upon a further consideration of the case, that the position there taken cannot be maintained. That a corporation, although insolvent, can prefer creditors not officers of the company, has been too long and firmly established by the decisions of this court to be now the subject of controversy. We said in Warren v. First Nat. Bank, supra: "The doctrine is recognized here that the property of an insolvent corporation is a trust fund, in such sense as precludes the directors and officers of the corporation from dealing with it in such manner as to secure preferences for themselves, (citing Roseboom v. Whittaker, 132 Ill. 81; Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162). "But we have not gone so far as to hold that the mere insolvency of a corporation eo instanti deprived the directors and officers of the power to dispose of the corporate property in good faith, by way of paying or securing corporate debts, even though the result may be to give certain creditors a preference over others." The rule laid down in Cook on Corporations is: "Corporations, unless restricted by their charters or by general statutes, may make assignments for the benefit of creditors to the same extent that individuals may. In making the assignment the corporation may make preferences for one or more creditors over others, or of one class of creditors over other classes." Cook, Stock, Stockholders, & Corp. Law, §*691. In the case of Warren v. First Nat. Bank, supra, this rule was held to be in harmony with our decisions in Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co., Ragland v. McFall, and Glover v. Lee, supra. To the same effect is Gottlieb v. Miller, 154 Ill. 48, where it is said: "That the doctrine that we have so frequently held, and that we are here so strenuously urged to change or modify,—that in the absence of legislation an insolvent corporation may make a preference among creditors, subject to the same restrictions that apply to individual debtors,—is in accord with the great weight of authority, is indicated by the following list of cases in which like doctrines are announced,"—citing a long list of authorities. So we hold, in this case, that the preference given by this trust deed to Mrs. Cornelia A. Miller was not unlawful, she-being merely a creditor of the corporation, having no indorsement or guaranty from its directors.

That the Merchants' National Bank of Chicago, the American Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, the Third National Bank of New York, the Will County National Bank, the First National Bank of Joliet, and the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company, whose claims were secured by the trust deed, were all bona fide creditors of the insolvent corporation, is not questioned. That they were guilty of any fraud or misconduct which would deprive them of the same rights accorded to Mrs. Miller, or any other bona fide creditor, is not claimed. Therefore, the grounds, and only grounds, upon which it is contended, or can be held, that they were not entitled to be preferred as creditors of the corporation, are that certain directors of the corporation had guaranteed the payment of their debts. If it is a sufficient reason for depriving them of that right, it must be upon the theory that, otherwise, the preference would result in some benefit to the guarantors, directors of the company, and that, too, without any proof tending to establish that fact,—that is to say, there is no affirmative proof in this record that these guarantors are solvent, or can be made to respond to these creditors for any balance which may remain due them after the company's assets are exhausted. For anything here appearing, if the contention that because the creditors had the names of the directors upon their notes as guarantors deprives them of the right, secured to other creditors, to be preferred, be maintained, they must suffer loss merely because they had such guaranty. We do not understand that the rule which authorizes an insolvent corporation to give preference to one or more of its creditors, or a class of creditors, in the distribution of its assets, to the exclusion of others, is limited by the mere fact that such preference may, in a certain contingency, result in benefit to directors of the company; and the authorities, so far as we have been able to ascertain, are to the contrary. While it is not so decided, in terms, in the case of Sanford Fork & T. Co. v. Howe, 157 U. S. 312, 39 L. ed. 713, it is inferentially so held. Justice Brewer, in rendering the opinion of the court, puts these questions: "Will it be doubted that, if this mortgage had been given directly to the holders of these notes, it would have been valid? Are creditors who are neither stockholders nor directors, but strangers to a corporation, disabled from taking security from the corporation by reason of the fact that upon the paper they hold there is also the indorsement of certain of the directors or stockholders? Must, as a matter of law, such creditors be content to share equally with the other creditors of the corporation, because, forsooth, they have also the guaranty of some of the directors or stockholders, whose guaranty may or may not be worth anything?" The case of Henderson v. Indiana Trust Co. (Ind.; April, 1895) 40 N. E. 517, involves the decision of this very question, and it is there held, as stated in the syllabus of the case: "An insolvent corporation, while in possession of its property, may prefer any of its creditors, not directors or stockholders, even though their claims are secured by the indorsement of directors and stockholders, where the creditors were at the time of the preference unaware of its insolvency, or that the transfer was made to protect such directors and stockholders."

But it is unnecessary to further pursue this inquiry. We do not understand counsel for appellee to seriously question the correctness of the position that the mere fact that the directors of the company had guaranteed the payment of the debt would not be an insuperable objection to the creditor availing himself of a preference made in his favor. They say: "The case at bar is very different from the cases cited in the two petitions for a rehearing, and the difference is just this: That in these cases, such as Henderson v. Indiana Trust Co. the creditor who was preferred exercised diligence for his own protection. In the present case the preference was a gift, pure and simple, voluntary on the part of the directors, and unsought by the donees. It is not claimed on behalf of the steel company that creditors who have secured the guaranty of directors of the corporation are by that fact always and necessarily prevented from obtaining a preference when the corporation becomes insolvent. If the corporation fails, all creditors are entitled to exercise the highest diligence in their behalf, and, when that diligence has been exercised, it may be that they are entitled to the fruits of it, whether they had the guaranty of directors or not." The right of these beneficiaries to a preference is thus made to depend upon the exercise of diligence on their part to obtain the preference, and not merely upon the fact that they had the guaranty of certain directors upon their paper. It is true that the circuit court found, as shown in the foregoing statement of facts, "that neither the trustee nor any beneficiary knew of the execution and recording of the trust deed until after it was executed and recorded by the officers of the corporation." That finding of fact, it will be seen, applied to Mrs. Cornelia A. Miller as well as to the other beneficiaries in that deed; and yet it is not pretended that her right to a preference depended upon any act of diligence upon her part. Why, then, in the absence of proof tending to show that this preference to the other creditors was not for their benefit and for the benefit of the directors, should the question of diligence cut any figure in the case? We assume that it will not be seriously contended that the right of an insolvent individual or corporation to prefer creditors is in any wise conditioned upon the act of the creditor. The right to prefer a creditor rests upon the principle that, so long as the debtor retains control and dominion over his property, he may do with it as he sees fit, and discharge one obligation to the exclusion of another, presumably upon the theory that he regards the claim of one debtor more meritorious than another. In our view of the case, the fact that the trust deed was executed without the knowledge of the creditors, or without their having insisted upon its execution, is wholly immaterial, unless it can be said that that fact, of itself, is sufficient to justify the conclusion that it was executed for the benefit of the directors or guarantors upon the note, and not for the benefit of the creditors themselves; and this certainly cannot be claimed. This trust deed conferred a direct benefit upon the creditors by way of preference. That it might result in benefit to the guarantors or directors is a mere inference or conjecture. We think the decree of the court below in dismissing the cross bill of appellants was erroneous, and should be reversed. The cause will be remanded with instructions to it to enter a decree in conformity with the prayer of that bill.

Reversed and remanded.

Cartwright, J., took no part in the consideration of the case in this court.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

MEXICAN NATIONAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

James O. JACKSON.

(.....Tex.....)

1. The law of Mexico must be applied to the rights of the parties in an action against a railroad company by an employee for a personal injury sustained in that country in which the contract of service was made.
2. An action for personal injuries caused by negligence is transitory and may be maintained in any place where the defendant is found, if there be no reason why the court should not entertain jurisdiction.
3. It is for the court whose jurisdiction is invoked to determine whether or not the law of a foreign country by which the right claimed must be determined is such that it can properly and intelligently be administered by that court with due regard to the rights of the parties.
4. A court will not undertake to adjudicate rights which originated in any other state or country under statutes materially different from the law of the forum in relation to the same subject.
5. Jurisdiction of an action for personal injuries sustained in any other country by a railroad employee will not be entertained by a Texas court where the foreign law which governs the case permits what is termed "extraordinary indemnity" in a sum which the judge might deem proper, considering the plaintiff's social position, and also provides for subsequent judgments for additional damages afterwards arising out of the same injury as well as for a reduction of the judgment in case of an increased earning capacity of the injured person.

(January 23, 1896.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals, Fourth Supreme Judicial District, to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Webb County in favor of NOTE.—The above case furnishes an unusual illustration of the doctrine with respect to the refusal to enforce rights of action under foreign laws.

As to rights of action for death, caused by wrong negligence in other jurisdictions, see note to v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Va.) 15 L. R. A.

R. A.

plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Dodd & Mullally for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. E. A. Atlee and Charles C. Pierce, for defendant in error:

Under the laws of Mexico, where the injuries were received, an action for damages may be maintained by the person injured against the railroad company whose negligence caused the injuries; such action being transitory, its enforcement not being against the laws nor the public policy of the state of Texas, and the party liable for damages being found within the jurisdiction of the trial court, the relief prayed for may be granted.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Richards, 68 Tex. 375; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McCormick, 71 Tex. 660, 1 L. R. A. 804; Willis v. Missouri P. R. Co. 61 Tex. 432, 45 Am. Rep. 301; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 81 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771; Morris v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 65 Iowa, 727, 54 Am. Rep. 39; Knight v. West Jersey R. Co. 108 Pa. 250, 56 Am. Rep. 200; Higgins v. Central New England & W. R. Co. 155 Mass. 176; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. McMullen, 117 Ind. 439; Wooden v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. 126 N. Y. 10, 13 L. R. A. 458; Burns v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 118 Ind. 169; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 36 L. ed. 829; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 489.

While the law of the place where the right was acquired, or the liability was incurred, may govern as to the right of action, the law of the forum will control as to all that pertains merely to the remedy.

Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., Wooden v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co., and Higgins v. Central New England & W. R. Co., supra.

On petition for rehearing.

Mexican law may make a negligent act criminal, but negligence would not be more difficult to prove under that law than under Texas law. If the negligence is proved, the plain letter of the Mexican law will determine whether or not such negligent act is declared to be a crime.

Whether the domestic law provides for redress in like cases should in principle be im-material so long as the right is a reasonable one, and not opposed to the interests of the state.

Story, Const. L. 8th ed. § 635, note a.

The enforcement of the penalty of the Mexican law belongs solely to the Mexican government, and incidental to its enforcement is the postponement or suspension of the civil action. Such delay is a matter pertaining only to the procedure, and does not impair the right of action for damages.

Article 313 of the Mexican law is barely susceptible of even the strained construction that the judges enforcing that law are required to bring the parties together before suit so as to endeavor to induce a settlement or compromise.

As to the rule or measure of damages, there is no material difference.

Would not the plaintiff be precluded from claiming damages by suit in Mexico, after he has obtained his judgment in a Texas court?

While there may exist numerous differences between the laws of the two countries, yet they are substantially the same in all matters affecting the right of action.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 953.

Whether plaintiff's rights may be adjudicated better in one jurisdiction than in another, should not enter the mind of the court. The only inquiry should be: Have our courts power to hear and determine the controversy?

Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 657, 9 L. ed. 1233.

The dismissal of plaintiff's cause is a denial of justice.

Const. art. 1, § 13.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error is a corporation operating a line of railroad in the republic of Mexico, which extends into the state of Texas. The defendant in error was in the employ of that railroad company in the republic of Mexico, and while engaged in the performance of duties as such employee, was injured at the station of La Ventura, in the said republic. The injuries received were serious, and of a permanent nature. The injury was caused by the negligence of the conductor, who was the vice principal of the railroad company. The defendant below, by special plea, set up and pleaded the laws of Mexico in such cases, alleging that the contract of service was entered into in that republic, and the injury occurred within the republic of Mexico; that it was entitled to an adjudication under those laws, which are so dissimilar to the laws of Texas that the courts of this state ought not to undertake to adjudicate them; and that the defendant still owned and operated its line of railroad in Mexico, and was subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of that country. Proof was made of the laws of Mexico, from which we copy the following articles, as being material to the determination of the question involved:

"Art. 72. Congress has power: . . . XXII. To enact laws governing general lines of communication, and governing post-offices and mails."

31 L. R. A.

"Art. 4. A crime is the voluntary infraction of a penal law, doing that which it prohibits or neglecting to do that which it commands.

"Art. 5. A misdemeanor is the infraction of police regulations or proclamations and good government.

"Art. 6. There are intentional crimes and crimes resulting from neglect."

"Art. 11. Negligent crimes exist—I. Where an act is done or a duty omitted which, although lawful in itself, is not so by reason of its consequences, if the accused fails to provide against such consequences through negligence, want of reflection or care, by not making proper investigations, by not taking necessary precautions. . . . III. Where the question relates to an act which is punishable solely by reason of the circumstances under which it is done, or by reason of a circumstance personal to the party aggrieved, if the accused is ignorant of such circumstances, through not having previously made the investigations which the duty of his profession or the importance of the case demands."

"Art. 301. The civil liability arising from an act or omission contrary to a penal law consists in the obligation imposed on the party liable, to make (1) restitution, (2) reparation, (3) indemnization, and (4) payment of judicial expenses."

"Art. 304. Reparation comprehends: The payment of all the damages caused to the injured party, to his family or to a third person, with the violation of a right which is formal, existing and not simply possible, if such damages are actual, and arise directly and immediately from the act or omission complained of, or there be a certainty that such act or omission must necessarily cause, as a proximate and inevitable result.

"Art. 305. Indemnization imports: The payment of damages, that is, that which the injured party fails to enjoy as a direct and immediate consequence of an act or omission by which a formal, existing and not merely possible right is attacked, and of the value of the fruits of the thing usurped and already consumed, in the cases in which the same should be done conformably with civil right.

"Art. 306. The condition required by the two preceding articles, that the damages and injuries should be actual, shall not prevent that the indemnization of subsequent damages and injuries be exacted by a new suit, when they shall have accrued; if they proceed directly from, and as a necessary consequence of, the same act or omission from which resulted the previous damages or injuries.

"Art. 307. The payment of judicial expenses solely embraces those absolutely necessary, which the injured party incurs for the purpose of investigating the act or omission which causes the criminal proceeding, and to avail himself of his rights in such proceeding or in the civil suit.

"Art. 308. The civil responsibility cannot be declared except at the instance of the party entitled to recover.

"Art. 309. The judges who adjudicate upon the civil responsibility shall be controlled by the provisions of this title, in so far as its provisions extend; on other questions they shall follow, according to the nature of the suit, the provisions of the civil or of the commercial laws which may be in effect at the time of the happening of the act or omission causing the civil responsibility.

"Art. 310. The right to civil responsibility forms part of the estate of a decedent and descends to his heirs and successors,—provided it be not the case of the following article, or that it arise from injury or defamation, and that the offended person having been able in his lifetime to bring his suit, he neither did so nor directed his heirs to sue; in such case the offense shall be understood as remitted.

"Art. 311. The act to enforce civil responsibility demanding support of a person guilty of homicide is personal, and belongs exclusively to the persons named in the end of article 318, as directly damaged. Consequently, such action forms no part of the estate of the deceased, nor is it extinguished although the latter pardon the offense in life."

"Art. 318. The judges who take cognizance of suits based upon civil responsibility shall endeavor that the amount and terms of payment be fixed by agreement of the parties. Failing in this, the provisions of the following articles shall be observed."

"Art. 321. In case of blows or wounds from which the injured party does not remain crippled, lamed, or deformed, he shall have the right that the responsible party pay him all expenses of cure, the damages he may have suffered, and that which he may fail to gain during the time which in the opinion of competent persons he may not be able to do the work by which he subsisted. But it is essential that the inability to work should be the direct result of the wounds or blows, or of a cause which is the immediate effect of such blows or wounds.

"Art. 322. If the inability of the injured party to devote himself to his accustomed work be permanent, from the moment in which he shall recover and can properly devote himself to other and different work, which shall be lucrative and appropriate to his education, habits, social position and physical constitution, the civil responsibility shall be reduced to paying him the sum which his ability to earn in his new employment falls short of his daily earnings in his former occupation.

"Art. 323. If the blows or wounds cause the loss of any member not indispensable for work, or the person wounded or struck remain otherwise crippled, lamed, or deformed, by that circumstance he shall have the right, not only to the damages and injuries, but also to the sum which the judge may determine as extraordinary indemnity, considering the social position and sex of the person and the part of the body remaining crippled, lamed, or deformed.

"Art. 324. The gain which the injured party fails to earn during his inability to work shall be computed by multiplying the sum which he formerly earned per day by the number of days of his disability.

31 L. R. A.

"Art. 325. The provisions of the foregoing articles for computing the civil responsibility for wounds or blows shall be applied to all other cases where, in violation of a penal law, a person may cause the illness of another, or may have placed him under disability to work.

"Art. 326. No person shall be charged with civil liability upon an act or omission contrary to a penal law, unless it be proved: That the party sought to be charged usurped the property of another; that without right, he caused, by himself or by means of another, damages or injuries to the plaintiff; or that, the party sought to be charged being able to avoid the damages, they were caused by a person under his authority.

"Art. 327. Whenever any of the conditions of the preceding article are established, the defendant shall be civilly liable, without regard to whether he be absolved or condemned to criminal liability."

"Art. 330. In order that masters may be held civilly liable through their clerks and servants, according to the provisions of articles 326 and 327, it is an indispensable condition that the acts or omissions of the clerks or servants, causing the liability, shall occur in the service for which they were employed.

"Art. 331. Under the condition of the preceding article those liable are: . . . Railroad companies."

"Art. 363. (Limitation.) The various actions by which the civil responsibility may be demanded, or the execution of a final judgment declaring that such responsibility has been incurred by the accused may be asked, shall be extinguished according to the terms and in the manner provided by the Civil Code or the Commercial Code, according to the nature of the demand and the subject-matter treated of.

"Art. 364. Amnesty shall not extinguish the civil responsibility, nor the actions to exact it, nor the legal rights which third persons may have acquired. Nevertheless, when the responsibility may not yet have been made effective, and the demand is not for restitution but for reparation of damages, of indemnity for injuries, or for payment of judicial expenses, the guilty person shall remain free from such obligations only when it is so declared in the amnesty and they are expressly left to the charge of the public treasury.

"Art. 365. A pardon shall in no case extinguish the civil responsibility, nor the actions to enforce it, nor the legal rights which third persons may have acquired.

"Art. 366. Limitation is interrupted by the criminal proceeding until final judgment is pronounced. This done, the term of limitation commences to run anew."

"Art. 28. Until it is determined in the new Code of Procedure what judges shall have jurisdiction and the mode of proceeding, in suits to enforce civil liability, the following rules shall be observed: . . . Actions to enforce the civil liability may be brought before a court of civil jurisdiction, whether or not the criminal proceeding has been commenced; but while the latter is pending, the proceedings in the former shall be stayed."

"Art. 20. When a judicial controversy can be decided neither by the text nor by the natural meaning or spirit of the law, it must be decided according to the general principles of right, taking into consideration all circumstances of the case.

"Art. 21. In case of conflict of rights and the absence of express law for the especial case, the controversy shall be decided in favor of him who seeks to avoid damages and not in favor of him who seeks to obtain profit. If the conflict should be between equal rights, or rights of the same species, it shall be decided observing the greatest equality possible between the parties."

"Art. 1905. Limitation bars in three years:

... VIII. Civil responsibility for injuries, whether done by word or by writing, and that which arises from damage caused by persons or animals, and which the law imposes upon the representatives of such persons or the owners of the animals."

"Art. 1. The executive shall regulate the service of railroads, telegraphs and telephones constructed, or which in the future may be constructed, upon Mexican territory, according to the following cases: I. Railroads, telegraphs, and telephones which in the Federal district and territory of Lower California unite together two or more municipalities, or the Federal district and territory of Lower California with one or more states; those which communicate two or more states with each other; those which touch any port in the territorial boundary line of the republic and foreign countries or run parallel therewith within a region of 20 leagues, are known as general lines of communication within the meaning of fraction XXII. of art. 72 of the Constitution. II. These general lines of communication and their branches shall be subject exclusively to the Federal legislative, executive, and judicial powers, in their respective spheres, in all cases where any of the following matters are involved:

... G. Construction and repair of the works. Crimes committed against the security or integrity of the works or against the operation of the lines. H. Security of the same works for which the companies are obligated, and crimes or misdemeanors of the companies through delays or obstruction, carelessness or fault in the service and for accidents or mishaps in the operation."

"Art. 52. The coaches and cars which enter into the make-up of a train shall have the draw-heads of the same height, so that their centers will be opposite to each other."

"Art. 88. The conductor of a train en route is the person in command of all the train crew, including the engineer and fireman."

"Art. 121. Engineers shall communicate by means of a steam whistle with the agents charged with the duty of watching, and with the conductors of trains, using the following signal: ... Three blasts or sounds of the whistle will be the signal that the engine or train is going to move backwards."

"Art. 124. Companies [railway] are liable for accidents which occur through the failure to observe the provisions of this chapter [chapter 7] respecting signals, and for employing persons who do not have certificates showing that their sight and hearing are free from infirmity which does not permit them to recognize the signals."

"Art. 184. Companies [railway] are liable for all faults or accidents which occur through tardiness, negligence, imprudence, or want of capacity of their employees."

"Art. 208. All violations of this law, which companies [railway] commit, shall be subject to punishment by the administration by fine up to $500, which the department of public works shall assess, reserving always the right of individuals, through indemnity, and the liability which the companies may have incurred through criminal acts or omissions committed by them."

The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff in that court, J. O. Jackson, for the sum of $5,000, from which appeal was taken, and the judgment affirmed by the court of civil appeals.

The law of Mexico, under which plaintiff's claim originated, having been pleaded and proved by the defendant, the rights of the parties must be determined by its provisions: "It would be as unjust to apply a different law as it would be to determine the rights of the parties by a different transaction." Story, Conf. L. p. 38. This is a transitory action, and may be maintained in any place where the defendant is found, if there be no reason why the court whose jurisdiction is invoked should not entertain the action. The plaintiff, however, has no legal right to have his redress in our courts; nor is it specially a question of comity between this state and the government of Mexico, but one for the courts of this state to decide, as to whether or not the law by which the right claimed must be determined is such that we can properly and intelligently administer it, with due regard to the rights of the parties. Gardner v. Thomas, 14 Johns. 134, 7 Am. Dec. 445; Johnson v. Dalton, 1 Cow. 543, 13 Am. Dec. 564. The decisions of this court (well sustained by high authority) establish the doctrine that the courts of this state will not undertake to adjudicate rights which originated in another state or country, under statutes materially different from the law of this state in relation to the same subject. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McCormick, 71 Tex. 660, 1 L. R. A. 804; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Richards, 68 Tex. 375. Many difficulties would present themselves, in an attempt to determine the meaning of the Mexican law, and to apply it in giving redress to the parties claiming rights under it. We understand the Mexican courts are not governed by precedent, and we have no access to reports of adjudicated cases of those courts, from which we could ascertain their interpretation of these laws. The language of some of the articles quoted is ambiguous, and we find great difficulty in determining what would be a proper interpretation of the law. We might or might not give the same effect to the language that is given to it in the courts of Mexico. There could be no reasonable certainty that the parties' rights would be adjusted here as they would be if the case were tried in the courts of that country, which is their right; for it is well settled that, if one state undertakes to enforce a law of another state, the interpretation of that law as fixed by the courts of the other state is to be followed. This difficulty of itself furnishes a sufficient reason for the courts of this state to decline to assume jurisdiction of this class of cases.

We will briefly compare some of the provisions of the law of Mexico with the law of this state, showing wherein they differ, and the impracticability of attempting to administer them here. By the Mexican law, the plaintiff's right does not rest upon the fact of negligence on the part of the defendant, but such negligence, in order to give a right of action, must be of such character as to make the act a crime under that law. We must first determine whether the defendant would be subject to a criminal prosecution in Mexico, before we can proceed to administer the remedy provided for the wrong. If it is not a crime, no right of action exists, no matter how grossly negligent may be the act which caused the injury. While this is not a criminal prosecution, in the sense that a punishment for the crime is to be inflicted in this suit, it does require a determination of the guilt of the defendant in order to give relief to the plaintiff. In this state, under the facts of this case, no such prosecution could be maintained, nor in any case is the right of recovery made to depend upon the criminality of the act. However, in some cases a recovery cannot be had except upon proof of facts which would show the act to be contrary to a penal statute. The acquittal of the defendant under the Mexican law does not bar the right to recover in a civil proceeding, but the civil action for damages is suspended by the pendency of the criminal prosecution, if such has been commenced, until its final determination. If a suit were pending in a court of this state under that law, and a criminal proceeding should be inaugurated in the courts of Mexico, the court here could not recognize this requirement of the law of that country, and stay the action until the prosecution there had been concluded. We can see no reason for the requirement of the law of Mexico that the civil proceeding should be stayed during the prosecution of the criminal charge, except that the government would thereby secure the presence of the injured party as a witness, and his aid in the punishment of the guilty party. To permit such suits to be maintained in our courts would enable the plaintiffs therein to evade the laws of that country in that particular, and would be against the policy of that government. While it is true that this is not a prosecution for the crime, as such, nor a suit for a penalty, it is so closely related to that class of proceedings that the courts of this state should not aid in the enforcement of rights arising under those laws, which practically require the defendant to be tried for a crime, in the civil action. Under the laws of Mexico, the judge before whom the civil action is commenced is required to induce the parties to adjust their differences and settle their grievance by agreement, if he can do so. This our courts cannot do. If this be regarded as matter of procedure, it is of a character which may involve a substantial benefit to the parties, of which the defendant would be deprived by permitting the action to be prosecuted in the courts of this state. If we conclude that the plaintiff is entitled to relief, then we must determine what he has a right to recover, and what protection the defendant is entitled to receive by the judgment of the court, under the law proved in this case. By that law the plaintiff would be entitled to recover for all actual damages existing at the time of the trial, and such as must necessarily result therefrom. By our law he would recover for all such damages, and for all such as might probably thereafter result from the injury. Thus, under our law, the plaintiff would have a present right to that which he could not recover by the terms of the Mexican law, except by subsequent actions therefor. If the plaintiff remain lamed or crippled, disfigured or maimed, by the injury, the Mexican law permits the judge to give, in addition to the actual damages, what is termed "extraordinary indemnity," in a sum that might be by the judge deemed proper, considering plaintiff's social position. How could a court in Texas ascertain what this extraordinary indemnity is to be? Is it compensatory or vindictive damages? In this state a party, by reason of social position, is not entitled to more or less compensation for such an injury, and our courts could not afford this relief. The plaintiff would have the right, under the law of that country, by subsequent suits, to recover for any damages that might arise out of the injury after the first judgment was rendered, while in our courts the whole sum must be adjudged in one proceeding. After a judgment in Texas for all damages, existing and prospective, the plaintiff might, in the courts of that country, recover for injuries subsequently developed, which might be included in the judgment of the Texas court, and thus a double recovery be had. Under the laws of Mexico, the defendant would be liable for injuries to plaintiff's family, or to third persons, growing out of the injury inflicted upon plaintiff. What this might comprehend, we do not know. It might include a part of what would be adjudged in the judgment in a Texas court, or it might not. At any rate, it appears to be a different right to anything known to the laws of Texas, and in favor of persons who could not, under our law, maintain any action for the alleged injury. If the plaintiff should recover from his injuries to the extent that he would become able to pursue an occupation suitable to his education and social position, the defendant would have the right, under that law, to have the payment of damages awarded for diminished capacity to earn money reduced by the amount that plaintiff could earn in such employment. In this state no judgment could be rendered which would secure that right, but the judgment must be entered for all probable future losses; hence the future earnings, no matter how great they might prove to be, could not go to reduce the damages already paid under such judgment as would be rendered in Texas. How this right would be secured in Mexico, we cannot see, unless payments were required by the judgment to be made in installments, or that, future inability to earn money not being considered upon the first trial, the matter would be settled in subsequent suits to recover for such damages. In any event, it is a right of the defendant which no court of this state can secure by its judgment.

There are many points of dissimilarity between the laws of Mexico as proved in this case, and the law of this state applicable to the same subject, which we have not mentioned; but those noticed are sufficiently numerous and material to show that the courts of Texas should not undertake to adjudicate the rights of parties arising under those laws for torts committed in that country. Indeed, as we have shown, they could not properly determine the rights of parties arising under those laws. The cases of Texas & P. R. Co. v. Richards, and St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McCormick, supra, were actions for damages caused by the death of the injured party, but they were decided upon the same principles that apply to this case; that is, that the courts of Texas will not entertain such actions, if founded upon a law which is materially different from the law of this state. The cases cited are sustained by the weight of authority, and are conclusive of the question in this state.

There are other sufficient reasons why our courts should not attempt to enforce the Mexican law in cases like this. The reason which influences the courts of one state to permit transitory actions for torts to be maintained therein, when the right accrued in a foreign state or country, is that the defendant, having removed from such other state or country, cannot be subjected to the jurisdiction of the courts where the cause of action arose, and as matter of comity, but more especially to promote justice, the courts of the place where he is found will enforce the rights of the injured party against him, because it would be unjust that the wrongdoer should be permitted, by removing from the country where he inflicted the injury, to avoid reparation for the wrong done by him. In this case there has been no removal of the person or property of the defendant. Its railroad remains, as it was at the time of the injury, within the jurisdiction of the courts of Mexico, and it is liable to suit there according to the laws of that country. The reason for permitting the action to be prosecuted in our courts does not obtain in this case. The plaintiff has voluntarily resorted to the jurisdiction of our courts, when his rights could be better adjudicated in Mexico. The Mexican National Railroad is an important public highway in the republic of Mexico, by which the commerce of that country is largely carried on with our people. Every judgment for damages rendered against it reduces its revenues, which must, of necessity, be restored through its charges for transportation of persons and property, and, in the main, must be paid by that people. It is but just, and perhaps necessary to a proper maintenance of that means of transportation, that the country in which it is operated should determine the charges to be enforced against it. If Texas should open her courts to all persons that may be injured in Mexico in the management of that railroad and others, it may seriously affect the means of commerce between this state and that republic. Thus it becomes a matter of public concern, and a proper subject for our consideration in this connection, in view of the fact that the railroad company is still subject to that jurisdiction. Justice does not demand the exercise of the jurisdiction, and comity between the governments of this state and Mexico would seem to forbid that we should do so. Gardner v. Thomas, 14 Johns. 184, 7 Am. Dec. 445; Johnson v. Dalton, 1 Cow. 548, 13 Am. Dec. 564. There are at this time two systems of railroads extending from the borders of this state into Mexico, for several hundred miles each; and as that country shall hereafter develop, and commerce between the two countries become more extended, we may expect other lines to be constructed in the same direction. If our courts assume to adjust the rights of parties against those railroads, growing out of such facts as in this case, we will offer an invitation to all such persons who might prefer to resort to tribunals in which the rules of procedure are more certainly fixed, and the trial by jury secured, to seek the courts of this state to enforce their claims. Thus we would add to the already overburdened condition of our dockets in all the courts, and thereby make the settlement of rights originating outside the state, under the laws of a different government, a charge upon our own people. If the facts showed that this was necessary in order to secure a justice, and the laws were such as we could properly enforce, this consideration would have but little weight; but we feel that it is entitled to be considered where the plaintiff chooses this jurisdiction as a matter of convenience, and not of necessity.

31 L. R. A.

We conclude that the district court and the court of civil appeals erred in not dismissing this case, under the proof made, for which error the judgments of both of said courts are reversed, and this cause is dismissed.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Edgar D. CASE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Ely T. SMITH.

(.....Mich.....)

1. A betrothed person has no right of action for the seduction or alienation of the affections of his affianced.
2. A note given in consideration of concealing from the maker's wife and from the public his criminal intimacy with another woman cannot be enforced.

(December 17, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Genesee County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Tinker & Frackelton for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Durand & Carton, with Mr. Ed. S. Lee, for defendant in error:

A betrothed person has no right of action for the seduction or the alienation of the affections of his affianced.

Cooley, Torts, p. 236.

The consideration of the note was wholly illegal and void and against public policy.

Cicotte v. Wayne County, 44 Mich. 173.

The absence of the words "for value received," from the note makes it incumbent on plaintiff to allege in his declaration what the consideration of it was, and while he might offer it and prove it in evidence under the common counts, if the signature was not denied, on oath, he would have to enter on proof of its consideration, too, before he could rest his case, as there is no admission of value in it.

Conrad Seipp Brew. Co. v. McKittrick, 86 Mich. 191.

A recovery in a court of justice for services in aid of prostitution is not permissible.

Williams v. Garde, 34 Mich. 83; Loomis v. Cline, 4 Barb. 453; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 368; Crisup v. Grosslight, 79 Mich. 380; Buck v. First Nat. Bank, 27 Mich. 294, 15 Am. Rep. 189; O'Hara v. Carpenter, 23 Mich. 410, 9 Am. Rep. 89; Meech v. Lee, 82 Mich. 274.

A promissory note given in consideration of the suppression of proceedings under a criminal complaint is void in the hands of the promisee, who was a party to the illegality, and he cannot enforce collection of it.

Snyder v. Willey, 33 Mich. 483; McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454; Morgan v. Hodges, 89 Mich. 404, 15 L. R. A. 438; Lyon v. Waldo, 36 Mich. 345.

McGrath, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Suit is brought upon a non-negotiable promissory note, which omitted the "for value

NOTE.—The above case is a novel one in respect to the rights of betrothed persons. As to the insurable interest in life of such persons, see note to Alexander v. Parker (Ill.) 19 L. R. A. 187.

31 L. R. A.

received" clause. Plaintiff declared on the common counts, and in four special counts set up, (1) that plaintiff had been for some time engaged to be married to a widow named D.; that November 10, 1892, he visited D., and found defendant concealed in the house; that defendant was at the house for the purpose of having carnal intercourse with said D., and in consequence plaintiff suffered great mental and physical anguish; (2) that prior to that time defendant had betrayed, seduced, and debauched said D., with full knowledge that she was the betrothed wife of plaintiff, to plaintiff's damage; (3) that defendant had also endeavored to alienate the affections of said D. from plaintiff; (4) that, after the discovery of defendant's intimacy with said D., defendant came to plaintiff, and requested plaintiff to keep the matter quiet, and agreed that if plaintiff would continue to keep company with said D., and would refrain from telling the people of that locality of the intimacy existing or that had existed between defendant and said D., viz., the seduction, debauching, and sexual intercourse aforesaid, defendant would recompense him well for the same; that, in consideration of plaintiff's agreeing so to do, defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff the note in question; that plaintiff did as he agreed, and publicly kept company with said D., and did refrain from informing the public of the intimacy that had existed between defendant and said D.; that said note was expressly given and accepted with the agreement that defendant was to pay the same in consideration of plaintiff's keeping company with said D., and refraining from expressing to said defendant's wife the criminal proceedings and action aforesaid; that plaintiff has performed the agreement on his part, but defendant has failed so to do. A bill of particulars was demanded, under the common counts, and furnished, which contained the following items: "For damages in alienating the affections of Mary B. Davidson from plaintiff, $5,000. For damages in seducing, debauching, and having carnal intercourse with Mary B. Davidson, the betrothed wife of plaintiff, $5,000. For failure of defendant to keep his agreement with plaintiff, and in failing to pay the note set forth in plaintiff's declaration, $5,000." The case comes here on appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to said declaration, and judgment accordingly.

A civil action for the alleged seduction of D. could only be brought by the woman herself, or by her father, guardian, or some relative. A betrothed person has no right of action for the seduction or the alienation of the affections of his affianced. Cooley, Torts, p. 236. In Swanson v. Griffin, 68 Miss. 319, cited by appellant, defendant had seduced plaintiff's infant unmarried daughter, and she had given birth to a child. In Brannum v. O'Connor, 77 Iowa, 632, also cited by appellant, plaintiff had married defendant's foster daughter, and afterwards learned that she was pregnant at the time of the marriage, by her foster father. Defendant agreed to continue to live with the woman and maintain the child. The court held that under the Code the pregnancy of the woman at the time of her marriage was a cause for divorce, and that plaintiff was under no obligation to live with the woman or maintain the child. In Loomis v. Cline, 4 Barb. 453, the maker of the note had assaulted plaintiff's daughter with intent to commit a rape. The court held that, from his paternal relation alone, plaintiff had no authority to commence an action for his daughter; that he could not release or compromise such claim, and so, if she had a right of action, it remained unaffected by that agreement; and that the note was without consideration; citing Fonda v. Van Horne, 15 Wend. 631, 30 Am. Dec. 77; Hunter v. Westbrook, 2 Car. & P. 578; Macpherson, Infants, 228 (352). Defendant was not liable to respond in damages to plaintiff by reason of the matters set forth in the first three special counts of the declaration, or the first two items of plaintiff's bill of particulars, and in the absence of such liability there was no consideration for the note.

As to the contract set up in the fourth count, plaintiff's agreement was in part to conceal from the public and from defendant's wife the fact that defendant had been guilty of a crime. It is well settled that any contract, the consideration of which is to conceal a crime or stifle a prosecution, is necessarily repugnant to public policy, and that a contract whose consideration is contrary to public policy is void. 2 Kent, Com. 866; 2 Starkie, Ev. 87; Roll v. Raguet, 4 Ohio, 400, 22 Am. Dec. 759; Clark v. Ricker, 14 N. H. 44; Treat v. Jones, 28 Conn. 334. It is equally true that if any part of an indivisible promise, or any part of an indivisible consideration for a promise, is illegal, the whole is void, and no action can be maintained thereon. Snyder v. Willey, 33 Mich. 483, and cases cited at page 494.

The judgment is affirmed.

Long, J., did not sit; the other Justices concurred.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Emily A. CORLISS et al.
v.

E. W. WALKER CO. et al.

(57 Fed. Rep. 434, and 64 Fed. Rep. 280.)

1. The publication of the life of an inventor, whether he is regarded as a public or private character, cannot be enjoined as an invasion of the right of privacy, since the freedom of the press is a constitutional right.

2. The jurisdiction of equity to grant injunctions is founded on rights of property, and does not extend to a matter affecting an exclusively personal right.

3. The use of plates made from a pic-

NOTE.—The law of privacy.

The right of personal privacy, or the right to be secure from public molestation, seems to be a right the possible existence of which has been only recently recognized. The right to privacy in respect to the use of real property is one which has long been recognized.

In Jones v. Tapling, 12 C. B. N. S. 864, the relative rights of adjoining proprietors to privacy, and to light and air are considered in connection with the question of the right to block up windows, which had been opened overlooking private grounds, and while the right to privacy is recognized, it is stated that the law does not protect such right as it does that of light and air.

So in condemnation proceedings the distinction of privacy forms a proper element of damages.

The loss of privacy is a proper element of damages to be awarded for the deterioration of land by the construction of a railroad. Duke Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Bd. of Works, L. R. 5 H. L. 418, 41 L. J. Exch. 137, 27 L. T. N. S. 1.

Loss of privacy of rooms in a dwelling house because of the construction of an elevated railroad near it is a proper element to be considered in estimating the damages which must be paid to the abutting property owner. Moore v. New York Elev. R. Co. 130 N. Y. 523, 14 L. R. A. 731.

There are several rights in which the right to privacy may be said to be somewhat involved, which have been cited as tending to establish a right to privacy pure and simple. But the right to privacy does not necessarily follow from the existence of either of them.

-31 L. R. A.

Thus, it has been said that an injunction may be granted against the exhibition of a picture which is a libel upon the complainant. DuBost v. Beresford, 2 Campb. 511.

But the right to protection against libel falls far short of establishing a right to be free from any public attention, whether flattering or otherwise.

So, Monson v. Tussauds [1894] 1 Q. B. 671, was a suit brought to enjoin the exhibition of a wax likeness of a person who had been tried and acquitted upon a charge of murder. In the opinion it is stated that it was agreed between the counsel on both sides that any right which the plaintiff had to complain of what defendants had done depended on principles underlying the law of libel, and it is not suggested that the exhibition could be interfered with on any other ground. The result was that it was held that enough had not been shown to warrant an injunction before a trial at law, and there is no discussion of the case in reference to the right to an injunction because of an invasion of the right of privacy.

Again, the right to prohibit the publication of letters is suggested as tending to establish a right to privacy. But the cases upon that question do not necessarily involve the right to privacy.

In Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 Macn. & G. 25, 18 L. J. Ch. 120, 13 Jur. 109, an application was made to enjoin the publishing of a list of etchings which had been made by plaintiff for his own amusement, and which had been kept private by him. Counsel for defendant stated that the case was not put on any principle of trust or contract but on property, and contended that it cannot be main-ture or photograph for insertion in a publication will be enjoined, where the pictures were obtained on conditions which have not been complied with, as the publication would be a violation of confidence, or breach of contract.

4. For a photographer to make additional copies from a negative of a picture from which a customer has procured a certain number of copies to be made is a breach of contract as well as a violation of confidence.
5. The picture or photograph of a public person, such as a great inventor, may lawfully be published in a newspaper, magazine, or book, if a copy can be obtained without breach of contract or violation of confidence.

(August 1, 1893.)

BILL in equity to restrain respondents from publishing a biography and a picture of George H. Corliss, deceased. Bill dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Henry Marsh, Jr., and James M. Ripley for complainants.

Messrs. M. L. Sanborn and Henry E. Fales for defendants.

Colt, Circuit Judge, delivered the following opinion:

This suit is brought by the widow and children of George H. Corliss to enjoin the tained that privacy constitutes property, or that the court will interfere to protect the owner in the enjoyment of it. The court held that both property and breach of trust were shown, and that the injunction must be granted, and further held that privacy being the right invaded, postponing the injunction would be equivalent to denying it altogether; and in the lower court, 2 De G. & S. 652, 13 Jur. 507, it was said that upon the principle of protecting property the common law in cases not aided or prejudiced by statute shelters the privacy and seclusion of thoughts and sentiments committed to writing and desired by the author to remain not generally known.

But in the other cases upon the question of restraining the publication of letters, the court has proceeded upon a theory of property right in the thought expressed rather than upon a right to have privacy secured.

In Pope v. Curl, 2 Atk. 342, an injunction against the publication of letters was granted, but it was placed upon the ground that letters had value, although they were on familiar subjects and could not be called a learned work.

The publication of letters will not be enjoined because it will be painful to the feelings of the writer. Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 402.

In Wetmore v. Scovell, 3 Edw. Ch. 515, the vice chancellor, without discussing the question of privacy, holds that the mere fact that it will be mortifying in the extreme to have private letters published gives a court of equity no jurisdiction to enjoin the publication.

The publication of letters is enjoined, not because of the injury which their publication would inflict upon the writer, but because of the property which he retains in them. Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer, 379.

There are, however, a few recent cases in which the right to privacy has been directly asserted by the parties and passed upon by the court.

In 4 Harv. L. Rev. 185, is cited the case of Manola v. Stevens as having been mentioned in the New York Times of June 15, 18, 21, 1890, in which an actress applied for an injunction restraining the using of a photograph which had been surreptitiously defendants from publishing and selling a biographical sketch of Mr. Corliss, and from printing and selling his picture in connection therewith. The bill does not allege that the publication contains anything scandalous, libelous, or false, or that it affects any right of property, but the relief prayed for is put upon the novel ground that such publication is an injury to the feelings of the plaintiffs, and against their express prohibition.

The counsel for plaintiffs, in argument, put the case upon the ground that Mr. Corliss was a private character, and that the publication of his life is an invasion of the right of privacy, which a court of equity should protect. In the first place, I cannot assent to the proposition that Mr. Corliss was a private character. He held himself out to the public as an inventor, and his reputation became world-wide. He was a public man, in the same sense as authors or artists are public men. It would be a remarkable exception to the liberty of the press if the lives of great inventors could not be given to the public without their own consent while living, or the approval of their family when dead. But whether Mr. Corliss is to be regarded as a private or public character (a distinction often difficult to define) is not important in this case. Freedom of speech taken of her while she was playing a role upon the stage. And it is stated that a preliminary injunction was issued and a time was set for argument of a motion that it should be made permanent, but that at that time no one appeared in opposition to the motion.

So, a private individual is entitled to an injunction against the publication of his portrait for the purpose of inviting votes to test popularity in comparison with another person. Marks v. Jaffa, 6 Misc. 290. In that case the court says that courts will secure to the individual what has been aptly termed the right "to be let alone."

But a father has no right to an injunction to restrain the publication of a photograph of his infant daughter, even assuming that the unauthorized publication of the portrait is an unlawful invasion of the latter's right to the enjoyment of personal privacy. The court says that the law does not take cognizance of and will not afford compensation for sentimental injury, independent of redress for a wrong involving physical injury to person or property. Murray v. Gast Lithographic & E. Co., 49 Alb. L. J. 288, 8 Misc. 36, 31 Abb. N. C. 286.

The most important case beside CORLISS v. E. W. WALKER CO. is that of SCHUYLER v. CURTIS, post, 286. While the right in the latter case was not upheld by the court of appeals to the full extent to which it was claimed, the judges of the lower courts were inclined to recognize and uphold it.

In Schuyler v. Curtis, 64 Hun, 594, it is said that if a living person would be remediless and powerless to protect himself against the making and exhibiting of a bust of himself, "it would certainly be a blot upon our boasted system of jurisprudence that the courts were powerless to prevent the unwarranted doing of things by persons who are mere volunteers, which would wound in the most cruel manner the feelings of many a sensitive nature."

In Schuyler v. Curtis, 30 Abb. N. C. 373, the court did not place its ruling upon any ancient branch of the law, but simply stated that the act to be enjoined is an unauthorized act which has caused and will in the future cause, damage. H. P. F.

and of the press is secured by the Constitution of the United States and the Constitutions of most of the states. This constitutional privilege implies a right to freely utter and publish whatever the citizen may please, and to be protected from any responsibility for so doing, except so far as such publication, by reason of its blasphemy, obscenity, or scandalous character, may be a public offense, or, by its falsehood and malice, may injuriously affect the standing, reputation, or pecuniary interests of individuals. Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 518. In other words, under our laws, one can speak and publish what he desires, provided he commits no offense against public morals or private reputation. Schuyler v. Curtis, 40 N. Y. S. R. 289, recently decided by the New York supreme court, and upon which the plaintiffs rely, is not in point. In that case the court enjoined the defendants from erecting a statue of Mrs. Schuyler. The right of publication was not in issue in that case.

There is another objection which meets us at the threshold of this case. The subject-matter of the jurisdiction of a court of equity is civil property, and injury to property, whether actual or prospective, is the foundation on which its jurisdiction rests. Re Sneyer, 124 U. S. 200, 210, 31 L. ed. 402, 405; Kerr, Inj. 2d ed. § 1. It follows from this principle that a court of equity has no power to restrain a libelous publication. Boston Diatite Co. v. Florence Mfg. Co. 114 Mass. 69, 19 Am. Rep. 310; Brandreth v. Lance, 8 Paige, 24, 34 Am. Dec. 368. The opinion of Vice Chancellor Malins in Dixon v. Holden, L. R. 7 Eq. 488, to the contrary, is disapproved by Lord Chancellor Cairns in Prudential Assur. Co. v. Knott, L. R. 10 Ch. 142. In Kidd v. Horry, 28 Fed. Rep. 773, Mr. Justice Bradley, in speaking of Dixon v. Holden, and several recent English cases, declares that they depend on certain acts of parliament, and not on the general principle of equity jurisprudence. But in the present bill it is not pretended that the publication is libelous, and therefore there can be no question as to the want of jurisdiction in this case.

As to the picture which accompanies the published sketch, the case stands on a different footing. The defendants obtained from the plaintiffs a copy of a portrait and a photograph of Mr. Corliss, from which they have made two plates, one of which they propose to insert in the publication. But it appears from the evidence that these pictures were obtained on certain conditions, which the defendants have not complied with. This matter directly concerns the exclusive right of property which the plaintiffs have in the painting and photograph, and it would be a violation of confidence, or a breach of contract between the parties, to permit the defendants, under these circumstances, to use either of the plates. Pollard v. Photographic Co. L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 345; Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 Macn. & G. 25.

The injunction is denied as to the publication, and granted as to the use of the plates.

dissolution of the injunction granted, in response to which Colt, Circuit Judge, on November 19, 1894, delivered the following opinion:

The defendants move to dissolve the injunction heretofore granted in this case. As the case was first presented, it appeared that the print of George H. Corliss to be inserted in a biographical sketch about to be published by the defendants was taken from a photograph obtained from Mrs. Corliss by the defendants upon certain conditions, which they had failed to comply with, and the court granted an injunction upon the ground that the proposed use by the defendants would be a breach of contract and a violation of confidence. 57 Fed. Rep. 434. Upon a full presentation of the facts at the present hearing, it now appears that the defendants obtained two photographs of Mr. Corliss, and that the one received from Mrs. Corliss was returned to her, while the other, from which the print was actually taken, was purchased for the defendants at a store in Providence several months before any contract was entered into between the parties, or any correspondence had in relation to the subject. It must be confessed that the case now assumes a different aspect. If we eliminate the element of contract or trust, the question resolves itself into the broad proposition of how far an individual, in his lifetime, or his heirs at law after his death, have the right to control the reproduction of his picture or photograph. The photograph obtained by the defendants was a copy of an original taken by Mr. Heald, of Providence, for Mr. Corliss, in September, 1885. Mr. Corliss engaged Mr. Heald, in the ordinary way, to take his photograph, and paid for the pictures which he ordered. The contention of the plaintiffs is that Mr. Heald had no right to make prints from the original negative, other than those which Mr. Corliss ordered, and that neither Mr. Heald nor any one else had the right to reproduce copies from any of the photographs ordered by Mr. Corliss, and that to do so would be a breach of contract or a violation of confidence, for which relief can be had in a court of equity. In support of this position, the plaintiffs say that Mr. Corliss never authorized Mr. Heald to make any prints from the negative, except those he ordered, and that after his death, in February, 1888, Mrs. Corliss obtained the original negative, and forbade Mr. Heald from exhibiting in his studio any pictures of Mr. Corliss.

When a person engages a photographer to take his picture, agreeing to pay so much for the copies which he desires, the transaction assumes the form of a contract; and it is a breach of contract, as well as a violation of confidence, for the photographer to make additional copies from the negative. The negative may belong to the photographer, but the right to print additional copies is the right of the customer. Pollard v. Photographic Co. L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 345; Tuck v. Priestler, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 629. Independently of the question of contract, I believe the law to be that a private individual has a right to be protected in the representation of his portrait in any form; that this is a property as well as a personal right; and that it belongs to the same class of rights which forbids the reproduction of a private manuscript or painting, or the publication of private letters, or of oral lectures delivered by a teacher to his class, or the revelation of the contents of a merchant's books by a clerk. Duke Queensberry v. Shebbeare, 2 Eden, 329; Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 402; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, C. C. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; Abernethy v. Hutchinson, 3 L. J. Ch. 209; Caird v. Sims, 12 App. Cas. 326; Tipping v. Clarke, 2 Hare, 383, 393; Williams v. Prince of Wales Life etc. Assur. Co. 28 Beav. 338. In case of Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 Macn. & G. 25, 2 De G. & S. 652, this doctrine was extended so far as to prohibit the publication of a catalogue of private etchings. But, while the right of a private individual to prohibit the reproduction of his picture or photograph should be recognized and enforced, this right may be surrendered or dedicated to the public by the act of the individual, just the same as a private manuscript, book, or painting becomes (when not protected by copyright) public property by the act of publication. The distinction in the case of a picture or photograph lies, it seems to me, between public and private characters. A private individual should be protected against the publication of any portraiture of himself, but where an individual becomes a public character the case is different. A statesman, author, artist, or inventor, who asks for and desires public recognition, may be said to have surrendered this right to the public. When any one obtains a picture or photograph of such a person, and there is no breach of contract or violation of confidence in the method by which it was obtained, he has the right to reproduce it, whether in a newspaper, magazine, or book. It would be extending this right of protection too far to say that the general public can be prohibited from knowing the personal appearance of great public characters. Such characters may be said, of their own volition, to have dedicated to the public the right of any fair portraiture of themselves. In this sense, I cannot but regard Mr. Corliss as a public man. He was among the first of American inventors, and he sought public recognition as such.

The defendants, in the present instance, obtained a photograph of Mr. Corliss at a public shop in Providence. Whatever contract may have existed between the photographer and Mr. Corliss, they were not a party to it, and they had the same right to reprint copies from this photograph that they would have had from that of any other public man. Further, it does not seem that Mr. Corliss, personally, ever objected to the reproduction of his picture, but, on the contrary, that he permitted thousands of his pictures to be circulated. Ten thousand pictures of Mr. Corliss were sold or given away, without objection on his part, at the time of the Centennial Exhibition, in 1876. In 1886 there was published in Providence, by J. A. & R. A. Reid, about 10,000 copies of a book called "Providence Plantations," in which a picture of Mr. Corliss appears, which is a reprint from the Herald photograph, now in controversy. His picture also was printed in Harper's Weekly of March 3, 1888, and in the Scientific American of June 2, 1888. I am aware that Mrs. Corliss says that she wrote a letter, at the request of her husband, to the Messrs. Reid, forbidding the insertion of the picture in the "Providence Plantations," and that she also declares that the publication in the Harper's Weekly and Scientific American were authorized by the family; but, whatever may be the position now taken by the plaintiffs, there is no substantial evidence that Mr. Corliss, in his lifetime, ever prohibited the production and circulation of his picture. Upon the facts as now presented, and for the reasons given, I am of opinion that the defendants have a right to insert in the biographical sketch of Mr. Corliss published by them a print of his photograph, and the motion to dissolve the injunction is granted.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Philip SCHUYLER, Respt.,

v.

Ernest CURTIS et al., Appts.

(147 N. Y. 434.)

1. There is no such real mental distress or injury as will justify equity in enjoining a violation of the right of privacy by making a statue of one of plaintiff's relatives, if the facts fail to furnish any clear or sure foundation for a reasonable man to claim that any injury to his feelings has been or would be caused by the action taken or to be taken by defendant.

NOTE.—As to the law of privacy, see note to case immediately preceding this one.

31 L. R. A.

2. A woman's right of privacy, in so far as it includes the right to prevent the public from making pictures, busts, or statues of her to commemorate her worth or services, does not survive her so that it can be enforced by her relatives.

3. That the erection of a statue in his honor would have been disagreeable to a person's ancestor in his lifetime is not a sufficient cause for real mental injury or distress to such person because of the erection of such statue after such ancestor's death, to entitle such person to enjoin such erection.

4. Relatives of a deceased person cannot enjoin the erection of a memorial to her because the work is undertaken without their consent by strangers, if there is an honest purpose to do honor to her, which is carried out in an appropriate and orderly manner by reputable individuals.

5. Erroneous claims respecting the services of a deceased person in whose honor persons are seeking to erect a memorial, which cause adverse newspaper comment, furnish no ground for injunction against the memorial in favor of her relatives, who have made no attempt to rectify the error.

6. No ground for enjoining the making by a woman's society of a bust of a deceased woman, in favor of her descendants, is shown by the fact that the same society contemplates the exhibition of the bust in the same room of a public fair building in which they are to exhibit one of another woman with whose objects and work the ancestor had no sympathy, if the two busts are designed to represent totally distinct classes of persons.

7. The making of a bust of a deceased person will not be enjoined on the ground of fraud upon the public because no likeness of her is accessible for a model, if the idea of actual likeness has been abandoned and the bust is to be made an ideal one, at least where no fraudulent intent is shown.

8. Reversal of an erroneous injunction decree against making a bust of a deceased person for exhibition at a public fair will not be refused because the fair has closed, if there is also the purpose of placing the bust permanently in a proper place as a memorial to decedent.

(November 26, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of the Special Term for New York County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enjoin defendants from making and exhibiting a statue of plaintiff's aunt. Reversed.

Statement by Peckham, J. :

The plaintiff brought this action against the defendants to restrain them from making a statue or bust of the late Mrs. Mary M. Hamilton Schuyler, in any form, and from causing the same to be made or exhibited; also from receiving or soliciting subscriptions for the purpose of defraying the cost and expenses of making such bust, or procuring it to be made, and also to restrain them from making use of the name of Mrs. Mary M. Hamilton Schuyler, or circulating any description of her, in any way, in connection with the "Woman's Memorial Fund Association" mentioned in the record. The findings of the court upon the trial of the action state what is material as to the facts upon which the action is based, while the conclusions of law show the theory upon which relief has been granted. The court has found, among other facts, the following: The plaintiff is the only son of George L. Schuyler, late of the city of New York, and of Eliza Hamilton Schuyler, his wife, who was a daughter of the late James A. Hamilton and granddaughter of Maj. Gen. Alexander Hamilton. Mrs. Schuyler died in the year 1863, and plaintiff's father, for his second wife, married Mary Morris Hamilton, a younger sister of his first wife. The second Mrs. Schuyler died in May, 1877, leaving no children.

31 L. R. A.

Her husband died in July, 1890, and her only brother died in December, 1889. The only immediate relatives, now living, of the second Mrs. Schuyler, are certain nephews and nieces, an uncle and an aunt, all of whom approve of the commencement and maintenance of this action. The defendants other than Hartley are members of a voluntary and unincorporated association in New York City named "The Woman's Memorial Fund," and its avowed object was the completion of two sculptures to honor "woman as the philanthropist" and "woman as the reformer," to be placed on exhibition at the Columbian Exposition of 1893. This association in May, 1891, publicly announced that, "as the typical philanthropist, Mary M. Hamilton, who died Mrs. G. L. Schuyler, has been chosen as the subject of the statue;" and about that time the association began to send printed circulars to that effect, and to solicit subscriptions for the purpose of carrying out this project, and public announcement was made that a contract had been entered into with the defendant Hartley, a professional sculptor, for the execution of a statue of Mrs. Schuyler, to be placed on exhibition as stated. It was also announced that the association intended to place the statue on exhibition at the same time and place as a statue of Miss Susan B. Anthony, whom the association had chosen as the subject of the statue to be designated the "Representative Reformer." George L. Schuyler, the husband, and Alexander Hamilton, the brother, of the deceased Mrs. Schuyler, were, at the time when the association claims to have originated the plan for making the statue, living in New York; but no application was made to either for his consent to the making of the statue, and neither of them ever authorized any one to make it. Subsequent to the deaths of the husband and brother of Mrs. Schuyler, and in May, 1891, the plaintiff first heard of the contemplated action of the defendants, and he, in behalf of himself and also of the other relatives of Mrs. Schuyler, requested the defendants to abandon the making of such statue and the circulation of subscription papers for the purpose of collecting money towards defraying the cost and expenses of procuring the statue. The defendants denied the right of the plaintiff to prevent the making of the statue, or to prevent their soliciting subscriptions throughout the country for that purpose and they continued to circulate such subscription papers widely throughout the United States, and they were printed in some of the New York City newspapers at the instance of the defendants. These acts, the court finds, have exposed the name and the memory of Mrs. Mary M. Hamilton Schuyler to adverse comment and criticism of a nature peculiarly disagreeable to her relatives, and have caused disagreeable notoriety, for which they are in no way responsible; that such comment has been made in the public prints and elsewhere; that annoyance and pain have been caused thereby to the plaintiff and to the immediate relatives of Mrs. Schuyler; that he and they have been greatly distressed and injured thereby, and by the notoriety incident thereto; and that.

such notoriety and adverse comment and criticism are wholly due to the unauthorized acts of the defendants. As conclusions of law, it was found that the acts of defendants constituted an unlawful interference with the right of privacy, and that the surviving relatives of the deceased, Mary Schuyler, were specially injured by the acts. It was therefore adjudged that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment perpetually enjoining the defendants from making or causing to be made a statue of Mrs. Schuyler, in any form, and from exhibiting any statue of her, and from receiving subscriptions for the purposes stated. Upon the trial evidence was given upon the part of the defendants which showed that Mrs. Schuyler, in her lifetime, was a very charitable woman; was a member of many private charitable associations; that in 1852 she was one of the founders of the School of Design for Women in the city of New York, and one of its managers until it was adopted by the Cooper Institute; that some of the female defendants were members of the School of Design for Women, and had frequently met Mrs. Schuyler at its meetings, and were on terms of some intimacy with her, so far, at least, as her interest in and her attendance at the meetings of the above association called for; that the Ladies' Art Association was founded about 1867, partly at the suggestion of Mrs. Schuyler, made to some of the defendants, who were members of the School of Design for Women, the object of the association being to help ladies support themselves, and to give them adequate education in art and design, and the association is a reputable and well-known organization in New York City, and Mrs. Schuyler evinced considerable interest in it during her life; that the Woman's Memorial Fund Association was composed largely of members of the Ladies' Art Association, and it was publicly announced that the statue in question was to be placed, after the exposition, in the rooms or studio of the association, there to remain permanently; that Mrs. Schuyler was prominently identified with the United States sanitary commission during the late war; and also that she was one of the vice regents for the state of New York of the Mt. Vernon Association, which was organized for the purpose of securing the preservation of the home of Washington. These several facts were proved and were uncontradicted, and the defendants requested the court to find them, which request was refused on the ground that they were immaterial.

Messrs. Walter S. Logan and Charles M. Demond, for appellants:

A defamatory picture or statue of a person, whether he be living or dead, is a libel.

Townshend, Slander & Libel, pp. 2, 3, 118; Holt, Libel, p. 244; 1 Wood, Inst. 445; Reg. v. Labouchere, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 320; Com. v. Batchelder, Thacher, Crim. Cas. 191; State v. Farley, 4 McCord, L. 317; 1 Hilliard, Torts, chap. 7, § 13; Com. v. Clap, 4 Mass. 163, 3 Am. Dec. 212; State v. Jeandell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 475; White v. Nicholls, 44 U. S. 8 How. 266, 11 L. ed. 591; Root v. King, 7 Cow. 613; People v. Crosswell, 3 Johns. Cas. 354; Steele v. 81 L. R. A.

Southwick, 9 Johns. 214; Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio, 847.

The remedy of persons aggrieved by a libel is a suit at law for damages or a criminal prosecution.

New York Juvenile Guardian Soc. v. Roosevelt, 7 Daly, 188; Francis v. Flinn, 118 U. S. 885, 30 L. ed. 165; Brandreth v. Lance, 8 Paige, 24, 34 Am. Dec. 368.

No suit can be maintained in any court of the state of New York to enjoin the publication of a libel.

Brandreth v. Lance, supra; Wetmore v. Scocell, 3 Edw. Ch. 515; Hoyt v. Mackenzie, 3 Barb. Ch. 320, 49 Am. Dec. 178; Mauger v. Dick, 55 How. Pr. 132; Boston Diatitle Co. v. Florence Mfg. Co. 114 Mass. 69, 19 Am. Rep. 310; Francis v. Flinn, supra; Life Assn. of America v. Boogher, 3 Mo. App. 178; Clark v. Freeman, 11 Beav. 112; Liverpool Household Stores Assn. v. Smith, L. R. 37 Ch. Div. 170; Mulkern v. Ward, L. R. 18 Eq. 619; Prudential Assur. Co. v. Knott, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 142; Raymond v. Russell, 143 Mass. 295, 58 Am. Rep. 137; Kidd v. Horry, 28 Fed. Rep. 778; Whitehead v. Kitson, 119 Mass. 484; Consumers Gas Co. v. Kansas City Gaslight & C. Co. 100 Mo. 501; Halbey v. Brotherhood, L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 386; Hammersmith Skating Rink Co. v. Dublin Skating Rink Co. 10 Ir. Eq. Rep. 235; Chase v. Tuttle, 27 Fed. Rep. 110; Quartz Hill Consol. Gold Min. Co. v. Beall, L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 501.

An injunction to restrain a libel is unconstitutional.

New York Juvenile Guardian Soc. v. Roosevelt, 7 Daly, 188; People v. Crosswell, 3 Johns. Cas. 337.

If the publication of a statue plainly libelous cannot be enjoined, all the more is an injunction improper if the statue be not libelous.

Cortis v. E. W. Walker Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 434; Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 31 L. ed. 402; Kerr, 124 U. S. 200, 31 L. ed. 402; Boston Diatitle Co. v. Florence Mfg. Co., and Brandreth v. Lance, supra.

Neither on the ground of the right of privacy, nor on the ground of pain and suffering, nor on the ground of a continuing trespass, can the judgment be sustained.

Murray v. Gast Lithographic & E. Co. 49 Alb. L. J. 288, 8 Misc. 36, 31 Abb. N. C. 266; Re Sawyer, supra.

Messrs. Augustus Noble Hand, George W. Wickersham, and James Bettner Ludlow, for respondent:

The acts of the defendant in seeking to make and exhibit a statue of Mrs. Schuyler, and in soliciting subscriptions therefor, constitute an unwarrantable invasion of the right of privacy, for which no adequate remedy exists at common law, and which therefore falls within the jurisdiction of a court of equity to redress.

Cooley, Torts, p. 19.

In the English law, the earliest development in the recognition of rights to privacy is to be found in the decisions holding that the writer of a private letter has a right to restrain the receiver from publishing it.

Pope v. Curl, 2 Atk. 342 (1741); Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 402 (1813); Lord and Lady Perceval v. Phipps, 2 Ves. & B. 19; Prince Albert v. Strange, 3 De G. & S. 652, on appeal 1 Macn. & G. 25 (1849); Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer, 379

(1855); The Right to Privacy, 4 Harvard L. Rev. 201.

The legal right of the sender of a letter is not really one of property.

• Payne v. People, 6 Johns. 108; Eyre v. Higbee, 35 Barb. 502; Oliver v. Oliver, 11 C. B. N. S. 139; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush, 480, 92 Am. Dec. 509.

Along the same line of development that is exhibited in the history of the Roman law, we next find the English court of chancery extending its protection to the authorized use, and enjoining the unauthorized use, of a name.

Routh v. Webster, 10 Beav. 561; Dizon v. Holden, L. R. 7 Eq. 488; Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley, L. R. 6 Eq. 551; Marxwell v. Hogg, L. R. 2 Ch. 307; Mackenzie v. Soden Mineral Springs Co. 27 Abb. N. C. 402; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 21 Abb. N. C. 104.

Then, as a later development, there is the class of cases where the protection has been sought from a new invasion of privacy, a wrong to one's personality.

Pollard v. Photographic Co. L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 345; Tuck v. Priester, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 629; Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 434, 64 Fed. Rep. 280, ante, 283; Manola v. Steens, N. Y. Times, June 15, 1890; Marks v. Jaffa, 6 Misc. 290.

Injunctions have been granted to surviving relatives to protect the dead body of a deceased relative from injury, or to secure the proper disposal of the remains; or to protect grave-stones or monuments from desecration.

Co. Litt. fol. 186; Institutes, Lib. 1, cap. 1, § 13; p. 182, 12 fol. ed. 1788, p. 238, vol. 3, Thomas' Am. ed. (Phila. 1836); Law of Burial, 4 Bradf. 503-532; Mitchell v. Thorne, 134 N. Y. 536; Snyder v. Snyder, 60 How. Pr. 368; Thompson v. Hickey, 8 Abb. N. C. 159; Secord v. Secor, 13 Abb. N. C. 80, note; Weld v. Walker, 130 Mass. 422, 39 Am. Rep. 465; Pierce v. Swan Point Cemetery Proprs. 10 R. I. 227, 14 Am. Rep. 667; Re Girard's Remains, 5 Pa. L. J. 68, cited in 12 Moak. Eng. Rep. 664; First Presby. Church v. Second Presby. Church, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 372; Wynkoop v. Wynkoop, 42 Pa. 293, 82 Am. Dec. 506; 6 Am. L. Rev. 182; First Evangelical Church v. Walsh, 57 Ill. 363; State v. McClure, 4 Blackf. 329; Bogert v. Indianapolis, 13 Ind. 184; Renihan v. Wright, 125 Ind. 536, 9 L. R. A. 514; Guthrie v. Weaver, 1 Mo. App. 186.

The argument that the present case is analogous to a case of libel, and that because it has been held that a libel cannot be enjoined it follows that there can be no injunction in this case, is specious but entirely unsound.

The right exists to prevent a libel upon the dead.

12 Week. L. Bull. (Ohio, 1884); 59 L. T. 257; 12 Alb. L. J. 173.

An injunction will be granted, in a clear case, to restrain libel.

Bonnard v. Perryman [1891] 2 Ch. 269; Coltard v. Marshall [1892] 1 Ch. 571; Monson v. Tussauds [1894] 1 Q. B. 671.

The theory that an injunction can only be granted in a case where there is injury to property for which damages could be recovered in an action at law has long since been exploded.

Pollard v. Photographic Co. L. R. 40 Ch. Div.

31 L. R. A.

345; Pierce v. Swan Point Cemetery Proprs. supra; Snyder v. Snyder, 60 How. Pr. 368 (1880); Mitchell v. Thorne, 134 N. Y. 536 (1892).

The defendants were properly enjoined from carrying out their project of making and exhibiting a statue of Mrs. Schuyler, on the ground that it necessarily involved both a breach of confidence and a fraud on the public. The acts of the defendants in this respect amount to a gross fraud on the public, entirely analogous to the fraud in the imitation of trademarks, etc.

Devlin v. Devlin, 69 N. Y. 212, 25 Am. Rep. 178; Caswell v. Hazard, 121 N. Y. 484.

Peckham, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is of a nature somewhat unusual, and depends for its support upon an application of certain principles, which are themselves not very clearly defined, or their boundaries very well recognized or plainly laid down. Briefly described, the action is founded upon an alleged violation of what is termed the "right of privacy." The alleged violation of this right, so far as regards the plaintiff, consists of an attempt on the part of certain reputable women,—among them the female defendants herein,—without the sanction of the plaintiff or other immediate members of the family, to do honor to the memory of a woman who was the aunt of the plaintiff, and who, at the time of the commencement of this action, had been dead for fourteen years. A statue of a most costly and meritorious kind, to be made out of appropriate material and by an artist of the first rank, was contemplated as the means of doing this honor to the memory of the deceased relative of the plaintiff. It may, perhaps, be somewhat difficult for the ordinary mind to perceive any reason for the plaintiff's distress arising out of this contemplated action by women of respectability, who are desirous of honoring the memory of a woman whom they regarded in life as a friend and benefactor of their sex. Objection has, however, been made to the carrying out of this project, and we must examine this record in order to see whether there is any evidence of a violation of this alleged right of privacy belonging to the plaintiff. In order to determine whether there has been a violation of the right, it is necessary to know something about the right itself and its proper limitations. It is not necessary, however, in the view which we take of this case, to attempt to lay down precise and accurate rules, which shall apply to all cases touching upon this alleged right. If the facts in any case fail to furnish any clear or sure foundation for a reasonable man to claim that any injury to his feelings has been or would be caused by the action taken or to be taken by a defendant, then we can at least say, in such a case, that there has not been and cannot be any such real mental distress or injury as a court of equity ought to recognize as within judicial relief. For the purpose we have in view, it is unnecessary to wholly deny the existence of the right of privacy to which the plaintiff appeals as the foundation of his cause of action. It may be admitted that courts have power in some cases to enjoin the doing of an act where the nature or character of the act itself is well calculated to wound the sensibilities of an individual, and where the doing of the act is wholly unjustifiable, and is, in legal contemplation, a wrong, even though the existence of no "property," as that term is usually used, is involved in the subject.

The question in this case is whether there has been proved such a violation of the rights of the plaintiff, even under a most liberal construction as to the extent of those rights, which a court of equity ought to take cognizance of. We enter upon this examination with an admission, for the purposes of this case, that the plaintiff occupies such a relationship to the deceased that he might maintain an action to enjoin the painting of a picture or the making of a statue of the deceased which would be regarded as inappropriate by reasonable people because the use for which it was destined, or the place where it was to be kept, was obviously improper, or because the thing itself—portrait or bust or statue—was not of that degree of merit, all the circumstances considered, which might reasonably and properly be insisted upon by those to whom the life and memory of the deceased were most dear. Many other cases can be imagined where the ulterior purpose of the individuals engaged in the matter would be so manifestly improper, if not illegal, that no statue or picture of a reputable individual, alive or dead, ought to be permitted to be made for such purpose. These are merely imaginary cases, alluded to only for the purpose of accentuating our ideas as to some of the circumstances in which courts might be called upon to act on the part of a living relative of one who was long since dead. In the present case the grounds of the plaintiff's objection are not very many, and have been stated in the complaint, and by the plaintiff on the witness stand. They are these: (1) The persons concerned in getting up the proposed statue were not the friends of the plaintiff's deceased aunt, and, as plaintiff alleged, did not know her. (2) They were proceeding with their plan without consulting with the plaintiff or other immediate members of the Schuyler-Hamilton family, and without their consent to the making of any statue. (3) The circulars issued by or in behalf of the defendants contained a statement that Mrs. Schuyler was the founder of, or the first woman in, the enterprise for securing the home of Washington, and that this statement was inaccurate, because a prominent woman in South Carolina was in fact such founder, and justly entitled to the honor arising therefrom. This mistake, it was asserted, had caused adverse comment in the newspapers as to the attitude of the family of plaintiff in permitting such a claim to be made when they must have known it was without foundation. (4) It was disagreeable to the plaintiff because the making of such a statue would have been disagreeable and obnoxious to his aunt, were she living. She had, as plaintiff said, a great dislike to have her name brought into public notoriety of any kind, as she was a singularly sensitive woman and of a very retiring nature, anxious to keep her name from the public prints or newspapers. (5) That plaintiff's aunt had not been personally acquainted with Susan B. Anthony, and he was quite sure she had not sympathized with or approved the position taken by Miss Anthony upon the question of the proper sphere of woman and her treatment by the law, and it was disagreeable and annoying to have the memory of Mrs. Schuyler joined with principles of which she did not approve. These are substantially all the objections taken by plaintiff regarding the proposed action of the defendants. The plaintiff, in his evidence, said he did not claim that the defendants, in any of their actions or in any of their published notices threw any discredit, disgrace, or ridicule upon Mrs. Schuyler's memory, and he did not think they wished to do so in any way. The chief reason for bringing this action, the plaintiff avowed, was to establish a principle, that the right of privacy should be respected, and he was willing to bring such an action for the purpose of maintaining that principle.

31 L. R. A.

After taking all these objections into careful consideration, we cannot say that we are in the least degree impressed with their force. The first ground of objection, even if well founded in fact, is not of the slightest importance. Whether the defendants were friends or not of Mrs. Schuyler, in her lifetime, does not seem to us to have any legitimate effect upon the question. If the motive were to do honor to a good woman, and if the work were to be done in an appropriate way, the relations towards the deceased of those who proposed to render this mark of honor to her memory, as one of the benefactors of her sex, would be a matter of very small moment,—entitled to no consideration whatever. No surviving relative, male or female, would have, in our judgment, the least ground of complaint that an action confessedly meant to do honor to the memory of a noble woman was proposed by those who in her lifetime had not the honor of her personal acquaintance or friendship, but whose proposed action was nevertheless the outgrowth of admiration of her character as a friend and benefactor of the sex of which she was herself so great an ornament. It appears, however, that in truth some of the defendants were known to Mrs. Schuyler personally, as members of the same association and interested in the same objects; and, although Mrs. Schuyler was undoubtedly more socially prominent than any of the defendants claim to be, yet there was enough personal intercourse between her and some of the defendants to account for the affection in which her memory is held, and for their desire to give some practical evidence of their feelings.

The second ground of objection, we think, is equally untenable. The fourth ground may properly be considered as a part of it. It is true that these defendants have assumed to take the preliminary steps leading to the making of the proposed statue without having consulted with or obtained the consent of the plaintiff, or the other immediate relatives of the deceased. This may be regarded as the main objection, the others being but grounds for the refusal of any consent by plaintiff and his relatives, if such consent had been asked. The whole of the plaintiff's claim of the right of privacy in this case rests upon the lack of this consent. It is stated that Mrs. Schuyler was not in any sense a public character during her life, and consequently had not surrendered, to any extent whatever, her own right of privacy. This right, it is claimed, not having been surrendered by any act of the deceased in her lifetime, descends unimpaired to her immediate relatives, as the proper representatives of her feelings and her rights. Whatever the rights of a relative may be, they are not, in such a case as this, rights which once belonged to the deceased, and which a relative can enforce in her behalf and in a mere representative capacity; as, for instance, an executor or administrator, in regard to the assets of a deceased. It is not a question of what right of privacy Mrs. Schuyler had in her lifetime. The plaintiff does not represent that right. Whatever right of privacy Mrs. Schuyler had died with her. Death deprives us all of rights, in the legal sense of that term; and, when Mrs. Schuyler died, her own individual right of privacy, whatever it may have been, expired at the same time. The right which survived (however extensive or limited) was a right pertaining to the living only. It is the right of privacy of the living which it is sought to enforce here. That right may in some cases be itself violated by improperly interfering with the character or memory of a deceased relative, but it is the right of the living, and not that of the dead, which is recognized. A privilege may be given the surviving relatives of a deceased person to protect his memory, but the privilege exists for the benefit of the living, to protect their feelings, and to prevent a violation of their own rights in the character and memory of the deceased. A woman like Mrs. Schuyler may very well, in her lifetime, have been most strongly averse to any public notice, even if it were of a most flattering nature, regarding her own works or position. She may have been (and the evidence tends most strongly to show that she was) of so modest and retiring a nature that any publicity, during her life, would have been to her most extremely disagreeable and obnoxious. All these feelings died with her. It is wholly incredible that any individual could dwell with feelings of distress or anguish upon the thought that, after his death, those whose welfare he had toiled for in life would inaugurate a project to erect a statue in token of their appreciation of his efforts, and in honor of his memory. This applies as well to the most refined and retiring woman as to a public man. It is therefore impossible to credit the existence of any real mental injury or distress to a surviving relative, grounded upon the idea that the action proposed in honor of his ancestor would have been disagreeable to that ancestor during his life. We cannot assent to the proposition that one situated as the plaintiff in this case can properly enjoin such action as the defendants propose on the ground that, as mere matter of fact, his feelings would be thereby injured. We hold that in this class of cases there must, in addition, be some reasonable and plausible ground for the existence of this mental distress and injury. It must not be the creation of mere caprice nor of pure fancy, nor the result of a supersensitive and morbid mental organization, dwelling with undue emphasis upon the exclusive and sacred character of this right of privacy. Such a class of mind might regard the right as interfered with and violated by the least reference, even of a complimentary nature, to some illustrious ancestor, without first seeking for and obtaining the consent of his descendants. Feelings that are thus easily and unnaturally injured and distressed under such circumstances are much too sensitive to be recognized by any purely earthly tribunal. A proposed act, which a court will enjoin because it would be a violation of a legal right, must, among other conditions, be of such a nature as a reasonable man can see might and probably would cause mental distress and injury to any one possessed of ordinary feeling and intelligence, situated in like circumstances as the complainant; and this question must always, to some extent, be one of law. If the circumstances be such that it is to a court inconceivable that the feelings of any sane and reasonable person could be injured by the proposed act, then it is the duty of the court to say so, and to refuse an injunction which would prevent its performance. If the defendants had projected such a work in the lifetime of Mrs. Schuyler, it would perhaps have been a violation of her individual right of privacy, because it might be contended that she had never occupied such a position towards the public as would have authorized such action by any one so long as it was in opposition to her wishes. The fact that Mrs. Schuyler is dead alters the case, and the plaintiff and other relatives must show some right of their own violated, and that proof is not made by evidence that the proposed action of the defendants would have caused Mrs. Schuyler pain if she were living. A shy, sensitive, retiring woman might naturally be extremely reluctant to have her praises sounded, or even appropriate honors accorded her, while living; and the same woman might, upon good grounds, believe, with entire complacency and satisfaction, that after her death a proposition would be made and carried out by her admirers to do honor to her memory by the erection of a statue or some other memorial. For these reasons we are of the opinion that, regarding the facts thus far discussed, it was not necessary for the defendants to procure the consent of the plaintiff, or other immediate relatives of the deceased. We think that so long as the real and honest purpose is to do honor to the memory of one who is deceased, and such purpose is to be carried out in an appropriate and orderly manner, by reputable individuals and for worthy ends, the consent of the descendants of such deceased person is not necessary, and they have no right to prevent, for their own personal gratification, any action of the nature described.

The third ground of objection is based upon a claim made in the circulars issued by defendants, that Mrs. Schuyler was the founder of the Mt. Vernon Association, while in truth she was connected with it only as a vice regent from this state. There is no assertion that this error of fact was intentional, and there could obviously be no motive on the part of the defendants to make any undue or ill-founded claim on behalf of their subject. A single line calling their attention to the fact would undoubtedly have caused an immediate rectification of the mistake, and, of course, the removal of any foundation for the slightest adverse comment from any source as to the conduct of the surviving members of this family in permitting such a claim to have been made on behalf of one of its deceased members. This mistaken statement of the position of Mrs. Schuyler in regard to the Mt. Vernon Association, contained in the circulars, is the only ground for adverse comment in the newspapers, or for the disagreeable notoriety complained of by the plaintiff. If corrected, all ground of complaint of that nature would disappear. If not corrected upon application, the plaintiff would probably not be without a remedy which would prevent the circulation of such an untruth.

The fourth ground of objection has already been disposed of in treating of the second. The feelings of the deceased, if she were alive and confronted with such a proposition to do honor to herself, have no place in this action, which is founded upon the alleged violation of the plaintiff's own right of privacy.

The fifth ground is an equally vague and shadowy one. Whether Mrs. Schuyler sympathized with the work or the views of Miss Anthony, we must say, seems to us utterly foreign to the subject. There was no proposition looking towards the placing of the statues of these two ladies together, as representatives of the same ideas, or as in any way, even the remotest, united in the same works, or in inculcating the same principles in regard to the rights of women. The objection seems to rest wholly upon the proposition that these two proposed statues were to be exhibited in the same room of a building in the Chicago Fair Grounds,—one as the representative of a class of women philanthropists and the other as the representative of a class of women reformers. The placing of the statues in the same room for exhibition by the same association does not, in our view, tend in the slightest degree to confuse the identity of Mrs. Schuyler, or to lead in any way to the supposition that she was in sympathy with, or believed in the correctness of, the principles which have been advocated by Miss Anthony. The fact, if it be a fact, that Mrs. Schuyler did not sympathize with what is termed the "woman's rights movement," is of no importance here. The proposed placing of the two statues would, if carried out, have had no tendency to show that Mrs. Schuyler did so sympathize. Many of us may, and probably do, totally disagree with these advanced views of Miss Anthony in regard to the proper sphere of women, and yet it is impossible to deny to her the possession of many of the ennobling qualities which tend to the making of great lives. She has given the most unselfish devotion of a long life to what she has considered would tend most for the benefit and practical improvement of her sex, and she has thus lived almost literally in the face of the whole world, and during that period there has never been a single shadow of any dark or ugly fact connected with her or her way of life to dim the luster of her achievements and of her efforts. Although we may utterly fail to sympathize with these efforts or achievements, it is plain enough that no one will have reasonable ground for objection to the placing of a bust of his or her own ancestor in the same room with the bust of such a woman, and under such circumstances as were originally contemplated by these defendants. This ground of objection, however, time has itself rendered valueless.

One other ground has been argued before us, upon which to sustain this injunction. It was urged that the proposed statue would be a fraud upon the public, because there was no portrait, likeness, or statue of Mrs. Schuyler accessible to defendants, from which any possible likeness of the deceased could be secured. The idea of an actual likeness was early abandoned, and it was stated that the statue would be an ideal one, and not a likeness. The court below has not found any fraud, and we are not of the opinion that any was shown.

While not assuming to decide what this right of privacy is, in all cases, we are quite clear that such right would not be violated by the proposed action of the defendants. The plaintiff's cause of action is, we think, wholly fanciful. The defendants' contemplated action is not such as might be regarded by reasonable and healthy minds as in the slightest degree distressing, or tending in the least to any injury to those feelings of respect and tenderness for the memory of the dead which most of us possess, and which ought to be considered as a proper subject of recognition and protection by civilized courts. It is, perhaps, needless, yet we will add that our decision furnishes, as we think, not the slightest occasion for the belief that under it the feelings of relatives or friends may be outraged, or the memory of a deceased person degraded, with impunity, by any person who may thus desire to affect the living. The rights of such persons will remain the same after as they were before our present decision, and will be wholly unaffected by it. We simply say that in this case the defendants have proposed to do nothing which ought to affect unpleasantly the mental condition of any sound, reasonable, and intelligent man or woman, and therefore an injunction ought to have been refused.

We have looked at the question of the appealability of the judgment, and are of the opinion that the court has jurisdiction. Nor do we think that the question is now merely an abstract one, because of the fact that it was the intention of the defendants, in causing the statue to be made, to place the same on exhibition in one of the buildings at the Chicago Exposition, now past and gone. That was only one of the purposes of the defendants. They intended to retain the statue after the exhibition, and bring it back to New York, and place it in the studio of the Ladies' Art Association, a place which, so far as the evidence shows, is appropriate for the purpose. This intention is not illegal, and might be properly carried out, but for this injunction. Upon the whole, we are of the opinion that the plaintiff has made a mistake in his choice of this case as an appropriate one in which to ask for the enforcement of the right of privacy.

The judgment must be reversed as to the parties appealing, and the complaint dismissed as to them, with costs.

Gray, J., dissenting:

I must emphatically dissent from the decision of this court that there was no ground shown in this case for the equitable relief which was granted below. That a precisely analogous case may not have arisen heretofore, in which the peculiar power of a court of equity to grant relief by way of injunction has been exercised, furnishes no reason against the assumption of jurisdiction. This equitable jurisdiction of the court is determined by the particular circumstances of each particular case, and depends upon the existence of a state of facts which demonstrates a wrongful act performed, or threatened to be performed, to the prejudice of some right of property, and for which there is no adequate remedy at law. Upon the findings in this case, I think we are bound to say that the purpose of the defendants was to commit an act which was an unauthorized invasion of the plaintiff's right to the preservation of the name and memory of Mrs. Schuyler intact from public comment and criticism. As the representative of all her immediate living relatives, it was competent for him to maintain an action to preserve them from becoming public property, as would be the case if a statue were erected by strangers for public exhibition under such classification, with respect to the characteristic virtues of the deceased, as they judged befitting. I cannot see why the right of privacy is not a form of property, as much as is the right of complete immunity of one's person. If it is a property right with reference to the publication of a catalogue of private etchings, and entitled to be protected against invasion, as Lord Cottingham held in Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 Macn. & G. 25, 47, why is it not such with reference to name and reputation? We have some illustrations of the exercise by courts of equity of their peculiar powers in cases which have been cited, in principle not unlike this, where the publication of one's letters and the sales of photographic portraits have been enjoined, besides the case of the publication of the catalogue referred to. See Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 402; Prince Albert v. Strange, 2 De G. & S. 652; Pollard v. Photographic Co. L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 345, and Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer, 379. These decisions are authority for the doctrine that equity will interfere to prevent what are deemed to be violations of personal legal rights, and the only limitation upon the application is that the legal right which is to be protected shall be one cognizable as property. It seems to me clear that the jurisdiction of equity is not made to depend upon the existence of corporeal property, and that it is exercised whenever the complainant establishes his claim to the possession of exclusive personal rights, and their violation in definite ways, for which an action at law cannot afford plain and adequate redress. That is the case here. The defendants were a voluntary, unincorporated association, whose object was to erect a statue of Mrs. Schuyler, as the "typical philanthropist," and subscriptions were solicited from the public to create a fund for that purpose. It was found by the trial court that the acts of the defendants "have exposed the name and the memory of Mrs. Schuyler to adverse comment and public criticism, of a nature peculiarly disagreeable to her relatives, and have caused disagreeable notoriety, for which they are in no way responsible." It was found that "annoyance and pain have been caused thereby to the plaintiff and to the immediate relatives of Mrs. Schuyler," to their great distress and injury, by the notoriety incident thereto. However opinions may differ with respect to the substantial nature of the injury to the feelings of Mrs. Schuyler's relatives, we have the finding that it was in fact caused, and we should not say that it was merely fanciful. The theory of the case, which calls for equitable relief, is not that of a mere protection to wounded feelings, but the protection of a right which those who represent the deceased have to her name and memory, as a family heritage, and which had not become the public property. Why is that not a legal and an exclusive interest, and why are its possessors not entitled to be protected by the law from a notoriety which invites public criticism of the memory and reputation of the deceased relative? And if it be true that there is no known application at common law of the principle, does not that natural justice with which equity is synonymous require that equity supply the deficiency, or enlarge the operation of legal principles, and grant the shelter of the law to the name and memory of the deceased, at the instance of her relatives? The evidence does not establish that Mrs. Schuyler was a public character, or that she was in such public station, or so prominent in public works, as to make her name and memory public property. That she was engaged, throughout her life, in acts of benevolence and beneficence, may be perfectly true; but she was never a public character, and in no just sense can it be said that, because of what she chose to do in the private walks of life, she dedicated her memory to the state or nation, as public property. To hold that by reason of her constant and avowed interest in philanthropical works unconnected with public station, the right accrued to an association of individuals, strangers to her blood, to erect a statue of her, typifying a human virtue, through contributions solicited from the general public, is, in my judgment, to assert a proposition at war with the moral sense, and I believe it to be in violation of the sacred right of privacy; whose mantle should cover not only the person of the individual, but every personal interest which he possesses and is entitled to regard as private, when through no act of his, nor by any peculiar circumstances, has the public acquired any right in them. Unless equity does interfere, the right of privacy will be lost, and that will become the property of the public, which, our sentiments and reason and our sense of justice tell us, is the private property of the relatives of the deceased person. That the plaintiff is entitled, if any one is, to a remedy, has been heretofore mentioned, and it is the finding of the trial court, and that that remedy may be preventive in its character seems to me to be within the reason and principle upon which equity proceeds. It is not necessary that the proposed statute of Mrs. Schuyler should be libelous in character. The wrong consists, not in that fact, but in the unauthorized acts of the defendants, which will invite adverse comment and public criticism upon the life and character of the deceased, bring her name and memory into more or less unenviable notoriety, and inflict upon her immediate relatives and representatives more or less injury in their feelings and their desires for that privacy which, in their private station of life, they have the right to enjoy. The threatened offense is of a permanent and continuing nature, and, in many senses, differs from cases of mere libelous publications. I think that a case was made out where equity was unfettered in its exercise by any legal principle, and where the decree of the court below should be affirmed.

All concur with Peckham, J., for reversal, except Gray, J., who reads for affirmance.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Montana, Resp't.,

v.

Mary GLEIM, Appt.

(.....Mont.....)

1. The statutory abolition of the distinction between accessories before the fact and principals will not render a subsequent indictment charging a person as being an accessory in common-law form insufficient.
2. Upon trial of one charged as being accessory to a crime the record of the conviction of the alleged principal is admissible as prima facie evidence that the latter committed the crime as charged.
3. The enforcement of a rule that attorneys who testify in the case cannot without permission of the court argue the case to the jury is not reversible error, where the counsel did not before testifying explain his position and request the court's permission to sum up.
4. An instruction in a criminal case depending upon circumstantial evidence, that the jury must not be "satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of each link in the chain of circumstances" relied upon to establish guilt, but that it is sufficient if they are "satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant is guilty," is erroneous.
5. The court cannot instruct the jury as to what weight should be given to testimony, even if it relates to admissions of the accused.
6. A defendant in a criminal case cannot be questioned as to matters wholly remote from the question of guilt and innocence of the crime charged, so as to amount to a general assault upon his character.
7. A person who has a fixed opinion as to the guilt or innocence of a person charged as principal in a crime is not a competent juror upon the trial of one charged as accessory.

8. The credibility of a witness cannot be impeached by showing that she was addicted to the morphine habit, unless it is shown that she was under the influence of the drug when the incident occurred of which she has testified, or at the trial, or unless her memory is impaired.
9. To produce moral certainty the evidence must be such that the juror would venture to act upon the conviction produced by it in matters of the highest concern and importance to his own interests.

(October 7, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Missoula County convicting her of assault with intent to commit murder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Toole & Wallace for appellant.

Messrs. H. J. Haskell, Attorney General, Thomas H. Marshall, and Mrs. Ella Knowles Haskell, for respondent:

Section 12, Fourth Div. Crim. Laws, Comp. Stat. has no reference to the manner of charging the offense or method of procedure.

Smith v. State, 37 Ark. 274; Williams v. State, 41 Ark. 178.

To charge the defendant with such facts as would show him to be an accessory at common law is to charge him with being a principal.

People v. Blien, 112 N. Y. 79; Wagner v. State, 43 Neb. 1; 1 Bishop, New Crim. L. §§ 682-685; People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84; State v. Littell, 45 La. Ann. 655; Territory v. Guthrie, 2 Idaho, 398; State v. King, 9 Mont. 445; State v. Anderson, 89 Mo. 312; Goins v. State, 46 Ohio St. 457; Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 72.

NOTE.—Among the interesting questions of criminal procedure presented in the above case, particular attention is called to that of the admissibility of a record of conviction of the principal as evidence against an accessory. The direct decisions upon this point are believed not to be numerous, and the opinion of the court in the present case is especially valuable for that reason.

The overruling of a challenge for cause, even if erroneous, is not ground for reversal, unless it be shown that an objectionable juror was forced upon the challenging party after he had exhausted his peremptory challenges.

State v. Nickleson, 45 La. Ann. 1173; Loggins v. State, 12 Tex. App. 65; Ford v. Umatilla County, 15 Or. 314; Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1; Ex parte Spies, 123 U. S. 131, 31 L. ed. 80; State v. Aarons, 43 La. Ann. 406; Territory v. Campbell, 9 Mont. 16.

Defendant was not entitled to an instruction on circumstantial evidence, as such an instruction is only proper when the evidence is wholly circumstantial, and is not proper when there is evidence of a confession by defendant, as there was in this case.

White v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 625; State v. Robinson, 117 Mo. 649; Territory v. Scott, 7 Mont. 407; Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571; Grant v. State, 97 Ala. 35; Faulkner v. Territory (N. M.) 30 Pac. 905.

There is no reason why the record of the conviction of the principal should not have the same weight as tending to show his guilt, it being just as necessary to show the guilt of the principal, or rather the one who actually committed the crime, now as at common law, for unless this is shown the defendant is not guilty: the guilt of Mason being one of the facts necessary to be established in order to prove the guilt of this defendant.

1 Bishop, New Crim. L. § 667; Whart. Crim. Ev. § 606; State v. Mosley, 31 Kan. 355; State v. Bogue, 52 Kan. 79; State v. Patterson, 52 Kan. 335; Lery v. People, 80 N. Y. 327; Arnold v. State, 9 Tex. App. 435; Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. 477, 20 Am. Dec. 534; Anderson v. State, 63 Ga. 675.

Hunt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Patrick Mason, Mary Gleim, and William Reed were jointly indicted for an assault with intent to commit murder, upon one Burns. Appellant Mary Gleim was separately tried after Mason had been convicted. She was found guilty, and sentenced to the penitentiary for fourteen years.

1. Appellant contends that the indictment will not support a verdict and judgment of guilty, "because it nowhere charges that said Mary Gleim committed the crime of assault with intent to murder." The material charging parts of the indictment are as follows: "That one Patrick Mason, late of the county of Missoula, state of Montana, on or about the 13th day of February, A. D. 1894, at the county of Missoula, in the state of Montana, did feloniously, deliberately, premeditatedly, and of his malice aforethought, make an assault in and upon one C. P. Burns, and certain giant powder and other highly explosive substance, a more particular description of which is to said jurors unknown, in, upon, around, and under the house where the said C. P. Burns was then and there present and sleeping, did feloniously, deliberately, premeditatedly, and of his malice aforethought, put and lay, and the same did then and there, feloniously, deliberately, premeditatedly, and of his malice aforethought, explode, and cause to be exploded, with intent in him, the said Patrick Mason, to kill and murder the said C. P. Burns. And that before the commission of the said felony, at the time and place aforesaid, one Mary Gleim and William Reed did feloniously counsel, aid, incite, and procure the said Patrick Mason to commit, in manner and form aforesaid, the said felony. All of which is contrary to the form of the statute," etc. The indictment is substantially a common-law charge against Mason as principal and Mary Gleim as an accessory before the fact. It follows the precedents of Wharton (1 Whart. Precedents of Indictments & Pleas, § 97) and of Archbold (Archbold, Crim. Pr. & Pl. pp. 67, 77). Bishop on Criminal Procedure (vol. 2, § 8), quoting Chitty on Criminal Law, lays down the course to be: First, to state the guilt of the principal, as if he alone had been concerned; and then, in case of accessories before the fact, to aver that the procurer, "before the committing of the said felony, in form aforesaid, to wit, on, etc., with force and arms, etc., did maliciously and feloniously incite, move, procure, aid, and abet (or counsel, hire, and command) the said principal felon to do and commit the said felony, in manner aforesaid, against the peace, etc."

The statutes (Crim. Prac. act 1887, §§ 176, 177) provide that:

"Sec. 176. Any person who counsels, aids, or abets in the commission of any offense may be charged, tried, and convicted, in the same manner as if he were a principal.

"Sec. 177. An accessory before the fact, to the commission of a felony, may be indicted, tried, and punished; though the principal be neither indicted nor tried."

By section 12, chap. 2, p. 502, Comp. Stat. 1887, it is provided: "Any person who stands by, and aids, abets, or assists, or who, not being present, hath advised and encouraged the commission of a crime, shall be deemed a principal offender, and shall be punished accordingly."

It is plain that the old distinctions between accessories before the fact and principals are abolished by these statutes (State v. King, 9 Mont. 445); but we see no objection to the form of an information charging a person as an accessory rather than as a principal. To so charge is to the advantage of a defendant, because it notifies him of the attitude which the state will assume when the case is brought to trial, by setting out the facts constituting the offense with greater certainty than is requisite where an accessory is indicted as a principal. This point was directly raised in People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, where the court held that an information stating facts sufficient to constitute a defendant an accessory at common law charges him with guilt as a principal under the statutes, and that to allege such facts as would have been sufficient against him as an accessory at common law is charging him as a principal under the statute. We are of opinion that the rights of the defendant were not prejudiced by the form of the charge. State v. Littell, 45 La. Ann. 655; Territory v. Guthrie, 2 Idaho. 398.

2. On the trial of the appellant, Gleim, the court, over the objection of the defendant, permitted the record of the conviction of Mason, the principal actor, to be introduced, and after having fully instructed the jury that it was essential, in order to convict the defendant Gleim, that they should find that Mason was guilty of having committed the crime charged, instructed as follows: "That the record of the trial and conviction of Patrick Mason was introduced in the trial of this case, for the purpose of establishing as a fact, prima facie, the guilt of said Mason. The record is prima facie evidence of the guilt of said Mason, but it is not conclusive evidence. It, however, remains prima facie evidence of the fact which it was introduced to prove, unless you believe from the evidence in this case that the defendant Mary Gleim has introduced evidence in this case which raises in your minds a reasonable doubt (as explained in these instructions) of the guilt of said Mason; but, if such testimony raises in your minds such reasonable doubt of the guilt of Mason, then you should find the defendant Gleim not guilty. But, unless the evidence introduced by the defendant Gleim does raise in your minds a reasonable doubt (as explained in these instructions) of the guilt of the said defendant Mason, you should receive such record of trial and conviction as evidence establishing the guilt of said Patrick James Mason. But, in determining the question of the guilt or innocence of the said Patrick James Mason, you are not confined to the record of trial and conviction introduced in this case, but you should carefully consider all of the evidence introduced in this case tending to prove or disprove the guilt of said Mason; and if, after a full and careful consideration of all the evidence in the case, in connection with the record in evidence, you have a reasonable doubt of the defendant Mason's guilt, you should find the defendant Gleim not guilty." While it is true that the statute makes an accessory before the fact a principal, yet the evidentiary facts by which the accessory is to be incriminated may materially differ from those which are necessary and sufficient to convict the principal. In this case, for instance, to incriminate the appellant, Gleim, at all, under the theory of the state, as charged and contended for, it was not only necessary to prove the guilt of Mason, as alleged, but to go further, and to demonstrate beyond a reasonable doubt that the appellant, Gleim, counseled, aided, and abetted Mason in the perpetration of the crime charged. Therefore, although the accessory might be deemed a principal under the statute, and was indicted with the principal, it became impossible for the state to convict appellant upon the same evidence applicable to the principal, because the agency of the accessory in the perpetration of the crime charged operated by a radically different method from the principal's. The statute, in simplifying the procedure, has obliterated old distinctions between principals and accessories, but the object of the simplification is largely to enable a guilty accessory to be punished without making his guilt depend upon the conviction of the principal. The facts, however, that the principal offense was committed, and that the principal who was charged to have committed it was guilty, were among the essential elements upon which must be predicated the guilt of the accessory Gleim. And right here is to be observed an important distinction between proof of a charge against a principal, and an accessory made principal by the statute alone (but indicted with the principal, as in this case), and proof of a charge against several persons, ordinarily jointly indicted as simple codefendants, and who are in fact principals. In the one instance, the accessory before the fact being confessedly absent at the time of the commission of the principal offense, there can be no conviction without proof of the guilt of the principal; while, in the other case, whether or not any defendant other than the one on trial participated in the criminal act is immaterial, and forms no essential part of the case against the defendant on trial. Where, therefore, as in this case, the guilt of the principal must be proved as part of the case against the accessory, we cannot think that it is necessary for the state, where the principal has been convicted, to do more on its prima facie case than to offer the record of conviction of the principal as prima facie evidence of his guilt of the crime charged against him. We do not think that the fact that the principal has been convicted is proof of the guilt of the accessory. But it does make out a prima facie case of the principal's guilt, and unless rebutted by evidence of the accessory, as it may be, is competent to prove that material element of the crime charged against the accessory, and upon the truth of which must depend the guilt of the accessory; namely, the commission of the crime of the principal, for which she is held responsible in law, provided she procured or aided and abetted the principal to commit the same. Although there are some cases holding a contrary view, we are satisfied with the reasoning of the authorities which permit the introduction of the record of the conviction of the principal. Maybee v. Aery, 18 Johns. 352; People v. Buckland, 13 Wend. 598; Lery v. People, 80 N. Y. 327; State v. Mosley, 31 Kan. 355; Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. 477, 20 Am. Dec. 534; Abbott, Trial Brief (Cr.) § 624; Anderson v. State, 63 Ga. 675; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. p. 171; 1 Russell, Crimes, p. 67; Archbold, Crim. Pr. & Pl. p. 83; Com. v. York, 9 Met. 93, 43 Am. Dec. 373; Studetill v. State, 7 Ga. 2.

3. Joseph K. Wood, Esq., of counsel for appellant, was a witness in defendant's behalf upon the trial. He desired to participate in the argument for the defense. The court refused to permit him to do so, under a rule of court which provides that if the attorney of either party offers himself as a witness in behalf of his client, and gives evidence on the merits of the trial, he shall not argue the case or sum it up to the jury, unless by permission of the court. It does not appear by the record that, before the counsel testified, he explained to the court his position, and asked permission to argue the case. Under the circumstances, we cannot think that the enforcement of the rule was erroneous or even harsh.

4. The defendant asked the court to instruct the jury upon the law of circumstantial evidence, as follows: "The testimony in this case is wholly circumstantial. And while it is not necessary, in order to warrant a conviction on a criminal charge, for the state to prove the commission of the act by an eyewitness or by direct testimony, and while the guilt of the defendant may be established by circumstantial evidence, still, in order to support a conviction upon circumstantial evidence alone, each fact and circumstance necessary to complete the chain to fasten the guilt upon the defendant must itself be distinctly and independently proved by competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt; and all the facts and circumstances, when so proven, must not only be sufficient in themselves to satisfy the mind of the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, but they must exclude every other reasonable supposition except that of his guilt." The court modified the instruction offered, and gave another upon the subject of circumstantial evidence, so that the jury were instructed as follows: "The testimony in this case is wholly circumstantial. And while it is not necessary, in order to warrant a conviction on a criminal charge, for the state to prove the commission of the act by eyewitnesses or by direct testimony, and while the guilt of the defendant may be established by circumstantial evidence, still, in order to support a conviction upon circumstantial evidence alone, each fact and circumstance necessary to complete the chain to fasten the guilt upon the defendant must itself be independently proved by competent evidence; and all the facts and circumstances, when so proven, must not only be sufficient in themselves to satisfy the mind of the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, but they must exclude every other reasonable supposition except that of his guilt." "That the law requiring the jury to be satisfied of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt in order to warrant a conviction does not require that you should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of each link of the chain of circumstances relied upon to establish the defendant's guilt; it is sufficient if, taking all of the testimony together, you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty."

The charge that, in order to warrant a conviction, the jury must not be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of each link in the chain of circumstances relied upon to establish the defendant's guilt, but that it is sufficient if, taking all the testimony together, they are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty, is erroneous and prejudicial to the rights of the defendant. This identical instruction was reviewed by the supreme court of Colorado in the recent and somewhat celebrated Dr. Graves Murder Case. Graves v. People, 18 Colo. 185. The court there condemns the instruction upon principle, as tending to confuse a jury, and well expresses our views by saying that "the jury are quite as likely to have applied that portion of the instruction referring to the links to those facts which the law requires to be established beyond a reasonable doubt to warrant conviction, as to those evidentiary matters which go to prove such facts, and one or more of which may fail, while the ultimate fact might still be sufficiently established." An Illinois case (Bressler v. People, 117 Ill. 422) has approved of the instructions here complained of, but the reasoning supporting the conclusion of the court is not sound. "It involves," says Thompson on Trials (vol. 2, § 2514), "the solecism that, although the circumstances do arrange themselves in the form of the links of a chain, yet that, when one link of the chain is broken, the chain itself may still remain entire; ignoring the obvious conceptions that no chain can be stronger than its weakest link." The authorities disapproving of these instructions are collected in the Colorado decision to which we have referred. We believe it to be correct that the prosecution need not prove beyond a reasonable doubt every circumstance offered in evidence which tends to establish the ultimate circumstances or facts on which it relies for a conviction, but if the metaphor of a chain is used, and each circumstance relied upon forms a link, the link becomes a necessary part of the whole chain, and must therefore be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The cable metaphor, as approved by the Colorado supreme court in Clare v. People, 9 Colo. 122, illustrates the force of circumstantial evidence more clearly perhaps than does the chain comparison. In the cable simile the circumstances which tend to establish the ultimate circumstances or facts are aptly compared with the strands of a cable. All such evidentiary matters going to prove such ultimate circumstances or facts need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt, and still each ultimate fact or circumstance must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt; just as a few strands of the cable may part, and yet it still remains so strong "that there is scarcely a possibility of its breaking." We therefore think that, if the chain metaphor is to be used, the instruction, as offered, correctly stated the law, and that it is necessary for the state to prove each fact and circumstance necessary to complete the chain, . . . by competent evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, etc., and that it was reversible error to charge to the contrary. Territory v. McAndrews, 3 Mont. 158.

There are other errors complained of by the appellant. The respondent contends that they are not properly before us for review, but, as the case must be tried again, we will briefly refer to them.

First. Error is assigned upon the following instruction: "That parol evidence of the verbal admissions of a defendant may be evidence of a most satisfactory character. If the jury can see, from the evidence, that the alleged admissions of the crime charged in the indictment were clearly and understandingly made by the defendant, and that they were precisely identified, and the language correctly and accurately repeated by the witness, then such testimony is entitled to great weight." It was error in the court to instruct the jury that testimony of admissions of defendant was entitled to great weight. The jury being the sole judges of the weight to be given to the testimony, the court should not tell them what particular weight to give to any portion of the testimony. State v. Sullivan, 9 Mont. 174; 2 Thomp. Trials, § 2287.

Second. Upon the trial the counsel for the state, on the cross-examination of the appellant, propounded a great many questions calculated to degrade the defendant before the jury. The inquiry took a wide and varied range. She was asked if she had not rented houses for purposes of prostitution at various places in Montana; whether she had not been a kind of a backer for the prostitution of female persons in Missoula and Hamilton; whether she had not had a fight with a priest; whether she had not hugged and kissed a jurymen after she had been found not guilty of some misdemeanor upon one occasion; whether she had not had a fight with a French prostitute at some time; and whether, at another time, she had not "run a young gentleman through a saloon;" whether she had not been drunk when she was in jail; and, finally, if her picture did not hang in the Rogue's Gallery in the city of New York. We cannot conceive upon what theory of the law this line of testimony was allowed. It was not cross-examination of what appears by the record to have been the appellant's evidence in chief, nor did it legitimately tend to impair the credibility of the defendant as a witness. Its effect must have been highly injurious and prejudicial to the defendant in the minds of the jury. Most of the matters involved in the questions were wholly remote from the question of her guilt or innocence of the crime for which she was on trial, and the investigation seems to have drifted to a rambling assault upon the general character of the defendant, extending not only to all of the offenses with which she may have ever been at any time charged, or even suspected, whether rightfully or not, but likewise to cases where she was acquitted, and to her infirmities of habit, her obscenity of speech, and general depravity of life. Such an examination we most earnestly disapprove of. It was oppressive and unjust, no matter how wicked or degraded the defendant may have been by common report. We find a well-considered decision, censuring such an examination of a defendant, in the recent case of People v. Un Dong, 106 Cal. 83.

Third. It does not appear whether or not any of the jurors who sat upon the trial of this case had stated upon their voir dire that they had fixed opinions as to the guilt of Patrick Mason, the principal, but the appellant's counsel implies that they did, and argues the point in his brief. A juror who has formed a fixed opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the person charged to be the principal offender ought not to sit upon the trial of the person charged as an accessory. Arnold v. State, 9 Tex. App. 435.

Fourth. We see no error in refusing to permit a witness to be asked, on cross-examination, for the purpose of affecting her credibility, whether or not she is addicted to the morphine habit (State v. White, 10 Wash.

611), unless it is proposed to show that the witness was under the influence of the drug at the time the events happened about which she testified, or unless she is under the influence of morphine at the time she is testifying, or unless it is made to appear that her powers of recollection are impaired by the habitual or excessive use of the drug.

Fifth. The court defined a reasonable doubt in substantially the exact language of the Webster Case, 5 Cush. 320, 52 Am. Dec. 711, and which was expressly approved of in Territory v. McAndrews, supra. As part of the definition, however, of a moral certainty, the court charged that "moral certainty may be said to bear the same relation to matters relating to human conduct that absolute certainty does to mathematical subjects. It is a state of impression produced by facts in which a reasonable man feels a sort of coercion or necessity to act in accordance with it. It is not only what men in general will unhesitatingly believe to be true, but what they will be willing to act upon." If the definition of moral certainty is to be given at all, "to be thoroughly impressive it should be carried one step further. . . . Is the juror so convinced by the evidence of the truth of the fact sought to be proved that he himself would venture to act upon such conviction in matters of the highest concern and importance to his own interests? If this be so, he may declare himself morally certain." Territory v. McAndrews, supra.

The condition of the record in this case is faulty. The transcript recites that the instructions given by the court are as follows. Then follow what, doubtless, were the instructions read to the jury. At the conclusion of many such instructions, however, we find the word "Given," and, at the conclusion of others, "Given as modified," without specifying what the instruction given was.

The error of the court in charging as it did upon circumstantial evidence is properly presented, and upon that point the case is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Reversed and remanded.

Pemberton, Ch. J., and De Witt, J., concur.

BUTTE, ANACONDA, & PACIFIC RAIL-WAY COMPANY, Respl.,

MONTANA UNION RAILWAY COM-PANY et al., Appts.

(.....Mont.....)

The exercise of the right of eminent domain to acquire land for a railroad is not precluded by the facts that the road is owned by a private corporation and is built for the benefit of private mines and ore houses, where the state laws make all railroads public highways, open to use by all who wish to do so.

NOTE.—The right of a railroad company to take, by condemnation, property previously acquired for railroad purposes by another company, is carefully developed in the present case. On the general subject, see also notes to Barre R. Co. v. Montpelier & W. R. R. Co. (Vt.) 4 L. R. A. 786; Cary Library v. Bliss (Mass.) 7 L. R. A. 765, and Mifflin Bridge Co. v. Juniata County (Pa.) 13 L. R. A. 431.

2. The magnitude of the interests involved may properly become a determining factor in sustaining the right of a railroad in Montana to construct branches to mines and mining works as public uses, by virtue of the law of eminent domain.

3. The connection of mines and ore houses with a market is a public use in Montana, which will authorize a railroad company to acquire a right of way for that purpose by right of eminent domain.

4. A railroad to be constructed along the side of a mountain may be permitted to condemn for its right of way a portion of the right of way of a former road, where such portion is occupied by unexcavated rock and dirt, and there is no immediate prospect of the other road needing it, and its tracks are to be placed far enough away from the other's so as not to interfere with its operations; while that location is by far the most practicable that can be found, any other route would impinge as much upon the other road as this does, would affect many mining operations, would be enormously expensive, less convenient, and the one chosen manifestly best serves the interests of the public.

5. Absolute necessity is not necessary to enable one railroad to condemn a portion of another's right of way for its tracks, under a statute forbidding such appropriation unless the use to which it is to be applied is a "more necessary public use."

6. Land belonging to a railroad company by way of easement, and not actually in use by it or not actually necessary for the enjoyment of its franchise, is, with respect to the power of eminent domain, upon the same footing as the land of an individual citizen, if there is necessity that it should be taken for another use.

7. The use for which property already held for public use may be condemned need not be a different one under a statute permitting such condemnation for a more necessary public use.

8. A case of necessity is presented within Code Civ. Proc. § 601, permitting one railroad company to condemn a portion of the right of way of another, when the latter, traversing a mountain side in a mining section, has within its right of way tracks unused and in all reasonable probability not necessary for future use, and another road seeking the same objective point is obliged to take a part of such right of way to avoid circuitry, a different grade, much greater cost, and serious damage to mining properties, and would be obliged in any event to parallel the adversary road a part of the way.

9. The question of damages to be awarded upon the crossing of one railroad by another may be referred to commissioners under a statute providing that courts may regulate and determine the place and manner of making crossings.

10. A railroad seeking to cross another should be permitted to employ, and required to pay, the necessary watchmen at such crossings.

(July 29, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Silver Bow County in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding to condemn lands for a right of way for a railroad and to obtain permission to cross tracks of defendant roads. Modified and affirmed.
:31 L. R. A.

Statement by Hunt, J.:

The plaintiff is a railroad corporation duly incorporated under the laws of Montana. The defendant the Montana Union Railway Company is also incorporated under the laws of Montana. The other defendants are organized under the laws of other states. The plaintiff alleges that it is authorized by its charter to construct, maintain, and operate a line of railway from the city of Butte, Silver Bow county, Mont., beginning at a point near the terminus or depot of the Montana Central or Great Northern Railway, at or near the city of Butte aforesaid, and running and extending thence in a general westerly direction, by way of the towns of Rocker and Silver Bow. In said county of Silver Bow, and through Silver Bow cañon, to a point near Gregson's Springs, and thence in a general northwesterly direction, skirting the westerly foothills of Deer Lodge valley, to the city of Anaconda, with such connections, branches, and spurs to mines and smelting works and other industries in said counties as may be deemed necessary or proper. That plaintiff is engaged in the construction of said main line of railway between the said cities of Butte and Anaconda, and also the branch and connection intended to connect on the east with the Mountain View spur and Montana Central Railway, and by means of that railway with the main line of plaintiff, at or near the Great Northern depot aforesaid, and also to connect directly with the main line of plaintiff at a point west of Butte City, to wit, at or near Rocker, and to extend to the various mines, mills, and other industries situate along said branch,—all of said branch and the points above mentioned being in Silver Bow county, Mont. That the public interest requires the construction of said railway, and the branch thereof above described, and that the lands proposed by plaintiff to be taken and condemned for the use of said railway are required and necessary for the construction and operation thereof, and for a right of way, tracks, side tracks, and general railway uses of plaintiff. That it is necessary to the construction and operation of said railway that the plaintiff should take, use, and enjoy, for the purpose of a right of way for its branch railway above described, certain portions of land in Silver Bow county, and all being within the limits of the right of way claimed by the defendants herein for a railroad now being operated by the defendant the Montana Union Railway Company. Then follows in the complaint an accurate description of the lands which the plaintiff wishes to use for right of way purposes. The description embraces a strip of land across the Nipper claim, and within the defendant's right of way; also a strip of land in the Last Chance addition to the city of Butte, and a portion of certain blocks of the Belle and Butte addition to the city of Butte; also a strip of land across the Clear Grit mining claim; also a strip of land across the Banker mining claim; also a strip of land across the Autocrat claim; also a strip across the Oro

Butte claim; also strips across the Pacific claim, the Poulin claim, the Humboldt claim, the Buffalo claim, the Little Mina claim, the Blackfoot claim, the Alexander claim, the Gambler claim, the Wake Up Jim claim, and the Emma Abbott claim. Plaintiff alleges that the defendants claim or own an interest or right to the property above described, and more particularly set forth by metes and bounds in plaintiff's complaint, and that the Montana Union Railway Company has no interest in said premises, except an easement for a right of way for railway purposes, and that although the property is within the limits of the right of way claimed by the Montana Union Railway Company, it has never been used by defendants or any of them for any purpose, and is not necessary for their use for railway purposes, or for any public use, and that the use for which plaintiff seeks to condemn said property and to which said property is to be applied by plaintiff, is a more necessary public use than any use to which defendants could put said lands or any part thereof. The plaintiff further alleges that, in the construction of its said branch line it is necessary that said branch line should cross and intersect the Montana Union Railway, and certain spurs thereof. There are about twelve of these crossings,—one at the Modoc mine; one over the spur leading to the Anaconda ore house, marked B on the map; another crossing over the spur leading to the Anaconda ore house, marked C on the map; a crossing over the spur leading to the Gagnon mining claim, marked D; also a crossing over the Haggin spur, marked E; also a crossing over the Buffalo spur, marked F; also a crossing over the spur leading to the Mountain Consolidated mine, marked G; also a crossing over the spur leading to the Green Mountain and Wake Up Jim ore houses, marked H; also a crossing over the spur leading to the ore house of the High Ore mine, marked I; also a crossing over the Haggin spur, leading to the High Ore mine ore house, marked J; also a crossing over the spur leading from the Haggin spur to the boiler house of the Anaconda mine, marked K; also a crossing over the Haggin spur, near the timber shop at the Anaconda mine, marked L. It is alleged by plaintiff that these various crossings and intersections proposed are to be made in the manner most compatible with the greatest public benefit and the least private injury to the defendants, and that, as proposed, the crossings will not in any way interfere with the use, operation, or enjoyment by the defendants of their said railway lines or the spurs thereof. Plaintiff further alleges that it has been unable to agree with the defendants as to the amount of compensation to be paid for the taking of the above-described premises and the construction of the crossings, and that the interest in the premises sought to be condemned for plaintiff's use is only an easement for a right of way for the construction, maintenance, and operation of its railway. The plaintiff's prayer is for a judgment that the use for which plaintiff seeks to appropriate the premises is a public use; that the public interests require the construction of plaintiff's railway, and that the lands and the crossings proposed to be made are necessary for the purpose of said railway and said branch railway, and that the plaintiff has a right to appropriate the premises and make the crossings; that the court ascertain the interest of said defendants in the premises described and sought to be condemned, and that an order be made appointing three competent and disinterested persons as commissioners to assess the damages by reason of the appropriation of the said property, and that on the coming in of the report of the commissioners, the court make such order in regard to the possession of said property sought to be condemned as may be proper; and that as to the crossings, the court adjudge, regulate, and determine the place and manner of making the same.

The material points of defendant's answer are a denial that the public necessity requires the construction of plaintiff's railway and the branch thereof, as set forth, or that the lands therein proposed to be taken and condemned are required or necessary for the construction or operation of plaintiff's railway, or for any use connected therewith. Defendants deny that it is necessary to the construction or operation of plaintiff's railway that it should take for right of way purposes any portions of the lands within the limits of the right of way claimed by the defendants, and set forth in plaintiff's complaint; deny that the property, or any part thereof sought to be condemned, has never been used or that the same is not necessary for railway uses for defendants; deny that the use for which plaintiff seeks to condemn the property is a more necessary public use than any use to which defendants could put the lands or any part thereof. They deny the necessity of the crossings or intersections pleaded by the plaintiff, and deny that such crossings are located in a manner most compatible with the greatest public benefit or least private injury to the defendants; deny that the proposed crossings will not interfere with the enjoyment of defendant's railway privileges. The defendants then allege that the Oregon Short Line & Utah Northern Railway Company is the owner of those various pieces of ground described in the complaint as parts of the various mining claims heretofore referred to, and aver that all of said ground was obtained by grant or by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, for the purpose of the construction of a railroad over the same, and for the operation of the Montana Union Railway, and that all of said ground became and was, and now is, absolutely necessary to the said defendants for the operation of said railway, and has always been used for such purposes by defendants, and defendants expect to continue to use the same, and that the same is absolutely necessary to defendants for railway purposes. Defendants further allege that plaintiff could easily, and at a slight increase of expense, construct its railway in a manner to avoid any conflict with or appropriation of any of the parts of the right of way of these defendants, but that the plaintiff seeks to appropriate a part of the right of way of defendants in order to save cost of acquiring right of way for itself, and not because said right of way is indispensable to the use of said plaintiff. Defendants further aver that if plaintiff's railroad is constructed in accordance with the plan as laid out by plaintiff, great and irreparable damage will be done them, and that, aside from the fact of dispossessing the defendants from their right of way, plaintiff seeks to cross the railway and spurs of defendants at points that will interfere greatly with the operation of the road of defendants, and that defendants' road cannot be economically, profitably, or properly operated, if plaintiff is allowed to construct crossings across its lines or spurs, as proposed by the plaintiff. Defendants further allege that by slight increase of cost, plaintiff could avoid all the crossings, and that it is not necessary that the crossings be laid as plaintiff contemplates. It is further alleged that plaintiff has no right to enter upon the right of way or roadbed of defendants, except for necessary crossings or connections, and therefore has no right of condemnation over the right of way of these defendants.

The replication of plaintiff denies that all or any of the ground became or was or is at all necessary to defendants for railway purposes, or that it has ever been used by them for such purposes, or that the defendants expect to use the same; denies that plaintiff, at slight increase, could so construct its railway as to avoid any conflict with or appropriation of any parts of defendants' right of way, or that plaintiff seeks to appropriate the right of way in question to save cost to itself, or not because the said right of way is indispensable to the use of plaintiff; denies irreparable damage, or any damage; denies that the crossings will materially interfere with the defendants' operation of their railway, or that plaintiff could easily, or at all, avoid such crossings by slight increase of cost of construction; and denies that it is unnecessary that such crossing should be made as proposed by plaintiff; and, finally, denies that plaintiff has no right to enter upon the right of way or roadbed of these defendants, except for necessary crossings or connections, or that plaintiff has no right of condemnation over the right of way of these defendants, or any of them.

The cause was tried before the court, without a jury, in September, 1893. The testimony taken before the court is quite voluminous, and so much of it as is deemed pertinent and necessary to explain the decision of the court is embraced within the opinion following this statement. The judgment and order of the court, after its more formal recitals, sets forth that the judge of the district court, with a civil engineer chosen by each party, inspected the premises before the submission of the case, and thereafter it was decided "that the use for which the property described in the complaint, and hereinafter described, is sought to be appropriated by the plaintiff, is a public use, within the meaning of the laws of the United States and of the state of Montana; that the entire quantity sought to be appropriated ought so to be taken; that the appropriation thereof will not be detrimental to the public interest or welfare, and is required and necessary for the proper prosecution of the enterprise for which it is sought to be appropriated, and that the public interest requires the prosecution of the plaintiff's said enterprise; that the premises so sought to be appropriated by the plaintiff are not necessary for the use of the defendants' railway, nor for any public use, and is not now in actual use by them, or any of them; that the use for which plaintiff seeks to condemn the same, and to which said property is to be applied by plaintiff, is a more necessary public use than any use to which the defendants have or could put said lands, or any part thereof. And, no sufficient cause having been shown why commissioners should not be appointed herein, it is hereby ordered that Clinton C. Clark, Justin Butler, and C. J. Stevenson, three competent and disinterested persons, residents of the said county of Silver Bow, be and they are hereby appointed commissioners to ascertain and determine the amount to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendants as compensation for their damages by reason of the appropriation of said property. The right sought to be obtained in this proceeding is an easement for railroad purposes, in and over the following described tracts and parcels of land, situate in the county of Silver Bow, state of Montana." The order particularly sets forth the ground embraced within the limits of the right of way of defendants, as described in plaintiff's complaint, and sought to be appropriated by the plaintiff. It was further ordered and adjudged that the crossings and intersections described by plaintiffs were necessary and proper.

After expressly granting the right to cross over the defendants' spur known as the "Gagnon Spur," on the Clear Grit claim, the court made the following proviso: "Provided, however, the defendants may, and if they do, within ten days after the date hereof, give notice in writing to the plaintiff, that they consent to the plaintiff's taking up their entire Gagnon spur, aforesaid, and placing and rebuilding the same on the south side of the defendants' main track, opposite or about opposite its present position, then, in that case, the plaintiff shall, at its own expense, and within a reasonable time after the giving of said notice, remove and place and rebuild the said spur on the south side of defendants' main track, opposite or nearly opposite its present position, and make the same convenient to approach by and for teams and wagons, and provide proper approaches thereto; and provided, further, that, if such consent be not given within the time and in the manner aforesaid, then the plaintiff may and shall extend its road across such spur at the present grade of the plaintiff's road, and the plaintiff shall not be obliged to put in any crossing, and in such case the defendants, if they desire to operate said spur or use the same, shall make the same conform to the grade of plaintiff's road and track, and put in a crossing at the grade of plaintiff's track, and maintain the same, all at their own expense."

It was also ordered that the plaintiff might cross the defendants' spur known as the "Buffalo Spur" at an angle of 16° 48'. In relation to this spur the court added as follows: "Provided, however, that the defendants may, and if they do within ten days from the date of this order, notify the plaintiff in writing that they consent to permit the plaintiff to raise the entire grade of the said Buffalo spur so that the plaintiff can cross the same at its own grade, then, in that event, the plaintiff shall, before making said crossing, raise the grade of the whole of said spur, at its own expense, so as to make a feasible crossing with its road, and leave said spur in a reasonable condition for the use of the defendants; and provided, further, that, if the defendants do not give such consent within the said time and in the said manner, the plaintiff shall make said crossing at its own grade, in as reasonably safe manner as the same can be done without raising the grade of the entire Buffalo spur aforesaid."

It was also ordered by the court, in relation to the watching of the crossings, as follows: "That, except as otherwise hereinbefore provided, all said crossings shall be put in by the plaintiff at its own cost and expense, and shall thereafter and forever be kept up, watched, and maintained at the joint expense of the plaintiff and the defendants; that is to say, one half to be paid by the plaintiff, and one half to be paid by the defendants, or the successors in interest of said parties or either of them,—that is to say, that each road shall assume and be liable to an equal obligation in these respects. That any improvements or repairs necessary to said crossings, or expense necessary on account of maintaining the same, may be made or incurred by one road at the equal expense of itself and the others, if, after reasonable notice to such other, the latter refuses to join in the same. That defendants shall not interfere with the plaintiff while putting in said crossings, nor in any manner hinder or delay the same. That at the same time the plaintiff shall put the said crossings in place in a manner which shall cause no unreasonable inconvenience or delay to defendants' business. And it is further ordered and adjudged that the defendants shall be entitled to compensation from plaintiff for the privilege of making said crossings, but that defendants shall not be entitled, on account thereof, to any compensation or damages for the interruption or inconvenience occasioned to their business thereby. . . . That the standard of compensation shall be the reasonable value of the common use by plaintiff with defendants of the portions of the defendants' right of way occupied by said crossings. That the commissioners above named and hereinbefore appointed are hereby directed and authorized to determine and assess the value of said common use, subject to the restrictions above stated, and that, in making such assessment and determination of the amount to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendants on account of said crossings and common use, the said commissioners shall determine the amount to be paid for the common use of each crossing, separately, and shall in their report mention the same distinctly and separately. It is further ordered that the crossings, after being made, shall remain in the common use of both roads, and that both parties shall be required to observe all the laws of the state of Montana relating to the blowing of whistles, ringing of bells, and stopping at crossings. That neither party shall stop its engines, cars, or trains on any of the crossings, or so near thereto as to interfere in any manner with the operation of the other road. That neither party shall have a preference or right of way over the crossings, but that the party whose train first comes to the stop necessary to be made before crossing shall have the right of way of that crossing at that time. 31 L. R. A.

That in case trains on the different roads make such stops at the same time, or at or near the same time, or within twenty seconds of each other, the defendants' train shall have the right to make that crossing first. That no engine or train, in switching, shall be entitled to pass over a crossing more than once, if an engine or train on the other road be in waiting to cross, and the switching engine or train shall allow the waiting train or engine to cross before itself crossing again. That all needful signs and signals at and for crossings shall be constructed, erected, maintained, and operated jointly by the plaintiff and defendants, and at their joint cost and expense; provided, however, that in case it be necessary to employ any person or persons expressly for the operation of such signals, or any of them, plaintiff shall have the right to select, hire, and discharge such person or persons."

The defendants moved for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is prosecuted both from the judgment and the order overruling the motion for a new trial.

See opposite page for a copy of the plat introduced on the trial.

Messrs. Shropshire & Burleigh and Forbis & Forbis for appellants.

Messrs. M. Kirkpatrick, W. W. Dixon, and William Scallon, for respondent:

Plaintiff's railroad is a public highway and the public has a right to use it; it is throughout subject to legislative regulation and control and therefore its use is a public use.

National Docks R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 765.

The true criterion by which to judge of the character of the use is whether the public may enjoy it by right or only by permission.

Buffalo & N. Y. C. R. Co. v. Brainard, 9 N. Y. 100; Beekman v. Saratoga & S. R. Co. 3 Paige, 45, 22 Am. Dec. 679; Tracy v. Elizabethtown, L. & B. S. R. Co. 80 Ky. 259; Moody v. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. 20 Fla. 597; Shaver v. Starrett, 4 Ohio St. 494; Killbuck Private Road, 77 Pa. 39; Sadler v. Langham, 34 Ala. 311; Warren v. Bunnell, 11 Vt. 600; Colorado Eastern R. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 293; Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 43 Minn. 527; Kettle River R. Co. v. Eastern R. Co. 41 Minn. 461, 6 L. R. A. 111; Contra Costa Coal Mines R. Co. v. Moss, 23 Cal. 323; State v. Hibernia Underground R. Co. 47 N. J. L. 43; Phillips v. Watson, 63 Iowa, 28; Palauiret's Appeal, 67 Pa. 479, 5 Am. Rep. 450; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Williams, 54 Pa. 103; Hays v. Risher, 32 Pa. 169; Lewis, Em. Dom. §§ 164, 167, 171; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Petty, 57 Ark. 359, 20 L. R. A. 434, note; Beekman v. Saratoga & S. R. Co. 3 Paige, 45, 22 Am. Dec. 686-707, note; Chicago Dock & C. Co. v. Garrity, 115 Ill. 155; Mill v. Parlin, 106 Ill. 60; Truedale v. Peoria Grape Sugar Co. 101 Ill. 561; Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 242, 91 Am. Dec. 577.

In Montana mining is the dominant industry. The prosperity of the state is very largely due to the development of the mines. Under such conditions the business of mining is itself a public use.

Comp. Stat. p. 1058, §§ 1495-1507; Dayton Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 394.

See also Dietrich v. Murdock, 42 Mo. 279; Phillips v. Watson, 63 Iowa, 28; Overman Silver Min. Co. v. Corcoran, 15 Nev. 147; Hand Gold Min. Co. v. Parker, 59 Ga. 419; New Central Coal Co. v. George's Creek Coal & I. Co. 37 Md. 562; Getz's Appeal (Pa.) 3 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 186; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 423; Olmstead v. Camp, 38 Conn. 546, 89 Am. Dec. 221; Todd v. Austin, 34 Conn. 79; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Fernald, 47 N. H. 456; Tide Water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 521, 90 Am. Dec. 684; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 659; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 940; 1 Wood, Railway Law, pp. 653, 654; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Petty, 57 Ark. 359, 20 L. R. A. 484; Farnsworth v. Lime Rock R. Co. 88 Me. 440 (1891).

While cost of construction and right of way are and always must be an important consideration in the location of a line of railway, and may in many cases constitute the whole difference between a practicable and an impracticable route (Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Alabama Midland R. Co. 87 Ala. 501 (1899)), yet in this case there were other considerations of equal importance which governed the location of plaintiff's line.

One public corporation cannot take the lands or franchises of another public corporation in actual use by it, unless expressly authorized to do so by the legislature, but the lands of such a corporation not in actual use may be taken by another corporation authorized to take lands for its use in invitum whenever the lands of an individual may be so taken, subject to the qualification that there is a necessity therefor.

1 Wood, Railway Law, p. 684; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Pittsburg, W. & K. R. Co. 17 W. Va. 812; Barre R. Co. v. Montpelier & W. R. R. Co. 61 Vt. 1, 4 L. R. A. 790, note; Colorado Eastern R. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 293.

Lands not actually employed by a railroad company in its business, but merely held as a speculation or to supply possible future wants, are liable to be taken like the property of private individuals.

North Carolina & R. R. Co. v. Carolina Cent. R. Co. 88 N. C. 489; Peoria, P. & J. R. Co. v. Peoria & S. R. Co. 66 Ill. 174; Sharon R. Co.'s Appeal, 122 Pa. 533; Re New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Metropolitan Gaslight Co. 68 N. Y. 326.

Land appropriated by one railroad company under the power of eminent domain, but not required for the exercise of its franchise or the discharge of its duties, is liable to be taken for the corporate use of another railroad company.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 652, note; Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Belle Centre, 48 Ohio St. 273 (1891); Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Alabama Midland R. Co. 87 Ala. 501, and 520; United N. J. R. & Canal Co. v. National Docks & N. J. J. C. R. Co. 52 N. J. L. 90; Getz's Appeal (Pa.) 3 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 186, note; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 267; Sioux City & D. M. R. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 27 Fed. Rep. 770.

Hunt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By this appeal we are called upon to decide questions of importance, not alone to the community at large, but especially so to railroad corporations, possessed of such powers as may be granted to them under the Constitution and laws of the state. The topography of Montana, as characterized by its name, renders it of unusual significance that the laws of eminent domain be correctly expounded at this comparatively early period of the development of the state. The strict limits of all delegated authority to take the property of another must be cautiously and accurately guarded, lest private rights or those conferred be unnecessarily invaded. On the other hand, if the power to take has been delegated, that power must be precisely defined and upheld by the courts, as one vitally affecting the material interests of the state. The ways for railroads to reach remote mining camps, sometimes lying within small areas, upon precipitous mountain sides, at unusual altitudes, and in steep and rocky sections, are often very few, and only feasible at all by skillful engineering and vast outlays of money. Where, therefore, two or more railroads, in their mountainous routes, may seek the same objective mineral districts, in view of their probably necessary juxtaposition, their rights must be carefully established with relation to the law as applied to the physical, as well as other and more general, conditions controlling them in their obligations towards one another and to the public as well.

Two main propositions are presented for review: First. Are plaintiff's road and branches public uses? Second. Can the plaintiff company construct its road within the defendants' right of way, and is plaintiff's use of the ground a more necessary use than that of the defendant companies, and is the ground sought to be taken necessary to plaintiff's use, and not necessary to defendants' use?

It is well established that if, in point of law, a use is public, the fact that not very many persons will enjoy the use is not material. Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417. The character of a way, whether it is public or private, is determined by the extent of the right to use it, and not by the extent to which that right is exercised. If all the people have the right to use it, it is a public way, although the number who have occasion to exercise the right is very small. Phillips v. Watson, 63 Iowa, 28; Lewis, Em. Dom. p. 241; Sharer v. Starrett, 4 Ohio St. 496; Kettle River R. Co. v. Eastern R. Co. 41 Minn. 461, 6 L. R. A. 111; Randolph, Em. Dom. § 56. The circumstance that the plaintiff road was built by a private corporation, and that its branches run within convenient contiguity of private mines or ore houses, does not materially affect the road and give a private character to its use or to the use of its spurs. All termini of tracks and switches are more or less beneficial to private parties, but the public character of the use of the tracks is never affected by this. "It may be, in such cases, that it is expected, or even that it is intended that such tracks will be used almost entirely by the manufacturing establishment, yet, if there is no exclusion of an equal right of use by others, and this singleness of use is simply the result of location and convenience of access, it cannot affect the question." Chicago Dock & C. Co. v. Garrity, 115 Ill. 155; Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 48 Minn. 527; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Petty, 57 Ark. 359, 20 L. R. A. 434.

The force of these observations is peculiarly apparent in a new mining state. Frequently, railroads are extended by spurs or lateral connections of main lines, or by independent lines, into mining camps where but a single mine is developed and capable of shipping freight. Such roads or spurs are not infrequently built by the private enterprise of those interested in the one mine to be benefited, and when constructed it is intended that the tracks will be used almost wholly by the mining company which constructed the spur. The supposed barrenness of the country contiguous to the road, or the undeveloped condition of the mountain in which the mine is lying, or perhaps the hitherto unrewarded search of the prospector, has encouraged the belief that, apart from the single mine owned by those who have built the railroad, there are no other paying properties upon which a railroad might rely for ores or supplies to transport. Such expected limited uses are but the results of the location of the mine and its inaccessibility. They do not in any way, however, exclude an equal right of use by others, perchance, desiring to ship freight or secure transportation over the road. To better illustrate our meaning, we have only to modify the instance just referred to of the railroad lateral built to a single mine. Suppose that a pioneer prospector has located and represented a claim contiguous to such railroad, but by reason of the impracticability or expense of constructing a wagon road, he has been obliged to simply keep what he believed was a good mine, hoping that in the future railroad facilities would afford him the opportunity to haul his ore to market. Suddenly, by the enterprise of others, and without any expectation on their part of aiding any project other than their own, a railroad is built, and he may attain the fruition of his hopes if he can use the railroad to ship his ore. Could it be contended with any merit that the railroad company, incorporated under the railroad laws of the state, can discriminate against him by saying: "We are a private enterprise, for private use, and are not generally open to the public, and for this reason refuse to haul your ore, or to bring your machinery and supplies into these hills, and you cannot compel us to act otherwise?" Or, to carry the illustration further, suppose many mines are located close to the new line of road, and a mining district opened of incalculable interest to the state, a town springs up, with its diversified trade relations, and that thus the railroad originally constructed and intended to subserve the single mine, with little or no thought of any greater use, may become a measure of great utility to many people; must this development stop, or be dependent upon the caprices or will or discriminatory orders of the incorporators or owner, based upon a claim that the road was constructed for private purposes, and cannot be made to answer the demands of the public?

We say, after full deliberation, that the express command of section 5 of article 15 of the Constitution, that "all railroads shall be public highways, and all railroads, transportation and express companies, shall be common carriers," and subject to legislative control," etc., supplemented by the statute (Comp. Stat. 1887, § 680, p. 809, div. 5) authorizing the construction of side tracks, branches, etc., has made them instruments of public service as well as private profit, and is sufficiently comprehensive to include, not only the railroad used to illustrate our views, but, by analogy, the particular railroads of appellants and respondent in their main lines, lateral branches, and spurs, to particular mines in and about the numerous mining dumps, shafts, and ore houses described in this suit, and situate upon the hills adjacent to the city of Butte. Furthermore, it is expressly provided by section 7, article 15, of the Constitution, that "all individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal rights to have persons or property transported on and over any railroad, transportation or express route in this state. No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation of freight or passengers . . . shall be made . . . between persons or places within this state. . . . No railroad or transportation company . . . shall give any preference to any individual, association, or corporation in furnishing cars or motive power, or for the transportation of money or other express matter." This provision, when considered with the previous one quoted, also demonstrates that the Constitution, in its letter, its spirit, and its policy as well, classes all railroads, with their feeders, such as respondent and appellants operate, as public highways, subject to use by the public of right, amenable to the laws governing common carriers forever forbidding all obnoxious favoritisms between any who desire to use such highways. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Petty, 57 Ark. 359, 20 L. R. A. 434. This stable written policy is doubtless the outgrowth of pernicious systems of discrimination and preference which railroad corporations may have indulged in throughout the land where their powers are unrestrained by constitutional or other restriction. It puts them all on a plane, and under the facts before us, respondent and appellants, as to public highways, are alike the beneficiaries of its liberality, subject, nevertheless, to its restrictions and liabilities. Chief Justice Hawley, for the supreme court of Nevada, vigorously discusses a "public use," as meant by the Constitution of that state, and concludes that the necessities of the business of mining, milling, smelting, etc., are of direct interest to the people of Nevada, and that a statute is constitutional which authorizes land to be condemned for the necessities of such business. Dayton Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 394. This decision was afterwards expressly affirmed in Oerman Silver Min. Co. v. Corcoran, 15 Nev. 147, and again recently approved by its learned author, in the United States circuit court for Nevada, where the court upholds a statute authorizing the appropriation of land for a mining tunnel as a proper exercise of eminent domain, on the ground of "great benefit and advantage to the mining industry." Douglass v. Byrnes, 59 Fed. Rep. 31. The supreme court of Georgia held, in Hand Gold Min. Co. v. Parker, 59 Ga. 419, that a section of an act of the legislature incorporating a gold placer mining company, and giving it power, under the Constitution, to take the private property of the complainants for the use of their ditch for the purpose of extending the same to their own land, on payment of just compensation therefor, was constitutional. "Gold and silver," says the court, "is the constitutional currency of the country, and to facilitate the production of gold from the mines in which it is imbedded, for the use of the public, is for the public good, though done through the medium of a corporation, or individual enterprise." In a comparatively recent decision, Oury v. Goodwin [Ariz.] 26 Pac. 376, the court sustained an act of the territorial legislature permitting the condemnation of appellant's real estate for the purpose of an irrigating canal, basing its opinion upon the principle that a state may, in view of its natural advantages and resources and necessities, legislate in such a way, exercising the power of eminent domain, that these advantages and resources may receive the fullest development for the general welfare, the laws being general in their operation. The Nevada and Georgia cases have been disapproved of by Lewis on Eminent Domain (§ 194), but the disapprobation is based upon the ground that a law which granted a right of condemnation for a purpose single and essentially private in its nature could not possibly subserve any public use or be of any public benefit, and hence is an invalid attempt to take private property for private use, and not upon the soundness of the argument that the magnitude of the interest of a state may be considered, for which alone we cite them. The reasoning of these cases, however imperfect the application to particular facts may have been, is well sustained. Randolph, Em. Dom. p. 50; Wood, Railway Laws, p. 822; Mills, Em. Dom. § 20; Cooley, Const. Lim. 538; Hibernia Underground R. Co. v. De Camp, 47 N. J. L. 518, 54 Am. Rep. 197; 1 Rorer, Railroads, § 409; Mont. Comp. Stat. 1887, §§ 1495 et seq.

The public interests are benefited by railroads, and the right of eminent domain may be exercised through the medium of corporate bodies. The public have an interest in the use of the railroad, and the owners may be prosecuted for the damages sustained, if they should refuse to transport an individual, or his property, without any reasonable excuse, upon being paid the usual rate of fare. Beekman v. Saratoga & S. R. Co. 3 Paige, 45, 22 Am. Dec. 679; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 170; Dietrich v. Murdock, 42 Mo. 279. Where the general public advantage is greatly promoted by the improvement of water power in the streams and waters of a country, private property taken for that purpose is taken for a public use, within the meaning of that term. Hazen v. Esser Co. 12 Cush. 475. Indeed, in New England we find the courts very emphatic upon the question. Chief Justice Perley, after speaking of the interests that New Hampshire had in the improvement of her natural water powers, wrote as follows: "No state of the Union is more interested than ours in the improvement of natural advantages for the application of water power to manufacturing purposes. Nature has denied to us the fertile soil and genial climate of other lands, but by way of compensation has endowed us with unrivaled opportunities of turning our streams of water to practical account. The present prosperity of the state is largely due to what has already been done towards developing these natural advantages; and there is no assignable limit to our resources in this respect if extended and connected enterprises for the improvement of the water power in this state should be successfully prosecuted hereafter. In no part of the world have the public a deeper interest in the success of all undertakings, which promise to assist in the development of these great natural advantages. Whether, therefore, we look to the interpretation which has been given in other jurisdictions to the term 'public use,' in reference to the right of taking private property for such a use, to the legislative practice under the provincial and state governments before and at the time when the Constitution was adopted, to the language of the Constitution itself, to the early and continued legislative practice under the Constitution; to the decisions of the courts in this state; or to the character of our business and the natural productions and resources of the state, we are drawn to the conclusion that the legislature have power to authorize a private right that stands in the way of an enterprise set on foot for the improvement of the water power in a large stream like this river to be taken without the owner's consent, if suitable provision is made for his compensation, and that the act of 1862 is constitutional and valid." Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Fernald, 47 N. H. 444; Olsonstead v. Camp, 33 Conn. 532, 89 Am. Dec. 221. See also Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 695, 23 Am. Dec. 756; Mills, Em. Dom. § 183. So vital to the development of the agricultural interests of Montana is water for irrigation that, as a part of the bill of rights of the Constitution, it is provided: "The use of all water now appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale, rental, distribution, or other beneficial use, and the right of way over the lands of others, for all ditches, drains, flumes, canals, and aqueducts, necessarily used in connection therewith, as well as the sites for reservoirs necessary for collecting and storing the same, shall be held to be a public use. Private roads may be opened in a manner to be prescribed by law, but in every case the necessity of the road, and the amount of all damage to be sustained by the opening thereof, shall be first determined by a jury and such amount, together with the expenses of the proceedings, shall be paid by the person to be benefited." Mont. Const. art. 3, § 15. The improvement of Boston harbor by reclamation of a large body of land for commercial purposes was held to be of great public advantage. Moore v. Sanford, 151 Mass. 286, 7 L. R. A. 151. "The ever-varying condition of society is constantly presenting new objects of public importance and utility, and what shall be considered a public use or benefit may depend somewhat on the situation and wants of the community for the time being." The underlying principle remains, that there must be a public use or benefit. "But what that shall consist of, or how extensive it shall be to authorize an appropriation of private property, is not easily reducible to general rule." Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co. supra; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417;

31 L. R. A.

Buffalo & N. Y. C. R. Co. v. Brainard, 9 N. Y. 109.

In thus grafting upon the law of this jurisdiction the doctrine that the magnitude of the interests involved may properly become a determining factor in sustaining the right of a railroad to construct lateral branches, tracks, and spurs, to mines and mining works, as public uses, by virtue of the law of eminent domain, we are always duly mindful, not only of the constitutional guaranty of the individual right of possessing and protecting property, but are equally impressed with the declaration that "the good of the whole" is the very foundation of the Constitution. Indeed, it may be said that upon this latter axiom of all government by the people rests the principle itself. The force of the principle may vary in different communities. What cogently applies to Montana, with its mountains and quartz, would be an absurd process of reasoning to urge in Louisiana, where scarce an undulation marks the surface, or a mineral lies beneath it. Therefore, to correctly define what that force is in the case before us, it is eminently reasonable and appropriate that the conditions of the whole people to be affected should be considered. In this state, where almost wholly through the facilities and advantages of railroads, the quartz mines have been developed to such an extent that the mineral output of the state is only exceeded by that of one or two older mining states, the publicity of the use of railroads into the camps is too obvious to require more extended comment. In the language of the eminent counsel who so lucidly presented respondent's side of the case: "Again, in Montana, mining is the dominant industry. Throughout a large portion of the state, and in the county of Silver Bow especially, it is the all-important pursuit upon which all other industries are dependent. In the mining, smelting, and reduction of ores the great mass of the population finds employment and support. The prosperity of the state is very largely due to the development of the mines." Having determined that the respondent's railroads and laterals, branches, and spurs are all public highways, within the legal bounds of public uses, it follows that the law of eminent domain, was available to them, provided: (1) "The use to which the respondents have applied the ground taken is a use authorized by law. (2) That the taking was necessary to such use. (3) If already appropriated to some public use, that the public use to which it is to be applied is a more necessary public use." Code Civ. Proc. § 601.

That a necessity exists which requires property to be taken is obvious. This follows as a conclusion of the determination that the purpose of the plaintiff is a public use. Moore v. Sanford, 151 Mass. 286, 7 L. R. A. 151. But, insist the appellants, although we grant a right of way is necessary, if it is held that the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific Railway is a public use, nevertheless, at the very threshold of this branch of the case we deny the necessity of the particular land for the railroad uses for which respondent seeks to appropriate it. The district court found that the ground included within the defendants' right of way was necessary to the plaintiff for the proper construction and maintenance of its road, that such ground was not necessary for the use of defendants' railway, and was not in actual use by them at the time of the order, and that the use for which plaintiff sought to condemn the same was a more necessary public use than any use the defendants have or could put the same to. Without more prolixity than we think is essential to make clear our opinion, we will state the concluded facts, apparent to us. The country through which the contending railroads run is one of the mountains of the main Rocky Mountain range, and known as the "Butte Hill" above the city of Butte. The railroads about the hill are really great broad-gauge spurs of their respective main lines. From these great spurs many short ones project, running to ore houses and mining shafts. The principal object of both railroads, in their branches about the "Hill," is to haul ores from and supplies to the several quartz mines indicated upon the map, to wit, the St. Lawrence, Anaconda, Wake Up Jim, Buffalo, Moscow, and others. The Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific (respondent) tracks for the most part lie north of the Montana Union tracks. The Montana Union right of way was 25 feet on either side of the center of its tracks. It had, however, graded along the hill only to an extent a little more than necessary for the actual space occupied by its roadbed. In many places the hill is so very steep, or so rocky, or both, that the rails must have laid very close to the bluffs just north of the tracks. There was no actual use of such bluffs or other ground adjacent to the Montana Union tracks, nor could they actually occupy the same without heavy excavation work on the upper side. Commencing at a point on the hill within the limits of the Nipper quartz-mining claim, the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific, with its road, was graded and excavated on the upper side of appellants' roadbed, and is within the right of way of the Montana Union for about a mile and a half. At places the south rails of the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific road are within 10 feet of the northern rails of the Montana Union, but as a rule there is some 17 to 22 feet between the centers,—that is, from the center of the Montana Union tracks to the center of the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific tracks. These distances, excluding the crossings, are sufficient to prevent any interference between the successful operation of the two roads. The strips of ground which the plaintiff would condemn and appropriate vary in width, the variance being evidently based upon what the plaintiff deems necessary for the operation of its road, considering the points to be reached, and the distance which would and must separate the two roads when constructed. Prior to the institution of this action—that is in 1893—various lines and means of getting to the several ore houses marked upon the map were projected. All these ore houses are at the same level as to the grade of the two roads; several of them, however, being below the level of the Montana Union main track. By the abrupt rise in the hill and its rocky character, and because of the necessity of the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific crossing divers spurs of the Montana Union, it is necessary that the right of way of the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific be laid down to the same level as the Montana Union. This necessity could only be obviated by requiring the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific to either cross the spur of the Montana Union at grade, or construct its road high enough to go overhead or low enough to pass beneath the spurs. To go under them would require the plaintiff to undertake an engineering task so far beyond what is deemed practicable or reasonable that it need not be considered at all. To build its line overhead would compel the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific to construct its road at more than 20 feet above the crossings, so that, when it passed the ore houses which the two roads go to, the plaintiff's road would be useless, unless after running beyond the ore houses, switch backs were constructed down the hill, by which they could reach the objective points. To follow this plan would require the plaintiff to run into the mountain at points beyond the ore houses at enormous expense of construction, and right of way, probably; and the road, when thus constructed, would be very impracticable to successfully run or operate. If the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific constructed its line above the Montana Union, it follows that the cuts through which it would have to run would be very much heavier than its present line, and at their objective points it would still be necessary for the two roads to be within a few feet of one another. Another objection to running higher up the hill is that such a route would materially interfere with the operation of the mines on the mountain. In such case shaft houses would be cut through, dumping grounds intersected, and quartz-mining operations seriously interfered with. The route chosen was deemed by far the most feasible and practicable one. Other routes could have been selected according to the engineers' evidence, but any practicable one which might have been chosen would have crossed the main line of the defendants, as well as many of their spurs. The plaintiff by going upon the right of way of the defendants, widened the cuts which defendants had already made in many places, but when we consider that the hill had remained in its natural state until further excavated by the plaintiff, it is plain that no material damage was done to the defendants by the plaintiff by the mere act of excavating as it did. On the contrary, such excavations are a benefit from a mere standpoint of construction. Upon one part of the right of way, lying within the Belle of Butte addition to the city of Butte, the natural physical obstacles to selecting another route were not so great as higher up the hill; but, in order to conform with the grade necessarily chosen to reach the points higher up the hill, the most practicable route was that selected through the Belle of Butte addition, particularly in view of the fact that had they kept off of the right of way of the defendants, the plaintiff would have been compelled to pay for a number of dwelling houses and the lots which they were on, and other parts of their line would have been affected. An experienced engineer, Mr. N. C. Ray, testified in behalf of the defendants that he had, at a time long prior to the institution of this suit, and at a time when there were not so many houses about the foot of the hill, and not so many mines developed and ore houses built on the mountain, made a survey for another railroad, with a view of finding a practicable route. His proposed line ran on the south or lower side of the present Montana Union track. It was proposed by this route to make most of the crossings of the Montana Union spurs grade crossings. It appeared also that the Ray route, if followed, would necessitate for a long distance a retaining wall to be put up to maintain the slope of the Montana Union roadbed, and keep it from falling over on the proposed roadbed. It would require very heavy fills or trestlework, and withal a scale of a map made when this projected route was first surveyed showed that there were not 200 feet difference in the longitudinal conflict between the Bay route and the present Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific route and the Montana Union right of way, as they appear on the maps. The total length of the present lines is about 3 miles, or a little less. From certain given points there was, between such proposed route and the actual route of the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific, a difference of $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile, the greater length being the Ray route. The Ray route necessitated five grade crossings of the main track of the Montana Union, all of which, it satisfactorily appears, were more undesirable than an equal number of crossings would be over spurs. Moreover, the Ray line, if run at the time this litigation first arose, would have encountered buildings, shaft houses, and dwelling houses which were not in existence when the line was first proposed. It would have been vastly more expensive, by reason of the enhanced value of the right of way, and we think it only fair to say that, as the conditions existed at the time that the testimony was taken in this cause, his route was impracticable. Moreover, the Ray route was not projected with a view to serving all of the various ore houses touching plaintiff's and defendant's roads; the only branch appearing on the Ray map being to the High Ore house, and a branch to the Anaconda and the Humboldt.

One of the objections interposed by the defendants to the occupancy of their right of way was the difficulty of throwing out switches or side tracks to the north of the Montana Union, but the engineers swear that if they have distances to centers between tracks of 22 feet, there is room between the two tracks for another track, and if the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific elevation is so high that the Montana Union cannot get over by crossing at right angles, a spur can be run at any distance in order to attain the proper elevation. Another objection vigorously urged was the difficulty of handling ties where the roads were very close together. But it appears that some of the greatest railroads in the country notably the Pennsylvania system, have three tracks abreast, with centers of the two outside tracks 22½ feet apart. Ties are successfully handled on such roads, and we see no reason why they should not be upon the roads of the contending parties at bar. Besides, the hill, as it stood, was certainly a much greater obstacle to necessary conveniences in this respect than it is as excavated to a level with appellants' roadbed. It was also urged that the right of way taken by the defendants was necessary in case of future double tracks or sidings, but as these needs are mere future possibilities, not based upon reasonably apparent traffic needs, we do not think the showing is strong enough to merit very serious consideration. A great deal of testimony was also taken upon the inconvenience to the defendants in the operation of their trains at various crossings where the construction of plaintiff's road prevented the defendants from handling as many cars at one time as they could handle if the plaintiff's road were not in their way. Eliminating the consideration of the Gagnon, Buffalo, and Haggin spur crossings, which are referred to hereafter, we are constrained to hold that, as the law expressly gives the right of crossing and intersecting (Const. art. 16, § 5), the interference is only such as is essential to any method of operation of two railroads where they cross and intersect one another on the side of a mountain, where their respective ways are necessarily very limited, and where both may have lawful rights of way to their respective but identical objective points.

It is well to bear in mind, in the application of the principles underlying the law of eminent domain, that the state has an inherent political right, pertaining to sovereignty and founded on what has been expressed to be a "common necessity and interest," to appropriate the property of individuals to great necessities of the whole community where suitable provision is made for compensation. Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Davis, 2 Dev. & B. L. 451; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 8. This right says the Constitution of Montana (§ 9, art. 15), "shall never be abridged nor so construed as to prevent the legislative assembly from taking the property and franchises of incorporated companies and subjecting them to public uses, the same as property of individuals." The public welfare is therefore the particular base upon which must be laid the correct application of the doctrine itself. The right of eminent domain may be of the greatest value to the respondent, or to any other corporation which may exercise its privileges, but that is an incident which must be subordinated by the courts to the question of public use, and to the consideration of the benefits to accrue to the public by the construction of the contemplated project. There is, however, a rule of construction, sustained by the great weight of well-considered authority, to the effect that this power to take the property of private citizens or other corporations for public use must be exercised and can be exercised only so far as the authority extends, either in terms expressed by the law itself, or by implication clear and satisfactory. Re Buffalo, 88 N. Y. 167; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 888; Mills; Em. Dom. § 46. In our opinion the testimony in this case shows that the particular location of respondent's railroad is by far the most practicable which could have been found, and, considering the fact that any other route would have impinged upon the appellants' right of way very nearly as much as the present route does, and that such other route would have affected many mining operations, would have been enormously expensive, and much less convenient or somewhat less safe, and that it is manifestly to the best interests of the public generally that railroads be constructed throughout the mountains over such routes as will enable the public to receive the best and most expeditious service which can be attained, we think that the taking of the portions of the right of way of appellants' road was necessary to the use, which was public, of the respondent's railroad.

Now, however, having advanced to this point of the case, we are met with the argument that this right of way was already appropriated, and that there was no delegation of power to any corporation under the eminent domain laws of the state to take property already appropriated to a public use, unless as provided by the last clause of the 3d subdivision of § 601, Code Civ. Proc. 1887, "the public use to which it is to be applied is a more necessary public use." We have already concluded that this land was necessary to respondent's use, and the question therefore is, Is respondent precluded from condemning these necessary lands because they have already been condemned for public use by the appellants? If the question were limited merely to this single inquiry (unless some other statute authorized a taking), doubtless, under rules of construction, we should hold that the respondent could not invade the right of way of the appellants. But our legislature has imposed upon the court the additional responsibility of judicially determining whether the use to which the appellants did or would put the particular lands is a more necessary one to the public than that to which they have already been appropriated by the Montana Union Railway. We therefore find the whole proposition resolves itself, under the facts, to this: A part of the right of way of the Montana Union Railway Company has never been used by it for railroad purposes for the several years during which the road has been constructed and in operation, and it is not reasonably requisite for future uses. The Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific Railway Company, in the location of its only really practicable route, desires to take parts of such unused portions of the Montana Union right of way; such portions being necessary for their actual use, and unnecessary for the actual use of the appellants. We have used the word "necessary" advisedly throughout this opinion, and when we say that the route chosen by the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific requires the taking of the land in question as necessary for public use, we do not mean that there is an absolute necessity of the particular location they seek. But, under the statute, such an absolute necessity is not a prerequisite to the exercise of the law of eminent domain. We are aware of the decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania (Sharon R. Co.'s Appeal, 122 Pa. at page 545), that land once appropriated by a railroad company to public use under the right of eminent domain cannot afterwards be appropriated by another company to the same use, except in the case of "absolute necessity." There one road sought to take part of the yard of another. The facts warranted a finding by the master that the lands sought to be taken were convenient and necessary to enable the plaintiff company to economically and expeditiously carry on its present and prospective business, and it was upon such a finding that the court held as it did. If the learned judges meant by an absolute necessity to exclude entirely the element of reasonableness in the measure of their words, we are constrained to take a different view of the law in interpreting our statute, and in so doing we find ourselves in thorough accord with three of the justices of the same court in their dissenting opinion, reported in Pittsburgh Junction R. Co.'s Appeal, 122 Pa. 511, and decided just two years before the absolute necessity rule was laid down in the case hereinbefore cited. The appeal in the Pittsburgh Junction Co. Case in its facts are much closer to the case at bar than Sharon R. Co.'s Appeal, supra. The Allegheny Valley Railroad Company claimed to own certain property in the city of Pittsburgh, extending from Forty-Third street to Forty-Seventh street, and from an unnamed street on the south to low-water mark on the Allegheny river on the north, all of which property it claimed to have in constant use in connection with the operation of its railroad. The Pittsburgh Junction Company entered upon a part of this property, and commenced to lay ties and rails thereon, and to tear up the track that had been used by plaintiff for many years, and it was alleged that, if the defendant was permitted to go on, it would seriously interfere with and cripple the operation of the plaintiff's road, and would ruin its road-bed, and render it unable to perform the duties imposed upon it towards the public. The defendant contended that it was authorized to locate its road between certain points, and it was obliged to run along the bank of the Allegheny river, and that it had a right to run where it did, and denied that all the property used by the plaintiff in connection with the maintenance and operation of its railroad was used, or that it was all indispensable to plaintiff's use. The supreme court held that the plaintiff road could consider the needs of the future, and that the defendant could not interfere with the present or future use contemplated by the plaintiff, and that no actual encroachments would be allowed. Perhaps the decision turned, in the opinion of the majority of the court, upon the ground that the defendant could, without any trouble besides expense, have constructed its road at another point, as the court says: "We are not embarrassed with the questions that would arise if the defendant company could not build its road without laying its track through the plaintiff's yard." The minority opinion by Judge Trunkley is very brief, and we quote so much of it as is applicable to the facts at bar: "In this case the testimony clearly shows, and it was so found by the master, that there is ample room next the river where the appellant could lay its tracks without material injury to the property of the appellee. The inconvenience to and cost of changes by the appellee could be compensated in damages. The prudent appropriation of a parcel of land extending from low water mark on the river to the hillside by the appellant, the whole of which land is not necessary for the uses of its road, ought not to bar the construction of another railway in the valley by a company subsequently chartered."

11 L. R. A.

About the same time that the Pennsylvania rule of absolute necessity was announced, the supreme court of Alabama, in Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Alabama Midland R. Co. 87 Ala. 501, discussed with a learning which generally characterizes the decisions of that respected court, the right of a railroad company to take by condemnation proceedings part of the property of another railroad company already devoted to a public use, and says: "As a general rule, a corporation to whom the right of eminent domain is delegated, having the right to locate the line of its road between the terminal points, has also the correlative right, to some extent, to select the lands to be taken. But the discretion must be reasonably exercised, so as to cause as little damage as is practicable; and if abuse in the selection is made apparent, the court before whom the proceeding is pending should interfere to control the discretion and prevent the abuse by refusing an order of condemnation. Re New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Metropolitan Gaslight Co. 63 N. Y. 326; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 541. According to the rule stated above, the liability of any portion of the right of way of the Mobile & Girard Railroad Company, though not in actual use, to condemnation for the use of the Alabama Midland Railway Company, is subject to the qualification of a necessity therefor. It would be difficult to lay down any specific rule as to the measure of the necessity, of sufficient scope to include all cases. It may be observed generally that necessary, in this connection, does not mean absolute or indispensable necessity, but reasonably requisite and proper for the accomplishment of the end in view under the particular circumstances of the case. On the evidence, there is little room for doubt that the route selected by the Alabama Midland Railway Company to get into the city of Troy, and out to the west, is the most practicable, if not in its proper sense the only practicable, route." Annisson & C. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, G. & A. R. Co. 82 Ala. 297.

Again, the absolute necessity rule not only will not consist with the express delegated authority to take the property of a corporation by virtue of eminent domain, but, if we carry it to its logical results, it is this, that where one corporation to which has been granted the right of taking property by eminent domain has exercised that right, it cannot be interfered with, except for crossings and intersections. This is fallacious. In mining districts it leads to exclusion. When a similar question arose in Illinois, Judge Breese, for the court, thus tersely disposed of it: "The argument, when reduced to its proper measure, is, that whilst the land of all other persons and corporations lying on the route of a railroad is subject to the power of eminent domain, that belonging to a railroad company is not thus subject—such land must remain intact. We cannot assent to this proposition." Peoria, P. & J. R. Co. v. Peoria & S. R. Co. 66 Ill. 174. We find the Federal court for the district of Colorado taking substantially the same view of the necessity rule as the Alabama court did. Colorado Eastern R. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 203. The Colorado Eastern Railway Company sought to condemn certain property within the limits of the city of Denver, claiming that the ground was necessary for its use for various railroad purposes. The defendant contended that the land was not of such necessity to the plaintiff as to justify the taking from defendant, and that the land had already been appropriated by defendant to its own use as a public railroad, and was eminently necessary to its prospective business. Phillips, J., decided that the ground was necessary to the petitioner, because it was the only piece of ground available to petitioner without entirely changing the survey line and undertaking to accomplish its destination by a circuitous route, and that it would not be a wise judicial discretion to compel the petitioner to adopt a road highly inconvenient, longer, and less available. It was plain in that case that another route could have been selected, and, aside from the matter of economy, with very much more ease than could the respondent, in the case at bar, choose another route for the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific road; but the court evidently refused to follow the absolute necessity rule, and based its decision upon the more just doctrine of the necessity of the petitioner, founded upon the practicability, economy, facilities, and other considerations which should govern the determination of what the necessities may be, always considering the rights of the senior company, yet never forgetting the benefits to the public.

The laws of the state authorized the respondent to locate its railroad. It had a right to select the most feasible route, provided in doing so it did no unnecessary injury to the public or to the appellants. The law does not give to the respondent any predominant right over the appellants, though certainly the line of respondent should be so run as not to materially interfere with the efficiency of the Montana Union. New York, H. & N. R. Co. v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co. 38 Conn. 196. We find no violence done to these principles. The inconveniences inevitably incident to the crossing of one road by another are not violations of the principles. On the other hand, lands belonging to the Montana Union by way of easement and not actually in use by such company, or not actually necessary for the enjoyment of their franchise, should be upon the same footing as the land of the individual citizen. Peoria, P. & J. R. Co. v. Peoria & S. R. Co. supra. It was never contemplated by the Constitution that competition between railroads should not be sanctioned. On the contrary, our construction of the law is that it is the policy of this state, voiced in its Constitution and statutes, to encourage competing railroads, rather than to deter them. If this were not so, why did the legislature expressly include the right to take lands already appropriated by one corporation and devote them to public use where the latter use was a more beneficial one than the former. The mere fact that the easement is held by a corporation, and that another corporation takes it to subserve public use, cannot affect the principle so long as the second taking is for the greater public good. Northern Railroad v. Concord & C. Railroad, 27 N. H. 188. Nor can the claim of a superior equity of respondent be urged as a sound argument, based upon the fact that the appellants already have appropriated the property for public use. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lake, 71 Ill. 338. The Montana Union accepted its easement with the reserved right in the state to retake it whenever the public necessity might require, provided, always, just compensation should be made when it might be retaken. One public corporation cannot take the lands or franchises of another public corporation in actual use by it unless expressly authorized to do so by the legislature. But the lands of such a corporation not in actual use may be taken by another corporation, authorized to take lands for its use in invitum, whenever the lands of an individual may be taken, subject to the qualification that there is a necessity therefor. 2 Wood, Railway Law, p. 856. We think this to be the true rule, and that opposing corporations may be limited to the enjoyment of that property in actual use by them, and that which is reasonably necessary for the safe, proper, and convenient management of their business, and the accomplishment of the purposes of their creation. Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Alabama Midland R. Co. supra. Upon this proposition we again refer to the opinion of Judge Phillips (Colorado E. R. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. supra.), where it was held "that mere priority of acquisition, or even of occupation, gives no exclusive right, except in so far as the condemnation trenches on the greater necessities of the other franchise." As has been stated heretofore in this opinion, the right of way prayed for by the respondent in this case was not occupied, and the mere priority of the acquisition of the Montana Union must give way, under our laws, to the superior uses and greater needs of the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific Company, as more necessary to the public.

The learned counsel for the appellants have cited us to many cases besides the Pennsylvania ones already referred to. We will notice one or two principal ones. Barre R. Co. v. Montpelier & W. R. R. Co. 61 Vt. 1, 4 L. R. A. 785, simply decided that one railroad company to avoid a sharp curve in its road, could not take the land of another company, as condemnation was sought upon the ground of convenience rather than necessity. We find nothing in the case to the effect that if the necessity existed still the ground could not be taken. Boston & M. Railroad v. Lowell & L. R. Co. 124 Mass. 368, was decided upon the ground that there must be an express legislative grant to authorize a longitudinal road to be built upon the right of way of another road, and that the statutes did not contemplate such a taking, but the court recognized that cases may arise where the authority to take land already devoted to another railroad may be implied, either by the language of the act or from the application of the act to the subject-matter, as where the railroad could not be laid, in whole or in part, by reasonable intentment, on any other line. We are cited by the appellants to the case of Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 122 Ill. 478. In that case one railroad sought to run within the right of way of another for a distance of 11 miles. A majority of the court held that one company could not take any part of the right of way of another except at a point of crossing, intersection, or union. The Illinois statute granting rights of way to railroad companies was substantially like the first portion of fourth subdivision of § 600 of the laws of eminent domain (Mont. Comp. Stat. 1887, p. 216), which is as follows: "All rights of way for any and all purposes mentioned in § 598, and any and all structures and improvements thereon, and the lands held or used in connection therewith, shall be subject to be connected with, crossed or intersected by any other right of way, or improvements or structures thereon." It was argued to the court that the provisions of such a statute were broad enough to permit the taking of the right of way of one company by another but it was decided that the taking contemplated was limited to crossings, intersections, or unions, and not taking for another road longitudinally. Two judges dissented from that opinion, and although we do not find it necessary to approve or disapprove of the law of that case, we note that our statute seems to go further than the Illinois law, for with us it is expressly provided, in the latter part of the section just quoted: "They shall also be subject to a limited use in common with the owner thereof when necessary; but such use, crossings, intersections, and connections shall be made in manner most compatible with the greatest public benefit and least private injury." If the property to be subject to limited use in common with the owner means, generally, rights of way, longitudinal as well as other, and the statute does not restrict the application of the pronoun "they" to rights of way immediately connected with crossings and intersections, but enlarges the use to all rights of way when necessary, it would seem by no means unreasonable that conditions like those presented in the case under consideration were in the minds of the legislature at the time that this section became a law, and that of necessity all rights of way shall be subject to a limited use in common with the owner thereof. Perhaps the statute may have meant, by using the word "owner," the owner of the fee, to whom all rights in the property might revert if there were no longer any public use thereof, or it may mean the easement for use of the corporation which had acquired an easement over the property by virtue of the law of eminent domain. We simply refer to this matter in view of the citation made. In the case of Contra Costa Coal Mines R. Co. v. Moss, 23 Cal. 323, it appears the court did not consider the effect of any statute similar to ours granting the right to take land once appropriated, if, indeed, there was any such statute in existence in California when that decision was rendered in 1863. It was held that there was no right to condemn or appropriate land along or upon a previously located line of another railroad company except for crossing purposes. The court announced that, by its priority of location and appropriation, a railroad company acquired a "vested right to its line of road and the land necessary for its construction, as prescribed by the railroad laws, of which it cannot be divested by another company who seeks to appropriate the land for the same use." We must decline to assent to this proposition as it is stated, without careful qualification and modification.

31 L. R. A.

We cannot agree that the statute which authorizes lands to be appropriated for a more necessary public use means a different public use in all cases. If the legislature had intended that construction to be put upon the statute, instead of carefully restricting the right to a more necessary public use, they could easily have said a different public use. Besides, the view which we have discussed is consonant with those clauses of the Constitution inhibiting discriminations, as already enumerated. If the appellants' construction were adopted, the practical result would be the exclusion, oftentimes, of more than one railroad on mountain sides or in mountain gorges or precipitous gulches, or routes not embraced within the definitions of cañons, defiles, or passes, especially provided for by law. Comp. Stat. 1887, div. 5, § 688, title Railroad Corporations. Consider a practical application. A railroad company would take a maximum right of way. Now if the right of eminent domain is not conferred upon the junior company to take lands for a public use unless for a different use, the first railroad would be enabled to prevent any and all competition, because, oftentimes, any route off the right of way of the first would be, if not an absolutely impassable one, so impracticable and so enormously expensive that it must as a reasonably necessary consequence deter another corporation from building at all.

To conclude, we adopt that construction which is more jealously careful of the best interests of the state, and say that, where a railroad company traversing the side of a mountain in a mining section has within its right of way tracts of ground not necessary to the proper, successful, and safe operation of its system of tracks and spurs, and not used by it in connection with any such operations, and in all reasonable probability not necessary for any such future use, if another road seeks the same objective points, and in doing so is obliged to take part of such unused right of way to avoid a considerably more circuitous route, at a different grade, of very much greater cost, and of serious damage to many mining properties in their subterranean and surface operations, and withal would be obliged by the topography of the mountains to parallel the adversary road a part of the way, under such conditions the use of the unused parts of the right of way of the one company by the other is a more necessary public use than that to which such unused portions are already appropriated. Wherefore, the law will permit the taking, regarding the interference as a "tolerable one," to be compensated by damages to be paid. Re Buffalo, 68 N. Y. 167. In concluding this opinion the court expresses its acknowledgment for the argument and research of counsel on either side. By their aid we have been greatly assisted to determine between the parties whether plaintiff could invoke the law of eminent domain in this case,—that power in the exercise of which, a modern writer (Randolph) says, is invariably provoked a direct issue between man and the state.

Spurs and Crossings.

Gagnon Spur Crossing. The order of the district court in relation to the Gagnon spur:

is more fully set forth in the statement of facts appended to this opinion. Its use to the defendants was for the delivery of supplies and fuel to the Gagnon mine. It was on the north side of the Montana Union track, while the mine is on the south side of the track and at such a distance from the railroad that supplies are hauled by wagon from the spur to the mine. Where the plaintiff's track crosses the Gagnon spur it is at the same level as the defendants' track, but the spur descends from the time it leaves the Montana Union track and the grade of the plaintiff's track at the point of crossing is considerably above the spur grade. In view of the fact that it would be plainly for the greater convenience of the appellant company to have the spur on the south side of its main track, the order of the district court in relation to this spur is modified, and unless plaintiff and defendants otherwise agree, the order of the district court will be that the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific Railway Company, at its expense, construct a spur, or rebuild the one already constructed upon the south side of the Montana Union main track; and, further, that the said Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific Company at its own expense construct and provide suitable and convenient approaches to said spur for teams and wagons, having due regard to the nature and facilities of transportation between the Gagnon mine and the Montana Union Company.

Buffalo Spur Crossing. There is a slight difference of elevation of grades of the two roads at the Buffalo spur. The only practicable way of crossing at the point marked F on the map was to raise the grade of the track of the respondent from the switch of the main track as far as the crossing by the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific. No change was to be made on the main line, and the grade of the spur is to be the same as formerly from the crossing to the end of the spur. We think that the respondent should construct this crossing in the manner proposed, and at their expense entirely, unless it is agreed otherwise between the parties themselves.

Haggin Spur Crossing. The civil engineers take very different views of the feasibility of this crossing. A short distance from the crossing the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific Company found it necessary to construct a reverse grade leading to the Montana Union track. This made a "hump," as railroad men call it,—that is, an uphill and a downhill grade,—on the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific road a very short distance from the crossing. This, of course, was necessary to enable the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific to cross without disturbing the grade of the Montana Union track. The principal objection to it by the Montana Union witnesses was that it was impracticable and unsafe because of passing over the hump, and, considering the general grade of the railroad, the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific trains would break in two, and thus, by wreckage and other mishaps, the Montana Union tracks would be obstructed and their traffic materially interfered with. It is difficult for us to say, in the radical disagreements of skilled engineers, what the probable effect of this hump may be, but it occurs to us that, as its dangerous tendencies are all primarily towards accident to the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific, and only indirectly to the Montana Union, the risk, if any, and the scientific error, if any, will fall much more heavily upon the respondent than upon the appellants, and that therefore it is proper for us to affirm the order of the district court.

We see no error in referring the question of damages for crossings to the commissioners, as was done by the order of the court. The statute covers the matter. Comp. Stat. 1887, p. 218, § 607. The last objection of the appellants is to the order of the court giving the power and authority to the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific Company alone to employ and discharge watchmen at the crossings, for whose wages the plaintiff and defendants are jointly responsible. In view of the fact that the respondent company invokes the right to make these several crossings, it would seem quite just that the expenses of a watchman to guard the Haggin Spur crossing and others, if any, where the district court ordered watchmen, should be borne by the respondent alone. We see no objection to permitting the watchmen to be chosen by the Butte, Anaconda, & Pacific Company, and it will be directed by this court that the order of the district court shall be modified so as to impose the expenses of watchmen entirely upon the respondent corporation.

Let the judgment and order of the district court be remanded for modification in conformity with the views expressed in this opinion, and when so modified it will stand as affirmed. Modified and affirmed.

Pemberton, Ch. J., and DeWitt, J., concur.

MARYLAND SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

BALTIMORE & POTOMAC RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

William T. SWANN et al.

(81 Md. 400.)

1. One who purchases a ticket for a regular passenger train has a right to be

NOTE.—Duty of railroad carrier in respect to furnishing proper cars for passengers.

The question here considered embraces the ap-conveyed in a passenger coach instead of a baggage car, unless the latter is as safe a vehicle as can be procured by the utmost care and diligence.
31 L. R. A.

2. Reasonable effort at least to make a baggage car safe and convenient for a passenger is necessary when this is the only vehicle that can be furnished for passengers in a regular passenger train.

propriateness of the carriage rather than its safety or freedom from defects.

The principles which govern this question go-

3. A woman who takes passage in a baggage car when no passenger cars are provided for a passenger train, and pressing domestic duties call for her immediate transportation, does not thereby renounce her right as a passenger to safety and protection.
4. Injury to a passenger on a train is prima facie evidence of the carrier's negligence.
5. An instruction requested by a carrier, comparing the injuries received by a passenger on a baggage car and those to which a passenger would have been liable in a regular passenger coach, is properly refused.

(June 18, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Charles County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bernard Carter, L. Allison Wilmer, and Samuel Cox, Jr., for appellant.

Messrs. Adrian Posey and John H. Mitchell for appellees.

Bryan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

William T. Swann and Elizabeth, his wife brought suit against the Baltimore & Potomac Railroad Company for bodily injuries sustained by the wife. Verdict and judgment being rendered in their favor, the defendant appealed.

The female plaintiff, about midday on the 11th day of May, 1893, accompanied by her child ten months old, traveled on the mixed back to the stage-coach days, and seem to have been regarded as so well settled then that the modern decisions rather recite or refer to the law than define or establish it.

In Caveny v. Neely, 43 S. C. 70, the court in speaking of the proprietor of a stage coach says that a carrier of passengers for hire is required to furnish suitable vehicles.

In Ingalls v. Bills, 9 Met. 1, 43 Am. Dec. 346, the court, after a thorough examination of the question with reference to the liability of the proprietor of a stage coach says carriers of passengers are bound to use the utmost care and diligence in the providing of sufficient and suitable coaches.

The owner of a stage coach must have a coach and harness of sufficient strength and properly made. Crofts v. Waterhouse, 3 Bing. 319.

In Curtis v. Drinkwater, 2 Barn. & Ad. 169, the court, in speaking of the liability of the proprietor of a stage coach for injuries to a passenger, held that the malconstruction of a coach would be negligence in the defendant.

The rule as stated in those cases has been generally adopted and applied in cases of railroad carriers.

The obligation imposed upon a carrier by its contract with a passenger is that its apparatus is suitable, sufficient, and as safe as care and skill can make it. Nashville & D. R. Co. v. Jones, 9 Heisk. 27.

In Shoemaker v. Kingsbury, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 369, 20 L. ed. 432, the court in contrasting the liability of persons engaged in the construction of a road and who undertake to carry a person as a private carrier, and that of a passenger carrier, says that the latter is bound to see that "the cars are strong and safe for the accommodation of passengers."

A carrier of passengers for hire must provide cars or vehicles adequate, that is sufficiently secure as to strength and other requisites for the safe conveyance of passengers. That duty the law enforces with greatest strictness. For the slightest negligence or fault in this regard from which injury results to a passenger the carrier is liable in damages. Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141.

In Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 5 L. R. A. 498, the court in considering the responsibility for the safety of an elevator compares it to that of a passenger carrier, and states that such carrier is under obligation to use the utmost care and diligence in providing safe, suitable, and sufficient vehicles for the conveyance of passengers. That they are bound to adopt the most approved methods of construction in known use in the business. And that they must keep pace with science, art, and modern improvement in supplying safe obtainable vehicles for their use.

31 L. R. A.

In case of common carriers of passengers the highest degree of care which a reasonable man would use is required, and this rule applies to the character of the vehicle. Derwort v. Loomer, 21 Conn. 245.

As to the selection of suitable cars, both as to the manner of construction and materials used, the carrier of passengers is obligated to use the highest reasonable and practicable skill, care, and diligence. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pillsbury, 123 Ill. 9.

The court will not say as matter of law that a railroad company has performed its whole duty as a carrier of passengers when it has furnished for their carriage a car which will run with safety upon the track but which will not resist the crash when thrown from the track. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Williams, 74 Ind. 462.

Where a common box car had been substituted for the regular caboose on a mixed train which carried passengers, the court held that it was the bounden duty of the company to furnish the passengers a reasonably well equipped car to ride in, and that if by an accident the regular caboose usually provided for passengers could not be used and the improvised box car used on that occasion was more dangerous to the passenger than the caboose, the degree of care on the part of the company was thereby increased. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Holcomb, 44 Kan. 332.

In speaking of a street-car company the court, in Hadenkamp v. Second Ave. R. Co. 1 Sweeney, 490, said: "When a common carrier of passengers accepts a person as a passenger, and receives from such person the full established fare, he is bound to furnish such passenger with a safe and comfortable vehicle and a safe and comfortable place or position in or on it."

A railroad company owes the duty to its passengers of furnishing comfortable and safe cars. Gonzales v. New York & H. R. Co. 39 How. Pr. 47.

A carrier of passengers is bound to provide a proper vehicle, and if bridges or obstructions are placed so near the track as to injure limbs of passengers which are slightly protruded from the window, a car is not safe which does not have bars at the windows to prevent such protrusion. New Jersey R. Co. v. Kennard, 21 Pa. 203.

But that case was overruled in Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. McIlurg, 56 Pa. 294.

But the court in the later case still recognized the rule that the providing of a safe and convenient car is one of the duties which the company owes to its passengers.

Wheels too narrow for the gauge of the road are not properly used upon a vehicle for the carriage of passengers. Holyoke v. Grand Trunk Railway, 48 N. H. 541.

train of the defendant, composed of passenger coaches, and freight cars, from Pope's Creek to Cox's station, intending to return on the evening of the same day. She purchased a ticket at Cox's station for the purpose of taking the passenger train which would in ordinary course leave that station about 7 o'clock P. M. The passenger coaches were "switched off" at Cox's, and only a baggage car was run from that station on that evening to Pope's Creek. She entered that car, and was conveyed to Pope's Creek. The evidence in behalf of the plaintiffs tended to show that the accommodations were very uncomfortable and unsuitable for travelers; and that, in consequence of the absence of all conveniences, she "was shaken up, and knocked about from side to side, and slammed against the side of the car several times; and that immediately after one of these slams, when she was struck in her right side by the side of the car, she experienced a pain there, which was followed by a pain in her back." The evidence also tended to show that the woman was pregnant, and that the injuries which she received caused a miscarriage, and that she had suffered pains in her back and side almost constantly for six months. The evidence for the defendant tended to show that she was not thrown about or jostled. It was further testified that the cars could not be shifted at Pope's Creek without special danger, unless a drag rope was used, and that the drag rope used for this purpose had been broken in two on the evening of the 10th, having been before that time weakened by being run over by cars; that the conductor had telegraphed for one on the morning of the 9th, and thereafter, on reaching Baltimore, had applied at the office of the company, but that none was received until the morning

So, a recovery may be had against a railroad for injuries resulting from a derailment of the train caused by attempting to run in the train cars with a gauge wider than the gauge of the track. East Line & R. R. Co. v. Smith, 65 Tex. 167.

If a car is so defective and dangerous in its construction as to make its use gross negligence the company will be liable for injuries caused by such defect. Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Ryan, 69 Tex. 665.

The obligation of the carrier requires it, by the exercise of the greatest care and precaution against the occurrence of accidents, to provide cars for the safe transportation of all conditions of people entitled to be carried. The old and the young are alike entitled to be carried safely. While a car may be safe for an adult person, it may not be safe for the conveyance of children of tender years. Metropolitan R. Co. v. Falvey, 23 Wash. L. Rep. 53.

Duty to adopt improvements.

The rule requiring suitable cars requires reasonable conformity to the advancing state of the art.

It is the imperative duty of railroad companies to adopt and use all improvements in cars calculated to insure safety to employees and passengers, and to discard all such unsafe and dangerous cars or parts thereof as may be dangerous to use. St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. v. Valirius, 56 Ind. 511.

Railroads must keep pace with science and art and modern improvement in their application to the carriage of passengers, but they are not responsible for the unknown as well as the known. Meier v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 64 Pa. 225, 3 Am. Rep. 561.

A railroad company undertakes that its carriages are road worthy and properly constructed and furnished according to the present state of the art. Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Messino, 1 Sneed, 220.

If a safety beam, to prevent accidents upon the breaking of axles upon passenger coaches, is an article of such established utility and so extensively known that it ought to have been used on the cars of a particular carrier, it may be found negligent in not having adopted it. Hegeman v. Western R. Corp., 16 Barb. 353.

In Caldwell v. New Jersey S. B. Co., 47 N. Y. 282, the court in considering the case of an accident on a steamboat says that the carrier of passengers in conveyances and vehicles propelled by steam is bound to use every precaution which human skill, care, and foresight can provide in adopting new improvements to secure additional precaution.

Some of the courts are inclined to make a distinction between roads of small business and those with large business and correspondingly large incomes. Thus it has been held that all carriers are not required to adopt like expensive provisions for the safety of passengers. A railway constructed through a thinly settled country moving but little freight and but few passengers and running its trains at slow rates of speed cannot be expected to be equipped and operated in the same manner as is necessary in the case of a railway running through a densely populated territory and moving a large volume of traffic. The line of the railway may be short and the business done by it so small as to make it unreasonable to require it to run separate trains for freight and passengers. But if the business is sufficiently large and profitable to warrant it, and the safety of the passengers is endangered or diminished by having the passenger coaches mixed in the same train with freight cars, it would clearly be the duty of the railroad company to run separate trains. Arkansas Midland Railroad v. Canman, 52 Ark. 517.
31 L. R. A.

Passenger carriers are bound to adopt such apparatus and appliances as science and skill shall from time to time make known and experience prove to be valuable in a considerable degree in diminishing the dangers of railroad travel, provided such improvements can be procured at an expense not greater than ought to be incurred to obtain them. But it will be unreasonable to require companies of small means and business to provide every appliance or machine that may be found to be valuable in diminishing dangers of railroad travel and which may come into use on the Great Trunk lines. Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Thomas, 79 Ky. 160, 42 Am. Rep. 208.

But a railroad company is bound to provide rolling stock suited to the nature and extent of business which it assumes to do. And the standard of care and diligence for a particular railroad cannot be made to depend upon its pecuniary condition or the amount of its earnings. Taylor v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 48 N. H. 304.

Rule as affected by character of train.

A passenger on a freight train cannot require all the conveniences and safeguards against danger that he may demand upon trains devoted to passenger service. But he has a right to demand such safeguards and conveniences as are usually found upon such trains. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Arnol, 144 Ill. 261, 19 L. R. A. 313.

If a passenger chooses to go by freight train and ride in the caboose, the company fulfils its duty if it has the caboose as safe as such vehicles usually are. Chicago, B. & A. R. Co. v. Hazzard, 26 Ill. 373.

H. P. F.

of the 12th. The female plaintiff was a laboring woman, being in the habit of washing, cooking, and working in the field. She lived about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Pope's Creek, and at the time of these occurrences she had three children. She went to Cox's on a visit to the family of Thompson, a section hand on the railroad, who lived about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile from the station. There was some conflict of evidence in reference to the cause of the alleged miscarriage; the defendant's testimony supporting the theory that it was more likely to have been caused by the woman's exertions and the excitement consequent upon them before she entered the cars, and after she left them, than by any injuries received while traveling in them.

When the female plaintiff purchased a ticket at Cox's station, she acquired a contract right to be conveyed to Pope's Creek in one of the defendant's passenger coaches. If we assume that causes beyond the defendant's control prevented the use of a passenger coach on that occasion, the obligation still remained to carry the passenger safely, so far as it could be done by the exercise of the highest degree of care and skill which was consistent with the nature of the undertaking. If the baggage car was as safe a vehicle of transportation for passengers as the defendant could procure by the utmost care and diligence, it fulfilled its duty in this respect. There is no evidence to sustain such an hypothesis, and probably it is contrary to the usual experience of travelers. And yet, as the defendant substituted it for the passenger coach which it was bound by its contract to furnish, the least which could be demanded of it would be some reasonable effort to make it safe and convenient for a passenger. If the passenger was injured in the defendant's cars in the course of her journey, and in consequence of some fault or defect in the vehicle of transportation, the defendant is clearly liable for the injury, unless it can show the utmost care and diligence on its part; and we think that these are the proper inquiries for the jury in this case. It cannot be alleged against the passenger as fault or negligence that she took passage in the baggage car. She had a right to be conveyed by the defendant, and she was constrained to travel in this way or not be conveyed at all. Domestic duties of the most pressing kind required that she should return that night to Pope's Creek. It would be unreasonable to hold that she had made a voluntary choice, whereby she had in this way renounced the right to safety and protection which she had purchased.

The court granted six prayers in behalf of the plaintiff. Exception was taken to only three of them. They are as follows: (1) If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant was the owner of the railroad mentioned in the declaration, and sold the plaintiff Elizabeth a ticket entitling her to travel on said railroad, and received and accepted her as a passenger to be carried from Cox to Pope's Creek, on the line of said railroad, then defendant was bound to exercise on said trip, for plaintiff's safety, the highest degree of care and skill which was consistent with the nature of its undertaking. (2) If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff Elizabeth

Swann was injured whilst a passenger on a train of the defendant, the fact of such injury is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, throwing upon it the onus of rebutting the presumption, by showing there was no negligence on its part. (3) That, in order to rebut the presumption of negligence on its part, the defendant must show that the injury sustained by said plaintiff while traveling as a passenger on its train, if the jury find that she was so injured, could not have been prevented by the utmost care and diligence, not only in the running and management of the train, but also in the structure and care of the track, and in all the subsidiary arrangements necessary to the safety of the passengers.

These prayers are taken almost verbatim from opinions of this court. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Worthington, 21 Md. 283; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, Hauer, 60 Md. 462; Heves v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 76 Md. 159.

The three prayers of the defendant which seek to excuse the failure to use a passenger car because of the want of a drag rope do not require the jury to find that the defendant made a diligent use of the means at its command for the purpose of enabling it to use the car. The first prayer puts it to the jury to find that the drag rope was broken on the evening of May the 10th, and that no other was obtained until the morning of May the 12th; but they are not by the prayer required to find that the defendant made a diligent effort to obtain the rope, or that it made any efforts to supply other means of running the car to Pope's Creek; and none of these prayers required the jury to find that the baggage car was a safe conveyance for passengers. The sixth and seventh prayers deny the plaintiff's right to recover if the miscarriage was caused in part by the action of the female plaintiff in making physical exertions and undergoing excitement before she entered the baggage car and after she left it. But, even if there could be no recovery for the miscarriage, the pain inflicted and injury sustained in the car would support a verdict, if found by the jury. The same remark will apply to the ninth prayer, which denies a recovery unless the miscarriage was caused directly and exclusively by injuries sustained on the trip on account of the negligence of the defendant. The eighth prayer makes no reference to the question of the safety of the baggage car as a conveyance for passengers. The tenth prayer institutes a comparison between the injuries complained of and those to which the female plaintiff would have been liable if seated in a regular passenger coach. It is altogether conjectural what she might have suffered in a regular passenger coach, and such a conjecture cannot be made a basis for the verdict of a jury. The ground of recovery is the absence of the proper degree of care and diligence on the part of the defendant, provided it is shown to the satisfaction of the jury, and not what might have occurred elsewhere. The eleventh and twelfth prayers present the question of contributory negligence. There is no evidence from which any negligence on the part of the female plaintiff can be inferred, except such as tends to show that the miscarriage may have been caused in some measure by the fatigue which she underwent before she reached the cars at Cox's, and after she left them at Pope's Creek. We have already stated our views on this question. But we may further say that the plaintiff's fourth prayer, granted by the court confines the recovery to the injuries sustained by the female plaintiff while "making said journey." All the defendant's prayers which we have been considering were rejected by the court, and we approve of the ruling.

Judgment affirmed.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

D. W. WALLACE, Appl.,

v.

James D. DRIVER.

(.....Ark.....)

An island formed in a navigable river where land had been washed away years before does not belong to the owner of the remainder of the tract, unless the washing away was sudden and perceptible and the limits of the change or channel of banks can be determined, or unless the formation of the island is made by accretions beginning at the water line of his remaining land.

(Bunn, Ch. J., dissents.)

(January 4, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Mississippi County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Reversed.

Statement by Battle, J.:

The N. W. fractional $\frac{1}{4}$ section 30, in township 13 N., and range 11 E., Mississippi county, state of Arkansas, was entered from the United States government by Harrison Phillips, in November, 1848, and contained at that time 154 acres, which land was afterwards conveyed by Phillips to the plaintiff, Driver, and James H. Edrington; and the said Edrington conveyed his undivided interest to the said Driver, who now claims to be the sole owner of said N. W. fractional $\frac{1}{4}$ section. Subsequent to the entry of said land from the government, a large portion thereof caved into the Mississippi river, and where said caving took place became a portion of the bed of the river, and so remained for some twenty-five years, after which an island was formed out in front of the main shore, and of the residue of the $\frac{1}{4}$ section not washed away, within the metes and bounds of said $\frac{1}{4}$ section as originally entered from the government, and in the place where was a portion of said $\frac{1}{4}$ section before the same washed away. Between the island so formed and the main shore there is a chute through which the water flows when the Mississippi river is high; but such chute, during low water, is dry, with the exception of a few water holes, and is not now a part of the bed of the river, having been filled by the deposit of the river. The defendant, D. W. Wallace, is now in possession of 35 acres of the land made by the formation of said island within the original boundaries of said fractional $\frac{1}{4}$ section at the time of its entry from the government. The jury found that the defendant was in the unlawful possession of 85 acres of the land sued for, and the court rendered judgment accordingly.

Mr. Charles P. Harnwell for appellant.
Messrs. S. S. Semmes and G. W. Thomson, for appellee:

If a man owns lands that are washed away or that are submerged, and these lands are made back again or are uncovered, they become his property, provided he can locate them, and provided they have not become accretion to some other riparian owner.

Minton v. Steele, 126 Mo. 181; Buse v. Russell, 86 Mo. 209; Murphy v. Norton, 61 How. Pr. 197.

Battle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The water boundaries of land on running streams, wherever they may be in the beginning, whether the thread of the stream, the water's edge, ordinary high or low water mark, always remains the same when they change gradually, as by the process of accretion or attrition. They gradually shift as the water recedes or encroaches, and the area of the riparian owner's possession varies as they change by this process. Whatever constituted them at first still constitutes them so long as it remains permanent or shifts gradually and imperceptibly. Hence lands formed by alluvion, or the gradual and imperceptible accretion from the water, and land gained by reliction, or the gradual and imperceptible recession of the water, belong to the owner of the contiguous land to which the addition is made. This rule has been vindicated by some one on the principle "that he who sustains the burden of losses and of repairs, imposed by the contiguity of water, ought to receive whatever benefits they may bring by accretion. By others it is derived from the principle of public policy that it is the interest of the community that all land should have an owner, and most convenient that insensible additions to the shore should follow the title to the shore itself." New Orleans v. United States, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 662, 717, 9 L. ed. 573, 594; Jefferts v. East Omaha Land Co. 134 U. S. 178, 33 L. ed. 872; Nebraska v. Iowa, 143 U. S. 359, 36 L. ed. 186; Gould, Waters, § 155; 2 Bl. Com. 262.

In order to constitute an accretion, it is not necessary that the formation be indiscernible by comparison at two distinct points of time. It is true that it is an addition to riparian land, "gradually and imperceptibly made by the water to which the land is contiguous;" but the true test "as to what is gradual and imperceptible in the sense of the rule is that, though the witnesses may see from time to time that progress has been made, they could not perceive it while the process was going on. King v. Lord Yarborough, 3 Barn. & C. 91, is a good illustration. In that case the court held that 450 acres of land formed by the gradual deposit of ooze, sand, and soil from the sea belonged to the owner of the adjoining land as an accretion. Other cases to the same effect may be cited. Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co. 184 U. S. 178, 83 L. ed. 872.

NOTE. See, with this case, those of Cooley v. Golden (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 300, and Crandall v. Allen (Mo.) 22 L. R. A. 591.

For note as to division of water front or alluvion flats, see Northern Pine Land Co. v. Bigelow (Wis.) 21 L. R. A. 776.

What has been said of accretions is equally true of the loss suffered from the gradual encroachments of running streams. As their beds change imperceptibly, by the gradual washing away of the banks, the boundary lines of contiguous lands change with them; and the owner, having, in the beginning, acquired no fixed freehold in them, but one that shifted with the changes, is limited and confined in the extent of his rights and possession by the new boundaries. St. Louis v. Rutz, 188 U. S. 226, 245, 84 L. ed. 941, 949; Canaden & A. Lanu Co. v. Lippincott, 45 N. J. L. 405; Welles v. Bailey, 55 Conn. 292; Steele v. Sanchez, 72 Iowa, 65; Niehau v. Shepherd, 26 Ohio St. 40; Wilson v. Shireley, 11 Or. 215; Dunlap v. Stetson, 4 Mason, 349, Fed. Cas. No. 4, 164; Re Hull & Selby Railway, 5 Mees. & W. 327; Scrutton v. Brown, 4 Barn. & C. 485; Foster v. Wright, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 438; Gould, Waters, 2d ed. § 155.

In Welles v. Bailey, 55 Conn. 292, in speaking of rights acquired by changes gradually made by rivers, it is said: "If a particular tract was entirely cut off from a river by an intervening tract, and that intervening tract should be gradually washed away until the remoter tract was reached by the river, the latter tract would become riparian as much as if it had been originally such. This follows necessarily from the ordinary application of the principle. All original lines submerged by the river have ceased to exist; the river is itself a natural boundary, and every changing condition of the river in relation to adjoining lands is treated as a natural relation and is not affected in any manner by the relations of the river and the land at any former period. If after washing away the intervening lot it should encroach upon the remoter lot, and should then begin to change its movement in the other direction, gradually restoring what it had taken from the remoter lot, and finally all that it had taken from the intervening lot, the whole by the law of accretion would belong to the remoter but now proximate lot. Having become riparian it has all riparian rights. This general principle is recognized by all the text writers and by numerous decisions of the English and American courts. The river boundary is treated in all cases as a natural boundary and the rights of the parties as changing with the change of its bed."

In Foster v. Wright, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 438, "the plaintiff was lord of a manor held under grants giving him the right of fishery in all the waters of the manor, and, consequently, in a river [Lune] running through it. Some manor land on one side of, and near but not adjoining the river, was enfranchised and became the property of the defendant. The river, which then ran wholly within lands belonging to the plaintiff, afterwards wore away its bank, and by gradual progress, not visible, but periodically ascertained during twelve years, approached and eventually encroached upon the defendant's land, until a strip of it became part of the river bed. The extent of the encroachment could be defined. The defendant went upon the strip and fished there." The court held "that an action of trespass against him for so doing could be maintained by the plaintiff, who had an exclusive right of fishery which extended over the whole bed of the river notwithstanding the gradual deviation of the stream on the defendant's land." Judge Lindley said: "Supposing, therefore, that the plaintiff's right to fish on the Lune depends on his ownership of the soil of the river bed, I am of the opinion that the plaintiff has that right; for, if he was the owner of the old bed of the river, he has day by day and week by week become the owner of that which has gradually become its present bed; and the title so gradually and imperceptibly acquired cannot be defeated by proof that a portion of the bed now capable of identification was formerly land belonging to the defendant or his predecessors in title."

In Cox v. Arnold (Mo.) 81 S. W. 592 (which was decided by the supreme court of Missouri), it appeared that "a portion of a fractional section bordering on a navigable stream was washed away by the current," and that "an accretion formed from an island in the river, and extended within the boundaries of the section, but did not connect with the new shore line." The court held that the owner of the section had no title to any part of the accretion. Justice Burgess, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is well settled in this state, by an unbroken line of decisions, that a riparian proprietor on a navigable stream only owns to the water's edge. . . . When a riparian owner becomes the owner of land, he acquires, as incident thereto, without prior, whatever may be added to it by gradual and imperceptible accretion, while, at the same time, he assumes the risk of losing it all by its being gradually washed away by the waters of the river; but his line always remains in the water's edge, wherever that may be. His line expands as the waters recede and accretions form to his land, and contracts as the waters encroach upon and wash away his land. The only way that plaintiff could have regained what land he had lost by its being washed away, and its situs submerged by the waters of the river, was by gradual and imperceptible accretion, beginning at his line at the water's edge. In this way, he would become the owner, and entitled to the possession, of all land accreted to his original tract, or that portion of it which had not been washed away. . . . Plaintiff's line being at the water's edge, he was not entitled to recover in this action, notwithstanding the land began to reform within the boundaries of the original sur vey of said quarter section, at a place where the land was, at the time of said survey, uncovered by water; and it makes no difference that defendant may not be the legal owner, or that he may be in its wrongful possession."

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Ramoey, 58 Ark. 314, 8 L. R. A. 559, it was held by this court that "a riparian owner upon a navigable stream, deriving title from the United States" to lands in this state, "takes only to high-water mark, and not to the middle of the stream, the title to the bed of the stream being in the state;" and that this high-water mark "is to be found by ascertaining where the presence and action of water are so usual and long continued in ordinary years as to mark upon the soil of the bed a character distinct from that of the banks in respect to vegetation and the nature of the soil." According to the cases we have cited, the high-water mark, as thus defined, being the boundary line of the riparian owner in this state, it is the point at which the formation of all lands acquired by him by accretion must begin. A formation of alluvion beginning at any other point would belong to the state or other party. In that case the gradual and imperceptible addition, which is necessary to constitute an accretion, would be lacking.

The reverse of what has been said of accretions and erosions is true of avulsions. Where a stream which forms the boundary line of lands from any cause suddenly abandons its old, and seeks a new, bed, or suddenly and perceptibly washes away its banks, such change of channel or banks (if its limits can be determined) works no change of boundary. The owner still holds his title to the submerged land. If an island or dry land afterwards forms upon it, the same belongs to him. St. Louis v. Rutz, 138 U. S. 226, 34 L. ed. 941; Gould, Waters, 2d ed. §§ 158, 159, and cases cited.

The burden in this case was on the plaintiff to prove that he was entitled to the land in controversy. The evidence showed that it was entered in November, 1848, and contained at that time 154 acres, and after that a large portion of it "caved" into the Mississippi river. There was no satisfactory evidence as to how large this portion was in excess of 35 acres, or any evidence as to how long it was in caving, or whether it caved gradually and imperceptibly, or vice versa, or that the land in controversy was added to his own by accretion, beginning at his line, at high-water mark. He failed to sustain his claim.

The instructions given to the jury were fatally defective. It is unnecessary to point out the defects, as we have already said what the law governing the case is.

Reversed and remanded.

Bunn, Ch. J., dissenting:

I do not deem it necessary to reiterate the familiar rules of the common law governing the rights of riparian owners, and the prerogatives of the Crown and sovereign power, as to tide-water streams, and the lands beneath and bordering thereon. The great difficulty with Americans has always been not to understand these rules as applied to the condition of things existing in England, but rather to make them applicable in any reasonable sense, under the 31 L. R. A.

circumstances which surround us, especially in the newer or western and southwestern states of the Union. Our system of surveying, admeasurement, and conveyance of lands, the great magnitude of our lakes and rivers, and our dual form of government, all conspire together to create difficulties in the way at every step in our efforts to conform to the principles of the common law. That a riparian owner, as such, under the common law, owns to the middle thread of the fresh-water river on his border, and to the upper margin or high-tide mark of the tide-water river, which forms his boundary, and in the latter case is subjected to the results of erosion, and is entitled to all gains by accretion and reliction, are truisms that all are expected to be familiar with; but how far we may be able to adapt these venerable rules to our changed conditions is not without the greatest difficulty in any given case. It is altogether probable that a case just like the one we have under consideration could never have arisen under the strict common-law system. In the first place, in England rivers and other bodies of water were the natural boundaries of lands, and that idea entered into the description contained in all their conveyances. To speak of one's land being bounded on the north or south, east or west, by the Thames, the English would readily understand the nature of the landed estate sought to be described. If it was above tide-water, they would readily know that the owner owned to the middle thread of the stream, and his peculiar boundary was therefore as varying and as variable as the stream itself. On the other hand, if the domain lay below the point where the stream was affected by the ebb and flow of the tide, they understood readily that the riparian owner was subjected to loss by erosion, and at the same time was entitled to whatever might be added to his land by accretion or reliction; and this was so, not on account of the rule of the gambler's justice, where the possibility of gain was one's due for the mere risk of loss, which some have attempted to assign as a reason for the rule, nor, as others say, because public policy demands that there shall be no unappropriated public lands, but because the boundary, being the bank of the river, will be the same, in name, 100 years hence, though that bank has moved very far laterally the one way or the other. It will still be the bank of the river, though the owner's domain has diminished in size by erosion, a fourth or a half, or has increased, by accretion, to the same extent. At the end of the century, from the date of the grant, the sheriff, armed with his writ of ouster, would still be enabled to find the land, so far as the river front is concerned, because he finds the line of the high tide, and that is the "metes and bounds," although it has actually changed much since the original grant was made. It is still written in that same language and form in the deed. Now, our system is imaginary, parallel, and perpendicular lines, forming parallelograms, and the fractions of such, as occasion may make necessary. But they are fixed lines, permanently located, and 100 years from the date of the grant will include exactly and definitely the same portion of the earth's surface, although that may then be wholly or in part in the river, whereas it was all dry land at first; and the sheriff, armed with his writ, wherein the description, as in the other case, is in the exact language first written, locates the land by it and not by any extraneous evidence whatever, though he find the lines on the water instead of the dry land. This is the portion of the earth's surface sold to the individual by the Federal government, which, in its acts of cession to the state, reserved to itself the title to all lands, and the absolute and unconditional right to dispose of them, with the fair understanding that its grants to the individual must never be molested or interfered with, whatever may be the assumed rights of the state as against all others, even as against the Federal government.

Outside the boundary lines within which the land belongs to the individual by Federal grant, the state disposes by whatever rule or law she may choose to make on the subject, but she cannot curtail the right of the owner by any arbitrary rule, although it may have the sanction of judicial accommodation of the common-law principle to the circumstances of the case. It must be borne in mind that, when the land involved was purchased from the government, the common law was in force in all its plenitude in both Federal and state governments. Even the modified rule announced in the case of The Genesee Chief, 58 U. S. 12 How. 443, 13 L. ed. 1058, had not then been announced; but the old English rule was still in force, and the purchaser purchased with that rule as a part of his contract. That rule regulated the riparian owners on the Mississippi river as owning to the middle thread, it not being a tide-water stream. Such was the common law, and Arkansas had adopted the common law, and has never adopted any other rule unto this day, unless we are to regard the court-made law of legal decisions of recent date as a change of the rule. There is not a word in our statutes going to show us what the state has accepted as her interest in the bed of the Mississippi, or any land or island that may form therein. This court may say that the common-law rules are not applicable in our case, but that does not mean that the court can arbitrarily make other rules that will be applicable, for it is the right of property we are now dealing with. The decision of the court in the case at bar is based mainly upon Cox v. Arnold (Mo.) 31 S. W. 592, and Naylor v. Cox, 114 Mo. 232, both Missouri cases, in which the suggestion of the point I have endeavored to make was passed over by a mere repetition of the common-law rule, as if the very point was not the inapplicability of the common-law rule. Besides, the description there was very nearly as a common-law description of riparian lands. In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Ramsey, 58 Ark. 314, 8 L. R. A. 559, the point was neither raised nor discussed. The sand bar or gravel bed in that case had not as yet risen high enough to be denominated "land," and was held still to be the property of the state, as the bed of the river over which steamboats plied in trade and commerce. The farcical part of that case was that Ramsey would have gained title to something he never pretended to buy had he not been in such a hurry to bring his suit, for, presumably, the bar would have raised its head out of the water after awhile. In Cox v. Arnold, supra, Chief Justice Brace dissented; and, while he did not file a written opinion, we may conclude that his dissent was on similar grounds as his dissenting opinion in another case. Gould, in his work on Waters (page 813, § 155), says: "But when the line along the shore is clearly and rigidly fixed by a deed or survey, it is not so certain that it will afterwards be changed because of accretions [and of its erosions], although, as a general rule, the right to alluvion passes as a riparian right;" referring to Fulton v. Frandoliq, 63 Tex. 380; James v. Howell, 41 Ohio St. 606, and Burns v. O'Brien, 42 La. Ann. 527, and to which may be added Cook v. McClure, 58 N. Y. 437, 17 Am. Rep. 270; Minton v. Steele, 135 Mo. 181; Butler v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 85 Mich. 246, and authorities there cited. In the New York case cited, the court said: "In an action of ejectment, plaintiff claimed under a deed conveying the premises upon which was a mill and pond. The boundary line along the pond commenced at 'a stake near the high-water mark of the pond,' running thence 'along the high-water mark of said pond, to the upper end of said pond.' Held, that the line thus given was a fixed and permanent one, and did not follow the changes in the high-water mark of the pond; and that defendant, who owned the bank bounded by said line, could not claim any accretions or land left dry in consequence of the water in the pond receding, although the gradual and imperceptible result of natural causes." It seems that this pond was a river dammed up, and that to such ponds the courts in New York apply the common-law rules. In Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 424, 53 Am. Rep. 206, the court said: "No lapse of time during which the submergence has continued bars the right of the owner to enter upon the land reclaimed and assert his proprietorship when the identity can be established by reasonable marks, or by situation, extent of quantity, and boundary on the firm land." And, further: "And so if an island forms upon the land submerged [as in this case], it belongs to the original owner. The sovereign [the state] succeeds to the ownership of such islands and formations only as are originally created and located in tideways, outside of the boundaries of property which has been the subject of individual ownership."

In the Missouri cases the island was not within the metes and bounds of the riparian owner, but belonged to another. In a contest between this island and the main shore owner the court held that the accretions were to the former land. I think the court was probably correct in that, only the islander's right should have stopped at the nearest boundary of the shore owner; otherwise, his grant from the Federal government would be interfered with, which cannot be. In the case at bar the island rose up within plaintiff's boundary, and the only possible claimant is the state, and she makes no claim. In this state of things, I think the plaintiff has title superior to all others, if not superior to the state, who holds, if at all, not as an individual, but as a sovereign. The judgment, in my opinion, should be affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIFTH CIRCUIT.

TEXAS & PACIFIC R. CO., Plff. in Err.,

v.

Gessner T. SMITH, Widow of Paoli A. Smith.

(67 Fed. Rep. 524.)

1. A civil engineer of a railroad company, traveling on duty for the company upon a pass exempting the company from liability for injuries to person or property, occupies the position of an employee, and not that of a passenger, upon the train upon which he is carried.

2. A railroad engineer whose duties are to look after the building and maintenance of bridges and trestles assumes the risk of injury from the failure of the company to provide a watchman at a bridge which gives way under the train upon which he is traveling in discharge of his duties, as he must be presumed to know that no watch is kept upon such bridge.

3. A railroad official particularly charged with the care and maintenance of the bridges upon the line of the railroad is at fault for failure to maintain a sufficient watch upon a bridge, which will prevent recovery for his death from the fall of such bridge under the train upon which he is traveling in the discharge of his duties.

(February 5, 1895.)

NOTE.—Railroad employees or officers as passengers.

The rule seems to be that if the employee is traveling in connection with his duties to the company he will be regarded as an employee, while the courts are divided in opinion as to his position if he is traveling free by reason of his relation of employee to the company, but is traveling for purposes of his own.

Riding in course of, or as part of, employment.

In such cases the traveler is not a passenger nor entitled to be cared for as such.

An employee riding on a train for the purpose of clearing snow from the track is not, while so engaged, a passenger. Howland v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 226.

One engaged in ballasting the road, whose duties require him to ride back and forth on a gravel train, is not, while so riding, a passenger, but is a mere employee. Kumler v. Junction R. Co. 33 Ohio St. 150.

Persons engaged in loading and unloading a gravel train are not passengers in riding back and forth between the places of loading and unloading. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Tindall, 13 Ind. 363, 74 Am. Dec. 259.

A person employed to paint the buildings and bridges of a railroad company, and transported from one to another in a small steam car used only by officers and employees of the road, is not a passenger nor entitled to the rights of one. McQueen v. Central Branch U. P. R. Co. 30 Kan. 689.

An employee on a construction train while going with the train is not a passenger. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Keefe, 47 Ill. 108.

One who is injured while attempting to get on a train under command of his boss to be transported to work in another place is still in the line of his employment so that he cannot recover for the injuries, although they are caused by the negligence

31 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's husband. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before McCormick, Circuit Judge, and Bruce and Toulmin, District Judges.

Messrs. W. W. Howe and S. S. Prentiss for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. B. F. Jonas and J. H. Hall for defendant in error.

Bruce, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought in the court below by Mrs. Gessner T. Smith, widow of the late Paoli A. Smith, suing in her own behalf and also as guardian and in behalf of her minor child, Paoli Smith, to recover damages from the Texas & Pacific Railway Company for the death of her husband. Paoli A. Smith was at the time of his death, and for some time preceding had been, resident engineer for the Texas & Pacific Railway Company, residing at Marshall, Tex., and on the 30th day of January, 1892, he started on a passenger train of the railroad company from Marshall, Tex., to New Orleans, under orders from his company, for duty in his position as engineer. On the trip, of the employer's servants. Capper v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 103 Ind. 305.

A foreman of a wrecking crew, who boards a train to take him to the place of a wreck, is a fellow servant of the engineers of the train and the colliding train, although not in service at the time, so that he cannot recover for injuries caused by their negligence. Abend v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 111 Ill. 202, 53 Am. Rep. 616.

A workman employed at gas works operated by defendant for its own use, who was in discharge of his regular duty going from one set of works to another over the railroad without paying fare, was killed by an accident, and the court held that he was clearly within the ordinary course of his duty when the accident occurred, and that the company was not liable for it. Hando v. London & C. R. Co. Q. B. May 6, 1886, cited in 2 Wood on Railway Law, p. 1044.

If the injury occurs while the employee is traveling as the servant of the railroad, there can be no recovery. Hutchinson v. New York, N. & B. R. Co. 6 Eng. Ry. & Canal Cas. 580.

Rule in case of one being transported to or from work.

There is some conflict among the cases upon this question. The larger number of them hold that an employee while being transported to and from work without paying fare is still to be regarded as an employee, while others hold that before his day's work begins and after it is over he is not an employee, and must have some other relation towards the company. According to the rule adopted by the first class of cases, it is held that:—

A conductor traveling to take charge of his train is an employee of the company, and not a passenger, within the rules relating to the care which carriers owe to their passengers and employees. Manville v. Cleveland & T. R. Co. 11 Ohio St. 424.

21

at a point on the road near the village of Robeline, in Louisiana, on the 30th day of January, 1892, the train on which he was traveling ran upon a burning bridge, which gave way, and precipitated the train to the ground below. The car on which he was traveling was telescoped with another car of the same train, and his leg was caught between the two cars and the broken timbers, and crushed and mangled. The car took fire, and he was dragged violently from under the timbers, to save him from being burned to death, and in consequence of which injury it was found necessary to amputate his leg above the knee, and from the injuries received he died February 7, 1892. The petition in the court below charged negligence upon the company, its officers and employees, and specifies the following:

"Petitioner alleges that there was no guard or watchman at said burning bridge, as there should have been; that it had been burning for hours, and, as petitioner believes, and expects to prove, was fired by sparks from the engine of another train of the said company, which passed some hours before; and petitioner alleges that there were no track walkers or watchers upon said railway at or in the vicinity of said bridge, or on said section of said railway, and none of the vigilance, watchfulness, or care was exercised by said company, its officers, agents, or employees, such as is required by law and custom for the protection of the lives and safety of railway passengers, and through the proper presence and exercise of which the said accident could and would have been averted."

